United States Circuit Court of Appeals

FOR THE SIXTH CIRCUIT.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD,
Petitioner,

v.

PACKARD MOTOR CAR COMPANY,
Respondent.

PETITION FOR ENFORCEMENT OF AN ORDER OF THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD.

(Filed Dec. 18, 1945.)

To the Honorable, the Judges of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit:

The National Labor Relations Board, pursuant to the National Labor Relations Act (Act of July 5, 1935, 49 Stat. 449, c. 372, 29 U. S. C. § 151 et seq.), respectfully petitions this Court for the enforcement of its order against respondent, Packard Motor Car Company, Detroit, Michigan, and its officers, agents, successors, and assigns. The proceedings resulting in said order are known upon the records of the Board as In the Matters of Packard Motor Car Company and Foreman's Association of America, the same being known as Cases Nos. 7-R-1884, and 7-C-1452, respectively.

In support of this petition, the Board respectfully shows:

(1) Respondent is a Michigan corporation engaged in business in the State of Michigan, within this judicial circuit where the unfair labor practices occurred. This Court therefore has jurisdiction of this petition by virtue of Section 10 (e) of the National Labor Relations Act.

(2) Upon all proceedings had in said matter before the Board, as more fully shown by the entire record thereof certified by the Board and filed with this Court herein, to which reference is hereby made, the Board on December 6, 1945, duly stated its findings of fact, conclusions of law, and issued an order directed to the respondent, and its officers, agents, successors, and assigns. The aforesaid order provides as follows:

ORDER.

Upon the entire record in the case, and pursuant to Section 10 (c) of the National Labor Relations Act, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders that the respondent, Packard Motor Car Company, Detroit, Michigan, and its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively with Foreman's Association of America, as the exclusive representative of all general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen, and special assignment men employed by the respondent at its plants in Detroit, Michigan;

(b) Engaging in any like or related acts or conduct interfering with, restraining, or coercing its supervisory employees in the exercise of the right to self-organization, to form, join, assist, or bargain collectively through Foreman's Association of America, and to engage in concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection as guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action, which the Board finds will effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Upon request, bargain collectively with Foreman's Association of America as the exclusive representative of all general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen, and special assignment men employed by the respondent at its plants in Detroit, Michigan, in respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other conditions of employment;

(b) Post at its plants in Detroit, Michigan, copies of the notice attached hereto, marked "Appendix A." Copies of said notice, to be furnished by the Regional Director for the Seventh Region, shall, after being duly signed by the respondent's representative, be posted by the respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and maintained by it for sixty (60) consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material; and

(c) Notify the Regional Director for the Seventh Region in writing, within ten (10) days from the date of this Order, what steps the respondent has taken to comply herewith."

(3) On December 6, 1945, the Board's Decision and Order was served upon respondent by sending a copy thereof postpaid, bearing Government frank, by registered mail, to respondent's counsel.

(4) Pursuant to Section 10 (e) of the National Labor Relations Act, the Board is certifying and filing with this Court a transcript of the entire record in the proceedings before the Board, including the pleadings, testimony and evidence, findings of fact, conclusions of law, and order of the Board.

Wherefore, the Board prays this Honorable Court that it cause notice of the filing of this petition and transcript to be served upon respondent and that this Court take jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the questions determined therein and make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony and evidence, and the proceedings set forth in the transcript and upon the order made thereupon set forth in paragraph (2) hereof, a decree enforcing in whole said order of the Board and requiring respondent, and its officers, agents, successors, and assigns to comply therewith.

CLARA M. MARTIN,
Acting Chief, Order Section.

CASE NO. 7-C-1452.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
BEFORE THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Trial Examining Division
Washington, D. C.

In the Matter of PACKARD MOTOR CAR COMPANY and FOREMAN'S ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.	Case No. 7-C-1452.

Messrs. David Karasick and David Citrin, for the Board.

Mr. Louis F. Dahling, of Detroit, Mich., for the respondent.

Mr. Walter M. Nelson, of Detroit, Mich., for the Union.

INTERMEDIATE REPORT.

(Dated July 18, 1945.)

STATEMENT OF THE CASE.

Upon a charge duly filed on June 8, 1945, by Foreman's Association of America, an unaffiliated organization, herein called the Union, the National Labor Relations Board, herein called the Board, by its Regional Director for the Seventh Region (Detroit, Michigan), issued its complaint on June 28, 1945, against Packard Motor Car Company, Detroit, Michigan, herein called the respondent, alleging that the respondent had engaged in and was engaging in unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 8 (1) and (5) and Section 2 (6) and (7) of the National Labor Relations Act, 49 Stat. 449, herein called the Act. Copies of the complaint and the charge, with notice of hearing thereon, were duly served on the respondent and the Union.

With respect to the unfair labor practices, the complaint alleged in substance that (1) on March 26, 1945, the Board in its Decision and Direction of Election in Case No. 7-R-1884[1] found that all general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen, and special assignment men employed by the respondent at its plants in Detroit, Michigan, constituted a unit for the purposes of collective bargaining; (2) on April 28, 1945, the Board in its Certification of Representatives in the same case, certified the Union as the exclusive representative of all the employees in the said unit for the purposes of collective bargaining; and that the Union is still such representative; (3) that on May 18, 1945, although requested to bargain collectively by the Union, the respondent refused to do so; and (4) by the foregoing acts and conduct, the respondent has interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act.

On July 6, 1945, the respondent duly filed an answer denying the commission of the alleged unfair labor practices. The answer admitted, however, the allegations of the complaint as to the corporate existence of the respondent and the nature, character, and extent of the business transacted by it, and the allegation that it refused to bargain collectively with the Union although the Union had requested it to do so. By way of affirmative defense, the answer asserted that the Board erred in its findings in Case No. 7-R-1884 as to the appropriateness of the unit in question for the reason, inter alia, that the Board had no power, authority or jurisdiction to hold or conduct any hearing in that case, or to issue any decision or direction, or to order the holding of any election, or to issue any certification or order thereon, and that therefore all findings, determinations, directions, and orders therein are unconstitutional without legal force or effect, wholly void, and not binding on the respondent.

Pursuant to notice, a hearing was held on July 9, 1945, at Detroit, Michigan, before Howard Myers, the undersigned Trial Examiner duly designated by the Chief Trial Examiner. The Board, the respondent, and the Union were represented by counsel and participated in the hearing. Full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence bearing upon the issues was afforded all parties. Before the taking of any evidence, counsel for the respondent moved to dismiss the complaint on the grounds that (1) the persons who compose the unit alleged to be appropriate are not employees within the meaning of the Act; (2) the alleged unit is inappropriate; (3) the Board has no jurisdiction over the subject matter alleged in the complaint; (4) the Board's action, by proceeding herein, is an illegal, unwarranted, arbitrary and unreasonable interference with the rights of the respondent and therefore the Board by proceeding herein is violating the respondent's constitutional rights; (5) the Board may not in this proceeding lawfully order the respondent to bargain collectively with the Union because to do so, the Board would be proceeding contrary to the Act, abusing its discretion, and committing acts detrimental to public interest; (6) the Board has no jurisdiction, power, or right to proceed with Case No. 7-R-1884 and therefore it should not proceed with the present case because this is the outgrowth of the former proceeding; (7) the findings, certification, decisions, and directions issued in Case No. 7-R-1884 are illegal, unconstitutional, null and void, and of no effect and therefore they do not afford a basis for the filing of the complaint in the present proceeding; and (8) the findings, certificate, decisions, and directions issued in Case No. 7-R-1884 are contrary to the evidence submitted therein, beyond the limits of the Board's discretion, an abuse of the Board's discretion, and contrary to the provisions of the Act and therefore they are detrimental to public interest. The motion was denied with leave to renew. At the close of the Board's case, Board's counsel moved to conform the complaint to the proof. The motion was granted without objection. The respondent's counsel renewed the motion which he made at the opening of the hearing to dismiss the complaint. The motion was denied with leave to renew. At the conclusion of the hearing, Board's counsel moved to conform the complaint to the proof and the respondent's counsel moved to conform the answer to the proof. Both motions were granted without objection.[2] The respondent's counsel then renewed the motion which he made at the opening of the hearing and at the end of the Board's case to dismiss the complaint. Decision thereon was reserved. The motion is hereby denied.

Upon the entire record in the case, including the record in Case No. 7-R-1884,[3] the undersigned makes, in addition to the above, the following:

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I. The business of the respondent.

Packard Motor Car Company is a Michigan corporation with its principal office and place of business in Detroit, Michigan. Prior to 1941, the respondent was engaged at its Detroit plants in the manufacture and sale of automobiles. Since 1941, the respondent's manufacturing facilities have been converted to the manufacture of munitions for Army and Navy Ordnance and the respondent is at the present time engaged almost entirely in war production. The respondent annually purchases raw materials valued in excess of $5,000,000, of which 50 percent is obtained from sources outside the State of Michigan and is shipped to the respondent's plants located in the State of Michigan. The respondent's annual sales of finished products exceed $5,000,000, of which 90 percent represents sales of such products shipped from the Detroit, Michigan, plants of the respondent to points outside the State of Michigan.

The respondent admits that it is engaged in commerce within the meaning of the National Labor Relations Act.

II. The organization involved.

Foreman's Association of America is an unaffiliated labor organization admitting to membership supervisory employees of the respondent.

III. The unfair labor practices.

The refusal to bargain.

1. The appropriate unit and representation by the Union of a majority therein.

On March 26, 1945, the Board issued its Decision and Direction of Election in Case No. 7-R-1884 (61 N. L. R. B., No. 3), in which it found that all general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen, and special assignment men employed by the respondent at its plants in Detroit, Michigan, constituted a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining. On April 17, 1945, an election was held pursuant to the aforesaid Direction of Election. According to the Tally of Ballots certified to by representatives of the respondent and the Union, of the 1315 eligible voters, 666 votes were cast for the Union, 435 against, and 155 votes were challenged. No objections to the voting or to the conduct of the election were filed by any of the parties. On April 28, 1945, the Board in its Certification of Representatives, certified the Union as the representative of the employees in the aforesaid unit for the purposes of collective bargaining.

The respondent contests the appropriativeness of the unit, referred to above, and hence the subsequent certification of the Union therefor. No additional evidence to support the respondent's contention was introduced in the present hearing except the following: (1) a copy of a memorandum issued by Mr. Sam Sponseller, C. I. O. Cleveland Regional Director, in which he states, among other things, that the C. I. O. has opened its membership in a certain named local to all "foremen and supervisory employees, excluding superintendents etc." and solicits membership from among those eligible to join the named local; (2) a copy of an article appearing in the May 27, 1945 issue of the Pittsburgh Press, a Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, daily newspaper, stating that the United Steelworkers of America, an affiliate of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, plans to organize "all bosses who do not have 'hire and fire' authority"; and (3) an excerpt from the March 1, 1945 issue of "The Searchlight", the official publication of CIO-UAW, Chevrolet Local No. 69, wherein the author states that about 300 Chevrolet foremen had joined the Union herein and that the remaining foremen should join the Union without delay. The undersigned is convinced, and finds, that the evidence relied on by the respondent in this proceeding, including the evidence submitted by it in Case No. 7-R-1884, is insufficient to warrant a finding that the unit heretofore found by the Board to be appropriate is inappropriate.

The undersigned finds that all general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen, and special assignment men employed by the respondent at its plants in Detroit, Michigan, constitute, and during all the times material herein constituted, a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining. The undersigned further finds that on and after April 28, 1945, the Union was the duly designated bargaining representative of a majority of the employees in the aforesaid appropriate unit, and that, pursuant to the provisions of Section 9 (a) of the Act; the Union was on April 28, 1945, and at all times thereafter has been, and now is, the exclusive representative of all the employees in the aforesaid unit for the purposes of collective bargaining with respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other conditions of employment.

2. The refusal to bargain.

By letter dated May 2, 1945, the Union requested the respondent to fix a time and place for the purpose of commencing collective bargaining negotiations. By letter dated May 11, the respondent replied that it would meet with the Union's representatives on May 18. Instead of meeting with the Union's representatives on May 18, the respondent wrote the Union that day stating, among other things, that the respondent considered the Board's proceedings which culminated in the Board's certifying the Union as the collective bargaining representative of the respondent's general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen, and special assignment men, unconstitutional, void, and of no force or effect and therefore the respondent would not recognize the said certification nor would it bargain collectively with the Union as such representative until the issues involved had been finally determined by judicial review. It is clear from the respondent's letter and from the admissions contained in the answer filed by the respondent in this proceeding, that at all times since May 18, 1945, the respondent has not receded from its position as outlined in its letter of May 18. The undersigned accordingly finds that the respondent on May 18, 1945, and at all times thereafter, has refused to bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive representative of its employees in the appropriate unit, and thereby has interfered with, restrained, and coerced its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act.

IV. The effect of the unfair labor practices upon commerce.

The activities of the respondent set forth in Section III above, occurring in connection with the operations of the respondent described in Section I above, have a close, intimate, and substantial relation to trade, traffic, and commerce among the several States, and such of them as have been found to be unfair labor practices, tend to lead to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of commerce.

V. The remedy.

Since it has been found that the respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices, it will be recommended that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action designed to effectuate the policies of the Act.

Since it has been found that the respondent has refused to bargain collectively with the Union as the exclusive representative of its employees in an appropriate unit, it will be recommended that the respondent, upon request, bargain collectively with the Union.

Upon the basis of the above findings of fact and upon the entire record in the case, the undersigned makes the following:

Conclusions of Law.

1. Foreman's Association of America, unaffiliated, is a labor organization, within the meaning of Section 2 (5) of the Act.

2. All general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen, and special assignment men, employed by the respondent at its plants in Detroit, Michigan, constitute a unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining, within the meaning of Section 9 (b) of the Act.

3. Foreman's Association of America, unaffiliated, was on April 28, 1945, and at all times thereafter has been the exclusive representative of all the employees in the aforesaid unit for the purposes of collective bargaining, within the meaning of Section 9 (a) of the Act.

4. By refusing on May 18, 1945, and at all times thereafter, to bargain collectively with Foreman's Association of America, unaffiliated, as exclusive representative of all its employees in the appropriate unit, the respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8 (5) of the Act.

5. By interfering with, restraining, and coercing its employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act, the respondent has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of Section 8 (1) of the Act.

6. The aforesaid unfair labor practices are unfair labor practices affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 2 (6) and (7) of the Act.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

Upon the basis of the above findings of fact and conclusions of law, and upon the entire record in the case, including the record in Case No. 7-R-1884, the undersigned recommends that the respondent, Packard Motor Car Company, Detroit, Michigan, its officers, agents, successors and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively with Foreman's Association of America, unaffiliated, as the exclusive representative of all of its employees in the above described appropriate unit;

(b) Engaging in like or related acts or conduct interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of the rights to self-organization, to form labor organization, or to join or assist Foreman's Association of America, unaffiliated, or any other labor organization, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, as guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action, which the undersigned finds will effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Upon request bargain collectively with Foreman's Association of America, unaffiliated, as exclusive representative of all its employees in the above described appropriate unit and if an understanding is reached, embody such understanding in a signed agreement;

(b) Post at its plants in Detroit, Michigan, copies of the notice attached hereto, marked "Appendix A". Copies of said notice, to be furnished by the Regional Director of the Seventh Region, shall, after being duly signed by the respondent's representative, be posted by the respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and maintained by it for sixty (60) consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material;

(c) Notify the Regional Director for the Seventh Region (Detroit, Michigan), in writing, within ten (10) days from the receipt of this Intermediate Report, of what steps the respondent has taken to comply herewith.

It is further recommended that unless, on or before ten (10) days from the date of the receipt of this Intermediate Report, the respondent notifies the said Regional Director in writing that it will comply with the foregoing recommendations, the National Labor Relations Board issue an order requiring the respondent to take the action aforesaid.

As provided in Section 33 of Article II of the Rules and Regulations of the National Labor Relations Board, Series 3, as amended, effective July 12, 1944, any party or counsel for the Board may within fifteen (15) days from the date of the entry of the order transferring the case to the Board, pursuant to Section 32 of Article II of said Rules and Regulations file with the Board, Rochambeau Building, Washington, D. C., an original and four copies of a statement in writing setting forth such exceptions to the Intermediate Report or to any other part of the record or proceeding (including rulings upon all motions or objections) as he relies upon, together with the original and four copies of a brief in support thereof. Immediately upon the filing of such statement of exceptions and/or brief, the party or counsel for the Board filing the same shall serve a copy thereof upon each of the other parties and shall file a copy with the Regional Director. As further provided in said Section 33, should any party desire permission to argue orally before the Board, request therefor must be made in writing within ten (10) days from the date of the order transferring the case to the Board.

DECISION AND ORDER.

(Issued December 6, 1945.)

On July 18, 1945, the Trial Examiner issued his Intermediate Report in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the respondent had engaged in and was engaging in certain unfair labor practices, and recommending that it cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action, as set forth in the copy of the Intermediate Report attached hereto. Thereafter, the respondent filed exceptions to the Intermediate Report and a supporting brief. No request for oral argument before the Board at Washington, D. C., was made by any of the parties and none was held. The Board has reviewed the rulings of the Trial Examiner and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. The Board has considered the Intermediate Report, the respondent's exceptions and brief, and the entire record in the case, and hereby adopts the findings, conclusions, and recommendations of the Trial Examiner, save insofar as the recommendations are modified in our Order set forth below.

ORDER.

Upon the entire record in the case, and pursuant to Section 10 (c) of the National Labor Relations Act, the National Labor Relations Board hereby orders that the respondent, Packard Motor Car Company, Detroit, Michigan, and its officers, agents, successors, and assigns, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Refusing to bargain collectively with Foreman's Association of America as the exclusive representative of all general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen, and special assignment men employed by the respondent at its plants in Detroit, Michigan;

(b) Engaging in any like or related acts or conduct interfering with, restraining, or coercing its supervisory employees in the exercise of the right to self-organization, to form, join, assist, or bargain collectively through Foreman's Association of America, and to engage in concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection as guaranteed in Section 7 of the Act.

2. Take the following affirmative action, which the Board finds will effectuate the policies of the Act:

(a) Upon request, bargain collectively with Foreman's Association of America as the exclusive representative of all general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen, and special assignment men employed by the respondent at its plants in Detroit, Michigan, in respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, and other conditions of employment;

(b) Post at its plants in Detroit, Michigan, copies of the notice attached hereto, marked "Appendix A." Copies of said notice, to be furnished by the Regional Director for the Seventh Region, shall, after being duly signed by the respondent's representative, be posted by the respondent immediately upon receipt thereof, and maintained by it for sixty (60) consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken by the respondent to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material; and

(c) Notify the Regional Director for the Seventh Region in writing, within ten (10) days from the date of this Order, what steps the respondent has taken to comply herewith.

Signed at Washington, D. C., this 6th day of December 1945.

Member,
National Labor Relations Board.

Chairman Paul M. Herzog, concurring:[1]

The issues in this case cannot be analyzed in terms of black and white. They present a study in grey. Both company and union present their arguments in good faith; no one can be wholly right or wholly wrong in a matter of this sort. But the Board remains faced with the responsibility of deciding which is nearer right, in the light of the announced policies of the Act.

Although there has sometimes been a tendency to assume that the issue before us is whether foremen should or should not join unions, that assumption misconceives the Board's function. We are faced, instead, with the narrower question of whether, granting that many foremen have now decided that "the necessities of the situation"[2] dictate that they seek to bargain through an unaffiliated union, the Act affords them access to the orderly administrative machinery that is concededly available to rank-and-file employees. I think that it does.

The company asserts that its supervisory employees are not "employees" at all, but "employers."[3] To the extent that foremen may sometimes speak for or bind a respondent in dealing with their subordinates, because then "acting in the interest of an employer," they are "employers" within the meaning of the Act. Here, however, we are not concerned with foremen's relations with their subordinates, but with their own status vis-a-vis the company that hires, discharges and compensates them and that directs their work. In that relation the company is the employer and the foreman the employee; when they sit on opposite sides of the bargaining table, their interests are momentarily adverse. This is true whether they bargain individually or collectively. The foreman is not "acting in the interest of an employer" when he seeks to improve his own working conditions; he is acting for himself. The company suggests that the same man cannot, in logic, be both employer and employee. But "the life of the law has not been logic; it has been experience."[4] High judicial authority has held that a foreman can be both employer and employee;[5] the Board, including our dissenting colleague, has always held him to be both;[6] the facts of industrial life have made him both.

[1] Not having been a Member of the Board when the representation case was heard and decided, I have thought it only proper to set forth these views, after examining the record, the briefs and the minutes of oral argument in that earlier proceeding. Matter of Packard Motor Car Company, 61 N. L. R. B. 4, decided March 26, 1945. Concurrence here may be taken as agreement with the representation decision, although I might not have joined in every sentence or every metaphor. I join fully with Mr. Houston in the present order, believing that this company should bargain with the union selected by its foremen.

All employees may ask our protection in the exercise of the rights declared in Section 7 of the Act, unless another section can be found to bar that result. One protected right is that of employees to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. Because the Board, even when denying protection, has never doubted that a foreman is an "employee," the majority opinion in Maryland Drydock and the dissent in the Packard representation case were based largely upon the theory that foremen do not constitute a "unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining." The theory assumes that because Congress, by Section 9 (b) of the Act, empowered the Board to determine which of several units is appropriate, "in order to insure to employees the [5] N. L. R. B. v. Skinner & Kennedy, 113 F. (2d) 667, at 670, where the court said, "A foreman, in his relation to his employer, is an employee, while in his relation to the laborers under him he is the representative of the employer and within the definition of Section 2 (2) of the Act * * *." These definitions in the Act "are not mutually exclusive." N. L. R. B. v. Armour and Co. (C. C. A. 10, Nov. 5, 1945), 17 L. R. R. 372, 373.

The fact that a man promoted to a foremanship may become an "arm of management" does not mean that he thereupon ceases to be an employee of management. This view is consistent with the familiar legal doctrine that an agent, although he must act in behalf of his principal as against third persons, does not forfeit his rights against that principal where their relations with one another are in issue.

full benefit of their right to self-organization and to collective bargaining, and otherwise to effectuate the policies of this Act," it also authorized us to find that persons who are employees belong in no unit at all. The assumption is open to question.

It seems much more probable that Congress intended Section 9 (b) to authorize the Board to group employees appropriately rather than to exclude them from coverage. The only express exclusions appear in Section 2 (3).[7] The language of Section 9 (b) is language of classification.[8] It empowers the Board to select between alternatives; we are to "decide in each case whether" employees should vote and bargain in an "employer unit, craft unit, plant unit, or subdivision thereof." It nowhere suggests that we should hold that, despite their desires, certain employees may never utilize the Act to select some representative or to bargain in any unit whatsoever.[9] Under the power to classify the Board may, and properly does, segregate supervisory employees from their subordinates, as by declining to place them in the same unit with rank-and-file employees. Here, however, we are not asked to segregate, but to ostracize. Even assuming that Section 9 (b) might

[7] These exclusions are limited to agricultural, domestic, and family workers. Supervisory employees are not mentioned; no Member of the Board suggested their exclusion until as late as 1942.

[8] The 1935 Congressional committee hearings and reports are to the same effect.

[9] See Matter of Bee Line, Inc., 6 N. Y. S. L. R. B. 686, 695 (1943):

> "The concept of appropriate unit is an affirmative one, intended to bring about the most desirable form of organization. It is not a negative concept to be used as a means of denying all bargaining rights under the Act to a given group of employees in all circumstances. Once it is determined that a group of persons are employees, they have a right under the Act and the Constitution of the State of New York to be placed in some appropriate unit—that one which will best facilitate their participation in the practice and procedure of collective bargaining."

Of course, the reference to the State Constitution is immaterial here. It might be noted that the New York Board still adheres to this view, despite a change in personnel under a different State Administration.

permit such a result,[10] that particular section certainly cannot be said to encourage it.

There are practical problems before us as well as legal ones. The company is deeply concerned at the foremen's decision to join an unaffiliated labor organization. The company's concern is as understandable as is its employees' decision. Both flow from the character of American industrial life in the 1940's. The company is troubled lest the unionization of its foremen detract from the single-minded loyalty which it considers essential to efficient mass production; the foremen have thought collective action necessary because they believe that individual bargaining has not afforded them the protection that men require in a large, inevitably depersonalized, plant. Self-interest is present on both sides, and so is fear. Fear, perhaps more than self-interest, is a ready cause of industrial strife. In the long run, collective bargaining will tend to reduce both the cause and the effect. It will provide more fertile soil for the ultimate loyalty of foremen than can the resentment that is likely to be engendered by hostile disregard of their chosen representatives.

Bargaining can only succeed, however, if responsible unions representing supervisory employees, once their legal rights are established, recognize the validity of some of management's special fears and seek to dispel them by the terms of the ultimate bargain.[11] Many of the problems arising from possible dual allegiance, which give Mr. Reilly such genuine concern, are particularly susceptible of this treatment. Such problems flow inevitably from the foremen's dual existence. They cannot be made to disappear simply by telling foremen that the Wagner Act is not available to them. American management has shown such resilient genius that, once foremen's representatives lose their sense of insecurity and can adopt a policy of self-restraint, the parties will find a way to resolve their occasional conflict of interest. Government cannot resolve that conflict for them. But it can intercede to lay the groundwork for reasoned negotiation, so that that which seems anathema today may become habitual tomorrow.

[10] This view as to the limited power vested in the Board under Section 9 (b) is not to be taken to mean that the Board lacks discretion to decline to proceed with a representation case upon proper cause shown. Our view of the fundamental policies of the Act may sometimes require the Board to decline, despite the danger of strikes, to make its machinery available to effectuate every choice that employees may make. See Matter of Briggs-Indiana Corporation, 63 N. L. R. B. 1270. Section 9 (c) of the N. L. R. A. provides that this Board "may," not that it must, investigate a question concerning representation and certify the representatives selected. This differentiates the Act from certain State statutes, such as that of New York, which contain mandatory language.

It is not for this Board to determine whether supervisory employees, sensing inequality of bargaining power, should seek to better their lot by exercising the right of free association. They have already done so. In this case we need only decide whether the Act's peaceful processes are to be proffered or denied to employees who, for reasons known best to themselves, desire to act in unison through what appears to be a truly independent union.[12] In the absence of any Court decision,[13] Congressional mandate or other declaration of national policy to the contrary,[14] and in the further absence of proof that collective bargaining by supervisory employees has failed where it has been attempted,[15] it is better that a Board

12 The fact that the Foreman's Association's interests, and therefore its actions, may sometimes coincide with those of rank-and-file employees does not suffice to convert natural sympathy into partnership. Collaboration may be relevant, but the presumption that a constitutionally autonomous organization is in fact autonomous is not so easily rebutted. Affiliation per se is not before us here, and Mr. Houston and I do not pass, one way or the other, upon its possible effect.

13 Indeed, a State Board order finding appropriate a unit of supervisors has been enforced by the courts in the test case of New York State Labor Relations Board v. Metropolitan Life Insurance Company et al., 183 N. Y. Misc. 1064, affirmed by the Appellate Division, First Department, at 114 N. Y. Law Journal, p. 1075 (October, 1945). There are no contrary Federal decisions.

14 The Labor-Management Conference reached no conclusion on this subject.

15 The history of bargaining by supervisory employees in the maritime and railroad industries and in the printing and building trades establishes, at the least, that collective agreements can be made to work in practice. So also does the testimony adduced in the Packard representation case concerning the Foreman's Association's current contract with the Ford Motor Company.

The record is barren of any proof that the Packard foremen have been disloyal to the company or less efficient as supervisors because of their membership in the Association, or that such membership has operated to deprive the rank-and-file employees of their primary rights under the Act.

dedicated to encouraging the bargaining process move forward, not backward,[16] and continue to put a premium on the conference table rather than on the harsh arbitrament of industrial war. The more difficult the problem, the more important it is that the stage be set for men to sit down and reason together.

Gerard D. Reilly, dissenting:

Since the respondent does not deny that it has refused to bargain with the charging labor organization in this case, the issue before us is the same one upon which we passed in our Decision and Direction of Election in case 7-R-1884,[1] the representation matter which resulted in the certification upon which the complaint in the instant proceeding is premised. The findings of the Trial Examiner to which respondent has taken exception rest almost entirely upon the evidence submitted in that preliminary phase of the case, except for three exhibits which the respondent introduced as additional support for its position.

Having set forth at some length my disagreement with the views of the majority in the representation case, I see no reason for repeating them here, since the dissenting opinion is a part of the record, other than to note that the additional documentary evidence contained in this case strengthens my inference that the charging union is not truly independent, but rather an organization whose fate is inextricably bound up with the policy of the United Automobile Workers, the CIO union which represents the rank and file employees in respondent's plant.[2] This being [16] Two reversals in as many years are enough.

[1] Matter of Packard Motor Car Company, 61 N. L. R. B. 4.

[2] Particularly reference is made to an excerpt from the March 1, 1945, issue of "The Searchlight," an official publication of the Chevrolet Local No. 69 of the United Automobile Workers (CIO), stating that about 300 Chevrolet foremen had joined the Foreman's Association and that the rest of the foremen in that company should join this group without delay.

the case, we do have a situation here which presents a genuine question of divergent loyalties,—the conflict arising from the foreman's duty to his employer to enforce the company rules with respect to subordinate employees, and his allegiance to a union allied with one representing the interests of those very subordinates. Consequently, I am unable to agree with the view expressed in the special concurrence of the Chairman that the concerted activities of the foremen here are solely directed at improving the wages and working conditions of the foreman vis-a-vis their employer. That is of course their ultimate objective, but its attainment necessarily contemplates compromising the members of the charging organization in the discharge of the duties they were hired to perform.

If the certified organization were really independent or took steps to guarantee against future instances of collaboration, or if the certification contained safeguards which would effectively insulate its activities from the union of the rank and file, I should feel quite differently about the matter.

3 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will be in order, gentlemen. This is a formal hearing before the National Labor Relations Board, in the matter of Packard Motor Car Company and Foreman's Association of America, Case No. 7-R-1884. The Trial Examiner appearing for the National Labor Relations Board is Samuel H. Jaffee. It has been indicated informally off the record, prior to the start of this hearing, that the appearances will be as follows: For the Board, David Karasick; for the Company, Mr. Louis F. Dahling of Bodman, Longley, Bogle, Middleton and Armstrong, 1400 Buhl Building, Detroit, Michigan, and Percy Donovan, of Beaumont, Smith and Harris, Ford Building, Detroit, Michigan. For the Foreman's Association, Mr. Walter M. Nelson, 1438 Dime Building, Detroit, Michigan, and Robert H. Keys, 515 Barlum Tower, Detroit, Michigan.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Albert E. Meder, of Beaumont, Smith and Harris, was supposed to appear this morning, but had other engagements. He may also appear later in this hearing.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well. We will enter his appearance when he does appear.

The parties are informed that the official reporter makes the only official transcript of these proceedings. All citations in briefs and arguments must refer to the official record. After the close of the hearing, one or more of the parties may wish to have corrections made in the record. All such proposed corrections, either by way of stipulation or motion, should be forwarded to the Board in Washington instead of to the Trial Examiner inasmuch as the Trial Examiner has no power to make any rulings in connection with the case after the hearing is closed.

Statements of reasons in support of motions or objections should, of course, be as concise as posisble. All matters that are spoken in the hearing room are recorded by the official reporter while the hearing is in session, unless the Trial Examiner orders an off-the-record discussion. I may add that I prefer not to go off the record unless all the parties consent to it specifically or indicate it in one way or another that they do not object. In the event, however, that any of the parties wish to make off the record remarks, requests to make such remarks should be directed to the Trial Examiner and not to the official reporter. Exceptions and objections may, upon proper request, be permitted to stand to an entire line of questioning. Automatic exceptions follow all adverse rulings. Five copies of all pleadings, including the original, submitted during the hearing are to be filed with the Trial Examiner.

You may proceed, gentlemen.

Mr. Karasick: Will you mark these papers as Board's Exhibits 1 to 12 for identification?

(Thereupon, the documents above referred to were marked Board's Exhibits Nos. 1 through 12, for identification.)

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, I have had the formal documents in this proceeding marked as Board's Exhibits 1 to 12, both inclusive, for identification. These formal documents are as follows:

Board's Exhibit 1, for identification, is the petition for certification of representatives filed in the Seventh Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board on October 20, 1944, by Robert H. Keys, President of the Foreman's Association of America.

Board's Exhibit 2, for identification, is a Notice of Hearing issued by Frank H. Bowen, Regional Director for the Seventh Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board on November 25, 1944.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: For hearing when?

Mr. Karasick: The Notice of Hearing sets the date of hearing as December 4, 1944.

Board's Exhibit 3, for identification, is the Trial Examiner's Statement in "R" cases, a copy of which has been served upon each of the parties to this hearing.

Mr. Donovan: What is that form number? Is it Z-1057? Did you mention that form number?

Mr. Karasick: You have received that?

Mr. Donovan: No, I have not.

Mr. Karasick: In formal service of the papers by the Board, did counsel for the Company receive this form?

Mr. Dahling: Yes, the form has been received.

Mr. Karasick: You mean, Mr. Donovan, that you have not an individual copy?

Mr. Donovan: If you have an extra copy, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Karasick: I will obtain one, yes.

Board's Exhibit 4 for identification is an affidavit as to service of Notice of Hearing, Petition and Trial Examiner's Statement in "R" cases upon each of the parties to this proceeding, together with the Return Post Office Receipts attached thereto.

Board's Exhibit 5 for identification is a letter written on the letterhead of the Packard Motor Car Company addressed to Mr. Frank H. Bowen, Regional Director of the Seventh Region, National Labor Relations Board, Detroit, Michigan, and signed by A. G. Denison, which letter contains a request on behalf of the Company that the hearing originally scheduled for December 4, 1944 be postponed to December 11, 1944.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What is the date of that letter?

Mr. Karasick: The date of the letter is November 27,
7 1944. I might also add that a stamp appears on the face of the letter showing that it was received in the Seventh Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board on November 29, 1944.

Board's Exhibit 6 for identification is the Notice of Postponement of Hearing issued by Frank H. Bowen, Regional Director of the Seventh Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board on November 29, 1944, which notice postponed the hearing originally scheduled for December 4 to December 11, 1944.

Board's Exhibit 7 for identification is the Affidavit as to Service of the Notice of Postponement of the Hearing upon each of the parties to this proceeding, together with return Post Office receipts attached thereto.

Board's Exhibit 8 for identification is the Motion by counsel for petitioning Union for a continuance of the hearing from December 11 to December 26, 1944.

Mr. Donovan: What is the date of that letter?

Mr. Karasick: Which Notice or Motion is dated December 8, 1944 and was received on the same day at the Seventh Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You say the motion was to continue from December 11 to December 26?

Mr. Karasick: That is correct.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Motion was filed when?

8 Mr. Karasick: December 8.

Mr. Donovan: May I see that exhibit, please?

Mr. Karasick: I will show them all to you later.

Board's Exhibit 9 for identification is a Notice of Postponement of Hearing from December 8, 1944 to—I beg your pardon, from December 11 to December 18, 1944, which was issued by Frank H. Bowen, Regional Director for the Seventh Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board on December 8, 1944.

Board's Exhibit 10 for identification is the Affidavit as to Service of the Notice of Postponement of Hearing from December 11 to December 18, 1944 upon each of the parties to this proceeding, together with return Post Office receipts attached thereto.

Board's Exhibit 11 for identification is a Notice of Change of Place of Hearing issued by Frank H. Bowen, Regional Director for the Seventh Regional Office, National Labor Relations Board, on December 13, 1944.

Board's Exhibit 12 for identification is the Affidavit as to Service of the Notice of Change of Place of Hearing upon each of the parties to this proceeding, together with return Post Office receipts attached thereto.

I offer these documents in evidence as Board's Exhibits 1 to 12, both inclusive and herewith submit them to the parties for their inspection.

9 Are all the exhibits here, counsel?

Mr. Dahling: No objections.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: They are received.

(The documents heretofore marked Board's Exhibits 1 to 12, both inclusive, for identification were received in evidence.)

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, I would like to request at this time a five minute recess for the purpose of discussing with counsel for the Company certain issues in this case which I believe can be disposed of by stipulation and which will save a considerable amount of hearing time.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well, we will take a five minute recess.

(Recess.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, I have had marked as Board's Exhibit Number 13, for identification, a stipulation and agreement by and between counsel for the Packard Motor Car Company and myself as counsel for the Board, with respect to facts concerning the business operations of the Company. I offer this document in evidence as Board Exhibit Number 13.

Mr. Nelson: There is no objection. I have read the paper.

Mr. Dahling: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Received.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Board's Exhibit No. 13 for identification and received in evidence.)

Mr. Karasick: Will you mark this Board Exhibit Number 14?

(The document referred to was marked for identification as Board Exhibit No. 14.)

Mr. Karasick: I have also had marked as Board Exhibit Number 14, for identification, a copy of a letter dated November 25, 1944, on the letterhead of the Foreman's Association of America, addressed to Mr. Elmer Patzkowski, Manager of Industrial Relations of the Packard Motor Car Company, Detroit, Michigan, and signed by Mr. Robert H. Keys, President, Foreman's Association of America, which letter contains a statement, in substance, that the Foreman's Association represents the majority of the employees engaged as foremen by the Packard Motor Car Company, and requests the Company to meet and negotiate with the Association on behalf of such persons. It is my understanding that counsel agree that the copy of the letter now offered as Board Exhibit Number 14 is a true and accurate copy of the original.

I offer this document in evidence as Board Exhibit Number 14.

Mr. Dahling: No objection.

Mr. Nelson: No objection.

Mr. Karasick: It is admitted, is it not, counsel, that this is a true and accurate copy received by the Company?

11 Mr. Dahling: It is admitted.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Received.

(The document heretofore marked for identification as Board Exhibit No. 14 was received in evidence.)

Mr. Karasick: In connection with Board Exhibit Number 14, Mr. Examiner, I would like to state for the record my understanding of an agreement between the parties. It is my understanding that the Packard Motor Car Company and the Foreman's Association of America, through their respective counsel, stipulate and agree that the copy of the letter which has been received in evidence, the original of which was received by the Company in due course of mail shortly after the date borne on the letter, and that the Company has not replied to such letter. Is that a correct statement, counsel?

Mr. Dahling: That statement is correct.

Mr. Nelson: It is so stipulated.

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, in a prior case, number 7-R-1279, there was involved a question concerning representation by the petitioning Union in this proceeding with respect to foremen employed by the Packard Motor Car Company, which resulted in a consent election conducted by the Seventh Regional Office of the Board. I have had the formal documents in case number 7-R-1279 marked as Board Exhibits 15 to 19, both inclusive, for identi-

12 fication, and I wish to offer these documents in evidence at this time as a matter of convenience for the Board. These formal documents are as follows:

Board's Exhibit 15 for identification is a copy of the petition for investigation and certification of representatives pursuant to Section 9-C, National Labor Relations Board Act in the Seventh Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board on January 15, 1944 on behalf of the Foreman's Association of America.

Board's Exhibit 16 for identification is the copy of the agreement for consent election entered into on the first day of February, 1943 by and between the Packard Motor Car Company and the Foreman's Association of America.

Board's Exhibit 17 for identification is a carbon copy of certification of counting and tabulating of ballots, of the election held pursuant to consent election agreement on February 24, 1943. This document, I might add, contains the original signature of representatives of the parties involved in that proceeding.

Mr. Dahling: Is that Exhibit 17 you are referring to?

Mr. Karasick: Yes. Board's Exhibit 18 for identification is a carbon copy of certification of conduct of election in Case Number 7-R-1279, which also contains the original signatures of representatives of the parties in that proceeding.

13 Board's Exhibit 18 for identification—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) 19, Mr. Karasick.

Mr. Karasick: I beg your pardon, Board's Exhibit 19 is correct. Board's Exhibit 19 for identification is a carbon copy of the report on consent election in case 7-R-1279 which was issued by Frank H. Bowen, Regional Director for the Seventh Regional Office, National Labor Relations Board on March 2, 1943.

I offer these documents in evidence as Board's Exhibits 15 to 19, both inclusive. I wish to state at this time that as to those documents now offered which are copies, I have the originals in my possession and that the parties may compare them and see that they are true and accurate copies.

Mr. Donovan: Before we examine those exhibits, may I ask counsel for the Board if the Board's offered exhibits 15 to 19, with reference to certain events in 1943 by the Packard Company, reflect the reason why Packard Motor Car Company was selected here in this proceeding rather than any of the Detroit industries that have foremen?

Mr. Karasick: I do not quite understand counsel's statement. Perhaps I better have it re-read to me.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you read Mr. Donovan's statement, please?

14 (Mr. Donovan's statement was read.)

Mr. Donovan: Is my question clear, Mr. Karasick?

Mr. Karasick: No, not quite, counsel.

Mr. Donovan: Is it because Packard signed a recognition agreement once and you had an election, is that the reason why? Because you had an election of the Packard Motor Car foremen in 1943, is that the reason why Packard was selected here, rather than any other Detroit company, including the company before the War Labor Board Panel recently?

Mr. Karasick: In response to counsel's question, I am afraid that I can only state speculations as to the reason for the proceeding in this case rather than in any other case. It would be speculation on my part just as in his. I do not know why the Board proceeded in this case any more than in any other case. I do know in a prior case the same parties were involved and a consent election agreement was entered into. The consent election was held and the Union designated as the bargaining agent as the result of that agreement. To the extent that is so, it is my feeling that the Board would want to know about the facts and take official notice of its own records. In any respect, with relation to that fact, I will offer these documents.

If it will help counsel understand my position in the matter, they are offered only as a matter of convenience so that it will be in the record before the Board and at its fingertips. In any event, the Board notices and takes official notice of its own proceeding.

Mr. Donovan: Was the Notice of Hearing issued to the Packard Motor Car Company in this case? Was that decision made from the Regional Office or the Washington office?

Mr. Karasick: You will have to take that up with the Regional attorney of the Seventh Regional Office of the Board. All I know is that this case was assigned to me for preparation and presentation to a Trial Examiner.

Mr. Donovan: You do not know?

Mr. Karasick: No.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, in going over the exhibits in connection with the alleged consent election, it is difficult for us to understand why they are offered at this time. I would like, if I can, to ask the attorney for the Board if the claim is made by him that these documents and the election and the result thereof are still in full force and effect. Otherwise, I do not see how they are at all pertinent to this proceeding. It is over practically two years ago that the documents indicate there was a consent election. The other documents indicate that a majority of the foremen voted in favor of this particular unit. Now, as a matter of law, is it the claim of the Board at 16 this time, that that unit has been designated and that these documents are the evidence of that fact and consequently, the Foreman's Association of America is now designated as the bargaining agent for these foremen.

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, I may state in response to counsel's question, that the documents which are offered, as I previously stated, were offered for the convenience of the Board. It is my understanding that the Board in every instance, in a representation proceeding, is interested in knowing what other cases it has decided with respect to representation issues involving employees alleged to constitute an appropriate unit. Now, these documents are offered for that purpose and the documents speak for themselves. I am not making a claim one way or the other as to what the legal effect of these documents shows. I presume that the question concerning representation is present in this proceeding or we would not be here.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, in this proceeding in 1943, if it developed into a legal obligation on the part of Packard to collectively bargain with the particular group then the appropriate proceeding, of course, would be not a new petition for representation, but a complaint for failure to collectively bargain. I do not see where these documents have any relevancy in this case at all because the Board apparently has decided to bring this proceeding
17 under the representation proceedings of the Act. Furthermore, it is too remote—practically two years have elapsed and I fail to see any relevancy at all in the documents.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: May I see Board's Exhibit 3? Board's Exhibit 3 is a document entitled "Trial Examiner's Statement in 'R' cases," a copy of which the parties have. In the fourth paragraph of that document appears the following sentence at the end of the paragraph. (Reading):

> "Likewise, the time when organization began, the department or group of employees affected, the subsequent growth or decline of membership, present claims as to membership, and relations had with the Employer, including requests for collective bargaining and the presence or absence of contracts, are all of importance."

I call your especial attention to the phrase, "and relations had with the Employer." It would seem to me that the proffered evidence bears upon that phrase. Of course, that in turn does not necessarily mean because that language is included in Board's Exhibit 3, that necessarily makes the proffered evidence admissible. As to that, however, I can only say among other things perhaps, it is and has been customary for the Board for many years in representation cases to receive evidence as to the 18 past relationship between the Petitioner and the Company.

This proffered evidence bears upon that relationship and I think it is therefore admissible. Board's Exhibits 15 through 19 are received in evidence.

(Thereupon the documents above referred to were marked Board's Exhibits Nos. 15 through 19 and received in evidence.)

Mr. Donovan: May we be entitled to some statement from the Board counsel as to whether he claims any present effective force to any of these documents or not? That would be rather important to the Respondent or the Employer.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, you have made your inquiry.

Mr. Donovan: I think the Trial Examiner should rule that we are entitled to an answer to that.

Mr. Karasick: I would like the record to show that a moment has elapsed between the time the request was made and the time I make my response. I do not want the record to show in any way that the Board is attempting to evade clarifying any requests or any documents, rather, about which counsel is in doubt.

With respect to the inquiry, no claim is being made with respect to these documents; this is not a case involving a complaint or charge with respect to refusal on the part of the Company to bargain or negotiate with 19 the Foreman's Association. The only question here is the question of representation of the employees alleged to be appropriate. These documents, as I have stated before, and as I think the Examiner has stated before, have been offered for the purpose of showing past relationships with respect to the employees involved, through their representatives and the Company.

Mr. Donovan: Do I understand, then, that counsel contends that the foremen of Packard in the proceeding reflected in these exhibits 15 to 19 have not designated any statutory representative and that we are in court as though no such proceeding ever was had?

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, I make no such statement and no such claim. I have stated pretty clearly what the documents are for, what the purpose has been for their admission. Now, if counsel wants to put on any particular construction on them, that is counsel's affair. I merely say that these are for the convenience of the Board. These documents neither add to nor detract from the power of the Board and it is usual and customary practice in inquiring into the entire bargaining relationship of the Company with respect to an alleged question concerning representation.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I will say this, for the benefit of counsel: If the 1943 proceeding resulted in a 20 report by the Regional Director as a result of a consent election held at that time were in effect now, as far as the report is concerned, or what perhaps might be termed a certification by the Regional Director, I suggest it is a personal opinion, not at all binding upon the Board. And as Mr. Dahling indicates, it probably would not be necessary to bring a petition at this time, and there may be considerable merit on the argument that the mere bringing of the present petition might, as far as the Petitioner is concerned, constitute a waiver of any legal effect which that former proceeding has insofar as the earlier report of the Regional Director is of continuing effect and exists at the present time. That, in turn, however, does not necessarily mean that even if it is not in effect at this time, that the evidence is irrelevant. It may have probative force in connection with the issues of this proceeding, even though it is not in and of itself of continuing and existing effect.

You may proceed.

Mr. Donovan: Is the Employer proceeding here on the theory that the Board is now requesting another election? So we understand.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: So I understand.

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, I would like to correct what I believe is a misinterpretation. The Board is 21 not requesting anything here at all. The Board is going through the administrative proceeding of determining the issues in this case which have arisen as an alleged question of representation involving employees in an alleged appropriate unit. The Board is not requesting anything. The Board is merely following its usual procedure in representation cases.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: My previous remarks were intended to refer to the Petitioner, rather than the Board. I understand, in other words, that the Foreman's Association of America wants an election.

Mr. Nelson: That is correct, Mr. Examiner.

Mr. Donovan: We certainly understand this is a representation case and that an election is contemplated. That is what we think we are in court for, and I am very much puzzled by counsel's previous statement. This is a representation case and it deals with the emergency, if any, and the identification of statutory rights, and it may involve, as representation cases do, naturally and obviously, an election to determine, and such an election would have to precede a certification, unless there was a consent by the Employer. Now, this would be the second election if one such were held, unless the Board is relying on the former election. I think it is upon the Board's 22 counsel to state whether he claims the designation of a majority by the Board of foremen having voted for the Foreman's Association, or whether he now says, for all practical purposes of this proceeding, that may be disregarded and held as of no effect. We want to know what we are facing here. We are in court today.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I will not require counsel for the Board to make any further statement unless he cares to make it voluntarily.

Mr. Karasick: I would like only to state, Mr. Examiner, that I think the record already shows the statements I have made with respect to these documents, and that counsel himself, through his own statement, has shown he is fully aware that this is a representation proceeding; that it contemplates a finding by the Board of the appropriate or inappropriateness, and depending upon such finding, the Board will direct an election or dismiss the proceeding. That is what the Company faces, and I think that, together with my other statements, would make clear the position of the Board.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I would like to supplement that by saying that the past relations between the parties are, of themselves, evidence in this matter, and for that reason, if for no other, the Board Exhibits 15 through 19 have been received.

Mr. Karasick: May I proceed, Mr. Examiner?

23 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Karasick: I have had marked as Board Exhibit 20 for identification, a tabulation dated December 11th, 1944, being a list of the companies affected by strikes involving foremen and supervisory workers for the period July 1, 1943 to November, 1944, on file in the Industrial Relations Division of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. This document is certified as a true tabulation by A. F. Hinrichs, Acting Commissioner of Labor Statistics, and Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor.

I offer this document in evidence as Board Exhibit Number 20.

Mr. Donovan: What, may I ask, is the purpose of this offered bit of evidence?

Mr. Karasick: The purpose, Mr. Examiner, of the evidence now proffered as Board Exhibit Number 20, is to show whether or not labor disputes involving questions of representation by foremen and other supervisory employees have arisen during the course of time covered by that document, and the nature and extent of those disputes as shown by a recognized government agency.

Mr. Donovan: Does this document contain a record of the strikes of foremen, as well as disputes?

Mr. Karasick: As soon as Mr. Nelson finishes looking at it, you may look at it.

24 Mr. Donovan: Can you not tell me informally whether it contains a record of the strikes of the foremen as well as disputes?

Mr. Karasick: Well, I call them work stoppages. You may call them what you please, or so may anyone else.

Mr. Donovan: Does this contain a record of the strikes of foremen, as well as disputes?

Mr. Karasick: It contains a record of all work stoppages. They are labor disputes or work stoppages which affect the operations of the Company.

Mr. Donovan: They are the sort of thing that may be called strikes by one person or one group of persons and labor stoppages by another group of persons?

Mr. Nelson: I think it is fair to say it does not include all disputes. As Mr. Donovan has used the word "disputes", that might be much broader than that which are called stoppages.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: If you used "disputes" in its broadest sense, I do not know how anyone could make a tabulation of them.

Mr. Nelson: I do not know myself.

Mr. Karasick: That was my basic reason for referring to them as work stoppages, Mr. Examiner, which I think is a more clearly defined term.

25 Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, as far as the Packard Motor Car Company is concerned, despite the fact that the document marked for identification as Board Exhibit Number 20, on the last page, page four, states that the figures are only partially complete, we have no objection to its introduction in evidence.

Mr. Karasick: Have you seen it, Mr. Nelson?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, I have, and there is no objection.

Mr. Dahling: May we have a copy?

Mr. Karasick: I will furnish a copy.

Mr. Nelson: I take it, Mr. Examiner, if either of the parties wish to, or are able to, they will be at liberty to supplement the information contained in that document?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You take it correctly.

Mr. Donovan: The Employer may, likewise, desire to supplement that in some way by additional data.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

Mr. Karasick: I may say that if there is any additional data that any of the parties have with respect to the situation, I think the Board would be glad to receive it as, of necessity, it would be glad to receive the total and complete picture of the entire relationship between the parties in the issues of the case.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, what bothers me, we have no objection to the exhibit, but I do not see how 26 strikes have any pertinency in connection with a proceeding of this character.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, I can tell you at least one. One of the purposes of the National Labor Relations Act is supposed to be the preservation of industrial peace. Here is a paper which indicates that at some spots throughout the country "there ain't been such an animal."

Mr. Dahling: In other words, all any group of men would have to do in a situation of that sort would be to strike and thereby force a governmental body to give them what they want?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Not at all. If you can show that some strikes were created for the purpose of creating statistics, so to speak, I think that would be relevant.

Mr. Dahling: Well, if that would be the case, I think we would be here, probably, until July.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That may very well be.

Mr. Dahling: As to whether or not these strikes here in Detroit were justified—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) No, I did not say that.

Mr. Dahling: If they are not justified, there must be just one purpose for them, and that is to force the employer or force a governmental agency to give them
27 what they want—collective bargaining. At least, that inference certainly could be drawn from such evidence.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: At any rate, Board Exhibit Number 20 has been received in evidence.

(The document referred to was marked as Board's Exhibit No. 20 for identification and received in evidence.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let us go on to the next matter.

Mr. Donovan: We would like a copy of that, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I understood counsel to say he would supply it.

Mr. Karasick: Yes, I think I have a copy with me now. I will give it to you.

28 Mr. Karasick: The Board has nothing further to offer at this time, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is the Association ready to go ahead?

Mr. Nelson: The Petitioner is prepared to offer witnesses.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

Mr. Nelson: I call Mr. Robert H. Keys.

ROBERT H. KEYS,

a witness called by and in behalf of the Petitioner, being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Mr. Keys, how long have you lived in Detroit?

A. Thirty-one years.

Q. You are a married man with a family?

A. That is correct.

Q. And did you previously work in a factory?

A. Yes.

Q. Where?

A. Ford Motor Car Company.

Q. And for how long?

A. Seven years.

Q. In what capacity?

29 A. In the capacity of machine operator, assistant foreman and division foreman.

Q. Had you previously worked in other factories in the industrial district here?

A. No, I had not.

Q. What had you done before you worked for Ford?

A. I worked for Sears, Roebuck & Company in the Shipping Department, for R. L. Polk, in the Shipping Department, and I had worked as a mechanic in garages, repairing automobiles.

Q. You said you were a machine operator at Ford's. Can you give us the type of machine you operated?

A. The first type I ever operated with the Company was a drill press, but throughout the years I have operated numerous machines, such as lathes, grinders and milling machines.

Q. Do you recall when you became a foreman?

A. Yes, I can recall definitely when I was told I was a foreman. However, the record, we found out later, did not confirm that fact. I was told that I was an assistant foreman about the month of May in 1934.

Q. And was it one of your superiors that told you you were a foreman?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you at once proceed to act in the capacity of supervisor?

A. I did.

Mr. Donovan: Let us fix the year, approximately, so we will know when we are talking about.

Mr. Nelson: 1934 and the month—will you tell Mr. Donovan the month?

Mr. Donovan: I just want the year.

The Witness: I said about the month of May, I believe, 1934.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): And how long did you act as assistant foreman?

A. Well, I remained on that job until they asked me to go to the Aircraft Building—I beg your pardon, they asked me to go to the "B" building.

Q. What was the "B" Building?

A. It was another one of the buildings composing the Ford Industry at River Rouge.

Q. What did they do in that building is what I am getting at?

A. We built panels for automobile bodies, and various parts for automobiles. However, the job that I was asked to go on was to take charge of rear axle assembly for Ford, Ferguson Sherman tractors. Mr. Nelson, might I make a correction?

Q. Yes.

31 A. That May date should be 1933. I recall now, and not 1934.

Q. And how soon after the fact of entering supervision did the records catch up so you were recorded as a supervisor?

Mr. Dowling: I cannot see any relevancy in that.

Mr. Nelson: Just the same, it is the same thing that we want to correct here and I want to illustrate it by this witness. I am not offering it solely because of Mr. Keys' experiences, your Honor, I will offer it because it is the kind of thing the Foreman's Association is desiring an opportunity to correct.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You may answer.

The Witness: Well, I assumed that I was recorded as a foreman when I was told so by my superior and it was not until I had left the employment of the Ford Motor Company and the Ford Chapter officers in their negotiations with the Company in correcting certain records, discovered the fact that my record was one of the records that was very incomplete. If I recall correctly, although I had acted and had assumed I was a foreman for about four years, that the record did not show it.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, are we going into the grievances of the foremen in this representation case?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not know what we are 32 going into. I do not know what evidence is going to be offered.

Mr. Donovan: I have reference to the last question and answer. I am unable to attach any relevancy to it in this particular case, unless the witness, through counsel, is attempting to develop a historical foreman's grievance, which are reasons why they should have this or that.

The Witness: Mr. Nelson,—

Mr. Donovan: I would like a ruling from the Trial Examiner on that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: There is nothing to rule on. What do you want me to do now?

Mr. Donovan: You are running the trial—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I heard no objection to any question.

Mr. Dahling: It has been objected to on the ground that it was irrelevant and I understood you to overrule the objection. The question was put as to whether or not we are in this case going to develop—is the Trial Examiner going to permit the witnesses for the Union to develop grievances which they claim they may have as a part of this case? If that is to be considered relevant testimony, of course, we would like to know. We only spent about six months of this last year going into those particular grievances before the War Labor Board. I do not feel that 33 testimony of this sort is at all relevant in a proceeding of this character. It does not make any difference whether they are grievances or not, as far as this hearing is concerned.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: At this state of the hearing, as it stands at the moment, I cannot indicate in advance what I am going to do. I will have to cross that bridge when I come to it. That is all I can say on that subject at this time.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): How long did you work as supervisor in "B" Building at Ford's?

A. Approximately two years.

Q. How many years of experience as a supervisor did you have there?

A. The total with Ford Motor Company?

Q. Yes, as a supervisor.

A. As far as experience goes, I had about six and a half years.

Q. And when you discontinued active work as a supervisor what position did you hold? What rank of foremanship were you in?

A. I was classified as a division shift foreman.

Q. Where is that in the hierarchy of foremen, is that the lowest foreman nearest to the workman or somewhat removed?

A. No, I had foremen under my supervision who 34 were classified as job foremen.

Q. How many?

A. I had three.

Q. Three job foremen and your division foreman and above you were other foremen in the factory?

A. That is right.

Q. As a foreman did you become acquainted with other foremen in the Ford Motor Company?

A. Yes.

Q. And did that acquaintanceship ultimately lead to discussions among you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Discussions of an association or an organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did that begin to take form?

A. The month of August, 1941.

Q. And that was after the organization drives in 1936 and 1937 among the maintenance and production workers?

A. That is right.

Q. And after the maintenance and production workers had obtained and had in operation contracts with their employer?

A. Correct.

Q. Tell us now whether you as a foreman had or knew of any other foremen who had anything to do with the formulation and contents of those contracts with the 35 maintenance and production workers?

A. I had no part in it and I do not know of any other foremen who did.

Q. Of any rank in the Ford Motor Company?

A. Yes.

Q. In August of 1941, you men began to talk of an organization, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Was that at first confined to the foremen in the Ford Motor Company plants?

A. Yes, at first it was confined to one building, our own building, the Aircraft Building.

Q. How early in 1941 did that discussion begin?

A. It started in the month of August, along about the middle of the month, I would say.

Q. You are bearing in mind that is before Pearl Harbor?

A. Yes.

Q. But after you had begun the production in the Ford factory of war materials?

A. Yes.

Q. How long after you had begun production of war materials?

A. Well, as a foreman I would have no way of knowing when the Company signed its contracts or how it negotiated them but they had been building the Aircraft Building possibly a year before that and it was not com-
36 pleted when I went over there. I can only hazard a guess and I would say there had been some war production for perhaps six months or so.

Q. They had been preparing for war production for something over a year, as you recall it?

A. Correct.

Q. Now, the old building, you say, that was the "B" Building, was it not?

A. Where we started talking about associations was in the Aircraft Building.

Q. How big a place is that, as to the overall number of men employed in it, Mr. Keys, let us get a brief idea of it?

A. The Company employs about 10,000 people in that building.

Q. And the supervisory force in that building would be how extensive in number?

A. Well, it went over the thousand mark, that I personally know of.

Q. You knew of over one thousand supervisors in that one building?

A. That is correct.

Q. And that building is located at the Rouge central plant of the Ford Motor Company in Dearborn?

A. That is right.

Q. Well, just give us a brief statement of the early 37 organization efforts in that building and tell us how they expanded, if they did, to other buildings.

A. Well, as I stated before, we started discussing the possibility of having an organization for foremen, an organization of our own that would be independent of any other organization, for the purpose of discussing with the employer our own wages, hours and conditions of employment. I made several attempts to organize the foremen in our particular department during lunchtime and after working hours. At first they would say, "Let me think it over for a day or two." Most of them didn't seem to think that the foremen were entitled to anything like that because of the way they were treated out there, kicked around and pushed around. They didn't think they should be able to stand up and fight back. Mainly they were afraid, I will say it that way. Nevertheless, four of us, three others and myself, carried the ball, and in the month of September we held three meetings.

Q. That is 1941?

A. Yes, 1941.

Q. Let me interrupt you here, Mr. Keys, I will start you again there in September, 1941, and ask you if you had yourself any previous experience in organizing labor or wage earners?

A. No, I had never had any.

37A Q. You had done none because you had been a foreman at that time, something over six years?

A. That is right.

Q. And you had not been a maintenance and production worker in the organization years in 1935 and 1936?

A. No, I was not.

Q. Come back to September, 1941. You say you had three meetings of foremen?

A. We had three meetings in the month of September.

Q. Yes, by meetings you mean how many people?

A. Well, at the first meeting there were only twelve of us and at the second meeting I think there was about thirty-five.

Q. Where did you meet the first time?

A. The Arena Gardens in Dearborn, Michigan.

Q. You said how many at the second meeting?

A. About thirty-five.

Q. A little better than double?

A. Yes.

Q. All from the Aircraft Building?

A. That is true.

Q. Where did you have the second meeting?

A. In the Dearborn Arena.

Q. Is that a public building down there?

A. It was a public building where they held boxing
38 matches and so forth. It has since been razed.

Q. And the third meeting in September, 1941?

A. It was also held in Dearborn but it was held at a small hall on Michigan Avenue. I cannot recall the name of it but there were about 100 packed the place at that meeting.

Q. These meetings dealt with the subject of the possible organization of the foremen, did they, Mr. Keys?

A. Yes, that was the purpose of the meetings, but all the foremen wanted to talk about was grievances. We had a little difficulty straightening them out. They had to get the organization before they could talk about wages and so forth.

Q. They were so full of grievances that the subject matter was hard to get to, I suppose.

A. That is right.

Q. Now, were there further meetings in October, 1941?

A. Yes.

Q. And November?

A. Yes.

Q. Go ahead.

A. Although I did not know it at the time, we later learned that the foremen of the foundry building were also organized.

Q. At the same time and independent of you?

A. At the same time and independent of us.

39 Q. But at the Ford Motor Company?

A. That was in the foundry building of the Ford Motor Company. They heard about our organization and that we were holding a meeting on October 19, 1941 in the Moose Hall in Dearborn, Michigan and their representatives were at our meeting. At that meeting the two groups joined together and adopted the name "Foreman's Association of America" and selected the first temporary officers. About 300 people were present at that meeting, I would say.

Mr. Karasick: What is the date of that, please?

Mr. Nelson: October.

The Witness: 19, 1941.

Mr. Karasick: Thank you.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Were you one of the temporary officers?

A. Yes, I was elected as temporary president.

Q. Now, up to that time, had there been any organizer, as such? A person employed to make effort at organization as distinguished from his daily work?

A. No, none whatsoever.

Q. And at that time was any organizer employed?

A. No.

Q. In October, 1941?

A. No.

Q. Well, following October 19, 1941, presumably you had additional meetings?

A. We possibly had subsequent meetings but the only one I recall distinctly is the November 2nd meeting of 1941.

Q. Where was that held?

A. In the Fordson High School in Dearborn, Michigan. It was at that meeting that we adopted our first constitution and held our first official election of officers. We had about 1200 at that meeting.

Q. And still had no paid organizer?

A. No, none whatsoever.

Q. I assume that each of you men were interested—

Mr. Donovan (Interposing): No paid what?

Mr. Nelson: No paid organizer. Offering to show it was a thoroughly spontaneous movement.

The Witness: That is right, we had no paid officers, either, no one was paid anything.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): All you men in that first period, from the first twelve up to the 1200, by November 2nd, a period of some sixty days or thereabout, were men interested only while you were still on the job?

A. That is right.

Q. Were you one of the officers elected on November 2nd?

A. Yes, I was elected as president of the organization.

Q. Did you continue after that working as a foreman in the Ford Shops?

41 A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you pay for the use of the halls?

A. We did.

Q. You paid whatever the parties in charge requested or required, is that right?

A. We would pay it after the meetings. The men contributed. In other words, the hat was passed around and they would throw in a quarter or a half a dollar. One man threw in $5.00 one day. Then we paid for the meeting hall. A record was kept of the rest which was used to purchase what incidental material we needed to get on with our organization.

Q. Now, this was an organization of the foremen limited up to that time—limited to the Ford Motor Company plants?

A. That was true, although it was also our desire and our belief that all foremen needed organization and we felt that our organization would expand to a national organization.

Q. You thought of it but you hadn't taken any steps yet?

A. No steps had been taken.

Q. Did you continue going into the factory daily to work after that for sometime?

A. Yes, ten hours a day seven days a week.

Q. And you did this organization work on the side in your spare time, if any?

A. That is right.

42 Q. And the other officers did likewise?

A. Exactly the same.

Q. Until about what time when you required officers and became full time employees?

A. Well, the organization expanded so rapidly that along about the first of the year we began to get inquiries from other plants.

Q. That would be the first of 1942?

A. Yes. We decided that we had better rent office space somewhere to have facilities to handle the demands for membership. After lookin around in the immediate vicinity there we located a large suite of offices in the Carmen Center Building, 5746 Schaefer Road, Dearborn, which is still the headquarters of the Ford Chapter No. 1. We hired a girl. The officers continued to work in the shop and came to the office on Sundays or whenever they had time off. We worked on Sundays then.

Q. At that time there was tremendous pressure on your time it was very heavy, wasn't it?

A. Very much so.

Q. And you were asked to work very long hours and seven days a week pretty much every week, practically?

A. That is true, we were all glad to do it. We were trying to develop the Pratt and Whitney Aircraft engine for the Air Forces and we all realized that that came 43 before anything else.

Q. Such time as you gave to organization efforts was current with seven days a week and ten hours a day?

A. That is true.

Q. Did you for some little time then, confine your main efforts to the Ford Motor Company supervisors, your main efforts for some time?

A. Well, after we started the organization we did not have to put forth much effort. We were receiving demands for membership applications so rapidly that it was just a question of seeing that they got into the hands of the party requesting them. We did not have to go out to do any organizing.

Q. And you did not do any?

A. No.

Q. In the main, has that characterized the organization of the Foreman's Association of America and its various chapters up to the present time?

Mr. Donovan: Just a moment. Mr. Trial Examiner, I object to that question. It is much too general. What was done by the Foreman's organization from then on covers a lot of ground, and I do not care to have a general statement like that in a single yes or no answer. I think it should be strieken.

Mr. Nelson: I will specify as to the Packard Motor 44 Company in a moment.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You are now asking about Packard?

Mr. Nelson: No, I am not. I was asking it more generally, and I will undertake to make it a specific inquiry to show just exactly how it was done in Packard.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I know, but are you insisting on your pending question?

Mr. Nelson: Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think a foundation should be first laid. I sustain the objection.

Mr. Nelson: I will be very glad to lay a foundation.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Did you at any time employ an organizer?

A. No.

Q. And are you familiar with the manner in which memberships in the Foreman's Association chapters have been obtained up to the present time?

A. Yes.

Q. Excepting the Packard Chapter, for the moment, Mr. Keys, has this spontaneous response continued from the beginning right up to present time?

A. The true answer to that question, Mr. Nelson, is that it is still spontaneous, to a great extent. However, we have had, for quite some time, a paid membership director.

45 Q. What are his duties?

A. Well, his duties are to answer the inquiries that come in requesting information about the organization; to send out the various bits of literature that we have about our organization, and, in the main, to answer questions, send out applications and charters and receive them, and to issue provisional charters to chapters or to groups of foremen I should say, when they send in an application for a charter.

Q. You have had an organizer for how long?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He has not said he had any. He said he had a membership director.

Mr. Nelson: I am sorry.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): You call him a membership director or organizer?

A. We call him a membership director.

Q. All right, how long have you had him?

A. We have had a membership director since the first election that I described to you on November 2, 1941. But, as you will recall, I said we all worked in the plant.

Q. Yes.

A. And it was in the latter part of 1942, fully a year later, I am sure, when he was put on full time at the convention, and he started on full time January 1, 1943.

46 Q. And has continued since that time?

A. And has continued since that time.

Q. As a membership director?

A. That is true.

Q. Performing the functions you have described?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, coming back to the Ford Chapter, you were elected president of that Chapter in how many years, Mr. Keys, yourself?

A. I was elected president of the Chapter at the election of November 2, 1941, but when we adopted our constitution on that date, the Constitution provided for our organization to be a national organization and I acted in the capacity of president of Ford Chapter until the convention in 1942. In the month of October that was, I believe, and at that convention I was elected to the national presidency and it became necessary for the vice-president of the Ford Chapter at that time to act as president until they could have an election, which they did.

Q. In the meantime, had the Ford Chapter increased in membership?

A. Yes, we reached a peak, I believe, of 8500 in the Ford Chapter.

Q. At about what time?

A. Well, I cannot give you the exact date, but when 47 we had the convention in 1942 we also had two or three other chapters at that time, and I am pretty sure by the 1942 convention we had about reached that peak.

Q. It was at about that time?

A. Yes.

Q. In the meantime, had the Ford Chapter made efforts to deal with the Ford Motor Company with respect to foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. And to obtain recognition?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember when you began those efforts?

A. Yes, in the month of May, 1942, we contacted the Company. On May 13, 1942, we filed a petition with the National Labor Relations Board requesting an investigation and certification. But on May 22nd of 1942, the Company discharged one of our building chairmen who was attempting to negotiate with the superintendent about an issue that was in existence at that time, and that was the foremen having to work an extra half hour each day without pay after the people under their supervision had gone home, and the superintendent fired the chairman.

Q. In which building?

A. In the Spring and Upset Building.

Q. His name was what?

A. Henry LaBeau.

48 Q. Leaving that at that point, Mr. Keys, for a moment, let me take you back and suggest to you that as a matter of fact you made a written demand on the Ford Motor Company earlier, did you not? Do you recall the date of that letter? I desire it just because it fixes the chronology more accurately.

A. I don't recall exactly. Our records will show it, but there were demands made upon the Company.

Q. The first of December, 1941?

A. As I said, I do not recall it, Mr. Nelson. I would have to check our records.

Q. But it would be some months prior to the discharge of LaBeau?

A. It was some months prior.

Q. Up to that time had the Company made any effort—up to that time had the Company met with you and discussed the Foremen's grievances, up to the LaBeau discharge?

A. Representatives of the Company had met with us, but didn't discuss any grievances, just said the foremen could stand on their own two feet and settle their own grievances, as far as they were concerned.

Q. You had not been successful in getting any relief up to that time?

A. No, these representatives of the Company took the position they represented the foremen, and when I questioned them as to why they had signed a contract
49 with the UAW-CIO, affecting the foremen adversely in one particular instance, and told them they hadn't done a very good job in representing the foremen, if that was the way they did business. That concluded the conference.

Q. On the discharge of LaBeau in May, 1942, what occurred?

A. 169 foremen employed in the same building protested the action of the superintendent, so he fired them all.

Q. On the spot?

A. Yes.

Q. Then what happened?

A. They went out and went home, and the next day they tried to come back to work and they were locked out at the gate. Plant protection men stopped them and said they couldn't go in. So the following Sunday, which was May 23, 1942, we called a meeting of our membership and there were 3700 foremen that came to the meeting and voted to strike.

Q. That was in the Ford Motor Company?

A. Yes.

Q. And what occurred?

A. At this particular meeting they gave a vote of confidence to the officers and instructed us to go about settling this problem, and if it was necessary to strike, and those 3700 pledged themselves to strike. It was on May 25th that we got a call from the Ford Motor Company asking if we would come over for a conference on this particular problem.

50 Mr. Donovan: Is this in 1942?

Mr. Nelson: Yes.

The Witness: This is in 1942, yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): As far as you know, Mr. Keys, was that the first strike authorization by any portion of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. That was the first.

Q. And was there a strike or was there not one?

A. No. We met with Mr. Harry Bennett, Mr. Ray

Raush, Mr. Harry Mack, Mr. James Brady, Jack Block, in Harry Bennett's office on the afternoon of May 25th.

Q. By "we," you mean who?

A. Myself, as president, Mr. William Elliott, Mr. McDermott, and Mr. Allan Nelson, representing the Association.

Q. Was the discharge of LaBeau and the accompanying controversy discussed at that meeting?

A. That was the purpose of the meeting, and that was the discussion.

Q. Tell us just briefly the result of the discussion.

A. The result was that Mr. Harry Bennett called the superintendent in that building and asked him what business he had to discharge anyone for organizing, and that these men were to come back on their jobs immediately.

Q. The 169?

A. 170, including LaBeau.

51 Q. And were they taken back without further incident?

A. Yes, and their cards were gotten from the time office for them and they went back to work.

Q. This conference avoided a strike in that instance?

A. It did, definitely.

Q. Now, was that the first instance where the Foreman's Association representatives had confronted as imminent a situation as that?

A. Yes, that was our first experience.

Q. And I presume it was your first individual experience in a matter of that kind?

A. That is true.

Q. Now, at that time, Mr. Keys, you were acting, were you, as president of the National or president of the Ford Chapter?

A. Both.

Q. Both?

A. I was the duly elected president of the Ford Chapter, acting as national president.

Q. Because, in the meantime, other plant supervisory employees had applied for charters?

A. That is true.

Q. At least, some provisional charters had been issued?

A. That is true.

Q. Would you remember about how many?

A. At the time of the May incident?

52 Q. Yes, May 25th, when you met Mr. Bennett and adjusted this threat of a strike?

A. Well, I would say that we had possibly three—two, I am sure of.

Q. Well, where were they?

A. Briggs Manufacturing Company and Chrysler Corporation.

Q. What is the next incident illustrating the development and growth of the Foreman's Association, Mr. Keys?

A. Well, after Mr. Harry Bennett instructed the superintendent to take these foremen back immediately, we discussed foremen's grievances with him, and these other gentlemen I mentioned a moment ago, and the result of that conference was that Mr. Bennett instructed Ray Raush, who was plant superintendent in charge of the entire plant, to select a committee of superintendents to meet with our committee for the purpose of ironing out foremen's problems, and Mr. Raush, on June 17, 1942, called all of the superintendents together and the officers of the Executive Board members of the Ford Chapter met with the superintendents and they selected a committee and we selected a committee and started negotiations, which resulted in the first signed agreement with Ford Motor Company, on November 5th, establishing wages and classifications.

Q. November 5, 1942?

A. November 5, 1942.

53 Trial Examiner Jaffee: When was that meeting?

The Witness: The meeting was on June 17, 1942, with the superintendents, where we selected the committee.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): And it took you until November to get this preliminary contract?

A. Yes, due to the fact that the entire records of the Company on foremen had to be gone through and straightened out, and we had to agree on how the foremen ought to be classified and what their rates of pay should be, how they should be paid, and so forth, and it took that period of time to do that.

Q. Following November, 1942, did you, that is, the Association, and the Ford Motor Company, operate under that contract?

A. We did.

Q. Was that contract signed as Foreman's Association of America?

A. It was.

Q. Ford Chapter?

A. It was.

Q. Was that your first experience with the contract?

A. Yes.

Q. With an employer?

A. Yes.

Q. And what followed the signing of that contract
54 with respect to the Ford Chapter, briefly and just in general?

A. Well, following that we applied to the War Labor Board for approval of the rates that were established in the contract, and that was approved by the War Labor Board.

Q. That is, you made a joint application with the Ford Motor Company?

A. No, we didn't make a joint application. The application was only signed by the Company, but we accompanied the Company's attorney and put in an appearance in Washington before representatives of the War Labor Board, and it was explained to them that it was sought jointly.

Q. Now, were there also included in that some salaried employees that required an application to the United States Treasury?

A. That is right.

Q. And you likewise, went with the Ford Motor Company to the United States Treasury representatives in connection with the raises reflected in that portion of the agreement?

A. No, we didn't go with them. They appeared there shortly before we did, but it was explained to the Treasury Department that it was sought jointly.

Q Did a time come when, Mr. Keys, the Company, working on its end of this agreement or carrying out this agreement, set up an office, a personnel office?

A. During our negotiations of our agreement, it was 55 agreed upon between both parties that an office would be set up to be known as the Foremen's Personnel Office. The purpose of the office was to keep records on foremen, have an availability list whenever a foreman was demoted or taken off a job, he would go on an availability list and, in general, it was to straighten out the chaotic condition of the foremen's records and conditions in the plant.

Q. By the way, while we are on that subject, do you find, generally, from the viewpoint of the foremen chaotic conditions in industry as to their classifications, wages, and so forth?

Mr. Donovan: I was unable to get that question.

Mr. Nelson: I will except the Packard Motor Car Company, because we will make a specific showing as to the Packard Motor Car Company.

Mr. Donovan: I should like to have the question read, or repeated.

(Question read.)

Mr. Donovan: If the Examiner considers that a relevant question, which I doubt, I do not think the weight would be of much assistance to the Board.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It seems to be general.

Mr. Nelson: It is general. I am referring in general to the organization, I am offering it in general as to the organization.

56 Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not think it shows anything on which the witness can answer. The word "industry" is very general.

Mr. Nelson: I think that would be true, but I think he would fairly be limited to those plants he knows about, Mr. Examiner.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): I will ask you if, in the efforts to organize the Foreman's Association, if you have become acquainted with the facts in that regard?

A. Yes.

Q. What are they?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just a minute.

Mr. Nelson: I will make it more specific.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the mere statement that he is acquainted is not sufficient foundation.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Have you had to deal with these conditions in handling the affairs of foremen?

Mr. Donovan: What is meant by "these conditions"?

Mr. Nelson: Referring to the lack of classifications, the status—

Mr. Donovan (Interposing): Just a moment.

Mr. Nelson: May I finish the question?

Mr. Donovan: I object, Mr. Examiner. I think that question should be reframed.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is what I understood
57 he was trying to do.

Mr. Nelson: I was asking if he knew about it and had dealt with it in the companies that had been organized by the Foreman's Association of America, and I limited myself to that.

Mr. Donovan: He said yes, and you are now telling him what to answer.

Mr. Nelson: You mean, your objection is that it is leading?

Mr. Donovan: Yes, it is leading and irrelevant.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I have not heard a completed question as yet.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Have you had to do in your efforts and work as president of the National Association with the status of foremen?

A. Yes, every day.

Q. In the industries in which you have organized foremen's chapters?

A. Yes, every day.

Q. And are you acquainted with the facts as to those chapters and those companies so that you could determine whether the status and classification, position and authority of foremen generally is definite and certain, or whether it is chaotic and uncertain?

Mr. Donovan: Just a moment.

58 Mr. Nelson: He can answer that question yes or no.

Mr. Donovan: No, he cannot answer that question yes or no, I do not believe, Mr. Examiner, and I object to the question because I think the word "status" is wholly undefined; it carries a connotation unfavorable to the employer. I object to it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In short, the short answer to your objection is you cannot get everything in one question. You only proceed one step at a time. The witness may answer yes or no.

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): And what is it?

A. In many instances, the foremen do not know how they are classified and when they have sought membership in our organization and we questioned them as to how they were classified, they have said, "I do not know," and in many cases they have worked with the Company a number of years.

Q. These are men of experience and continuity of employment you are talking about?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Donovan: I am not objecting to that question although it is based upon second-hand information. I am assuming, however, that the Examiner is allowing some liberality to both sides on questions of this type.

59 Trial Examiner Jaffee: I will allow a certain degree of liberality. I cannot commit myself as to how liberal I will be or will not be in particular cases. I think it would be rather silly of me to do so. We will cross those bridges also when we come to them.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): After the Ford Motor Company—I think you said early in 1943—established an office, did the Foreman's Association deal with the Ford Motor Company through that office?

A. Yes, when the office was established, the Association's representatives dealt with the Company through that office, to a certain extent.

Q. Now, you seem to indicate there that you did not have the full scope of activity through those relations which you desired and which you felt were useful to the foremen.

A. No, our wages and classifications agreement of November 5, 1942, did not provide grievance machinery and our dealings in the personnel office in handling grievances were all done without written grievances; they were usually agreed upon.

Q. That is, the Company could deal with you if they wanted to or they did not deal with you if they did not want to, is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. And that led to some friction, did it?

A. Very much.

60 Q. What did the Association do about that?

A. Well, the Company, in its interpretation of one of the clauses of the wage and classification agreement, paid off the back pay to the foremen as they interpreted the clause. We did not interpret the clause the same way, and we decided we would have to take it to the National War Labor Board and let them interpret it for both parties, and because of our dispute over this differential in the wages paid, they shut off the grievance machinery again.

Q. You mean, they just quit operating the grievance machinery?

A. Yes.

Q. And what did the Association do? You said they went to the National War Labor Board?

A. No, we intended to, and I and Mr. Nelson, who was vice-president of the Association of the Ford Chapter No. 1 at that time, went to Washington to discuss this problem with the Board, because we were afraid there was going to be a strike. The men were very hostile, very disturbed, and on June 19, 1943, while we were in Washington trying to get the Board to take jurisdiction over this question, we got a long distance telephone call that on June 3rd—no, I beg your pardon, we got a long distance telephone call on June 19th that about 800 foremen had walked out.

Q. That was the very situation you were down there

61 trying to forestall?

A. That is correct.

Q. And at that time there was no grievance machinery in operation in the Ford Motor Chapter, with the Ford Motor Company?

A. No recognized grievance machinery of any sort.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will recess until two o'clock.

(The hearing in the above matter was recessed at 12:30 P. M. until 2:00 o'clock P. M.)

62 After Recess.

(Pursuant to recess, the hearing resumed at two o'clock P. M.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The hearing is in order.

Mr. Karasick: Will you mark this as Board's Exhibit 21 for identification?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Board's Exhibit No. 21 for identification.)

Mr. Karasick: I have had marked as Board's Exhibit 21 for identification the report on investigation of interest of contending labor organizations signed by Ruth Greenberg, Field Examiner of the National Labor Relations Board on December 8, 1944. I will offer this document in evidence as Board's Exhibit 21.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any objections?

Mr. Dahling: We have no objections.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received.

(The document heretofore marked Board's Exhibit No. 21 for identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Karasick: I interrupted Mr. Nelson's examination of the witness for the purpose of introducing this document. At this time I have nothing further to offer for the Board.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

ROBERT H. KEYS

63 resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination (Continued).

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, prior to the luncheon recess, you were at June, 1943 and I wish you would tell us what occurred in connection with the Ford Chapter's experience at that time. By the way, that is, of course, after May 11, 1943, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, tell us what occurred.

A. We were having a dispute with the Company over the interpretation of a clause in the wage agreement that we had signed with the Company and as we were unable to arrive at a solution between ourselves, we were attempting in behalf of the Association, to get the War Labor Board to take jurisdiction of the dispute. On June 3, the Ford Motor Company discharged one of our building chairmen, Mr. George Kellogg. On June 5 the Ford Motor Company discharged another building chairman, Mr. William G. Elliott. On June 7 the Ford Motor Company discharged another building chairman, Bertram Fenrich. These discharges, along with the dispute in existence over the wage agreement, and disturbed the foreman somewhat and we were afraid they were going to strike. So, we had inserted in the Detroit newspapers an advertisement in which 64 we stated that we did not want a strike and stated our position over the matter in question. While Mr. Nelson and myself were in Washington trying to get the War Labor Board to take jurisdiction, some of the foremen took some of these advertisements in and placed them on the bulletin board.

Q. You mean in the plant of the Ford Motor Company?

A. Yes, that is right. The superintendent of one of the buildings ordered the chairman of that building to tear down these advertisements and he refused to do so by simply answering, "I did not place them there and I do not know anything about them." The result of that was that the Company then fired twenty-seven more foremen employees, most of whom were officers or chairmen of the Association. So, when they discharged these twenty-seven, about 800 other foremen struck on the afternoon shift of June 19, 1943.

Q. And you heard of that in Washington?

A. We heard of it by long distance telephone.

Q. What did you do?

A. We came back to Detroit immediately, and on June 22, 1943, held a mass meeting at the Fordson High School Stadium with about 5,000 Ford foremen in attendance, and a strike vote was taken and picket lines established that evening at the gates. About 1:15 A. M. the following morning, Mr. Marshall and Mr. Haughton, from the 65 War Labor Board, met with us at the Ford Chapter offices and persuaded us to call off the strike, which we did, and ordered the foremen to return to work.

Mr. Donovan: What date was that, Mr. Keys?

The Witness: It would be 1:45 A. M., approximately, June 23, when the strike was called off.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Now, were all of these foremen who had been discharged re-employed or did they return with the other men?

A. No. When we called off the strike and all of the foremen attempted to come back to work the next day, the Ford Motor Company discharged about 800 of them and they made them stand in line at the foremen's personnel office to be questioned to be cleared out, and that went on from June 23 all day and on June 24 the foremen were so disturbed over this mass firing that about 2,000 of them walked out.

Q. What buildings were involved in the group of 2,000?

A. To the best of my knowledge, all of the buildings at the Rouge Plant.

Q. Was that the day shift or night shift?

A. It was during the day that they walked out.

Q. What happened with respect to that response to the Company's action on the 800?

A. The Company contacted us and wanted to discuss 66 the matter, and the settlement of the negotiations were that all the foremen went back to work.

Q. Now, let us see. After the 2,000 struck, the Company got in touch with you?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you responded promptly with negotiations?

A. Why, yes, right away.

Q. And finally all 2,000 came back to work, did they?

A. Including the early 27 that had been discharged, all but the three that I mentioned—Mr. Kellogg, Mr. Elliott and Mr. Fenrich, they didn't come back.

Q. For what reason?

A. The Company wouldn't accept them at that time.

Q. The negotiations resulted in all that had gone out coming back excepting the original three?

A. Yes.

Mr. Donovan: Who were those three, Mr. Keys, I did not get the name?

The Witness: George Kellogg, William Elliott and Bertram Fenrich.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Then, Mr. Keys, the negotiations continued with the Company, did they, with respect to classifications and working conditions of foremen, following that?

A. No, we did have the grievance machinery, such as it was, in operation again for a short while following 67 that period, and, by that I mean, that the chairmen were recognized and presented the grievances of their constituents to the Foremen's Personnel Office. However, on December 21, 1943, the Company again decided to stop the grievance machinery and docked and disciplined one of our chairmen, Mr. Carl Brown, of the Bomber Plant.

Q. Well, now, before you come to December, Mr. Keys, Mr. Fenrich, Mr. Elliott and Mr. Kellogg did not, in the meantime, return to work, did they?

A. No.

Q. And did you take any action as an Association or Chapter during the summer of 1943 following the strike in June? And to refresh your recollection, I refer specifically to the petition and the hearing before the National War Labor Board in July and August of that year.

A. Yes, that took place in the month of August.

Q. And that was a hearing on your petition?

A. That was a hearing on our petition, yes.

Q. For what, briefly?

A. There were twelve points in dispute, but two of the main points were the settlement of the difference of opinion on the wage classification and the reinstatement of the three dischargd chairmen.

Q. Did it also cover the operation of the grievance machinery?

68 A. Yes.

Q. Which had been somewhat in disuse in the meantime, is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. And that was an extended hearing, was it not?

A. Yes, that was, and at the conclusion of the hearing, the Panel recommended that the committee representing the Association and the committee representing the Company take 15 days to enter into negotiations to see if they could settle their differences, which they didn't do.

Q. Why not?

A. Well, we couldn't arrive at satisfactory terms.

Q. You mean, with the Company?

A. That is right, they would not reinstate these three individuals I mentioned a moment ago.

Q. Then you get along into the fall of 1943 and approach this December event, is that right, Mr. Keys?

A. Yes. Following our negotiations, although they were unsuccessful and we referred it back to the Board, the Company did recognize our chairman again and grievances were being settled. However, on December 21, Carl Brown, Chairman of the Bomber Plant for the Association, was docked and threatened with discharge if he didn't get back on his job and quit handling grievances for the foremen, and when the Company attempted to stop the processing of foremen's grievances, 1200 foremen walked out from the Bomber Plant.

Q. On what date?

A. That was December 21, 1943.

Q. And while we are on it, briefly, was it the understanding and agreement with respect to this grievance machinery that men like Mr. Brown, in those offices he held, were to settle grievances on company time where necessary?

A. Whatever time was necessary they were to be allowed.

Q. It was in the performance of such things as that within the agreement that Mr. Brown was docked and threatened?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Donovan: And threatened?

Mr. Nelson: Threatened.

Mr. Donovan: I do not know of any testimony here that he was threatened by anybody.

The Witness: That is right.

Mr. Nelson: Which eventually put a final end to grievance performance and processing?

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) And was recognized by the foremen?

A. When the Company told Mr. Brown he couldn't process any more grievances, when the foremen became 79 aware of that fact they protested to the superintendent's office and he told them that if they did not like it they could take their hats and start walking, which they did, about 1200 of them.

Q. Now, the Willow Run Plant was engaged at that time in war production one hundred percent?

A. Yes, building B-24 Bombers, the Liberator.

Q. And the 1200 men walked out?

A. They did.

Q. Where were you? Were you here in Detroit at that time?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. What was the event, briefly stated, in connection with that event?

A. Well, as soon as I was notified, I attended a meeting of the striking foremen and they were determined to stay out until the Company recognized their grievance machinery again. The following day, the Company again sent for us and this time we negotiated an agreement with them to negotiate a contract. In other words, they signed an agreement with us that they would meet and negotiate a full contract if we would send the foremen back to work, which we did immediately.

Q. How long were these 1200 men out at the Willow Run Plant?

71 A. One day.

Q. Did you promptly, after that, or shortly after that, begin the negotiations for the contract referred to?

A. Yes, we signed that agreement on December 22, and on December 28 I wrote a letter to the National War Labor Board asking them to hold in abeyance their decision on the case that was pending before them. On February 1, which is the date we had agreed we started negotiations.

Q. That would be February 1, 1944?

A. Yes.

Q. How long did the negotiations continue, Mr. Keys?

A. Until May 9, 1944, when we signed the present contract that is in effect.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: May 9?

The Witness: May 9, 1944.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Reporter, will you mark that as Petitioner's Exhibit 1?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 1 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 1 and ask if that is a true copy of the contract of the Ford Motor Company with the Foreman's Association of America, Chapter Number 1, the Ford Chapter?

A. Yes, that is a true copy of the contract signed May 9 with the Ford Motor Company with the Fore-
72 man's Association of America.

Q. An original of this is on file in the office of the Association and available for inspection at any time?

A. That is right.

Mr. Nelson: I desire to offer and do offer this in evidence and I will offer printed copies to counsel, unless they would rather see this one.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any objections, gentlemen?

Mr. Dahling: May we have a moment, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: We do not dispute this contract insofar as it is offered merely for the purpose of showing this contract. We have no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 1 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, since May 9, 1944 and up to the present time, has this contract been in force as between Chapter Number 1 and the Ford Motor Company?

A. Yes.

Q. And it continues in force?

A. Yes.

Q. The contract itself provides for the expiration of the contract—

73 A. (Interposing) The contract itself provides for the expiration of the contract and renegotiation and so forth. There are supplemental agreements being negotiated at the present time and two supplemental agreements have been signed since the signing of this original on May 9 with the Company.

Q. Amplifying or relating to other matters on which the Chapter and the Company are able to agree?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have a sort of a standing committee between your Association Chapter Number 1 and the Company for the purpose of dealing with additions and changes to the contract as experience seems to indicate that it should be changed?

A. Yes, Ford Chapter Number 1 has a negotiating committee and the Company has a negotiating committee who meet quite frequently to discuss additional items.

Q. And up to the present time two supplements have been added to that contract?

A. That is true.

Q. And others are in progress on negotiation now?

A. That is true.

Q. The grievance machinery referred to in this contract is in operation and has been since the date of the contract?

74 A. That is right; Mr. Nelson, before you proceed and in order to make the record complete, following the signing of that contract on May 9, I wrote a letter to the Chairman, Chairman Davis of the National War Labor Board and withdrew our War Labor Board case in its entirety because when we signed this contract the three building chairmen, Mr. Kellogg, Mr. Elliott and Mr. Fenrich were reinstated with full back compensation from the time of the discharge so we had no War Labor Board case and I withdrew it.

Q. So that terminates the War Labor Board proceeding?

A. That is correct.

Q. And these three men were returned to the employ of the Ford Motor Company?

A. Yes and compensated with sums up to $5,000 for back pay.

Testimony of Robert H. Keys

Q. Now, Mr. Keys, stepping aside from the general history of the Ford Chapter as outlined in your testimony and taking up the national organization as such, I think you stated this morning that the national organization, that the Ford Chapter, when it was the only chapter, regarded itself at least as the seed of the national organization and acted accordingly, is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. I think you indicated early that it received as 76 much as two or three applications for charters from foremen in similar plants in the Detroit district?

A. That is right.

Q. Did that process continue, or did you continue to receive applications from foremen similarly situated in this and other industrial communities?

A. That continued right up to the present date.

Q. After the adoption of the first constitution for it, that really covered the work of the Ford Chapter and continued provisions looking toward an extension, did you amend and add to your constitution and by-laws?

A. Yes, at the Convention of 1942, 1943 and again in 1944.

Mr. Nelson: I ask the Reporter to mark this as Petitioner's Exhibit 2.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 2 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 2 and ask you if that is a true copy of the Constitution of the Foreman's Association of America, the National organization, at the present time, in force at the present time?

A. Yes.

Q. And that follows the National Convention when?

A. September, 1944.

77 Q. It is the one presently in force?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: I offer Petitioner's Exhibit 2 in evidence and I offer counsel copies for their examination and I offer the original to the Trial Examiner.

Mr. Karasick: I have no objection on the part of the Board.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, I would like to ask Mr. Nelson if he intends to introduce—he is giving a history of the Foreman's Association of America—if he intends to issue the earlier constitution of the Foreman's Association of America where their membership is confined to foremen. This I take it is the last one and where it is not so confined.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, in reply to Mr. Donovan's inquiry, we do not agree with his statement of alleged fact with respect to any limitation, but if counsel really desire for us to offer in evidence the first constitution, we have no objection to doing it, and will do so, though I am advised now that we do not happen to have any copies present at the hearing. We will have to get them. Oh, I see they have a copy. We will offer their copy.

Mr. Donovan: Yes, we would like to have it offered.

Mr. Nelson: Good. It does not happen to be the first one, though. I will ask Mr. Keys which one it was.

78 Do you want to strike out that exhibit number 11 on there, or do you want the first one?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Donovan: We feel, Mr. Trial Examiner, in view of counsel's offer, which we accept, that we would like to have in evidence the several constitutions of the Foreman's Association, inasmuch as we are having the detailed history of organization unfolded. The reason we want this at this point is because, as it developed here earlier, in the original constitution the Foreman's Association of America contained a provision which apparently limited their membership to foremen. In the subsequent constitution which they have introduced in evidence, it was not so limited, but could include higher supervision.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In the meantime, Petitioner's Exhibit 2 has already been received.

Mr. Nelson: The scope was wider to begin with than it is now, but it is all right. I will ask the Reporter to mark this as Petitioner's Exhibit Number 3, which I have obtained from Mr. Donovan.

(Thereupon the document referred to was marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 3.)

79 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, I ask you what period this constitution of the Foreman's Association of America, marked Petitioner's Exhibit 3, covered in the form that it is in; that is, what year, roughly speaking?

A. This is the amended constitution from the 1943 Convention and was the constitution in effect prior to the constitution that you have offered as Exhibit 2. In other words, Exhibit 2 supersedes this additional constitution.

Q. Now, prior to this, there was still a different one?

A. There was still another.

Mr. Nelson: We will obtain a copy and offer it in evidence. Shall we mark as an exhibit, Mr. Examiner, at this time, that is, reserve a number for it, so as to bring it in the correct sequence with these others?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well. Petitioner's Exhibit Number 3 is received.

(The document heretofore marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 3 was received in evidence.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Number 4 will be reserved for the document which supersedes Petitioner's Exhibit Number 3.

(Number 4 was reserved at this point to mark Petitioner's Exhibit No. 4 later.)

80 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, in general, I take it, the constitutional changes reflected the needs in the growth that accompanied your efforts?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Nelson: I am returning Petitioner's Exhibit Number 3 to Mr. Donovan.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Now, Mr. Keys, it has been intimated in a statement by Mr. Donovan here that there was some constitutional provision restricting the membership or making it more narrow than it is now. What is the fact in that connection?

A. There has been a change in the phraseology, but the intention and the construction of the constitution is the same.

Q. Do you, in your experience, in contacting foremen in other plants and other industries find that there are different names applied; that is to say, if you took a given amount of authority, if you took a given amount of responsibility, that man is called one thing in one shop, another name in another shop, and another name in another shop? Do you find that so?

A. That is right, that has been our experience.

Q. Do you also find that while you included almost exclusively men in the early days of organization, now you have to deal with women supervisors of men and men supervisors of women, is that correct?

81 A. That is correct.

Q. And so in order to meet those developments in organizational work, you have altered the phraseology in your constitution from time to time?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did it have anything to do with limiting those grades of supervision that you were organizing?

A. No.

Q. Roughly speaking, Mr. Keys, what is your organization? You have spoken of the chapters here and of the National. Are there any other grades of organization or areas?

A. No. We have the National Headquarters located in the Barlum Tower, Detroit, Michigan, and then we have 150 chapters scattered throughout the United States.

Q. Are there regional organizations of chapters and regional directors?

A. Yes.

Q. And when did that develop, formulate itself, or take shape?

A. I could give you the exact date if I could be permitted to investigate our records a little bit. However, so far as regional directors are concerned, we have had a regional director in the City of Chicago on full time, now for about eight or ten months at least.

Q. And you have other regional directors in the country?

82 A. We have a full-time regional director for the State of Illinois, we have a full-time regional director for the State of Indiana, and we have a full-time National Representative that covers any territory or any area that we desire to send him into. We have sixteen National Executive Board members who also act in the capacity of National Representatives on part time basis. We have three other National Representatives on part time basis. When I say part time basis, I mean men working in the shops and also acting as representatives for the Association.

Q. Now, beginning at the bottom, you have the individual member, who is in a chapter?

A. Right.

Q. And where there are sufficient number of chapters, a regional organization with a director, and then the national organization itself?

A. That is correct.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I like to think of the individual members at the top.

Mr. Nelson: Well, he is the foundation of everything, Mr. Examiner, just like good hard work is at the bottom. We put him at the bottom not by way of minimizing his importance; he is the foundation of the whole thing and the rest of the thing is his servant. I am perfectly 83 willing to refer to him as being at the top, if that is more harmonious.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am sure we are thinking of the same thing anyway.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Now, this organization functions through chapter officers?

A. That is correct.

Q. Building representatives or shop representatives of groups of foremen?

A. That is right.

Q. And the chapters have regular meetings?

A. That is right.

Q. At stated intervals and, where possible, at understood places?

A. That is right.

Q. Then the National Executive Board has regular meetings does it?

A. That is correct.

Q. What are they, monthly or bi-monthly?

A. At least once each month.

Q. And the officers are in contact with others practically daily in the national offices?

A. That is right.

Q. The method of originating rules and legislation for the body is in national conventions?

84 A. Annually

Q. You have not yet gotten around, apparently, to regional conventions?

A. Not yet.

Q. That may develop later on?

A. It is possible.

Q. But the highest legislative function making rules for the body and the officers is the Annual Convention?

A. That is right.

Q. The activities are financed how, briefly?

A. By the dues paid by the members.

Q. And that is apportioned by the region and the national officers?

A. By the chapters and the national officers. Any regional expense is borne by the national office.

Q. That is an expense of the National Office?

A. That is right.

Q. You now have a number of full time men, including yourself, do you?

A. Yes, we have a full time president, two full time presidents, a full time secretary-treasurer, a full time membership director, a full time editor and research director—that is one office combined—and a full time national representative, and two full time regional directors. I 85 mentioned them before—one in Illinois and in Indiana.

Q. Now, as to the size of these chapters, is the Ford Motor Company Chapter still the largest chapter?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: I will ask the Reporter to mark this as Petitioner's Exhibit Number 5.

(The document referred to was marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit Number 5.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Now, Mr. Keys, I hand you legal cap typewritten sheets, 1 to 8, both inclusive, headed, "Chapters, Foreman's Association of America" numbering each one, giving the name and address, the date chartered, and the industry in which it works, and I ask you if you have every reason to believe that that is a true and correct statement of what is shown by your books and is a fact as to the organization as it stands now?

A. That is a true listing, but it only shows 146 chapters up to November 30, 1944. There have been others added since that date.

Q. In the past 18 days there have been some additional chapters added?

A. Yes.

Q. But this is true as of the date it bears?

A. It is true as of the date it bears.

Mr. Nelson: I offer Exhibit 5 in evidence, and I
86 offer copies to counsel for their inspection. I offer the original to the Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You said Petitioner's Exhibit 5 was an accurate list as of the date it bears. What date do you refer to?

The Witness: Mr. Examiner, this exhibit is marked number 5 and shows that on 11-30-44 Chapter Number 146 was chartered. I am looking at the last one on the list here.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You are looking at the last number?

The Witness: Yes, I am looking at the last one on the list here.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Since then, how many have been added, approximately?

The Witness: I am sorry, I cannot give it to you. I know there have been some, but I do not know exactly how many but we can find it out.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Approximately?

The Witness: I was under the opinion that there had been four.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well, are there any objections?

Mr. Dahling: No objections.

Mr. Karasick: No objections.

87 Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received. Proceed.

Mr. Nelson: I will ask the Reporter to mark these Exhibits 6 and 7 for the Petitioner.

(Thereupon the documents above referred to were marked Petitioner's Exhibits Nos. 6 and 7 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 6, Mr. Keys, and ask you if that is an accurate statement as of the date it bears of the growth of the chapters by quarters from the beginning up to December 5, 1944?

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Nelson, doesn't your Exhibit Number 5 give all of your chapters with dates of their charters?

Mr. Nelson: It does, but this is a compilation. It collects that data and puts it on one sheet for you. I have the same thing for the quarterly membership growth on Exhibit 7. It condenses it from eight sheets of paper and you can read the quarterly growth on a half a sheet of paper.

The Witness: That is true. This brings it up to December 5 and shows 148 chapters which shows there have been two added since the date shown on that exhibit (indicating).

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is Exhibit 5?

Mr. Nelson: That is true also of Exhibit 7.

The Witness: That is true.

88 Mr. Nelson: I offer these exhibits in evidence, Mr. Examiner, and I offer copies to counsel for the Packard Motor Car Company and to the Board and the original I offer to the Examiner.

Mr. Donovan: The present membership is 32,124?

Mr. Nelson: That is approximately right.

The Witness: As of the date shown on Exhibit 5, as of the date December 5.

Mr. Nelson: The answer is yes as of that date.

The Witness: Yes, as of that date.

Mr. Nelson: While we are on that subject, these are men that pay their dues and maintain a living membership in the Association?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: Would you mind, at this time, putting in the amount of the dues?

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) What are the dues?

A. $1.00 per month.

Q. Per member?

A. Per member and $2.00 membership fee to join.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Initiation fee?

The Witness: Membership fee.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

The Witness: And 50 cents of the dues paying dollar for each member is held by the Chapter and fifty 89 cents paid to the National Office as a per capita tax.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Fifty cents per month?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) May dues be paid annually instead of monthly?

A. Yes.

Q. And you prefer it that way?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: There is no discount?

The Witness: No discount for cash.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any objections to Petitioner's Exhibits 6 and 7?

Mr. Dahling: No objections.

Mr. Karasick: No objections.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: They may be received.

(The documents heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibits 6 and 7 for identification were received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) By the way, on the matter of dues, so far do you have any checkoff?

A. No.

Q. These dues are all voluntarily paid?

A. Right.

Q. Mr. Keys, this staff of officers that you referred to, yourself, two vice-presidents and those in the National Office, their days are taken up during the working 90 day in general with what activities?

A. We all have our specific administrative duties. The secretary-treasurer, of course, handles the finances and works with the secretaries of the chapters. The membership director answers requests for information and sends out material and has jurisdiction over the Regional Director and the National Representatives. The two vice-presidents act as assistant to the president and handle any matters that he assigns to them. Myself as president,

I have general supervision over the entire organization which covers a multitude of things.

Q. At present you have a couple of proceedings before the New York State Labor Relations Board, do you not?

A. That is right.

Q. That require witnesses and papers and attendance, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And for instance, last week you had a hearing before a legislative committee of the State of New York on a proposed amendment?

A. That is right.

Q. And from time to time proposals for legislation for foremen come up in the Congress of the United States?

A. That is correct.

Q. And in addition to that you have grievances by 91 foremen and among foremen, do you not?

A. That is right.

Q. And those matters are frequently appealed to your office and require time and attention?

A. In any chapter where we do not have recognized grievance machinery or a contract with the Employer, practically everything from the Chapter is handled by the National Office.

Q. Until the chapter can more or less stand on its own feet with a full time administration?

A. That is right.

Q. These officers and offices have been added from time to time as the work of the Association increased, has it?

A. That is right.

Q. And as the number of members increased?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, are you familiar with the Constitution and By-Laws of any other supervisory union or association?

A. I have read most of them but I am not too familiar with any of them.

Q. That is, you could not quote them from memory, of course?

A. No, I could not quote them from memory.

Mr. Donovan: What relevancy would testimony of that kind be, as to the appropriateness of this petition

92 here as to what he knows of some other organizations?

Mr. Nelson: I find out that he does not know and I have no intention to press the matter any further.

Mr. Donovan: I am glad you so found out.

Mr. Nelson: I am not. I wish he knew them all by heart.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Do you actually place any geographical limitation on a chapter just as such?

A. No.

Q. So if it organized anywhere within reasonable reach at all you would take it in if other conditions warranted?

A. That is correct.

Q. Do you have any other contracts than the Ford Motor contract?

A. Yes, we have a contract with the United Stove Company located in Ypsilanti, Michigan.

Mr. Nelson: I will ask the Reporter to mark this exhibit Petitioner's Exhibit 8.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 8 for identification.)

Mr. Nelson: I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 8 and ask you if that is a true and correct copy of that agreement of the United Stove Company.

The Witness: Yes, that is a true copy.

Mr. Nelson: I offer Exhibit 8, Petitioner's Exhibit
93 8 in evidence. I offer copies to counsel for the Board and counsel for the Company and the original to the Trial Examiner.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, we object to the relevancy of any miscellaneous agreement if there be more than this, having no bearing on this existence or non-existence of the Association. The right of the Petitioner here could not be tested for the non-existence of any such agreement.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: May I see Board's Exhibit 3? Will the Reporter please read Mr. Donovan's objection again, please?

(Mr. Donovan's objection was read.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you intend to offer any more, Mr. Nelson?

Mr. Nelson: I do not think so.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You seem to predicate your objection on the theory that more would be offered, Mr. Donovan, and in view of Mr. Nelson's statement, do you still object?

Mr. Donovan: We do not see that it is relevant whether or not they had—whether or not they had—if the Foreman's Association of America had an agreement with another concern by the name of the United Stove Company or by any other name. I do not think the relevancy part 94 of the objection would make any difference whether there is one or a dozen of them or more. We could not test the action of the Board as to the Packard Company by the existence or non-existence of any such document as this. Certainly, we could not test what the circumstances were that were connected with the Employer's decision in that case to do certain things perhaps from the necessity or emergency or whatnot. We have no way of knowing anything of that kind nor does the Board and I do not think it is of assistance or any relevancy.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the objection goes more to the weight than the competency. It will be received in evidence.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 8 for identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Nelson: I will say to the Trial Examiner so as not to be in a position of making an incorrect answer, we have an oral agreement with another company in the process of being reduced to writing. Perhaps the typewriters are too slow so that Mr. Donovan will not be put to the trouble of making an objection.

Mr. Donovan: In that event I will ask that the statement about it be stricken from the record until such time as we do get the document.

95 Mr. Nelson: I want to warn you that I might have to break my word and put one more in.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is a statement of counsel and it is not evidence.

Mr. Nelson: I offer it for the purpose of keeping my lines open if the opportunity offers itself to offer an additional contract. I do not want to foreclose myself.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: There is one other alternative which you mention, Mr. Nelson. If the typewriters are slow you would not have to worry about it but if the hearing is fast the same will also be true.

Mr. Nelson: Well, we will do what we can on the latter. Counsel for the Board suggests that the Association attorney take the onus of suggesting a recess; the Company having also stimulated me in that regard, I take it I can make the request.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I might add that I also heard a similar whisper from the witness. We will take a five-minute recess.

(Recess.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, prior to May 11, 1943, which I believe is the date of the decision of the Maryland Drydock case, how many petitions for representa-
96 tion had you filed with the National Labor Relations Board? By "you" I mean the Association.

A. I believe it was 20.

Q. And the majority of those petitions emanated from or originated in Detroit or the industrial area of Detroit?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: I ask the Reporter to mark this as Petitioner's Exhibit Number 9.

(The document above referred to was marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 9.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, these five sheets set up the chapters, case numbers, date of filing and the date of withdrawal of dismissal of the various petitions for representation. Does it thoroughly represent the records of the Association and the facts?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: I offer the exhibit in evidence. I, unfortunately, have only one copy of this exhibit this afternoon, but I will prepare copies and furnish them to the Examiner and counsel. I offer it to counsel for the Company and I invite Mr. Karasick, if he is interested, to examine it also.

Mr. Dahling: May I ask one question, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: Was this compilation taken from the 97 files of the National Labor Relations Board?

Mr. Nelson: I believe it is from the Association files, but I believe it has been compared with the files of the Local Board. We believe it is correct. We offer it, anyway, subject to any error we may have made, but I believe it is substantially correct.

Mr. Karasick: I may say, Mr. Examiner, that I do not know whether this is a complete and accurate list or not. If this has been prepared from the files of the Foreman's Association, I suggest that perhaps Mr. Nelson should qualify Mr. Keys with respect to that and determine that. I do not know how this list was prepared or what it was prepared from.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Was it prepared from the files of the Association, Mr. Keys?

A. Yes. In each case we got a copy of the petition, which we retained in our files, and that was taken from our files and from the copies of the original petitions.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, Do I understand that the witness is speaking of former petitions that were lodged with the National Labor Relations Board, the Seventh Regional Office here?

Mr. Nelson: That is right.

The Witness: That's right.

Mr. Nelson: Prior to the decision of the Maryland
98 Drydock case.

Mr. Donovan: All the petitions you filed are on this list and they were all the petitions filed with the Seventh Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board?

Mr. Nelson: No, I think they are coupled with Cleveland, to be fair about it.

Mr. Donovan: As least, all you filed in Detroit, you filed with the Seventh Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board here in Detroit?

The Witness: That is right.

Mr. Donovan: And this contains a complete list of such petitions?

The Witness: From the records that we have, yes.

Mr. Donovan: May I ask the witness a question about this exhibit, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: Did you execute these petitions?

The Witness: Most of them I did, myself.

Mr. Donovan: Did you supervise the execution of the others?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Donovan: Some were executed by you and some were not?

The Witness: There may have been one or two that were executed by a vice-president.

99 Mr. Donovan: Did they all go through your offices of the Foreman's Association of America?

The Witness: To my knowledge, yes.

Mr. Donovan: And your office received, likewise, an official indication of the disposition in eac case, as to each one of those petitions?

The Witness: Those petitions were pending when the Board returned its Maryland Drydock decision.

Mr. Donovan: So that this is a complete list of the petitions formally filed with the National Labor Relations Board, with the Seventh Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board, excepting for outstate chapters, from the very first until the Maryland Drydock decision?

The Witness: It is a complete list as far as our records shows. If any copies have been lost, I do not know of it, but our present day record shows we filed those on that list.

Mr. Donovan: Why does this offer of evidence not contain the first petition that was filed in the Packard case?

The Witness: If it doesn't contain it, it should. It was filed in the Seventh Region.

Mr. Donovan: It was, and there was a disposition made of it, is that right?

The Witness: I don't know of any disposition, other

100 than the election.

Mr. Donovan: Well, can you think of any other petition, aside from the first Packard petition, which this offered exhibit does not include?

The Witness: No, I cannot.

Mr. Donovan: But you do think of that as an omission from this list, the first Packard petition?

The Witness: Yes, to this extent, I know I filed a petition on Packard.

Mr. Donovan: Why did you not include that in this exhibit?

The Witness: I didn't know it wasn't on that list.

Mr. Nelson: Perhaps I can answer that, if counsel will permit me to answer it. I do not want to interrupt, but I can answer that.

Mr. Donovan: Well, the witness has offered this as an exhibit and has identified it.

Mr. Nelson: Oh, no, I offered it and it was prepared with my assistance too, and Packard was knowingly omitted from this exhibit.

Mr. Donovan: I am still at a loss to account for the offering of Petitioner's Exhibit Number 9 as a list of all petitions filed with the Seventh Regional Board of the National Labor Relations Board from the first of such petitions filed by or on behalf of the Foreman's 101 Association of America up to the time of the decision of the Maryland Drydock case. This witness has said at least twice that this is a list of all the petitions of which he has any knowledge, and he now says it does not contain the Packard petition. I would like to have the witness state why the Packard's former petition, which he states was filed, to his knowledge, was omitted from the list?

The Witness: Mr. Donovan, I don't think you heard me correctly. I said I didn't know it was missing from the list; that I recall having filed the Packard petition.

Mr. Donovan: Well, would you like to examine this list and see if you can find it on there?

Mr. Nelson: We can save time on this. I conceded it is not there. I know why it is not there and Mr. Donovan, if he wants to know why, I will tell him. If he wants to elicit it from this witness, that is a different matter. I do not know if the witness knows why or not.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, do you?

The Witness: No.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Mr. Nelson: Do you want to know why? I want to make a statement on the record. It isn't there because that case was processed. In other words, there was an election and since that time those cases on Exhibit 9 were pending at the time of the Maryland Drydock case.

102 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Petitioner's Exhibit 9 is a list of the cases pending at the time of the Maryland Drydock case?

Mr. Nelson: The exhibit so indicated. I would like for that to be put in in the proper light. The only petition pending at present is the petition presently being heard here.

Mr. Donovan: I would like to ask the Trial Examiner if I might ask the witness to state on the record at this point the disposition of the Packard petition.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I thought the witness had indicated that it was disposed of by an election.

Mr. Donovan: He said it was processed. Does that mean that it was processed and they had an election and that the present Petitioner was designated as the statutory representative of the foremen? That the Foreman's Association of America in an election were designated as the statutory representatives for bargaining purposes? Was that the disposition? If not, I would like to know of it.

The Witness: The disposition of the petition, to the best of my knowledge, is the following. We filed a petition with the Board and the Field Examiner called Mr. Weiss of the Packard Motor Car Company—

Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) I am only inquiring what finally became of it. Weren't you received as a 103 bargaining unit at that time?

The Witness: We received a certification from the Regional Office here of the election only.

Mr. Donovan: From the Seventh Regional Office?

The Witness: Yes, certifying the election from the Seventh Regional Office.

Mr. Donovan: That certified the Foreman's Association of America as the designated representative?

The Witness: It certified the election results.

Mr. Donovan: All right.

Mr. Nelson: Then the Maryland Drydock decision intervened?

The Witness: That is right.

Mr. Nelson: That is as far as it went, so far as you know?

The Witness: That is right.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: This is the only petition, that is, this pending one?

The Witness: That is the only one we filed.

Mr. Nelson: The present petition here is the only petition filed since that time.

The Witness: Yes, with the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. Nelson: Now, Mr. Keys—

Mr. Karasick: (Interposing) You have not had a
104 ruling on this yet.

Mr. Nelson: I do not believe, Mr. Examiner, I have had a ruling on Exhibit 9.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 9 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Coming back for a moment to the Ford Motor Company, there are two matters I think I omitted that I think are important and that should be put in, before we get too far from it. Since the filing and since the signing and delivery of the contract, what has been the history of your relations with the Ford Motor Company?

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, we have made no objections to a rather wide inquiry on the part of counsel for the Association in connection with the Ford Motor Company and other unions. The chief reason was that we did not want to delay the hearing. If we are going back into the Ford matter again, however, I would like to make a motion at this time in connection with all the testimony that relates to the Ford matter. The matter before the Board now is the Packard Motor Car Company, and not the Ford Motor Car Company. I now move that all of this witness' testimony with respect to the matters pertaining to the Ford Motor Car Company be stricken.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I will call your attention to 105 the fact that on Board's Exhibit 3, the second to the last paragraph, I think it is, there appears the following language:

> "The history of the bargaining unit in the plant or in the industry should be disclosed."

Of course, as I said before, that does not necessarily mean that because it is in that exhibit it is automatically admissible. Nevertheless, it has been the Board's custom in the past and I believe still is, to take such evidence. I need not pass at the moment upon the degree to which it is admissible. That I assume cannot be determined in advance of proffered testimony. The motion to strike is denied insofar as the motion may be construed to be objections to pending questions. It is overruled in either event. The right is reserved to counsel for the Company to renew the motion at some subsequent stage of the hearing.

Mr. Dahling: May the same objection apply to all further testimony along the same line that has been objected to?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, I will assume that you will have a continuing objection to evidence with reference to the Ford Motor Company without having to so repeat it.

Mr. Nelson: The Examiner permits you to answer the question, Mr. Witness. Have there been any incidents since the signing of the contract and up to the present time?

106 The Witness: By incidents you mean strikes?

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Yes, work stoppages or difficulties of that kind.

A. Yes, there has been. There was a work stoppage at the Bomber Plant on October 15, 1944. About 180 foremen left their jobs at noon in protest over a violation of our contract regarding seniority and demotions. I attended a meeting that same night of October 15 of the striking foremen and persuaded the afternoon shift to go to work. The following morning the day shift went back in and at noon on the 17th they attempted to strike again but this time the officers were prepared for it and I personally called the Chapter president and the Chairman of the Bomber Plant and ordered them to keep those men on their jobs and to follow the grievance machinery as provided for in the contract, which they have done. On November 16, 1944, eleven foremen over the frame job in the rolling mill at the Rouge Plant struck in protest of the removal of a foreman and the Chapter officers were called in and settled it. The men were off their jobs from 8:00 A. M. to 11:00 A. M. The eleven men, and they were docked four hours for their action. We had one other incident, I do not recall the date, it was not a strike, although the newspaper carried a short item on it. It was here in Detroit—the newspapers called it a strike. About 107 100 or so foremen in the pressed steel building went to the superintendent's office in a body and protested demotions not in conformity with the contract. They did not leave the building, however, and as soon as the Ford Motor Company called me I got on the job with the othe officers and we had it settled in about an hour.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What was that date?

The Witness: I do not have the exact date of that.

Mr. Nelson: The month?

The Witness: Well, that was probably July or August of 1944. It is since we signed the contract. The two most recent incidents that I have described a moment ago, I have the actual date on that.

Mr. Nelson: Counsel for the Company in whispered conversation here with me fixed about the third week in July, 1944 as the approximate date of that incident. I think I will be fair in stating that we all recognize the incident and know what it is. We are not just able to lay our hands on the precise date at this time.

The Witness: I would say that the latter part of July would be correct.

Mr. Nelson: They say the third week in July and that is near enough. There is only incident of that kind with eleven foremen.

The Witness: That incident was not the eleven foremen.

I do not know how many were involved but I think 108 over 100. The eleven foremen incident was the one of November 16th that I explained a moment ago.

Mr. Nelson: I see.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Also with respect to the Ford contract and the negotiations that arrived at it, I think you stated that these three men, Kellogg, Fenrich and Elliott, had been returned to their jobs. Now, you mean by that that so far as the Company was concerned, it opened the door for them to go back and gave them their back pay?

A. That is right.

Q. Did they go back? I overlooked asking you that, whether they actually went back.

A. Mr. Fenrich, one of them, went back. Mr. William Elliott was elected to the office of president of the Chapter and went on full time for the chapter but drew his back compensation from the Company. Of course, Mr. Fenrich, who did go back, drew back compensation from the Company. Mr. Kellogg did not go back and has not drawn his back compensation to date, because during his absence the Company eliminated the exact job he had performed and offered him a job of similar nature at the same rate of pay with the back compensation and he refused to accept it. In the meantime, he has gained employment with some other company and has not gone back to the Ford Motor Company to even pick up his check,
109 which I understand is in the sum of $5,900, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. Donovan: How long has that check been made available to him?

Mr. Nelson: It is plain he is not a lawyer.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

110 Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Mr. Keys, your testimony would indicate that now you have experience to some extent in the Association and in your work for it in the plants where foremen were involved before and after organization and before and after entering into contracts, is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Well, taking the matter of contracts first, let me ask you first whether you observed any difference between the plants and their relationships towards supervisors before entering into a contract and after entering into a contract?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: Just a moment, Mr. Examiner. I do not believe this witness has ever been sufficiently qualified to answer a question of that character.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you read the question, please?

(Question read.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You may answer yes or no.

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Now, have you served on practically all of the committees that have negotiated contracts for supervisors?

A. I have. I have been chairman of the only committees that have negotiated contracts in the past.

111 Q. And practically have attended all their meetings and negotiations with the employer?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did you also have a good deal to do with the wording of the contracts?

A. I did.

Q. And the subject matter of the contracts?

A. I did.

Q. The specific agreements arrived at in the contracts?

A. I did.

Q. In order to do that, did you acquire a wide knowledge of the situation of those respective plants with respect to supervision?

A. I did.

Mr. Donovan: Just a moment. Your Honor, I object to that question. I think it is too general. I think it is not based on testimony in the record. There has only been one small concern named here, other than the Ford Motor Company, and it was that one that caused some discussion as to whether that contract was relevant. Now, this witness is being asked if he did not get a very wide knowledge in their contract negotiations. I think the question is objectionable in form, it is too broad, and it is capable of an unfavorable inference against the Respondent Company.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The objection is sustained as 112 leading.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Well, as to the Ford Motor Company, you worked there for how many years yourself?

A. Seven years.

Q. Well, during that time—you were a foreman approximately seven years, or six years, rather?

A. I thought I was, as I stated this morning.

Q. And you observed—

Mr. Donovan (interposing): Just a moment. I do not want to object after every question is asked, but I have objected very little to leading questions and I think within reasonable limits one should permit some leading questions. I think this witness should be asked for his factual knowledge rather than being led too much by counsel.

Mr. Nelson: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Were you familiar with the situation in the Ford Motor Company with respect to supervisors before signing the contract?

A. Yes.

Q. And have you been familiar with the situation in the Ford Motor Company with respect to supervisors 113 since the signing of the contract?

A. Yes.

Q. If I ask you the same questions with respect to the United Stove Company, how would you answer them?

A. Yes, but not to the extent that I am with the Ford Motor Company.

Q. Well, is your knowledge of conditions there before and after the signing of the contract such that you could tell us any differences that exist with respect to supervisors before and after the signing of the contract?

A. Yes.

Mr. Donovan: Just a minute; I will object to that.

Mr. Nelson: He says he can. What are you going to do about that?

Mr. Donovan: I will object to that unless it is confined to the two plants mentioned.

Mr. Nelson: That is all I am asking him about.

The Witness: With respect to the Ford Motor Company.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Now, my question is, Mr. Keys, give us some of those differences and take whichever company you desire first. Which one do you want to take?

A. I will speak of the Ford Motor Company.

Q. All right, the Ford Motor Company, before and after the signing of the contract with respect to supervisors, and the operation of the Company; if you have any 114 information on the subject?

A. Before the signing of the first contract with the Ford Motor Company there was no standard set of classifications for supervisory employees. There are a number of buildings located fairly closely together in the Rouge, and at most of the buildings they had a different set of classifications for supervisory employees doing the same identical work, supervising the same types of work. The contract provided for six standard classifications to be used in all of the Ford Buildings and plants. Before the signing of the contract, the foremen were paid various wages or salaries for doing the same identical work, supervising the same type of people and same type of work, and the contract established standard sliding scales for these classifications. It equalized the moneys paid to the foremen for similar work performed. Prior to the signing of the first contract, supervision had no designation whatsoever, other than the classification decided upon by the superintendent of the building. They didn't even wear a badge that carried the word "Foreman" or "Supervisor." Following the signing of the contract, all the foremen were provided with a different type of badge showing their classification.

Q. While you are on that, Mr. Keys, is classification an important thing to a foreman in the performance of his functions?

115 A. The Company pays foremen according to how they are classified. Therefore, it is a very important thing to a foreman.

Q. And it is important that his classification should be certain, should be known to him and known to the men he supervises, is it?

A. Very important, yes.

Q. Now, resume where I interrupted you.

A. Prior to the signing of the contract, it is a fact that the Company would demote and did demote as many as three and four hundred foremen in a month's time and promote from the rank and file to foremen's jobs three to four hundred foremen during the same month. The Company, of course, was losing a lot of money that they had invested in foremen by doing this. Following the signing of the contract, an availability list and records were kept and a system put into effect whereby the superintendent of the building could not promote a person to a foremanship or remove from a foremanship any person without consulting with the foremen's office, because in many instances, in one building it would become necessary to demote foremen with years of experience and ability and put them back to work; whereas, in another building, right across the road, they were creating new foremanships because they needed supervisory employees. So they all had to clear through the foremen's personnel 116 office and now the man with the experience that is being demoted, instead of going back to the rank and file, moves over and takes the job for which he is qualified. And, of course, there was absolutely no grievance machinery prior to the signing of the first contract and one after the signing of the first one, but a very detailed grievance machinery provided for in the May 9th contract—was provided for in that contract. If a foreman had a grievance, regardless of the nature of the grievance, he had absolutely no one to go to except the superintendent who could make arbitrary decisions if he so decided, and it wasn't uncommon for foremen with years of seniority to be discharged or demoted without any consideration whatsoever. The grievance machinery has, of course, eliminated that to a great degree. Any foreman under the present grievance machinery having a grievance, can reduce that grievance to writing and it goes through the stages provided for in the contract.

Mr. Dahling: I did not wish to interrupt the witness during his long answer, but I would call your attention again to the fact that you are dealing with grievances here, you are dealing with a situation which is not in the Packard Motor Car Company and going very far afield. I move again that the long answer of the witness to 117 the last question be stricken as irrelevant and immaterial to any issues in this proceeding.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Same ruling as before.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): While you are on the subject of grievances, prior to the making of the contract, if the foreman himself were involved in the grievance, did he have any representative with him or would he have to confront management alone?

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I must object to that. What machinery the Company might have, I do not see how that could have any relevancy on this matter of an appropriate unit.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, I am trying to preserve Mr. Dahling's innocence of the grievances at the Packard Motor Car Company until tomorrow. We will get into the subject matter at Packard later.

Mr. Dahling: Which would likewise be objectionable, so far as this hearing is concerned.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): The question was, briefly, did foreman have any representative to assist him or did he confront the situation alone, whatever it was?

A. No, there was absolutely no grievance machinery, as such. The only channels that were available, to my knowledge, was that a man could go alone to his superintendent if he had the nerve to do so. I know a few 118 who did do it, but the unfortunate part of it is that foremen still had to work for the superintendent and if they went to the superintendent with a grievance, the superintendent became angry and made it very miserable for the foremen in the future. So the men carried their grievances around with them instead of attempting to settle them individually. That is why they joined the Foreman's Association.

Q. And that situation has changed, as you have indicated, by the contract through the operation of the grievance machinery?

A. Yes, and it has not only changed because of the grievance machinery, but the representatives of the Company themselves have taken an entirely opposite position and perhaps viewpoint as to what they did prior to the signing of the contract. In other words, the foremen right now, they take their grievances up and the Company has been very fair in giving honest decisions. Our records show that 98 per cent have been settled to the satisfaction of the aggrieved foremen.

Q. In other words, the fact that there is this machinery brings about a change on both sides, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Just the very fact that it is there?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you ascribe to that as important a place as 119 the operation of the grievance machinery itself?

A. Yes.

Q. Just the fact that you have it?

A. Just the fact that it is available, if needed.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Now, I take it, Mr. Keys, in speaking of grievances you have been speaking of the grievances of supervisors, is that correct?

A. That is all I have reference to, just to supervisors.

Q. You have not talked about the grievances of maintenance or production workers?

A. No.

Q. Grievances of maintenance or production workers involving a foreman, either?

A. Just the foreman's own grievances.

Q. Relating to the clasifications, wages, hours and conditions of labor of the foremen?

A. That is correct.

Q. Do you keep statistics of the number of grievances? Have you gotten far enough along so that you have a set of figures that represent roughly the result of grievance operation?

A. Yes. I do not have them personally, but the Ford

Chapter has them. They have a record and an analysis of the workings of the grievance machinery and various other things since the signing of the contract.

120 Q. Your testimony seems to indicate, Mr. Keys, that these grievances were settled now with a great deal less of disturbance, both physical and mental and otherwise; is that a fact?

A. That is the fact. Outside of those two incidents that I mentioned very briefly we have had no disturbances, outside of those two, to my knowledge.

Q. Now, Mr. Keys, in addition to the benefits to supervision from the established and recognized grievance machinery and the contract with the employers, have any benefits come to the maintenance and production workers as a result or incidental thereto? Does it result in any better conditions for the maintenance and production workers, and, if so, in what way?

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I presume all this testimony is likewise subject to the objections we have made to certain specific questions. Whether it deals with Ford or whether it deals with other companies, that is. Now the witness testified, as I understand it, as to the Ford Motor Car Company and this grievance matter which we previously objected to was overruled. I do not recall whether I stated at that time or requested that any further questions along that line be subject to the same objection. I would like to make that position clear now.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The question then arises
121 whether or not this is "along that line."

Mr. Dahling: I have in mind any question relating to grievances and the manner in which grievances in the past were settled or are now settled, in addition to the fact that the objection, of course, goes to the fact that all this testimony relates to another company and not the Packard Motor Car Company. There are two objections, one is that the matter of grievances has nothing to do with this particular proceeding and the second objection made was that things which may have happened at the Ford Motor Car Company or any of the other companies, are irrelevant and immaterial, as far as this proceeding involving the Packard Motor Car Company is concerned.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Whether grievances or otherwise.

Mr. Dahling: Whether grievances or otherwise. I would not want to be forced on that later. I understand this testimony is taken subject to those objections?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes. If there may be any question about your failure to object in the past in connection with matters you have just referred to, Mr. Dahling, I will assume you have made a timely objection thereto in the past as well as in the future.

Mr. Dahling: My purpose was not to object to each question because I have no wish to delay the proceedings.

122 The Witness: We have never in any of our conferences with the Ford Motor Car Company or in any of our agreements with them discussed or provided in any manner for the rank and file employees. They have all been confined to our own particular problems. However, my own personal experience has been that the Foreman's organization has created better fellowship in the plant and that the people working under the supervision of the foremen who are members of our organization have been doing a very good job of producing, which can be substantiated by the fact that the Company has been awarded the Army and Navy "E" on two or three occasions. The Bomber plant has been cited for its marvelous production. This was all produced under the supervision of the Foreman's Association of America, members and the production workers of the UAW-CIO.

123 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I understand that this contract with the Ford Motor Car Company has been offered in evidence here and was endorsed by the National War Labor Board so to speak.

A. The contract in its entirety has been approved by the National War Labor Board.

Mr. Dahling: If that is a fact, the best evidence would be the record of the Board and not this witness' testimony.

The Witness: We have the records and we will be glad to submit them.

Mr. Nelson: I will comply with the suggestion of counsel and give it to them in writing. I am not able to do it just now. If I may reserve that right until I have had an opportunity.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, you may.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, I suppose the Company itself would be the best witness on this but have you received any benefit flowing from the operation of this contract and its effect upon the supervisors and hourly rated employees, tending to benefit the Company. You have indicated some increase in production. Do you have anything else in mind that would seem to make the task of the Company less difficult and more fruitful?

A. Well, I think that the benefit that the Company
124 has derived from this contract with the Foreman's Association is that it definitely increased the efficiency and increased the production and naturally there were more profits. When the Company benefits, all of the employees benefit eventually or indirectly. So, if the Foreman's Association has been instrumental in increasing the efficiency, which I think it has, and which I think I can prove, if necessary, naturally, the rank and file employees are gaining also, in the matter of better wages and better working conditions and so forth. We do know this, that prior to the signing of the contract in the past there have been a number of incidents where the rank and file employees and the foremen have been engaged in fisticuffs and I have not heard of any since the signing of the contract. I am not familiar with any.

Q. That would indicate to you that there is a better relationship between supervision and the men they supervise?

A. There is a better spirit of cooperation definitely.

Q. Now, coming to the Packard Motor Car Company, there came a time when the foremen at the Packard Company evinced an interest in the Foreman's Association, did they?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember about when that was?

A. I cannot recall the exact date that they approached the Association and requested membership but I can 125 tell you that the chapter was chartered by the Association on October 13, 1942.

Mr. Nelson: I will ask the Reporter to mark that paper, Exhibit 10, Petitioner's Exhibit 10.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 10 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Is Exhibit 10—Well, you tell us what it is. Take a look at it.

A. It is an application for a charter addressed to the Membership Director of the Foreman's Association of America and is signed by the foremen employees of the Packard Motor Car Company.

Mr. Nelson: I have only the original of this and I offer it in evidence. I offer it to counsel for their examination.

Mr. Donovan: No objection to this exhibit but I cannot make the date of it out.

Mr. Nelson: May it be received, Mr. Examiner?

Mr. Karasick: May I see it, please?

Mr. Dahling: May we have a copy of this?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, we will have copies to furnish you.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I trust your copy will bear a legible date?

Mr. Nelson: I will give your Honor the date in just a moment.

126 Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 10 for identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Nelson: Petitioner's Exhibit Number 10 is on the letterhead of the Association and it is without date excepting that there is noted at the bottom that the charter was granted 10-13-42, which I now show the Company's counsel. That statement applies to both sides of the paper; as it will be observed, the paper bears at least the names and addresses on both sides. I think I should say there is another date on the face of the paper which is 10-11-42, which is presumably the date of filing. The charter was granted two days later on the 13th.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, while we are on that subject, was the charter granted?

A. Yes, on October 13, 1942.

Mr. Nelson: I ask the Reporter to mark this Exhibit 11, Petitioner's Exhibit 11 for identification.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 11 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Is that a true copy of the charter as granted?

A. Yes.

127 Q. Well then—

Mr. Nelson: I offer Exhibit 11 in evidence and I offer copies of the exhibit to counsel for their examination and the original to the Trial Examiner.

Mr. Karasick: No objections.

Mr. Dahling: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 11 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Did you have anything to do with the organization of the Packard Chapter personally, Mr. Keys?

A. Nothing beyond talking to the original men that were seeking organization. So far as going out into the plant and organizing anything, to that extent, no.

Q. That is, you talked to men who came from the supervisory group at the Packard? Where did they come to see you?

A. At that time they would all have to come to what is now the Ford Chapter office, 5746 Shaeffer Road, Dearborn. Our membership director, on any lead like that would immediately contact the people. Very frequently they held meetings at other places. All of our leads at that time came to 5746 Shaeffer Road, our headquarters at that time.

Q. That is in Dearborn, which is west of Detroit and the Packard Plant is in the northeasterly section of Detroit?

128 A. That is right.

Q. But you did have to do, didn't you, Mr. Keys, with the filing of the representation petition with the National Labor Relations Board on behalf of the Packard Chapter?

A. Yes, I handled that matter.

Q. You signed the petition, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. And as the files show here, filed them?

A. I filed it.

Mr. Donovan: Are you speaking of the first petition now?

Mr. Nelson: I am speaking of the petition filed shortly after the organization of the Chapter.

The Witness: That was filed on January 15, 1943.

Mr. Karasick: For the record, the case number is 7-R-1279.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Did you make a demand on the Packard Motor Car Company previous to that in writing?

A. On November 27, 1942, I wrote a letter to Mr. C. E. Weiss, Industrial Relations Manager, and asked him for a conference. I received a letter dated December 1, 1942 from Mr. Weiss stating the time and place that I could meet him. In his letter he stated he would be glad to see me individually on December 4, 1943. There was nothing in the letter in the form of a demand other than the 129 request for a conference. I got the answer setting the time and place for the conference.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, in my function as alarm clock for counsel for the Company and for the Reporter, I am under the necessity of speaking up. I am not saying a word for myself. I do not know what disposition Your Honor will make to a petition like that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, since you seem to be under pressure, I will yield under the accumulated pressure and we will recess at this time until tomorrow morning at nine-thirty A. M. in the same room.

(Whereupon, at 4:30 o'clock p. m., Monday, December 18, 1944, the hearing in the above-entitled matter was adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, December 9, 1944 at 9:30 o'clock a. m.)

Samuel H. Jaffee, Trial Examiner.

132 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The hearing is in order, gentlemen. Are we ready to proceed?

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, during the course of yesterday's session, Mr. Donovan requested a personal copy of the Trial Examiner's Statement in "R" cases admitted in evidence as Board's Exhibit 3. I obtained a copy of that document for Mr. Donovan and I am going to give it to him now.

Mr. Donovan: Thank you.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, I believe you have Exhibit Number 10, which is an original, of which we have no copy. We would like the release of that so that we may have a photostat made.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You say the exhibit is in my possession, you mean it is in the possession of the Reporter. A photostatic copy may be substituted.

Mr. Nelson: We will take it now and be responsible for it and furnish the photostat. Yesterday there was some controversy concerning the first Constitution of the Foreman's Association. I now offer it as Petitioner's Exhibit 4.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I might say, to keep the record straight, that you have already offered it and it already was received. The copy you now have may be received because you returned the original to Mr. Donovan.

133 Mr. Nelson: This was the first one. There will be three in evidence now.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I will stand by my statement. I know that Mr. Donovan gave it to you and you had it marked and then returned it to him.

Mr. Karasick: I believe that was Petitioner's Exhibit 3. There was no copy of Petitioner's Exhibit 4 available. That is the document Mr. Nelson is now speaking of.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Petitioner's Exhibit 4 was the number which was reserved. It is received in evidence.

(The document heretofore reserved as Petitioner's Exhibit 4 for identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Donovan: I understand that there is not a copy of this available for me. I will be glad and content to use certain portions of the exhibit when the time comes to question witnesses about it.

Mr. Nelson: I will have one here available for your own personal use. I will leave this one with the exhibits, Mr. Examiner.

Mr. Karasick: Do you have any extra copies of that?

Mr. Nelson: I will dig up one or two to have for use here.

Mr. Karasick: Thank you.

Mr. Donovan: May I ask the Board counsel if he has an extra copy of the exhibits which contain the list of 134 petitions to the Board and the disposition of them? We have only one of them and we would like to have another one.

Mr. Karasick: The exhibit you are referring to is an exhibit of the Petitioner.

Mr. Donovan: I think it is the Petitioner's exhibit, yes, that is right.

Mr. Karasick: I do not believe the Board has any such exhibit.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Nelson, do you have a copy?

Mr. Nelson: We are having copies made this morning. We were not able to keep a secretary last night to do it. Oh, I see it has been done and we will furnish them now. I did not know it had been done.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Call your witness.

ROBERT H. KEYS

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination (Continued).

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, at the conclusion of the yesterday evening session we were inquiring about your connection with the organization of the Packard Motor Car Company Chapter of the Association. Were you aware of the organizing effort there and did you take a part in them?

A. Well, as I stated yesterday, Mr. Nelson, they contacted the Association and asked that a representative be sent out. Meetings were held but I did not take too active a part in the actual organizing other than acting in an advisory capacity.

135

Q. You knew of the organization, didn't you?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. When the time came for a demand upon the Employer, the Packard Motor Car Company, for recognition of the Chapter as the bargaining agent for the supervisory force, did you take part in that?

A. Yes, I wrote the first letter to the Packard Motor Car Company addressed to Mr. C. E. Weiss, Industrial Relations Manager on November 27, 1942. In this letter I stated that we represented a majority and would like to have a conference. Mr. Weiss answered that letter December 1, 1942 setting an appointment for December 4, 1942.

Q. Did you keep that appointment?

A. Yes, I kept that appointment, accompanied by Mr. Brown, one of our Executive Board members.

Q. And who was there on behalf of the Company?

A. To the best of my recollection, at that first meeting, there was just Mr. Weiss. I am not sure whether Mr. Bird was there or not. I know on subsequent meetings there was a Mr. Bird present, but I can't remember whether he was there at the first meeting.

Q. What was the subject of the conference?

A. We discussed the aims and purposes of the Association and, of course, we explained to the Industrial Relations Manager, Mr. Weiss, that we represented a majority and we wanted to start negotiations for recognition and collective bargaining, and he stated he thought we were probably—or, if not, at that time,—a part of the CIO, we would be very shortly and, of course, we denied that and he asked to have a few days to think it over. So on December 10, 1942, Mr. Weiss sent me another letter stating he would be glad to meet with our committee on December 15.

On December 15, I kept the appointment and I was acompanied by Mr. Elmer Ross, who was our Membership Director at that time, and we talked with Mr. Weiss about the recognition of the Association, grievances, and so forth.

Q. These meetings took place in the offices of the Company?

A. In Mr. Weiss' office at the Packard Motor Car Company.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, listening to this testimony, apparently this all took place before the first Petition for Representation was filed.

The Witness: No, Mr. Dahling—yes, I beg your pardon, it was.

Mr. Dahling: Well, that being the case, I object to any testimony covering that particular period inasmuch as following these meetings there was a petition filed. Now, 137 we are here on a new petition which was filed October 20, 1944. That petition alleges that the Employer named refused to recognize the Petitioner as the exclusive bargaining agent of all the employees. That fact has already been established. There is no occasion to go into what transpired before the first petition was filed. It is incompetent and irrelevant as far as this proceeding is concerned.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

Mr. Dahling: And may that objection continue as to all testimony of this character, prior to the date of the first Petition for Representation?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

The Witness: On the day of December 15, when we kept our appointment with Mr. Weiss, we had some discussion with him, and I believe Mr. Bird was in on that meeting also representing the Company. And then we went up to Mr. George Christopher's office.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Do you know what office he held?

A. Yes, he was President of Packard Motor Car Company.

Mr. Dahling: May we have the exact date of that meeting?

The Witness: December 15.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Morning or afternoon, Mr. Keys, if you remember?

A. Afternoon.

Q. By "we"—you say "We went up to Mr. Christopher's office"—would you tell us just who it was?

138 A. Yes. Mr. Elmer Ross and myself representing the national organization, called on Mr. Weiss, but there was a committee of foremen selected by the foremen in the Packard Plant, and this committee was composed of Mr. Prosper Traen, Mr. Leonard Lempke, Mr. Tom Pawlowski and Mr. Jim Wilkins, and they met with us up in Mr. Christopher's office, and again the aims and purposes of the Association were discussed and no agreements arrived at.

Then on January 15, 1943, I filed a petition with the National Labor Relations Board requesting an investigation and certification.

On February 1 I was called to the office of the National Labor Relations Board, of the Seventh Region here in Detroit, and Mr. Weiss, representing the Packard Motor Car Company, was also called, and I presume by the Board; he was there. We discussed the Petition and we agreed to have an election. We discussed the unit, those that would be eligible and so forth, and I believe the Company was asked to submit certain records, and I think as I recall it, a subsequent meeting was held where they produced the records, and we agreed on the unit.

Q. By "we" you mean whom?

A. Mr. Weiss.

Q. And yourself?

A. The Field Examiner, Mr. Irwin Bannisch, repre-
139 senting the Board, and myself.

Mr. Dahling: Pardon me, I do not wish to be making continuous objections, but the witness says that they agreed on certain things. I suggest we have the substance of the agreement and not his construction of any agreement.

Mr. Nelson: Very well, I think that is proper and we will comply.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, you stated, as Mr. Dahling said, "We agreed." Will you tell us first who it was that did the talking?

A. Yes. Mr. Irwin Bannisch, representing the National Labor Relations Board, Mr. Weiss, representing the Packard Motor Car Company, and myself, representing the Association.

Q. And you were in the offices of the Seventh Region?

A. In Mr. ~~Irwin~~ Bannisch's office of the Seventh Region of the Board.

Q. Now, instead of telling us the substance of what you think took place, if you can, tell us what was said and who said it.

A. Well, Mr. Bannisch, of course, asked if the Company would agree to a consent election. That was discussed between Mr. Weiss and Mr. Bannisch and it was Mr. Weiss that said yes, if we can agree upon the unit. Then I was asked what I considered to be the appropriate unit.

Q. And who asked you that?

140 A. Mr. Bannisch, and I stated we considered assistant foremen, foremen and general foremen as the appropriate unit. Mr. Weiss objected to the general foremen being a part of the unit. We discussed that back and forth, and finally arrived at the solution of excluding twelve general foremen, because Mr. Weiss stated that their authority and duties were somewhat different from the other general foremen.

Q. In other words, there were more than twelve general foremen at the factory, is that right?

A. At that time, as I recall, we thought there were about ninety.

Q. By "We" you mean you and Mr. Weiss, as you discussed it there before Mr. Bannisch?

A. That is right.

Q. That was your estimate of the number of general foremen?

A. That is correct. Bear in mind, this was before any records were brought down. At a subsequent meeting, records were brought down.

Q. As you sat there and discussed back and forth between you and Mr. Weiss, words to the effect that there were approximately 90 general foremen—

A. (Interposing) To the best of my recollection, that is correct.

Q. Did Mr. Bannisch hear that?

141 A. Mr. Bannisch heard it because he was sitting right there.

Q. And twelve of those ninety Mr. Weiss wanted to remove from the jurisdiction of the Association, so to speak?

A. Well, during the first part of our conversation he wanted to exclude all general foremen. But these twelve we finally agreed upon to be excluded. According to Mr. Weiss' statement to me, he sort of felt that they had charge of more than one department and were acting in the capacity of assistant superintendent.

Q. That is according to Mr. Weiss' statement to Mr. Bannisch and you?

A. According to his statement. So we agreed there would be twelve excluded.

Q. You consented to excluding twelve?

A. That is right. consented and Mr. Bannish prepared the papers and we signed it. The language used in the papers, instead of setting out the twelve and naming them, said, "excluding certain general foremen." As I recall it, there was a subsequent meeting in which the Company brought down the records and the cards were checked against the payroll. The election was set for February 24, 1943.

Q. You say it was checked against the payroll? Where was that done and who did it?

A. That was done in the office of the National Labor

142 Relations Board by Mr. Bannisch.

Q. From records produced by Mr. Weiss for the Company?

A. Well, it was my understanding that the Company produced the records for Mr. Bannisch's inspection.

Q. Go ahead, Mr. Keys.

A. We discussed where and when the election would be held. It was decided that the election would be held on February 24. The Company would not permit the election to be held in the plant. Mr. Weiss insisted that it be held outside. Of course, we discussed the fact that it was February and very cold and that it would probably be a nasty day. But, nevertheless, the Company insisted that it be held outside and on February 24 the National Labor Relations Board set up a voting booth out near the Packard Company and the foremen lined up after working hours and voted. The results of the election were 486 for the Association, 2 against. The Company challenged 130 ballots. That, of course, came as a surprise to us. We had no idea that they would challenge 130 ballots. Everything had been agreed upon. There were 13 void ballots. Following that, I received from the National Labor Relations Board a certification of the election results.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean from the Regional Director?

The Witness: From the Regional Director, yes, sir.

143 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Was the Chapter finally certified as the bargaining agent of the supervisory force of the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. The only documents that I received from the National Labor Relations Board, the Seventh Regional Office, was the election results.

Q. Now, what intervened? What followed the election and certification that you mentioned?

A. We had another meeting with Mr. Weiss.

Q. By "we" whom do you mean?

A. The Association Committee, myself, Mr. Jim Wilkins, Mr. Tom Pawlowski, Mr. Leonard Lemke, and Mr. Prosper Traen, met with Mr. Weiss and Mr. Bird following the election and they refused to bargain with us.

Q. Where did you meet?

A. In Mr. Weiss' office in the Packard Motor Car Company.

Mr. Donovan: Let's have the date of that meeting.

The Witness: I am sorry, I cannot give it to you. Perhaps one of the members of the committee could give it to you.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Can you give us the month? How long after the election?

A. I would say within two weeks.

Q. And you met in Mr. Weiss' office?

A. Yes, sir.

144 Q. Tell us in substance what was said.

A. Well, we shook hands and passed a few remarks back and forth, complimentary to each other. We stated we were ready to start negotiations for a contract. Mr. Weiss said they would not bargain with us if we included general foremen in the unit. So we spent the next hour or so arguing about the fact that they had agreed to exclude twelve and now they wanted to exclude them all. The result of the meeting was absolutely nill. They wouldn't agree and we wouldn't agree. The entire amount of time spent at that meeting was on the discussion of general foremen.

Q. Whether they should be included in the bargaining unit?

A. They argued that they shouldn't and we argued that they should. We wanted them to keep their word. We were not accustomed to having people promise us one thing and do something else and so forth. Mr. Weiss said, "No, they wouldn't include the general foremen even though they agreed to it in the consent election agreement".

Q. Finally, I suppose, your committee withdrew and went away?

A. I left and I am quite sure the committee left at the same time I did. That was my last meeting and that is as far as I can tell you about the election and so forth and the meetings.

Q. And you do not have any personal knowledge
145 of any subsequent event as between the Chapter and the Company?

A. The only personal knowledge I have is that the Committee attempted to meet with the Company's representatives following the meeting which I just described. What success they had or what the results were I have no personal knowledge.

Mr. Nelson: We offer this witness for cross-examination.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, with your approval and with counsel's approval we would like to defer this particular cross-examination until a little farther along in the case and until we have had the transcript. I do not think we will have occasion to ask that as to any other witness. Owing to the shortness of time we have had, we do prefer to do that unless there is objection on somebody's part.

Mr. Nelson: I think that will place the Petitioner at some disadvantage if we agree to that. We will not know how to plan our showing of witnesses or anything else unless we have some idea of the scope of the cross-examination, frankly, and the subjects that will be touched by it. I will say to counsel that counsel is aware of the fact that we have a number of men who probably ought to be at the factory. They are here for this hearing and we are trying to keep that number down and cause as little disruption as possible out there. This is not in the nature of a complaint or anything like that. We are just merely trying to do it that way. I think it will be 146 much more orderly if counsel cross-examines the witness as offered.

Mr. Donovan: May I ask how many more foremen employee witnesses he has, approximately?

Mr. Nelson: I think about twelve is my recollection.

Mr. Donovan: We would like to ask the Trial Examiner to have counsel proceed with those witnesses and postpone this cross-examination until, say tomorrow, and that will accelerate the time in which the gentlemen would be able to return to the plant, as Mr. Nelson just mentioned. I do think, Mr. Examiner, inasmuch as this situation, frankly, is rather a broad and important one that the Examiner's time would be saved if counsel were unable to obtain any adjournment of this cross-examination. Counsel were unable to obtain any adjournment beyond yesterday morning, which they rather badly needed. I do not think the deferment of this cross-examination would disturb this proceeding very much. We ask the coöperation of the Trial Examiner for reasons that have to do with our responsibility to our client.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: A short answer to that is that I have to consider your convenience as well as the convenience of the party putting in their case. I have to balance the two. I will be happy to agree if counsel for the Association agree, despite the fact that in a normal course cross-examination follows immediately. Since it 147 disrupts his presentation, I have to take his word for it at the present stage of the proceeding and I do not see what else I can do.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, I realize that this is a matter well within your discretion. Ordinarily, that would be the normal course. We would like to have the benefit of reading the transcript. We are taking daily transcript and we would like to have the benefit of reading the transcript as to this one particular witness. I believe this is in the realm of the Trial Examiner's discretion. In view of the nature of the importance of the case, that may weigh rather heavily. This affects potentially the whole foremen's setup in a mass production industry in Detroit, which, after all, is more or less the capital of that rather important industry. Right now they are all engaged in war work. We would rather not ask and do not want to ask this, unless we have to, for a break in the session, sufficient to permit counsel to do some necessary thing, such as I have asked for. This is really an urgent and important matter to the Packard counsel. I believe that the foremen witnesses who want to go back to the factory could be used. I realize Mr. Nelson does not definitely agree to it, but I still do not think it is as disturbing a thing here as he claims it is to call upon the stretch of the Trial Examiner's discretion to grant the deferment of the cross-exam-148 ination.

Mr. Nelson: We are going to keep the foremen here until they have finished with Mr. Keys.

Mr. Karasick: May I make a suggestion? I think per-

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The request is denied. Proceed. However, I may say that I had in mind adopting the suggestion of Mr. Karasick, although not in quite perhaps the same language. I would suggest that after you finish the present cross-examination of Mr. Keys, that if it develops you have forgotten something, Mr. Keys may be recalled.

Mr. Donovan: Well, we would like the privilege of recalling him later if it is necessary or advisable.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not want any misunderstanding. If there is something you have forgotten, 152 you may recall him for further cross-examination. Of course, you can always call him back if you want to. I do not suppose it makes any practical difference in either event.

Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Mr. Keys, in giving your testimony yesterday, you said, I believe, that you started with the Ford Motor Company as a worker?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was at about what time?

A. That was January 19, 1935.

Q. What definitely did you hire out as and what did you do when you went with the Ford Motor Company?

A. Well, I stood in line with the employment office—at the employment office, and when they came out and asked for drill press operators, why, I said I was a drill press operator, so they put me on drill presses.

Q. You were a drill press operator?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were hired?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were paid on an hourly rate, I assume?

A. 62½ cents an hour.

Q. Was this at the Rouge Plant?

A. Yes, I went into the Motor Building.

Q. And into a department of that building?

153 A. Yes, Department 751, where they machine the gears for the transmissions.

Q. How many men were in that department?

A. Well, I don't know exactly, but there must have been—

Q. (Interposing) Just approximately.

A. (Continuing) —two thousand, perhaps, on three shifts.

Q. Were you segregated into any particular group of those men in that department?

A. Well, I was put on a drill press for the first two or three days, then they put me on gear burnishers, then they put me on the Bullard. I was moved around quite rapidly.

Q. Who gave you the directions that you described?

A. I do not know—my foreman gave them to me.

Q. Well, your foreman did, then, did he not?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you find they had foremen in the Ford factory?

A. Yes, we have organized about eight thousand of them.

Q. But you did no organizing in 1935, did you?

A. No.

Q. You found yourself under a foreman when you went into that factory, did you not?

A. They called him a straw boss.

Q. Would you say he was or was not the equivalent of a foreman, as you understand the word "foreman"?

A. I would say he was an assistant foreman.

Q. But you had a foreman over you, did you not?

154 A. Yes.

Q. And he gave you directions; did he not?

A. Yes.

Q. And he did that on behalf of the Company, did he not?

A. I assume so. I never asked him and he never told me.

Q. Well, that is your honest opinion, is it not?

A. Yes, he was doing a job for the Company.

Q. Did it appear to you at the Ford Motor Company that the Ford Motor Company had employees like that to give you orders in order to run the operation of its business, as you saw it?

A. I didn't get the question.

Mr. Donovan: Would you read the question, please?

haps a procedure could be worked out to serve the convenience of both parties here. Perhaps it would be convenient for the Company and for Mr. Nelson, if the Company were to conduct its cross-examination of Mr. Keys now, with the understanding that after they have had an opportunity to go over the first day's transcript, since they are getting daily copy. They can see after the session what Mr. Keys testified to yesterday, and they will have a right to recall Mr. Keys for further cross-examination on any subject they so desire. If that way both the demands of Mr. Donovan and Mr. Nelson can perhaps be met and the case can proceed more rapidly.

149 Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I think it should be called to the Board's attention, in connection with this request that the cross-examination of Mr. Keys go over to a later date, that the petition in this case was filed with the National Labor Relations Board, the Seventh Region, by the Petitioner, the Foreman's Association of America, on October 20, 1944. The Respondent was first advised of this filing on November 24, 1944, at which time it received a letter, setting a hearing before Mr. Bowen, the Regional Director, on November 25, 1944. Mr. Denison and Mr. Binns of Packard Motor Car Company and I attended that meeting. At that time we stated that this was an important case and we should have time to prepare. Mr. Bowen stated that the case was set for hearing for December 4th. We again insisted that that was not giving us time to prepare, and he stated that he would adjourn it for a week, but that was all, and only if in writing we requested such an adjournment, which was done.

On the Friday of the following week, which would be about the 8th or 9th, Mr. Karasick of the Board called me and asked if I had any objection if the Board adjourned it another week. I told him I certainly had no objection; that the entire matter should go over longer and should go over the holiday season, in view of the work to be done. He stated, however, it would only 150 go over until the 18th. I consented to that adjournment.

On about the 16th, when it was apparent there was still additional work to be done, particularly inasmuch as associate counsel were to come in to the case, I talked with Mr. Meder, and I am informed this is the situation: He called Mr. Bowen for a further adjournment from the 18th until at least the week of December 26th, or preferably later. It is my understanding that Mr. Bowen did not oppose the adjournment, but took the position that he would want Washington to pass on it. By Washington, we assumed he meant the National Labor Relations Board at Washington. Consequently, a wire was sent to the Board on Friday of last week, requesting this adjournment. It was not until Saturday afternoon, about 4:30, not having received any reply from the wire, that I called Mr. Smith, the Chief Examiner, asking him what had happened to it, and he informed me a wire had been sent. I subsequently, on the same day, at about five o'clock, received the wire, which reads as follows:

> "Re Packard Motor Car Company, 7-R-1884, your telegram of December 14th requesting further adjournment has been considered by the Board as appeal from refusal of Regional Director to grant such request. In view of the prior adjournments and the tight scheduling of work of our Trial Examiners, the Board is denying your request for further adjournment."

151 Now, Mr. Examiner, I do not know why since the petition was filed on October 20th, that the Packard Motor Car Company was not notified sooner. The Foreman's Association has had since October 20th, or, from the time they decided to file this petition, to prepare for this proceeding, and yet the Respondent, when first called on November 25th, was told that it had to go to trial on December 4th, and I have recited the subsequent events.

Now, this is an important proceeding, it is important not only to Packard but to the industry, and in view of these facts, we frankly considered it unfair and unreasonable to be forced into this hearing. And for the reasons I have stated, we feel that we should be permitted at this time to defer this cross-examination.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) And the foremen, whoever they may be, from time to time gave you different assignments, taking you into different parts of the plants or in slightly different operations, did they not?

A. Yes.

Q. You considered that those orders were given to you to be carried out, did you not?

A. Yes, I had to, if I wanted to work.

Q. At that time, were you a member of any labor organization?

A. No.

Q. And have you ever been a member of any labor
155 organization excepting the F. A. A.?

A. Never.

Q. What did you say your hourly rate was when you started?

A. 62½ cents an hour.

Q. How long did you make 62½ cents an hour?

A. Oh, I think for about six months.

Q. Were you raised in rate then?

A. At about the end of my sixth month, somewhere around that time, they asked me if I would like to go down in the piston job. They were developing a new job and that was a job on which I had a possibility of getting a promotion, so I went down on the piston job and I didn't get any promotion and I didn't get any raise. Subsequently I did, but not at that immediate time.

Q. What did you do on the piston job?

A. Well, when I went on the piston job at first, there was nothing in there but a couple of lathes and a couple of drill presses, and I operated a lathe, drug stock around, done everything they wanted me to do.

Q. Were you a skilled operator at that time?

A. No, I wouldn't consider myself as such.

Q. Just an ordinary worker?

A. Just an ordinary machine operator, just average.

Q. And the things that you did in that—the things you did on that job were not skilled operations?

156 A. No.

Q. They consisted definitely of just what, now?

What did you do every day during the time you were there?

A. Well, I did many things. As I told you, mainly, I carried stock back and forth; there was no conveyors. You must bear in mind, Mr. Donovan, there was nothing there but two lathes and a couple of drill presses. We had to do everything by hand. We filed burrs by hand with files, and so forth.

Q. This would still be in 1935?

A. Yes, that would be in about the fall of 1935.

Q. How did you find out what you were to do in this new department?

A. My foreman told me.

Q. And you took directions again from a foreman then?

A. Certainly.

Q. How long were you at this more or less miscellaneous work that you just described?

A. Well, until they began to move machinery in. They purchased large Centerless grinders, millwrights came in and they installed conveyors. That probably took two or three months, and that's when they told me they were going to make me a straw boss.

Q. What time were you made a straw boss?

A. I can't remember the exact date, but it would be 157 somewhere in the fall of 1935.

Q. Who told you you were to be a straw boss?

A. The foreman.

Q. You understood a straw boss to be what at that time?

A. An assistant foreman.

Q. He was an assistant foreman?

A. He was the lowest classified supervisory employee.

Q. You regarded him as a part of supervision, did you?

A. Certainly.

Q. So you believe you became a part of supervision as early as the fall of 1935?

A. I did.

Q. And did you find that as a straw boss that it became necessary for you to give any directions to workers?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you give such directions?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you give us an example of what sort of directions you did give? Did you then have men under you?

A. Yes, a few.

Q. What sort of directions did you give to them?

A. Well, I would say, "Pick up that box from that machine and carry it over and set it down at this machine," and I would say, "You are not doing that operation right, let me show you how to do it," and I would check 158 their time in the morning and I would check their time at night.

Q. You had some authority, then, that you did not have prior to that time?

A. Well, I don't know whether I considered it as authority or not. I was given certain duties to do and I performed them.

Q. Well, but up to this time you were appointed straw boss, you had not been giving directions to other workers; you took them from your foreman, is that right?

A. That's right; I still took them from my foreman.

Q. But you also gave directions of your own to others?

A. I gave very few directions of my own. I had a foreman over me, and he had supervision over him.

Q. But you had men under you to whom you did give definite directions?

A. Yes, I was being paid to supervise them.

Q. That is right, and they took your directions and performed them?

A. Sometimes they did and sometimes they didn't.

Q. They did not always carry out your directions?

A. No.

Q. Why not?

A. Because they were organizing at that time?

Q. Did that make them hard to handle?

159 A. No.

Q. But you say they did not always follow your directions?

A. Sometimes I didn't even follow the directions of my foreman, because two-thirds of the time they were so awful you didn't know what you were doing.

Q. You did not like the way management was conducting the operations of that plant?

A. I definitely didn't. I thought they stunk.

Q. Did you not always carry out directions, even though you did not like them?

A. Well, to the best of my ability, yes.

Q. Even though they stunk?

A. Right.

Q. And you passed those orders on to your men, even though they stunk?

A. That's right.

Q. And sometimes the men did not like them and did not obey them?

A. That is right, and—

Q. (Interposing): Wait a minute. On those occasions did you have occasions to recommend disciplinary action for any man not following your orders?

A. I presume I could; I never did.

Q. You never did?

A. No.

180 Q. Do you think you should have?

A. No.

Q. In that sense you did not feel you could act for management where it was against your better judgment as a supervisor?

A. That's right.

Q. And you did not do so?

A. No. Do you want to know why?

Q. Well, your counsel can pick you up on any questions he wants to, Mr. Keys. I prefer to have you answer my questions that I asked you just now.

A. Okay.

Q. How long did you continue as straw boss, passing or giving directions to this group of men of which you spoke?

A. I assume from that first promotion I just described I was a foreman up until I left. However, as I said, the records have been investigated and they don't show that. As a matter of fact, they show I wasn't a foreman for a period which I know nothing about, because I was doing the same work and getting the same rate of pay. But from that day on I assumed I was a foreman until I left Ford's.

Q. When did your rate change from 62½ cents an hour? Did you ever get a raise?

A. Oh, yes, but I don't recall the exact dates.

Q. Give us an idea, as near as you can. When did 161 you step to 62½ cents an hour, with respect to the year 1935?

A. Well, it's only a guess. I would say the latter part of 1935 I got a five-cent an hour raise.

Q. You went to 67½ cents an hour in 1935?

A. No, I went to $6.00 a day, if I recall correctly. I think the Company went back on the $6.00 a day plan and everybody got a raise in that period.

Q. On an hourly rate, that would be the equivalent of—

A. (Interposing): 75 cents an hour.

Q. 75 cents an hour?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was in 1935?

A. If I recall correctly. If you would like the exact dates and everything on this, I can get it for you in fifteen minutes.

Q. No, I am only asking the year, Mr. Keys, so as to make it easy. To the best of your recollection, was it still in 1935?

A. I would say I got a raise in 1935, yes.

Q. And you went to 75 cents an hour and your duties did not change?

A. That's right.

Q. You were still acting in a supervisory capacity and still giving directions to the men under you on behalf—

A. That's right.

162 Q. On behalf of management?

A. I don't know on whose behalf it was. I was told what to do and I done it.

Q. Do you not think it was on behalf of management?

A. I presume so; I never met any of the management of the Ford Motor Company until after I organized the foremen.

Q. Well, workers do not ordinarily meet management in the early stage of their employment, do they?

A. They don't ordinarily ever meet management.

Q. There is nothing unusual in that, is there?

A. No, there hasn't been.

Q. So you are not—

A. I am not complaining about that.

Q. You are not complaining because you did not get in to see Edsel Ford the first two or three months you were there, or Mr. Bennett, or those higher up?

A. No, I have no complaint.

Q. You would hardly expect that?

A. Well, if I wanted to go in to see them, I think I should be entitled to, but I didn't do it.

Q. You are not sure these directions you were giving were given on behalf of management or not?

A. I know my foreman would say we have to make so many pieces today, "So you better tingle the boys a little bit", and I went and done it.

163 Q. Would you say he was acting on behalf of management?

A. Somebody told him, I don't know who. I never inquired.

Q. But somebody higher up told him, is that right?

A. I presume so.

Q. Would you not say that person higher up was acting on behalf of management?

A. I wouldn't say.

Q. You would not make a guess at it?

A. Well, naturally, I suppose he was.

Q. And, then, you would say these directions were coming down to you from higher management?

A. That's right.

Q. And today the foremen are doing the same things, are they not, giving directions to workers from management with respect to operations of a department?

A. I haven't worked in a shop for some time, but I would still—

Q. (Interposing): That would be a fair statement, though, regarding the foremen today, would it not?

A. Yes.

Q. How long did you continue to get this 75 cents an hour? Were you ever raised again?

A. Yes, I was making $1.65 an hour when I left. When that came, I can't tell you now.

Q. Well, did that happen in 1936?

164 A. Yes, I got some raises in 1936, I got some in 1937, I got some in 1938 and I got some in 1940. I probably got some every year, at least once a year.

Q. Were you still in a supervisory capacity when you left Ford's?

A. Yes, I was classified as division shift foreman.

Q. How many men had you under you when you terminated your employment there?

A. About 100.

Q. Did you have any responsibility for the work or operation of those 100 workers?

A. Yes, I checked their time—no, I beg your pardon. I checked the time with my foreman and he checked the men and I told him how many pieces we had to do and if they had any trouble on the machine I would get a millwright or a maintenance man to come in. It was my duty to see that we produced so many pieces per so many persons, which I did, and which every good foreman should do.

Q. You assumed the responsibilities in that department on behalf of management?

A. To this extent, that the production quota was set by someone higher up—I don't know who. It was handed down to us.

Q. And you did your best to comply with that managerial instruction?

165 A. That's right.

Q. You were getting paid for that?

A. That's right.

Q. And that was quite a responsibility, was it not? As a matter of fact—

A. It certainly was.

Q. Did you like the work?

A. Well, I didn't particularly like it. I didn't—

Q. (Interposing): What was the occasion of the termination of your employment there?

A. Well, I was requested by the members of the Foreman's Association to go on full time, so I am on leave of absence from the Ford Motor Company now.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Since when, approximately?

A. I think that became effective July 1, 1942.

Q. And you were getting at that time $1.65 an hour?

A. $1.65 an hour and five cents for night work, thanks to the Union. When they came in they got five cents and the Company gave it to us foremen, too.

Q. That would be the CIO you are speaking of?

A. Right.

Q. Your period of employment at the Ford Company overlapped the entry into the Ford Motor Company of the CIO?

A. That is true, yes.

Q. By about how many months?

166 A. Well, they were organizing during the year 1936 and the first contract was arrived at in 1941, so I observed very carefully the contractual relationship between the Union and the Company from 1941 on up to the time I had my leave of absence, in effect.

Q. You felt rather good about the CIO action in getting a five-cent raise which went down to your benefit?

A. I felt better about the CIO getting a lot of things too numerous to mention right here.

Q. That gave you quite a few ideas, didn't it?

A. No, it didn't give me ideas. I have had ideas all my life.

Q. But you say you spoke very favorably a minute ago about a raise the CIO was instrumental in obtaining?

A. Sure, because I was unable to get it as an individual foreman.

Q. You benefited by the CIO action in that case?

A. I certainly did.

Q. Did that ever suggest to you that it might be possible for quite a bit of cooperation of the Foreman's Association with the CIO?

A. No, I had no such thoughts.

Q. As a matter of fact, you say that you have never had such cooperation? I mean now, the Foreman's Association of America?

167 A. Yes. You mean have we had?

Q. At any time from then on until today?

A. We have had their moral support, I know, other than that we have not had any cooperation.

Q. You have just had their moral support?

A. That is all I know of. Of course, it is a big organization and ours is a big organization and I do not see everything that goes on outside in the field.

Q. If you had more than their moral support you wouldn't know about it?

A. No, I wouldn't know about it.

Mr. Donovan: Before we get into another topic may we take a recess at this time?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well, we will take a ten-minute recess.

(At this point a short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The hearing is in order.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Mr. Keys, I wish to ask you a few details about the foreman's duties and responsibilities. In the line of your testimony of your having acted as a foreman at the Ford plant, how long were you a foreman, approximately?

A. Six and a half years, I thought.

Q. As a foreman did your work include planning the work of your department according to the schedules 168 given you by management?

A. No.

Q. You didn't have to plan the work of your department?

A. No, I was told what the schedule was and was told if there was anything I needed to make that schedule, to let the general foreman know and he would take it up with the superintendent to see if he could get such equipment and material. I proceeded to produce what I could with what I had.

Q. But you had to plan the work of your department according to the schedule of work you were provided with, were you not?

A. If by "planning" you mean did I put certain people on certain machines and move them from one machine to another, yes.

Q. Wasn't that an important starting point in your duties as a foreman, accepting the schedule plan that you received from your higher management and attempting to see that it was executed in your department?

A. I attempted, as I stated before, to the best of my ability, to do what they wanted me to do.

Q. It included that particular thing, among others, did it not?

A. Yes.

Q. There isn't any doubt about that, is there?

169 A. No, but there can be a difference of opinion as to what "planning" consists of.

Q. You accepted that responsibility?

A. I did.

Q. And you believe you discharged it to the best of your ability?

A. I do.

Q. Did you have these 100 men under you for a very long period of time?

A. For several months prior to the time I left the employment of the Company.

Q. Did you also assume the responsibility and attempt to discharge it for management—of getting your production out on schedule?

A. Yes.

Q. What did that involve? Any effort on your part?

A. Yes.

Q. What?

A. Well,—

Q. How did you discharge that responsibility?

A. Well, if I was given a schedule of some pieces to make in an eight hour shift I would sit down and determine for myself first, if I had enough equipment and enough manpower. If I did not I would request more. If 170 I did I would place the people in the various machines and various jobs as I thought they could best perform them and proceed to make the schedule if I possibly could.

Q. If, in your opinion, you did not have sufficient men to properly complete a schedule where given, you asked for more, did you not?

A. I did.

Q. You were supposed to do that for management, were you not?

A. That is true.

Q. Whenever that happened you did it?

A. Yes.

Q. And management, so far as they could, honored such requests from you as a foreman, did they not?

A. They didn't always honor it. Whether they did as far as they could, I have no way of knowing.

Q. Sometimes they did accept your request for additional personnel to discharge your duty?

A. Sometimes they did and sometimes they did not.

Q. They did sometimes, though?

A. Yes.

Q. And that made your department work better, didn't it?

A. Sometimes.

Q. Did you find the men of your department hard to handle?

A. No, I never had any trouble handling people.

Q. Did you ever have occasion to recommend the 171 demotion or discipline of any man over whom you were supervisor?

A. I do not recall ever having it.

Q. You never made one?

A. No. I have had occasions where the people have had minor grievances.

Q. You mean during the time the CIO was in the plant?

A. Yes.

Q. And did your work involve the handling of grievances that came from the rank and file CIO members?

A. To this extent, the departmental committeemen, as they call them in the Ford Motor Company, as a rule came to me first about any grievances of people under my supervision.

Q. By departmental committeemen you mean CIO departmental committeemen?

A. Yes.

Q. And they came to you and discussed grievances that arose in your department?

A. If it was a grievance that did not involve the determination of policy, in all probability I could handle it, otherwise I would refer it to the Labor Relations office and they would determine the disposition of the particular grievance.

Q. Would you say that you did handle a considerable number of grievances yourself?

A. No, fortunately the people that worked in my de-
172 partment did not have many grievances.

Q. Is that because you were such a good supervisor?

A. No, I wouldn't say because I was such a good supervisor, but I would say I tried to treat them human at all times.

Q. Were they pretty well behaved, a pretty well behaved lot of men on the whole?

A. On the whole, yes.

Q. And you had very little trouble with them in that respect?

A. Very little.

Q. But you did have some grievances, though?

A. Occasionally.

Q. Wherein you would get a complaint from the rank and file CIO members?

A. Yes, something like if they couldn't get a pair of gloves out of the crib or something of that nature they would come to me.

Q. And you would handle and dispose of that complaint, if possible?

A. Yes, I would go down to see if I could get the gloves. Frequently I couldn't get them either.

Q. Is that the most serious complaint you were in the habit of receiving from the CIO?

A. Grievances of that type, that was the most serious.

Q. That was the most serious?

173 A. Yes.

Q. In the matter of grievances while the CIO was in the plant and with regard to grievances that did arise, did you regard—in attempting to settle those grievances—that you were acting for management?

A. I often wondered about that. The Company signed a contract with the CIO—

Q. I asked you whether you believed you were acting for management when you dealt with those grievances and handled them. Were you doing what you thought was the best thing for management?

174 A. I was doing what I thought was the best thing for everybody.

Q. Well, did not Management's policies enter into your decisions in the handling of grievances?

A. Well, I tried to explain that to you a minute ago when you interrupted me.

Q. Well, did they or did they not?

A. Management's policies never entered into the grievances I handled, because I had absolutely no share in formulating Management's policies.

Q. And you say Management's policies today do not enter into the handling of grievances for foremen?

A. Only to the extent that the Company has formulated policies and advised the foremen what they may or may not do.

Q. Would you say that foremen are or are not acting on behalf of Management in handling grievances?

A. They are acting as supervisors.

Q. You were at Ford's, too, were you?

A. I didn't understand that?

Q. You were acting in that capacity at Ford's, too, were you not? In whose employment were you, the Ford Motor Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have any other employer?

A. Not that I know of.

175 Q. Were you taking directions from any others except your supervisors or superiors at the Ford Motor Company?

A. Oh, occasionally a superintendent would come in and kick a table over and say to clean up the department.

Q. Now, you are referring to a member of supervision, are you not, when you say superintendent?

A. Yes, he was a supervisor.

Q. Yes. Were you given, as a foreman at Ford's, in your work a schedule as to the time you had to meet?

A. You mean concerning production?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, our schedule was based on an eight hour shift. We were supposed to make so many pieces in eight hours.

Q. Where did you get that information, as to how many pieces you were to get out in eight hours with the men you had charge of?

A. Someone higher in Management would make up the schedules and give them to the superintendents. The superintendents would give them to the general foremen, the general foremen would give them to the shift foreman, and the shift foreman would tell me.

Q. Well, at any rate, you received this fixed assignment as to the scheduled number of pieces to get out in a working day from one or more of your immediate supervision?

176 A. That is true.

Q. And that was Management's schedule, was it not?

A. That's right.

Q. You, as foreman in that department, were expected to produce that schedule from the workers in your department?

A. That is true.

Q. That is a fair statement, is it not?

A. That is right.

Q. Did that involve the exercise of any ability, discretion or activity on your part at all?

A. Only to the extent I had to determine myself whether I had enough people and equipment to get that schedule out, and if not, I was expected to speak up and tell them I didn't.

Q. Your concern on that point was only as to the number of men you had in that department? Is that what you want us to believe?

A. Well, men and equipment.

Q. If you had 105 men and you still did not get your scheduled number of pieces out, you would still have to do something about it, would you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it not true that the trouble a foreman may have in a department may arise through reasons other than the fact that there was a certain number of men there?

177 To put it in another way, is it not true that foremen's difficulties may arise because some man is not performing his work properly?

A. That is true.

Q. That has been your experience, has it not?

A. That is right.

Q. And when such things occurred, you attempted to correct those conditions, did you not?

A. I did.

Q. As a matter of fact, that is one of the foreman's underlying responsibilities, is it not?

A. Well, if he wants to hold his own job, he has to produce. It is his responsibility to that extent.

Q. You recognize that the foreman is the responsible head of a department, do you not?

A. No, not all foremen. It depends on how their classification is.

Q. Did you regard yourself as a responsible head of the department where you had these 100 men under you?

A. No, I only had a small division.

Q. Well, you did have men under you to whom you gave directions?

A. I did.

Q. And that included the things we have just discussed?

A. That is true.

Q. In adhering to the schedules you were provided with?

178 A. I tried to meet them.

Q. Well, that was part of your daily work, was it not?

A. Yes.

Q. And that involved giving directions wherever it was necessary?

A. Yes.

Q. And you did give such instructions where necessary?

A. That is right.

Q. The workers were supposed to follow those directions?

A. Yes.

Q. Because you were speaking on behalf of Management?

A. On behalf of my employer.

Q. We are both speaking of the Ford Motor Company, are we not?

A. I think so; I am.

Q. That is the only employer you had then, is it not?

A. That's right.

Q. Did you have, as foreman, any particular problem in connection with routing materials through your department?

A. On occasions.

Q. What was that problem?

A. We frequently, when we first started the piston job in the Aircraft Building, had difficulty in getting material into the department. As a matter of fact, for a while, the men stood around most of the day without anything 179 to do, except to wipe off the machines, and so forth, because we couldn't get stock.

Q. When you saw that condition, did you attempt to do anything about it?

A. Yes, I called the superintendent's office.

Q. Why?

A. Because he was the man who had the power and authority to get the stock in the Ford Motor Car Company.

Q. Was it not also because you were the foreman in that department, and were responsible for production if it could be gotten?

A. That's right.

Q. So you dd something about it in those instances?

A. I certainly did.

Q. You tried to keep your department running?

A. Yes, sir, I tried to make more than my schedule every day.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the placing of workers in your department on their jobs from time to time?

A. I did, within their classifications.

Q. What does that mean?

A. Well, the contract between the UAW-CIO and the Company provides that people shall be classified—well, in certain classifications, and if a man was classified as a grinder operator, why, I would move him from one 180 grinder to another grinder in my department, but I couldn't put him on a lathe or milling machine, for example, because it would be in violation of the contract.

Q. So the problem of placing a man was one of your responsibilities also, was it not?

A. Within his classification, yes.

Q. While you were foreman, did you ever have occasion to suggest any improvements in the running of the department or in its operations?

A. Yes, many times.

Q. And were those suggestions the result of your experience as a foreman?

A. As a foreman and a worker.

Q. And that represented an attempt on your part, on behalf of Management, to improve operations of the department?

A. It represented an attempt on my part to improve the efficiency of the department.

Q. Did you have any responsibility with respect to the movement of material in your department either during the operations or after they were finished?

A. That was handled by conveyors. The operator would place the stock from his operation on a conveyor and it would go to the next operator. That operator would take it off, perform his operation and put it back on the conveyor.

Q. Did you have any accountability for the material
181 that was delivered from your department to elsewhere in the plant?

A. Everything we produced left the department immediately. If I didn't make my production schedule and the department receiving the stock we were producing was caught up with its work, I would be holding up another department if I didn't make the schedule.

Q. Do you believe that your responsibility included the responsibility for the quality of the workers in your department?

A. What was that?

Q. I say, do you believe that your responsibility included responsibility for the quality of the work done by the workers in your department?

A. Yes, I maintained a very high quality at all times.

Q. And was the fact that, if possible, you were to see that the work was made according to standard specifications a part of your responsibility also?

A. We were producing parts for the Pratt and Whitney engine and the United States Army Air Corps had its own inspectors to inspect them and we had to make them to their specifications or they wouldn't accept them.

Q. They required a good deal of supervision, that work, rather, did it not?

A. Yes, I was on the job every minute of the eight
182 hours I was there.

Q. Did you have pretty fair success in maintaining the specifications required by the Army in your department?

A. Yes, we were very successful.

Q. And you felt that the efforts you put forth in that connection contributed to that result?

A. I do.

Q. Insofar as that is true, you followed the production processes through your efforts?

A. I would say so, yes.

Q. Did you have any contact with the inspection department in the discharge of your duties as a foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. What contacts did you have and what were they about?

A. The inspection department would reject our finished products and I would ask the foreman of the inspection department why and in most instances he would say the superintendent had gotten a complaint and had told him not to accept any more stock unless it was to so-and-so specifications. He had his orders from the superintendent. I would go to the building superintendent and the two superintendents would get together and argue it out and sometimes they would say to let it go through and sometimes they would say to throw it out and make some more.

183 Q. In discharging your responsibilities in respect to these items we have so far discussed, were you aware, as a foreman, that the manner in which you discharged your responsibilities and looked after these things might directly affect the cost of the Company's production?

A. Definitely.

Q. Almost any one of those operations, if badly supervised, would increase the Company's cost?

A. That is true.

Q. And, in turn, affect the selling price?

A. That is true.

Q. Was it any part of your duties to see that the tools and fixtures were maintained in proper condition and in sufficient quality and number?

A. Yes, I had to see that the machines, tools and so forth in my department were kept in good working condition or else I couldn't produce my schedule. Of course, I didn't do that work. I simply requested that it be done. Sometimes it was and sometimes it wasn't.

Q. It was part of your effort, though, to see that the tools and fixtures were maintained properly in your department?

A. That's right.

Q. It wouldn't have run well had it not been kept properly, would it?

184 A. That is right. I have let machines stand idle all night because I couldn't get someone down to fix it.

Q. Did you have any responsibility with respect to the general condition of your department, with respect to such a matter as cleanliness?

A. Yes, I tried to keep it clean.

Q. Did you have to exert any effort in that direction?

A. Well, if the sweepers, who were under the jurisdiction of the sweeper foreman and sweeper superintendent, were not doing their job, I called them and told them about it.

Q. You complained about it?

A. Yes, and sometimes they cleaned it and sometimes they didn't.

Q. Because it is better to have a department where you have one hundred men under you in a clean condition than otherwise?

A. That's right; it is safer and more pleasant to work in.

Q. The working conditions are better?

A. That is right.

Q. And it is healthier?

A. That is right.

Q. And so, therefore, it was better to keep it clean?

A. Yes, except when you asked the men to clean it; then they wouldn't do it.

Q. Regardless of who does it, the workers are better off if the place is kept clean?

185 A. That is my opinion.

Q. You did your best on that, at any rate?

A. Yes.

Q. Was the problem of scrap a problem at all for you at Ford's?

A. Yes, very much so, in the early stages of our producing the Pratt-Whitney pistons.

Q. Did you address your ability to attempting to minimize the needless scrap in your department?

A. I did everything I possibly could under the authority I had to minimize the scrap.

Q. You think that is something a foreman should do, do you not?

A. Absolutely, I do.

Q. You did your best on that?

A. I did.

Q. Did you ever have the problem of surplus employees in your department?

A. I have.

Q. What do you understand me to mean by "surplus employees"?

A. More employees than I had machines to operate and equipment for them to work on.

Q. When such a situation arose, what did you do?

A. I told the general foreman and he told the superintendent and the superintendent would tell them
186 what to do with them. He couldn't move them and I couldn't move them.

Q. You would then attempt to eliminate surplus employees, wouldn't you?

A. I simply told them I had too many employees and they could do anything they wanted with them.

Q. Were you willing to let them stay there as unnecessary employees without an effort on your part to remedy the situation?

A. No, not if I had no use for them.

Q. You didn't want them in there?

A. No.

Q. You knew that Management did not want men standing around without work for them to do, didn't you?

A. I reported it to them on many occasions and they did not do anything about it.

Q. But you did make a personal effort to see that the condition of surplus employees in your department did not continue?

A. I reported it.

Q. And you recognize that that is a circumstance that would likewise affect the cost of the Company's product, would it not?

A. It would unless the other employees were maintaining the schedule without them and the Company was satisfied to let it go with that.

187 Q. Unless, you say, other companies were equally lax and maintained a larger force of workers than necessary in the department?

A. I didn't say that, I said unless the Company was willing to let them stay in there based on the theory that the balance of the employees were making the production schedule and they were only interested in getting so many pieces from so many people.

Q. You regarded it as part of your duty as a foreman to attempt to remedy the condition of surplus employees in your department, did you not?

A. Yes, to report it.

Q. You did something about it, didn't you?

A. I reported it.

Q. And you hoped the condition would be eliminated?

A. That is right.

Q. Toward the end of your foremanship at Ford's, had you become what you considered a skilled mechanic?

A. No.

Q. You never became a skilled mechanic?

A. No, I did not consider myself a skilled mechanic.

Q. Did you have a factual knowledge of the machines and the type of machines used by the workers in your department?

A. Yes, I could operate them all.

Q. You understood and could operate them?

188 A. That is right.

Q. Did you have any responsibility for seeing that the right type of machines were used in your department?

A. No. They sent me machines that I certainly wouldn't have purchased if I had anything to say about it.

Q. Did you say anything about them?

A. I reported that in my opinion the machines were no good. I was told to mind my own business and that my opinion did not amount to a "hill of beans."

Q. But you did try to remedy a condition which to you appeared to be an unsuitable type of machinery?

A. I certainly did.

Q. That is because in your judgment you felt it was your duty—

A. (Interposing) I tried to maintain the schedule and tried to do everything I could to maintain the schedule for my own self-protection.

Q. You mean you felt that Management might fire you?

A. They told me so on many occasions. They had the foremen so scared to death they were afraid to look cross-eyed.

Q. Including yourself?

A. Including myself.

Q. And you feel that you were not able to do very much about remedying a wrong type of machine in your department?

A. No, it didn't prove very successful. I reported it.

189 I told them that I did not think that the machine, this machine or that machine was any good and that this or that tool was of the proper quality and construction and I was told that the engineering department and the superintendent and the higher management were running the Ford Motor Company and not Bob Keys or anybody in that department.

Q. Would you say that that same condition would be common in any other large common mass industry in Detroit that you know of?

A. I can only speak from hearsay but I have been told it is so, yes.

Q. Do you know of the companies involved here before the War Labor Board Panel that recently convened?

A. I know who the companies were.

Q. Would you say that the condition you have described with reference to the selection of the wrong type of machine and the foreman's attempt to recommend remedying that condition to those companies is a condition in those companies, including Chrysler, Briggs, Hudson, Murray and the other companies involved in that case?

A. I would say that the foremen in those cases and in those companies who are trying to perform their duties properly do report those conditions. What action the Company takes I do not know.

Q. Did you ever hear of any foreman being treated

190 by any of those companies as you say you were in this one matter as to the type of machinery that was used?

A. Yes, several thousand of them.

Q. Why didn't you bring out such testimony before the Panel? You do not claim that any such testimony was adduced there, do you?

A. Offhand, I do not recall why we did not, which is, of course, your business.

Q. Don't you recall that the relations between the foremen and Management were dwelt on in great length and detail in that case?

A. That is true and it was very apparent that since the organization of the Foreman's Association, conditions have improved one thousandfold.

Mr. Donovan: I ask that that last statement be stricken out as not responsive.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you please read the answer?

(Answer read.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: So much of the answer that continues after the word "true" is stricken. The answer is simply, "That is true."

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) You do not agree then that the foremen in the Company we have just been discussing that have been before the War Labor Board Panel as the evidence shows were treated with courtesy 191 and consideration by Management?

Mr. Nelson: If he is going to ask questions involving interpretation of that testimony, I think then this order asking it be stricken is altogether out of place. Mr. Donovan's next question involves an interpretation of that testimony. Of course, I am not sure this is proper on this inquiry, comparison between testimony at another hearing before another Board. I doubt that it is proper in this case. You are going to get into a big proposition if you do.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you please read the question?

(Question read.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the form of the question is objectionable in any event.

Mr. Donovan: I will withdraw the question.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Would you say, Mr. Keys, you were in attendance every day at that hearing before the War Labor Board Panel, were you not?

A. Yes.

Q. As a matter of fact, you conducted the case for the Foreman's Association of America, didn't you?

A. That is true, with the exception of the opening day and the last day.

192 Q. That accepted ninety-eight percent of the trial, didn't it?

A. It did.

Q. And you examined the witnesses for the Foreman's Association of America on that occasion, didn't you?

A. I did.

Q. And you want to tell the Trial Examiner here that there were conditions in any of those companies involved comparable to the Ford Motor Company department with respect to the type of machinery and that question we were discussing?

A. Well, I do not believe I can say that they were identically comparable. I do know that there were many grievances before the Panel.

Q. I am talking about the right type of machinery which you say you had considerable trouble with at the Ford Motor Company, that you had considerable difficulty with certain supervision on that point. You do not claim that that condition existed in any of the other companies before the War Labor Board Panel.

A. I do not claim that it was presented as a grievance to the Panel.

Q. Including the Packard?

A. Including the Packard.

193 Mr. Nelson: Your question, Mr. Donovan, related to the condition and not to the testimony. I am interested in the condition and I am not interested in what the testimony was, Mr. Examiner. The difference between the witness and counsel is that counsel asked for a condition — I have no objection to that. If he asks for a characterization of the testimony before the Panel, I conceive it to be irrelevant.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The answer to that is that they are not mutually exclusive. The testimony might bear on the condition itself.

Mr. Nelson: He asked a question which the witness answered as to the testimony, while his question was as to the condition. I am interested in the condition.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The next question, please.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Now, Mr. Keys, as a foreman at the Ford, do you have any records to keep of any kind?

A. Only the time sheet of my three foremen.

Q. Now, tell us every record that you kept as a foreman. Just what it was, what the purpose of it was and what you had to do with it?

A. I just told you, Mr. Donovan.

Q. All you kept as a foreman there was a time sheet?

A. That is right.

Q. There again, that would differentiate the condition of the Ford foremen from the other companies in Detroit that were before the War Labor Board Panel, 194 would it not, including Packard?

A. I don't know.

Q. And Briggs—you say you do not know?

A. I do not know.

Q. Well weren't you present when form after form that the foremen were required to fill out in each one of those plants were introduced in evidence and didn't you ask questions about them yourself on cross examination?

A. I was present when report forms were introduced, yes. I am aware of the fact that they make out reports. You asked me about keeping records. There is a difference between a record and a report.

Q. Perhaps I am only asking about one thing at a time.

A. If it is "records," no, I notice no difference in the records of the Ford Motor Company.

Q. I asked you about reports, didn't I?

A. No, you asked about records.

Q. All right, let's take the matter of reports. Did you, as a foreman, make out any reports at the Ford Motor Company, or can't you remember?

A. I made out hospital cards for employees injured to go to the hospital, that is all.

Q. And that is the only type of report that you made as a foreman at Ford's?

195 A. Other than my departmental communications which I would write to the foreman who followed me in my same capacity on the following shift, explaining that so-and-so machine was down and that so many tools were in the grinding room and so forth, that is all

Q. Then, those two things were the only reports that you made as a foreman at the Ford Motor Company, is that right?

A. To the best of my recollection, yes.

Q. And there is no similarity there again between Ford and Packard and Briggs and Chrysler and Murray and the Aeronautical Products, is there?

A. Without reviewing the record, I cannot recall exactly. I do remember there were numerous report forms introduced by the Company that were claimed to be used by the foremen.

Q. Then that is all the reports? Let's talk about the records for a moment. What records did you, as a foreman, have to do with and make or deal with as a Ford foreman?

A. Well, the only thing I filled out that would become a part of a record at all would be the time sheet. That was preserved by the time department, I presume — at least, for a number of years — or something like that. That is, it would be in my judgment on that. I think it would be good business to do it. Whether they do it or not I do not know.

Q. Did you have such a thing as a trouble report 196 at Ford's?

A. No.

Q. Did you have such a thing as shortage reports?

A. No.

Q. Did you have such a thing as labor requisition reports?

A. No.

Q. Did you have such a thing as progress reports?

A. No.

Q. Did you have such a thing as employee rating card reports?

A. No.

Q. None of those things are things you had to deal with as a Ford foreman?

A. No.

Q. Did you have any responsibility with reference to instructing any of the workers over whom you were supervisor?

A. Surely, I inspected them to the best of my ability.

Q. You did that whenever it was necessary?

A. Whenever they would send a new employee in to the department that never operated a machine in a factory, which was common during this war period, I would attempt to instruct him.

Q. When a new man would come in to the department, did you attempt to make him feel at home and in friendly surroundings with his fellow workers?

197 A. Yes, I shook hands with him and told him I was glad to have him in the department and that we would get along nicely.

Q. And that sort of thing makes a man feel kindly towards Management and is the part of the duty of a foreman—his duty towards Management?

A. Well, you see, I was not received that way.

Mr. Donovan: I ask that that be stricken. We are not considering bitterness or other events just now.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It may stay.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Did you give the new employees as much information as you could about their duties and surroundings when they came in there?

A. I did. I taught them everything I knew.

Q. And that was quite a bit, wasn't it?

A. That is a matter of opinion.

Q. Well, in fairness to yourself, it was quite a bit?

A. I managed to teach them enough to perform their duties satisfactorily.

Q. And you feel that you discharged your responsibilities for Management rather well insofar as you could?

A. I would say it is a matter of record that I did.

Q. And that is even a matter of record?

A. I think the Company's production records would show that I always maintained my end of the job.

198 Q. Did you ever have occasion to discuss with any of the workers in your department under you, the question of whether they should be speedy or whether on the other hand they should be accurate first?

A. Yes, I told them how many we had to make and of what quality they had to be.

Q. And did you have any occasion to emphasize either speed or accuracy?

A. I did.

Q. Frequently, didn't you?

A. Very frequently.

Q. When you had to give men instructions, and I refer now to workers in your department, you sometimes had to follow them up to see if they were carried out, of course, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And some men need more than one instruction on a particular matter?

A. That is true.

Q. That is the way workers are, isn't it?

A. That is true.

Q. Did you feel that you had any uniform method of treating the workers under you so far as disciplinary action by you was concerned so that they felt that you were fair and impartial?

199 A. Well, I felt there was only one uniform method and that was the humane method. If you are talking about the provisions of the contract, I learned some months after the contract was signed what the grievance procedure was.

Q. So far as you were personally concerned, did you try to be fair and impartial with the workers and give them the feeling that their foreman was honest and impartial?

A. I did.

Q. And that is a rather good thing for men to do, that is, for foremen to do, isn't it?

A. I think all foremen should do it.

Q. It makes for the running of a better department?

A. It certainly does.

Q. And that in turn is related to good production, is it not, and frequent turnover too; isn't it those things that bear on turnover in a factory?

A. I would say those things have a bearing on everything in the factory.

Q. Including turnover?

A. Yes.

Q. Those are very important things?

A. Definitely.

Q. And the foreman's part in that looms rather large, doesn't it? He can sound the note as far as the 200 feeling of the men in the department, as foreman.

A. He can if he has the authority to do it. If he is told what to do and has to carry out the orders, he is in a bad position.

Q. Regardless of any limitations he may feel that are on him which he does not like, if any, he can still do his best to make the men feel he is impartial and fair as a foreman representing Management, isn't that true?

A. Yes, he can explain, "I have been ordered to tell you to do so and so and I am doing it."

Q. Well, you have testified that insofar as your own conduct was concerned, you feel you were fair and impartial and humane in the treatment of the men in your department.

A. That is right.

Q. And they responded and accepted that atmosphere

A. That is right.

Q. Did you ever have occasion to commend any of the workers in your department for a special job well done on any particular occasion?

A. Well, if you mean by that, verbal commendation, yes, I have.

Q. And that is the sort of encouragement that is a good thing for a foreman to extend where it is merited?

A. Well, that is all I could give them. I couldn't give them a raise or anything else.

201 Mr. Donovan: I ask that that be stricken.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It may stand, I think.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Did you ever have a desire to recommend to Management, that is, to higher Management, the promotion or a raise on behalf of any of your workers?

A. Yes.

Q. A foreman should be able to do that sort of thing, shouldn't he?

A. That is right. The workers would come to me as foreman and say, "Keys, how about a raise"? And I would say, "Well, I think you deserve it, and I will recommend it".

Q. And you do so in those cases, didn't you?

A. I made it clear that they were not to hold me responsible if they didn't get it, and that is why I got along with them.

Q. When they came to you, you talked to them in a co-operative way and you told them that you would try, and if the man merited it you would attempt to get it for him?

A. That is right. I told him if I thought he was entitled to it I would recommend him for a raise.

Q. And you would make the recommendation if he was?

A. If I thought so, I would.

Q. When you made that decision, were you regarding him as a man who would be more valuable to Man-202 agement if he were given that raise than if he were denied it?

A. I never thought who he was more valuable to. But he was valuable to me if I wanted to maintain my position.

Q. If a satisfied, good worker was given a raise he would be a better man for the foreman and the Company generally, isn't that good common sense?

A. He should be.

Q. That is true, now, isn't it?

A. Not in all cases.

Q. Then you think that a dissatisfied worker is better not only for the foreman but for the Company?

A. No, I did not say that I thought he was better.

Q. Did you ever encourage any of your workers to themselves make suggestions with reference to the operation of their department or anything having to do with that, to you?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever receive any such suggestions?

A. Yes.

Q. From time to time the men would make them?

A. That is right.

Q. Were any of those suggestions good suggestions?

A. I thought that many of them were very good suggestions.

Q. Do workers, speaking generally now, come to foremen and make suggestions, volunteer suggestions that may involve a change in the operation of a department unless they feel more or less on a personal and friendly basis with the foreman?

203

A. I can only speak from my own experience. They did with me.

Q. It helps if the foreman has the type of leadership which encourages that type of thing?

A. That is the way I felt about it.

Q. That would be true of any foreman?

A. It would be, because it is to his own advantage.

Q. Did you have any responsibility at all with reference to men or, rather, workers leaving their jobs for a different period during the day?

A. Yes, we had a great deal of trouble with that.

Q. Taking into consideration—first, that required quite a bit of activity on your part, did it not, looking after it, did it not?

A. Well, usually—until the time I had left the employment of the Company, it had not been corrected. The men would leave their jobs early and line up at the clocks. If that is what you have reference to.

Q. I mean, for any reason; I do not mean at quitting time necessarily. I mean, during the day.

A. We never prohibited them from leaving the job if they wanted to go to the lavatory. Occasionally, one would go and stay too long and, as a rule, his leader—and by leader, I mean the man in charge of a particular little group of machines—the leader would go after him and get him back on the job.

Q. Well, you as foreman, kept your eyes on things of that sort, did you not?

A. Yes, everybody in the Ford Motor Company kept their eyes on it.

Q. And as foreman of the department, you felt obligated to know what conditions were as to the men leaving for an undue length of time?

A. As foreman of the department, I knew I couldn't make my schedule if they weren't on the job.

Q. That is right, and you did what you could to improve that condition, did you not?

A. Yes, I worried.

Q. Were any of the workers whom you recommended for promotion promoted?

A. Yes, I think I can recall one that was promoted from an operator to a leader's job on my recommendation.

Q. That is the only one you can think of at the present time?

A. That's all I can recall.

Q. In your six years as foreman?

A. That's right.

Q. That is the only recommendation you made for promotion?

205 A. No, it isn't the only recommendation I made.

Q. You made a lot of recommendations?

A. I made several.

Q. Well, just roughly, how many?

A. Oh, I would say a dozen.

Q. That would be about two a year, if you were there six years, about that?

A. Yes.

Q. And some of those cases you recommended, your recommendations were not followed by Management?

A. Most of them were not followed.

Q. And again, that does not correspond with the general condition, and I am speaking generally, in other plants, such as the Chrysler Corporation, Briggs and the Murray Corporation?

A. I don't know.

Q. You know nothing about that?

A. I don't say I know nothing about it.

Q. You do not know whether foremen in those plants originate any recommendations for promotions or demotions?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. You know nothing about it in a general way, now, as to the extent to which those recommendations are honored or supported by Management?

A. I can tell you what I have been told.

206 Q. Did you not hear, day after day, testimony on the many ways in which foremen have been supported by Management in such matters during the War Labor Board hearing?

A. Yes, I heard that.

Q. And you heard them read in a lot of discharges the foremen had made, that had been supported by Managements?

A. Yes, and I heard them read in discharges made in the Labor Relations Department upon the foremen's recommendations.

Q. What is your relation with the men who have to do with the delivery into your department—at Ford's, of course, I am speaking of—of the materials the men work on?

A. There are no relations, except to get the stock in here. "That's your job, get it in here", I would tell them that. If they had it, they would bring it in; if they didn't, they wouldn't do anything about it.

Q. But you can ascertain whether or not the stock is sufficient in quantity, of course, for the men to run the department?

A. Well, I can count. If we had to make one hundred finished pieces, why, I would have to have one hundred rough pieces.

Q. That is right, and part of your responsibility was to see that you had enough material in there to keep the department running smoothly?

207 A. Not to see that I had enough material to keep the department running smoothly, only to the extent of reporting it and after that, it was taken out of my hands. I reported it on each occasion, because if I was going to make my production, and I didn't want to be fired by the superintendent at night, I had to report it in each instance.

Q. That is right; and whenever that condition prevailed you complained louder?

A. I sure hollered.

Q. Now, as I recall your testimony, you had very little to do while the CIO was in the Ford factory and while you were a foreman. You said that was for a period of about six or eight months, as I remember. Am I right about that?

A. No.

Q. How long was the CIO in there before you left?

A. I have been told it was in there since 1936. The first contract was signed in 1941, if I am not mistaken, 1940 or 1941; 1941, I believe.

Q. You left Ford's when?

A. In July, 1942, about a year or year and a half later.

Q. Well, did you not have certain contacts on grievances with CIO personnel during that period?

A. Well, for a long time I didn't. The Company and the Union negotiated a contract and signed it, then for the first time the foremen knew about it by reading about it in the newspapers. They were not given copies of the contract. There were some disturbances in the plant and so forth, and finally resolved itself around to where we understood that people would come to us with their grievances, if they had any.

Q. Who told you that?

A. I can't recall anybody telling me. I had a copy of the contract.

Q. Well, you did get a copy of the contract?

A. Yes, I stopped down and got a copy from Local 600 of the UAW-CIO.

Q. Did you know the officers of that Local?

A. No, not at that time. I simply stopped down there and asked them one day for a copy.

Q. And after that, you did have certain contacts with the workers under the so-called grievance machinery of the contract?

A. Yes, I found out the first step of the grievance machinery was the foreman.

Q. Just take any ordinary grievance, who were the parties concerned in a grievance? First, there would be the worker, would there not?

A. The worker would be the aggrieved man.

Q. That is right, and who else?

A. His departmental committeeman.

209 Q. That would be the CIO man?

A. Yes, he would go to the CIO man and then he would come to me.

Q. Did the worker speak for himself or did the CIO committeeman speak for him?

A. He was represented by the committeeman.

Q. Who spoke for Management at that stage?

A. I don't know; I didn't.

Q. Did anybody?

A. If I was speaking for Management, I could have settled a lot of grievances.

Q. Did anyone speak for Management at that stage?

A. Not at that stage.

Q. Well, did you have anything to do with the CIO regarding workers' grievances?

A. I said I did. Mostly, they were just little minor things like being unable to get gloves or oil running out of a machine.

Q. Who represented Management on those occasions when you settled those grievances?

A. On those, I did.

Q. You did?

A. Yes, I sure did.

Q. And you settled them?

A. Sure, I got the mopper over there and he mopped

210 up the oil, and I went down and got the gloves.

Q. Now, Mr. Keys, you filed the petition in this case on October 10th, at least, you signed and swore to it on October 19th, I guess it is, last, is that right?

A. Yes, I am sure that is the date.

Q. Now, with whom did you take up the question of the issuance of this petition?

A. I didn't take it up with anybody, other than our legal counsel and our Executive Board.

Q. You did not take it up with the Seventh Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board?

A. I went over there and asked if I could have some blank forms, and they gave them to me, and I went back and filled them out and took them back and filed them.

Q. When did you make the request for the form that you filed or filled out and signed and swore to on October 19th?

A. On October 19th.

Q. What led you to ask for a petition with respect to the Packard Motor Car Company at that time?

A. What led me to ask for a petition?

Q. That is right. You know that the National Labor Relations Board had held that the foremen were an inappropriate unit for bargaining purposes?

A. I was familiar with the Maryland Drydock decision.

Q. Yes, everybody understands that.

211 A. No, I don't think anybody understands that.

Q. Well, you understood the decision in that case?

A. That is right.

Q. Why did you think the National Labor Relations Board would uphold a petition against the Packard Motor Car Company in 1944, in view of that decision?

A. I didn't know they would; I had hopes.

Q. On what did you base those hopes?

A. The fact of the chaotic condition under which these foremen have been working during this war period, and the results that might follow.

Q. That condition was no different than the condition that prevailed some months before?

A. Prior to the Maryland Drydock decision, conditions were lovely in comparison to what they are now. There isn't an employer that hasn't taken advantage of them and abused them all. They have all done that.

Q. You think the Board was wrong in deciding the Maryland Drydock case as they did?

A. I do.

Q. What, specifically, do you have in mind now, what specific hope do you have now that the Board will uphold your petition regarding the Packard Motor Car Company for the bargaining rights of foremen?

A. The same hopes I have had in the three years of 212 fighting.

Q. You just decided to file one more petition, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And you did not negotiate with anybody connected with the National Labor Relations Board in Washington or in Detroit on that subject?

A. No, I did not.

Q. And you did not have anyone present for you as your counsel or agent in Washington or Detroit, or elsewhere, prior to this Notice of Hearing by the Board?

A. Now, following the Maryland Drydock decision, I have been to Washington several times myself.

Q. I mean, in reference to this petition, this petition you signed and swore to on October 19th, regarding the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. In reference to this petition, no.

Q. You just decided to file just one more petition, hoping the Board would change its mind and entertain it?

A. At the time of filing that, yes.

Q. That was on October 19th?

A. That is right. As a matter of fact, in discussing this situation with another officer of the MESA not more than a week before I filed that, he said he held absolutely no hopes, but I still filed it anyway.

213 Q. And you did not discuss the petition after you filed it with anybody connected with the National Labor Relations Board?

A. At the time—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) Did you say after he filed it or before?

Mr. Donovan: Either, before or after. I believe he said he did not before.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Did you talk to anybody in the Seventh Regional Office or in Washington about this petition at the time you swore to it, or afterwards?

A. At the time I filed the petition on that day, October 19, when I took it over to file it, yes.

Q. You went over to the Seventh Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board?

A. I did, and just so the record is true and straight, prior to filing this, I had called the Seventh Regional Office of the National Labor Relations Board over the telephone and told them I was going to file a petition one of these days.

Q. What did they tell you when you took the petition over there?

A. They said they would refer it to Washington and Washington could do what they wanted to with it.

Q. And that represents all the conversations you
214 have had with anybody connected with the National Labor Relations Board about this petition?

A. No, I explained how I happened to select those particular classifications as the unit, and why I did it.

Q. No reason was given to you as to why the petition was being entertained?

A. No.

Q. And you do not know now?

A. No.

Q. You just have a hope that the National Labor Relations Board is going to reverse its decision?

A. Yes, I have that hope. I think they should reverse their decision.

Q. That is what I understand.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will suspend at this time until two o'clock.

(Thereupon, the hearing in the above matter was recessed at 12:15 P. M. until 2:00 o'clock P. M.)

215 After Recess.

(Pursuant to recess the hearing resumed at 2 o'clock P. M.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The hearing is in order, gentlemen.

ROBERT H. KEYS

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Cross-Examination (Continued).

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Mr. Keys, referring to your exhibit in this case, number 9, which you will recall,—to refresh your recollection—that was a list of the petitions for bargaining that the Foreman's Association of America had filed with the National Labor Relations Board. Do you recall that petition?

A. Yes.

Q. And it also contained an indication in each case for the many petitions that were filed, an indication of the disposition. Do you recall that?

A. Yes, I believe it is marked on the exhibit.

Q. Now, I take it for all companies in Detroit and Michigan that these several petitions were, of course, filed with the Seventh Regional Office here in Detroit?

A. That is right.

Q. That is right, isn't it?

A. Anything for the Lower Peninsula for the State
216 of Michigan was filed in the Seventh Region.

Q. In that case would the Midland Steel not be in such a petition?

A. Midland Steel would be in such a petition.

Q. Is that a petition you filed with the Detroit Board?

A. Yes.

Q. In that case the Board declined to issue a notice of hearing, did they not?

A. You have reference to the representation case?

Q. Well, I am referring to your own exhibit No. 9 which is headed "Petitions for Bargaining."

A. Yes.

Q. Which were filed with the National Labor Relations Board Office as you state here in Detroit for all Michigan companies for the Lower Peninsula. I am asking you now if the one you filed on behalf of the Midland Steel Company for the Foreman's Association of America, whether in that case the Board declined to issue a notice of hearing?

A. All the petitions pending at the time of the Maryland Drydock case—

Q. Let's confine our answer to the question asked.

A. That was excluded. That was declined in a group of petitions.

Q. The Detroit Regional Board declined to issue a
217 notice of hearing?

A. On June 29th, along with others.

Q. They declined to issue a notice of hearing for similar petitions of the Foreman's Association of America. By the way—you executed all these petitions, did you not?

A. I do not know whether I personally executed each and every one of them or not. I probably did.

Q. And the Board declined to issue any notice of hearing in the Detroit Steel Products case on petition of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. Yes.

Q. And in the case of the Graham Paige Company?

A. Yes.

Q. And in the case of the Chicago Pneumatic Tool Company?

A. Yes.

Q. And in the case of the Aluminum Company of America?

A. Yes.

Q. And in the case of the Timken-Detroit Axle Company?

A. Yes.

Q. And in the case of the Studebaker Corporation?

A. I am not personally familiar with that one.

Q. Well, we will omit that. Then in all these cases that you have just mentioned did the Board decline to issue any notice of hearing on your petition for bargaining on behalf of the Foreman's Association of America?

218 A. Yes, on June 29, 1943.

Q. Why, in October of this year, in filing a petition for bargaining again did you select the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Why did we select the Packard Motor Car Company?

Q. Yes.

A. Because we were 100 per cent organized in Packard.

Q. And that is the only reason you had for selecting the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. That is the only reason I had, yes.

Q. You mean by that other people had other reasons that you know of?

A. When we decided to file another petition on one of our chapters we checked all of our chapters and tried to determine which would be the strongest and which had the majority, and the majority opinion was that Packard was the best.

Q. You know that the Board ordinarily and customarily and traditionally entertains a petition for bargaining on behalf of representatives, even in a small percentage, as low as ten or fifteen per cent of the employees in the requested unit block?

A. No, I am not personally familiar with that fact.

Q. Well, you had filed petitions where in many cases prior to this one, where you were not 100 per cent
219 organized as you say you are in Packard?

A. Yes, we were more than fifty-one per cent organized, though.

Q. So that the mere fact you had 100 per cent membership would not be the reason why your petition would not be entertained. You could have made it in behalf of any other company where you had fifty or fifty-one per cent, couldn't you?

A. We could have.

Q. Now, Mr. Keys, in the Petitioner's Exhibit No. 4, which is the Constitution of the Foreman's Association of America adopted at Dearborn, Michigan, November 24th—was that, by the way, the first Constitution of the Foreman's Association?

A. November 2, 1941, yes.

Q. And at that time, Article I reads as follows, did it not:

"This voluntary association of foremen shall be known as Foreman's Association of America"?

A. That is correct.

Q. And article II, which was headed "Purposes," reads as follows:

"The purposes of this Association shall be to encourage acquaintance and social intercourse among foremen, to confer and act upon measures for the 220 protection and advancement of the economic welfare of foremen, and to encourage study, conference and wider learning among foremen, to the end that they may improve in the management of men in industry."

Q. You recall that as the original Article II of your constitution, do you not?

A. That is correct.

Q. Article V, subsection 2, in that Constitution, reads as follows, does it not:

"Any person of good moral character, who is at the time of filing his application and at the time of admission to membership a foreman for any owner or employer of labor, such person not being the owner or employer of labor, may become a member of this Association provided he has been a foreman for a period of not less than sixty days prior to filing his application for membership. * * *"

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, that Constitution was charged, was it not?

A. It was amended in 1942.

Q. It was amended in 1942?

A. I believe it was.

Mr. Donovan: Will you mark this Company's Exhibit No. 1, please?

(The document above referred to was marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 1.)

221 Q. (By Mr. Donovan): I show you what has been marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 1, and which appears to be a Constitution of the Foreman's Association of America, bearing the words, "Adopted at Dearborn, Michigan, 1942," and ask you if you can identify that pamphlet, as such?

A. Yes, I identify that as the Constitution of the Foreman's Association of America that was adopted at Dearborn, Michigan in December, 1942.

Q. And do you agree that the provisions of the earlier Constitution that I just read to you and which you said were correct, were still continued in this particular Constitution, or would you like to examine it?

A. Do you have reference to an amended constitution when you say "this particular"?

Q. I have reference to this Company Exhibit No. 1 which you have now identified as the Constitution adopted in Dearborn, Michigan, November, 1942. The earlier exhibit, No. 4, was the November 2, 1941, Constitution.

A. I am not familiar with the amendment at this time. I would read it and tell you whether there were any changes or not.

Q. I will ask you, and I will give you a chance to examine it, if I am not quoting it correctly from Article I, as I did earlier,—

222 "This voluntary Association of Foremen shall be known as Foreman's Association of America."

Q. Then Article No. 2:

"The purposes of this Association shall be to encourage, acquaintance and social intercourse among foremen, to confer and act upon measures for the protection and advancement of the economic welfare of foremen, and to encourage study, conference and wider learning among foremen, to the end that they may improve in the management of men and women in industry."

And Article V, a corresponding article to Article V which I previously read:

"Any person of good moral character, who is a foreman for an employer of labor at the time of filing an application for membership may become a member of this Association, provided he has been a foreman for a period of not less than thirty days prior to filing his application for membership."

You do not dispute that still continued to be the provision of your Constitution of December, 1942?

A. Not if that is a copy of our Constitution.

Q. Well, have you any reason to believe this is not a copy?

A. No, I recall those articles and sections were amended. I don't recall if it was in 1942 or 1943.

Q. Would it assist your recollection if I told you
223 that this document bears the stamp, "Plaintiff's Exhibit No. 6, L. T. Funk, Reporter," which would be the stamp of a court reporter where it was received in evidence, where your counsel was present, as such Constitution? If you have any serious doubts about the authenticity of it, I would like to have you state it.

A. I have no doubts.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just to clear the record, that stamp is in connection with some other case?

Mr. Donovan: Yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Now, referring, in this case, to Petitioner's Exhibit No. 3, which was a Constitution of the Foreman's Association of America adopted at Dearborn, Michigan in November, 1941, I am quoting from the pamphlet on the cover and continuing to quote,

"Amended at Dearborn, Michigan, 1943 Convention."

That, as you may recall, is the document which was introduced here by you as Petitioner in this case, or by your counsel.

A. Right.

Q. Now, Article I in this Constitution which I now read from and, by the way, is this the present Constitution of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. No.

Q. All right, I will come to that in a minute. Ar-
224 ticle I reads as follows:

"This voluntary Association of Supervisory Employees shall be known as Foreman's Association of America."

You recall that change, do you not?

A. I do.

Q. Article II, entitled, "Purposes" reads as follows:

"The purposes of the Association shall be to encourage social acquaintance among supervisory employees to confer and act upon measures for the advancement of economic welfare of supervisory employees through collective bargaining, and to encourage study, conference and wider learning among supervisory employees to the end that they may improve in the supervision of men and women in the industry."

And Section 2 of Article V, the same corresponding section that I have read from in the prior constitution, reads as follows:

"Any employee of good moral character whose duties require the supervision of other employees or who directs the work of other employees; who may or may not supervise other employees and who is not a member of any other organization recognized by his employer as representing him in collective bargaining may become a member of the Association after having been employed as a supervisory employee for 225 a period of not less than thirty days."

You recall that provision, do you not?

A. I do.

Q. Now, is there anything in your Constitution which limits your membership to foremen?

A. Do you mean supervisory employees or the classification of foremen? Our Constitution limits our organization to supervisory employees.

Q. Well, what is your definition of supervisory employees?

A. My definition of supervisory employees is persons employed by an employer and supervises the work of other employees.

Q. And in the commonly used categories of supervision, where does supervision begin and end, in your judgment?

A. It depends entirely upon the plant you have in mind.

Q. Well, what would you say with respect to the Packard Motor Car Company plant?

A. With respect to the Packard plant, we say that supervision stops when you start from the bottom and go up, starting with assistant foremen and stops with the general foreman.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you read that, please?

(Answer read.)

The Witness: In other words, assistant foremen to 226 foreman to general foremen, is inclusive of supervisory employees.

Q. And is that as far as the Foreman's Association goes in accepting members?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The Packard plant, you mean?

Mr. Donovan: We are talking about Packard. I would also like to have him answer the question generally, because I do not think that they make distinctions between plants.

227 A. The Foreman's Association of America provides in its Constitution, for supervisory employees.

Q. Just a minute, Mr. Keys—I am asking you whether or not—I would like to have you answer the question.

A. I am going to answer the question.

Q. I do not think what you are saying is responsive.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Read the question.

(Question read.)

The Witness: You are speaking about Packard now?

Mr. Donovan: That is right.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) I want to ask the same question with reference to any other of the companies involved in the War Labor Board Panel hearing recently.

A. With reference to Packard's, yes, that is as far as we go in Packard. With reference to any other plant we are going to go just as high as the Company misclassifies foremen. In other words, the Company in its attempt to keep people out of our organization, classify them as assistant superintendents and superintendents falsely. That does not stop us from bringing them into our organization.

Q. So that your membership might well embrace assistant superintendents and superintendents, depending upon your judgment of the situation at the time?

A. Based upon their authority and duties.

Q. Why do you stop, or rather, do you stop at 228 assistant superintendents and superintendents?

A. I believe I stated that we would go just as high as the need may be.

Q. And if there was a need for assistant plant managers and plant managers, you would not consider them immune, I take it?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not think that is a fair question in view of the witness' testimony. There is a distinction between a fact and a name. The witness indicated, as I understand his testimony, at least, that it depends whether or not the name is correctly applied to the fact.

Mr. Donovan: Well, Mr. Trial Examiner, I presume that the testimony is open to more than one construction. I would fairly deduce that the witness has said that the Foreman's Association of America will be the judge of how high in supervision they will go in accepting members into the Foreman's Association of America and that their judgment will be that upon which they will act in taking them or not taking them into membership. I think that is a fair characterization of the witness' answer.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The point is that your question is assuming something the witness has not agreed to.

Mr. Donovan: I must abide, of course, by the Trial
229 Examiner's ruling as to whether he will allow the witness to answer the question or not.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Suppose you re-frame the question.

Mr. Donovan: I do not know as though I want to reframe the question and feel that I have carried the question as I want to put it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you read the pending question?

(The question was read.)

Mr. Donovan: It is related to prior questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The question is excluded.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Now, Mr. Keys, as a matter of fact, in the hearing before the War Labor Board Panel here recently, you had foremen witnesses who testified that you did not take superintendents, did you not?

A. That is correct.

Q. But you did take them, didn't you, during your May strikes in Detroit?

A. No, not superintendents. We took employees misclassified as superintendents into our organization.

Q. And you solicited them during those strikes, did you not?

A. We did.

Q. I am referring, of course, to the Foreman's Association of America strikes in May of 1944, and April.

230 A. That is the only one I would discuss with you.

Q. And as a matter of fact, presidents of chapters of the Foreman's Association of America wrote letters and distributed circulars announcing to superintendents that if they would join or become a member of the Briggs Chapter Number 2 of the Foreman's Association of America, that such member would receive the full support and backing of the Executive Board and membership of the Foreman's Association of America, Chapter Number 2 of the Briggs Company, in preventing discrimination.

A. You started your question in the plural and you are now ending it in the singular. If you want my answer as to the plural, it is no, and if you want it as to the singular, it is yes.

Q. You agree with me as to what I say with reference to the Briggs Manufacturing Company?

A. Yes, that was published and distributed.

Q. As a matter of fact, now that you are on Briggs and we will so confine it, you not only solicited superintendents, you carried them down to the Union Hall after beating them up and forcing them to sign membership application cards, did you not?

A. I do not know anything about that.

Q. You recall that that was brought out at a War
231 Labor Board Panel hearing here, don't you?

A. I recall that that was alleged as a fact.

Q. Do you recall that that was brought out with the War Labor Board here?

A. I recall that you claimed that to be a fact.

Q. You recall that that stands undenied on the record in that case today.

Mr. Nelson: I do not believe that would be material,

Mr. Examiner. We are not called upon, either here or there, to make a reply to an accusation of that kind.

Mr. Donovan: I can see its relevancy here on two or three different grounds.

Mr. Nelson: He took the entire matter into Circuit Court and he spent a week on it and got nowhere on it. It has been disputed in a case that involved just that and he did not get anywhere with it.

Mr. Donovan: I can understand counsel's disinclination to go into matters of that kind. That does not mean that we will not do it unless the Commissioner wants us to or not.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What is it you say is undenied, Mr. Donovan? He has testified that he does not deny that they solicited superintendents in the Briggs Manufacturing Plant during the May strikes.

232 Mr. Donovan: I asked him after that admission something with respect to the manner in which they solicited some of the superintendents as it was brought out and undenied by the Foreman's Association of America in a War Labor Board Panel hearing of recent date here. I asked him whether he recalled that or not.

Mr. Nelson: That has been denied.

Mr. Donovan: That would affect the credibility of the witness, depending on what he answers.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you want him to answer as to the manner of solicitation?

Mr. Donovan: I gave him an incident and asked him about that. I gave him a specific incident. I do not recall the specific frame of my question, but I asked him whether or not that had been denied or disputed in the War Labor Board case where evidence was adduced.

Mr. Nelson: I think that would be an improper question. The allegations were properly made and the pleadings filed in the Circuit Court and they were denied and met at that trial. Obviously, the National Association in every formal way denied the averment made by Mr. Donovan. He knows it was denied. He stood in Court for a week and tried to establish it over the denial of the Association.

Mr. Donovan: I know that we stood in court for a week and tried that case in court without the Foreman's Association of America putting in any evidence whatsoever denying anything.

233

Mr. Nelson: We denied the pleadings and it never reached a place where we had to deny the proof.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In any event, it is irrelevant in this particular hearing. I so rule.

Mr. Donovan: Then the Examiner rules out the question?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Now, Mr. Keys, you have said, I believe, that you think the Foreman's Association of America should be an independent union, am I right in that?

A. Yes, I have said that.

Q. And you believe that, don't you?

A. I have always believed that personally, yes.

Q. And what do you mean by an independent union?

A. A union unaffiliated with any other labor organization or manufacturer's association or any other type of organization.

Q. Why do you think it is wise to have the Foreman's Association of America an independent union? What reasons would there be for that?

A. Because we can service our members better.

Q. Why? Why do you say that?

A. Did you say why do I say that?

Q. Why could you service them better as an independent union?

234

A. That is what we believe.

Q. Why do you believe it?

A. Because that is what we think.

Q. What reason do you have for thinking that you are going to be better off as an independent union? You have not given me yet any reason. You say you think so.

A. Because we have been independent since we started. It has worked out very successfully and we are satisfied with it and cannot see any reason why it should change.

Q. Are those the only reasons you can think of?

A. I may have discussed other reasons but that right now is all I can think of, yes.

Q. When you started at Ford's at 62½ cents an hour in 1935, that was it, wasn't it?

A. January 19, 1935.

Q. How much more was your foreman getting than you were?

A. I do not know.

Q. Did you ever make any inquiry about that?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Do you know whether he was getting more than you were?

A. No, I do not.

Q. It might have been that he was getting less, for all you know?

A. I am quite sure he wasn't, but I do not know.

235 Q. And your next raise was—how long were you at 62½ cents an hour? Where you did not know that?

A. I think I told you this morning that I got a raise sometime during the balance of the year 1935, probably in the late fall.

Q. There was a period of several months, then, when you were working at 62½ cents an hour and you did not know whether or not your foremen were paid at a higher rate than you were?

A. I said I never asked him.

Q. You did not know then, did you?

A. No, I did not know.

Q. When did you get your advance of five cents to 75 cents an hour?

A. I think the Company came out with a $6.00 day basic, somewhere in the latter part of 1935 and that is when we got our increase.

Q. At that time, was your foreman getting more than you were, 75 cents an hour?

A. I presume he was.

Q. But you do not know?

A. No.

Q. How long were you at 75 cents an hour?

A. Mr. Donovan, I answered this morning that if you want me to get the dates, I could get them. I do not know them. You said that you did not want them 236 and now you are asking the same questions over again.

Q. You were pretty good on details of the early formation of the Foreman's Association of America and your part in it while you were in Ford's. Are you able to give us any idea of approximately how many months or what the period was approximately when you were on 75 cents an hour?

A. I do not know how many months it was. I told you that I was up to $1.65 an hour.

Q. We will get to that in a minute. Whatever period it was you were on at 75 cents an hour you do not know what differential was maintained by that Company between you, a worker, and the foreman over you?

A. No, I do not.

Q. They may have or may not have had a differential as far as you know?

A. As far as I know, that could be the fact.

Q. What was your next raise from 75 cents? To what?

A. To 80 cents.

Q. Do you remember what year that occurred?

A. No, I am sorry, I do not.

Q. That would be sometime in 1936, would it?

A. Probably.

Q. When you were getting 80 cents an hour, how much more than you was your foreman getting?

A. I do not know.

237 Q. You do not know whether he was getting more than you were?

A. No, but I can find out for you.

Q. You do not know now and did not then, apparently?

A. No, I do not and I didn't.

Q. From 80 cents—How long were you at the 80 cents an hour rate?

A. Oh, several months.

Q. Then you went to what rate?

A. 85 cents.

Q. How long were you at 85 cents?

A. Several months.

Q. That would bring you up to around 1937 or 1938, now?

A. The only increase I ever got which was more than five cents was—

Q. I am asking you only about this increase. You are up to 85 cents an hour now?

A. That is right.

Q. Sometime in 1938, would you say?

A. Possibly.

Q. Well, at 85 cents an hour, how much more than you was your foreman getting?

A. I do not know.

Q. What was your next raise?

A. A nickel, I believe.

238 Q. Now, you are at 90 cents. Do you know, when you were at 90 cents, whether or not your foreman was being paid more than you received as a worker at 90 cents?

A. No.

Q. Did you subsequently get another raise to 95 cents an hour?

A. I believe so, yes.

Q. That was your next raise?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you still ignorant as to what your foreman under whom you worked, received?

A. Right.

Q. Was your next raise to $1.00 an hour?

A. I think so, yes.

Q. Can you tell us about what year you got into the $1.00 an hour rate?

A. I am only making a guess, but it would be about 1940, I would say.

Q. Did you still remain in ignorance as to whether or not your foreman in particular was receiving more than you as a worker under him received?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you subsequently get raised to, I think—you said—you are in 1940 now?

A. Yes.

239 Q. Did you subsequently get raised in 1940 to $1.05 an hour?

A. I did.

Q. Did you still remain in ignorance as to whether or not your foreman was getting more than you as a worker under him was getting?

A. That is right.

Q. Would that bring you up to 1941?

A. I think I got four raises in 1940 up to $1.20.

Q. During 1941 you went up to $1.20?

A. I think I did.

Q. Do you know whether or not your foreman had anything to do with recommending those raises?

A. I wasn't under the same foreman all this time but some of them were recommended, yes.

Q. By your foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you think his recommendation was sound?

A. Yes, I think so.

Q. You think you merited it?

A. Yes.

Q. Were there some men in the department who did not receive recommendations for raises such as you did at the same time?

A. I do not know.

240 Q. You do not know?

A. No.

Q. You wouldn't say that they all received a raise at the same time you were recommended for your raise, though? You are not claiming that, are you?

A. No, I don't know, I said.

Q. You believe, then, in your own individual case, where the foreman recommended you for these raises, that you felt that you had earned it and that he had used good judgment, did you not?

A. In each case where he recommended it for me individually, I thought I earned it although I did not always get it.

Q. At the end of 1941 you were at $1.20 and in 1942 you got more raises?

A. No, not 1941. I said 1940.

Q. At the end of that year?

A. I said I think in 1940 I got four raises, bringing me up to $1.20.

Q. That is what I understood. Then you got more raises in 1941, didn't you?

A. Yes, I went up to $1.65 when they moved me to the Aircraft Building.

Q. In 1941, by successive stages, from $1.20, you went to $1.65, is that right?

A. No.

241 Q. I thought that is what you just said.

A. I said I was paid $1.65. I making $1.20 approximately at the end of 1940 but when the UAW signed the contract with the Ford Motor Company and established their new wage scales, Ford Motor Company had to give me 45 cents an hour in one lump sum more to bring me up a nickel more than the men I was supervising.

Q. When did you become a foreman, as between 1940 and 1941?

A. When did I become a foreman?

Q. Yes.

A. I have been a foreman all the time you have been talking about here, ever since the first six months.

Q. You testified you did not go in as a foreman.

A. No, I was on the job about six months when they asked me to be a straw boss.

Q. Well, you do not object to giving us now the date when you became a foreman, do you?

A. No.

Q. Well, when was it?

A. I thought it was in the summer of 1935, somewhere in the month of May. That's when they asked me if I would be a straw boss. Later on, the records showed they had not reported me as a foreman and hadn't until 242 sometime later. I will say I was acting in the capacity of a supervisory employee after the first six months of my employment, up to the time I left.

Q. When did you, in your own mind, first become a foreman?

A. In 1935.

Q. But you seem to be unwilling to grant yourself the full status of a foreman? It was only some sort of paper affair. What is the truth about that?

A. Well, they told me I was to be a foreman and I took their word for it.

Q. Did you do a foreman's job from that time on?

A. I supervised other employees, yes.

Q. And you gave them the directions as you testified this morning?

A. I did.

Q. Between then and the end of 1941 you were receiving $1.65 an hour?

A. And five cents for nights, when I was on the night shift.

Q. Five cents an hour night bonus?

A. Yes.

Q. You were undoubtedly, then, in your own mind, a regular foreman, were you not?

243 A. That's right.

Q. How much more were you receiving as a regular foreman than the workers under you at the time?

A. At the time I left, do you have reference to?

Q. 1941. Any time in 1941.

A. Well, there was a time when I was making less. That's when they paid off the UAW workers under their contract, but they immediately, within the following pay or two—as I stated, I got 45 cents, a forty-five cent raise and it was made retroactive to the date of the other employees and that gave me, I think, a fifteen cent differential above them.

Q. And about what time, now, did that take place, the fifteen cent differential?

A. Well, that would be—when they made the payoff in the early part of 1941—

Q. (Interposing) Just approximately, Mr. Keys.

A. Well, it was in the summer of 1941, somewhere in the Spring.

Q. So that, by the time—

A. (Interposing) No, I beg your pardon, it was following the signing of the contract with the UAW, so it would have to be after June because that was signed in June. It was in the fall of 1941.

244 Q. So at least by the Fall of 1941 you know that as a foreman you were on the basis of fifteen cents—or fifteen percent, did you say—above the workers under you?

A. I said I thought I was making a fifteen cent differential at that time.

Q. You are not sure of that, though?

A. No, I don't recall what the highest paid employee under my supervision was getting at that time.

Q. What was the differential situation in 1941 at the Ford Plant? I am speaking now as between workers and foremen.

A. Well, some foremen were making as little as a nickel more. We had some cases who were making the same; some who were making less and a few who had made ten, fifteen and possibly up as high as 25 cents more.

Q. In your judgment—I am asking you as of the present time now—should there be a differential between the foremen and the workers under them in favor of the foremen?

A. Definitely, yes.

Q. You feel quite positive about that, do you?

A. I do.

Q. And about where do you think that ought to be?

A. It depends on the classification of the foreman and the rates of pay of the people under his supervision.

Q. Well, could you illustrate by giving us sample-
245 differentials that would have your approval?

A. I think the first step in any instance should be at least 25 cents an hour.

Q. Up to as high as a differential of what an hour?

A. I would like to see a dollar. I don't know of any that go that high.

Q. Why do you think foremen receive such a marked differential in pay as between themselves and the workers under them?

A. Because they are employed to supervise and take on certain responsibilities that the other people do not take on.

Q. And they are called upon to exercise judgment that the workers do not have to exercise, among other things?

A. That's right.

Q. As you say, they assume responsibilities that the workers with their hands do not have to assume?

A. Yes, the individual worker working on a machine is only responsible for that one machine. The foreman is responsible for all the machines under his supervision.

Q. He is also responsible for the other things that we went over this morning in detail, is he not?

A. I don't recall all we went over this morning, but he is responsible for seeing that the work is produced.

Q. You recall we enumerated a rather long list
246 which you apparently admitted were the foreman's job and were up to him. Do you recall that?

A. Yes, I recall some of it. I don't recall every detail.

Q. Now, Mr. Keys, would you give me at this place in the record again the date when the Foreman's Association was officially organized?

A. Well, we started to organize in August of 1941. The first meeting and first official election of officers and adoption of constitution was November 2, 1941.

Q. Prior to that time, had there been any strikes of foremen in the Detroit area that you know of?

A. Not that I know of. They couldn't strike; they were unorganized.

Mr. Donovan: I will ask that that be stricken out as unresponsive, Mr. Trial Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think it may stay.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Now, Mr. Keys, you have approximately 32,000 members?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have a membership in Wayne County?

A. Yes, we have members in Wayne County.

Q. That is right, and in what other counties in Michigan?

A. Well, that would be rather difficult for me to give you without checking our records.

247 Q. Do you have them in Genessee?

A. I imagine so; I couldn't say for a certainty.

Q. Well, is your principal membership here in Wayne County?

A. I would say yes.

Q. And in Oakland County?

A. Yes, in the Metropolitan Area.

Q. In the Industrial Metropolitan Area?

A. Yes, mainly.

Q. You also have membership in other states, do you not?

A. Yes.

Q. What states, for instance?

A. Well, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, and Alabama, California. There are 17 states all told.

Q. Seventeen states all told?

A. Yes.

Q. Has the Foreman's Association of America today any contracts in existence excepting the two that you mentioned, the Ford Motor Car Company and the United Stove Company?

A. No.

Q. How many members, approximately, does the United Stove Company have?

A. Members?

Q. How many employees, rather, does the United 248 Stove Company have?

A. At the present time, they have, I think, around 300.

Q. And how many foremen?

A. At the present time, they have around ten or eleven.

Q. Now, when you were giving us a list of the — as I assume you intended to do in your prior showing in this particular case — do you recall the mention of the strikes that had occurred at Ford's since the FAA obtained its contract?

A. Yes. I talked about them.

Q. Do you recall how many you mentioned?

A. Two that we considered as strikes and one we didn't consider as a strike.

Q. That is my recollection also, Mr. Keys. You enumerated three, one of which you questioned as to whether or not it was really a strike.

A. That is right, they didn't leave the building or anything like that.

Q. Although you do admit that the Press so considered it and so reported it in the Press as a strike?

A. That is true.

Q. Could you give me the dates of those, Mr. Keys, or could you refresh your recollection?

A. I discussed one strike on October 16, 1944; one on November 16, 1944 —

249 Q. (Interposing) Just a minute, now. Not so fast, please.

A. November 16, 1944, and the incident we didn't consider a strike. I didn't know the date and assumed it was somewhere in the latter part of July.

Q. Of 1944?

A. Of 1944.

Q. As a matter of fact, on June 21, 1943, did you not have a foreman's strike?

A. Yes, I told you about that one, but we are talking about strikes after the contract now; not prior to the contract.

Q. In June, 1943, the foremen were engaged in organizing, were they not?

A. Yes, and there was a strike that I described but that was prior to the contract.

Q. I am not disputing you there, Mr. Keys. Your contract date was what, Mr. Keys?

A. May 9th, 1944.

Q. Your contract date was May 9, 1944?

A. That is right.

Q. You would have some sort — you did have some sort of agreement, though, with them antedating that, did you not?

A. Yes, November 5, 1942, the Wage and Classification Agreement.

250 Q. You had a Wage and Classification agreement with them?

A. That is right.

Q. And you had strikes during 1943, did you not?

A. Yes, the strikes I mentioned in my testimony.

Q. You had one on June 21, involving 2700 foremen, did you not?

A. (No response.)

Q. You do not remember that one?

A. I don't remember having stipulated the number, but I can tell you very shortly.

Q. I am not especially interested in the number. If you do not recall the number, you do recall the event, do you?

A. You are talking about June 21, 1943?

Q. That is right.

A. Yes, I stated that about 2,000 walked out.

Q. Do you recall that there was a strike on June 26, 1943?

A. No, I do not.

Q. And that the Free Press, on that date, reported a strike at the Ford Plant or the foremen?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Do you recall any strike — and I wish you would answer the question whether or not you used the term "work stoppages" or "strike" — on October, rather, on August 6, 1943?

251 A. I did not describe any incident as a strike on that date.

Q. I know you did not. I am asking you if you now recall it?

A. That is probably the one I couldn't recall the date of it in the Pressed Steel Building.

Q. In the Pressed Steel Building?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall one on December 3rd, 1943?

A. No.

Q. That is one you do not recall?

A. December 3, 1943?

Q. That is right.

A. No, I do not.

Q. Do you recall one on December 6, 1943?

Mr. Nelson: Where? At Ford's?

The Witness: I presume you are talking about the Ford Motor Company?

Mr. Donovan: That is right. I think the witness so understands.

The Witness: Will you give me that date again?

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) December 6, 1943.

A. December 6, 1943? No, I do not recall any.

Q. Do you recall one as of February 25 and 26, 1944?

A. February 25th and 26th?

252 Q. Yes, of 1944.

A. Of 1944?

Q. That is right, involving 600 foremen.

A. No, I don't recall it.

Q. You do not recall that one?

A. No.

Q. You do recall one as of December 21 and 22 of 1943, though, do you not?

A. I testified that there was a strike on June 19th of 800 foremen walking out and a mass meeting was held on June 22nd; that they went back to work on June 23rd and on June 24th they walked out again. To the best of my recollection, and according to our records, those are the facts.

Q. The last date I asked you about was December 22nd and December 21, 1943.

A. And I said I do not recall it. Oh, I stated in my testimony there was a strike on December 21 at the Bomber Plant.

Q. That was my recollection, Mr. Keys. Now, you do recall that strike?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Mr. Keys, have you ever read the publication of the United States Department of Labor Division of Labor Standards, Bulletin Number 66, issued in 1944, entitled, "The Foreman's Guide to Labor Relations"?

253 A. No, I never have. I had a copy of it mailed to me and I intended to read it, but I never have yet.

Q. Do you recall the pamphlet I hold in my hand, as such?

A. It looks like it, yes.

Q. Have you read that pamphlet?

A. No, I haven't.

Q. I wish you would tell me whether or not you will agree with certain statements made with reference to foremen in this bulletin of the United States Department of Labor. Among other things, it stated in this bulletin as follows, under the heading of "Foremen's Responsibility" on page 3:

"The foreman is the operating executive of Management."

Do you agree or disagree with that statement of the Bureau?

A. I disagree with it.

Q. It is also stated on that page that:

"You are the initial contact for workers and shop stewards."

Do you agree or disagree with that?

A. I disagree with it, to the extent that it is provided in the contracts for that to be the initial stage.

Q. Do you agree with this statement:

"The workers' opinion of a company is often formed largely on the basis of the employee's impression created by your statements and actions."

254 Do you agree with that?

A. I would agree with that.

Q. On page 12, the statement is made as follows, under the heading of the "Foreman and the Shop Steward":

"It goes without saying that you" (meaning the foreman) "are the department executive."

Do you or do you not agree with that?

A. I do not agree with it.

Q. You do not agree with it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you agree with this statement on page 10:

"It goes without saying that the foreman's primary responsibility is to protect the interests and rights of Management."

A. Would you read that again.

(Record read by the Reporter as follows:

"It goes without saying that the foreman's primary responsibility is to protect the interests and rights of Management.")

A. Protect the rights and interests of Management? No.

Q. Do you agree with this statement on pages 7 and 8, this is under the heading of the discussion of the National Labor Relations Act in the Foreman's Guide as published by the Department of Labor in its Bulletin Number 60:

"This brings us to one of the most important 255 points to be remembered in connection with the National Labor Relations Act. This law was never intended to restrict the foreman's freedom in the exercise of his supervisory responsibilities."

Do you or do you not agree with that?

A. Yes, I would agree with it.

Q. Now, Mr. Keys, you said earlier in the examination, I believe it was this morning, that the only support you received from the CIO—I mean by "you" the Foreman's Association of America—in your strikes and other activities was a moral support. Do you recall that?

A. Yes, I said I knew we had no written or verbal affiliations whatsoever.

Q. And you say you do not receive cooperation from the CIO on the occasions of strikes and other occasions?

A. Well, we receive cooperation to the extent that the humane interest involved is affected. Certainly, they feel sorry for us and give us moral support, I suppose.

Q. You say they worked hard for you?

A. I didn't say they worked for us at all. I didn't say anything like that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Would you read a couple of answers back?

(Last two answers read.)

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Mr. Keys, during your organi-
256 zational efforts in 1943, the Michigan State CIO Council issued a very effective bulletin on behalf of the Foreman's Association.

A. Not for us. They passed it around and mailed me a copy.

Q. And among other things, it calls the public's attention by resolution to the claims of discrimination by the foremen, did it not?

A. It did.

Q. And it said that this Convention of the Michigan CIO State Council can go on record to assist them in their fight to obtain bargaining rights and other rights established by the Wagner Act, did it not?

A. It did.

Q. It further indicated that copies of that resolution of the CIO had been sent to R. J. Thomas and Philip Murray and the Foreman's Association of America?

A. It did.

Q. And you recall, likewise, do you not—and to refresh your recollection, do you recall the former witness McNally, who testified and was examined by you in the War Labor Board case?

A. Yes, I recall Mr. McNally.

Q. And he testified as to the distribution of a circular by the CIO at Murray's on behalf of the activities
257 of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. I don't recall his testimony, but if you say he said it, why, you must have taken it from the record.

Q. Do you recall that there was a bulletin issued which Mr. McNally recognized and admitted was the CIO dodger in question issued on behalf of the Foreman's Association?

A. No, I don't recall it. I know there was some discussion about a bulletin having been distributed by someone and there was some discussion about who printed it.

Q. You do not recall the witness McNally being shown this pamphlet in question, which was marked Exhibit 32 in that case?

A. Yes, I recall that.

Q. And it was shown to him and it was read into the record?

A. I recall it was shown to him. I can't recall his testimony.

Q. You do not recall anything about the contents of that CIO publication on behalf of the Foreman's Association now?

A. I think it was something about supporting the foremen in their fight for recognition for collective bargaining, something like that. I recall that much of it.

Q. And it was addressed to the Murray-Ecorse foremen, was it not?

A. I believe it was.

258 Q. And it said to them, in effect, "You know we won't let you down and we pledge that we will not let you down in disputes you may have in the future" or words to that effect?

A. Well, if you would let me read it, Mr. Donovan, then I could answer your questions yes or no. I don't recall the contents of it.

Q. All right, here it is, Mr. Keys. Do you recall it now?

A. Yes, I recall it now.

Q. Do you recall now the CIO statement in your behalf that the history of unionism—I am quoting here:

"The history of unionism at the Ecorse plant of the Murray Corporation of America is such that it has been one of the most outstanding in mass production industries. Many of the men who made possible the outstanding record at the Murray Ecorse plant have since left and are employed elsewhere. And in their place other persons have come in. We have every reason to believe that these newer employees will perpetuate the traditions which their earlier fellow unionists established. The unity which has existed at the Murray Ecorse plant existed because these employees were willing to sacrifice themselves in order to help their fellow unionists.

"Now the time has arrived when the long standing 259 record of unionism at the Murray Ecorse plant is being seriously tested. The Murray Corporation of America is and has been attempting by all means to destroy the union which your foremen have created. Are You as a Union Person Going to Permit the Destruction of Your Foremen's Union? With your cooperation your foremen will succeed in their struggle for contract rights such as you enjoy. You will be enticed and pressured by the Murray Corporation to weaken the position of the foremen's union. Will You as a Union Person Be Tempted?

"Labor unions up until the formation of the Foreman's Association of America have always had the threat of foremen who would employ scabs demanded when to do so by management in order to weaken the position of a labor union. Since the founding of the Foreman's Association of America labor no longer need worry of foremen who are members of the Foreman's Association of America placing scabs in the jobs of workers who are idle because of a labor dispute."

You now recall this, do you not?

260 Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Do you now recall this circular?

A. I recall the circular having been introduced at the War Labor Board hearing but I do not recall what the testimony about it was.

Q. Do you know whether or not the CIO in writing this language that I now quote,—do you know what it meant, whether it was referring to the dispute between the foremen and management or not? Just give me your own understanding of it. (Reading):

"We, the Murray Ecorse foremen, know you won't let us down, and pledge that we will not let you down in disputes which you may have in the future."

Did that refer, in your opinion, to your disputes between the foremen and management?

A. First, I do not know whether the CIO published it or not, I do not know who published it, and second, I have no way of knowing what they were thinking and what they intended when they wrote it.

Q. Then you say you do not know what it means?

A. I don't know what it means.

Q. You were having disputes with management, weren't you?

A. Not I, the Foreman's Association of America was having disputes, yes.

Q. You were asking for recognition of collective bargaining and you were having disputes with com-261 panies about refusal to bargain collectively with the foremen?

A. That is true.

Q. And you were engaged in strengthening your organization and perfecting it, at or around this time, were you not?

A. At all times, yes.

Q. And you are still engaged in those efforts, are you not?

A. That is true.

Mr. Donovan: May we have a recess?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, we will have a ten-minute recess. Gentlemen, please come back on time.

(At this point a short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will be in order, gentlemen.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Mr. Keys, do you recall the fact that in Chicago at the Dodge plant, they had a so-called—perhaps I should not say so-called—they had a CIO paper called the "Dodge Victory News"?

A. No, I do not.

Q. It is a publication?

A. No, I do not.

Q. And that Mr. Thomas at or around March 24, 1944 issued a statement in large bracket type in that CIO organ with reference to foremen entitled "Flash! Foremen Organize"?

A. I have read similar articles in various publications, but I do not know what the names of them are, off-hand.

262 Q. I show you a copy of this article of Mr. Thomas and ask you to refresh your recollection. Will you look at it and recall whether or not this was introduced as an exhibit in the foremen's panel case and read into the record? Will you read it and see if you can refresh your recollection on it?

A. It sounds familiar but I do not recall where I heard it or read it. It could have been at the War Labor Board proceeding.

Q. You do not recall the Chrysler counsel introducing this statement in evidence and reading it into the record?

A. I recall that he did read a statement.

Q. And do you recall that it was a statement of R. J. Thomas with reference to the organization of the foremen?

A. It seems to me it was. I am not definite on it. It seems to me that it was.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You are not sure, Mr. Keys, whether the clipping just shown you was the one?

The Witness: No, I am not positive.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Do you recall whether or not Mr. Thomas publicly welcomed the organization of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. I do not know whether he did or not.

Q. You do not recall this article having been read into the record in the foremen's panel case?

263 A. I recall an article that was read and that one you have just shown me sounds familiar when I read it but I could not say definitely that I am positive that that is it.

Q. Do you recall the language in this article as follows:

"Welcome, Foreman's Association of America! For the benefit of foremen who have not got the inside dope here it is—"

Trial Examiner Jaffee (Interposing): You have shown it to the witness and he has said that he does not recall definitely that that is the one. What, therefore, is to be gained by reading from it and asking about the facts contained therein?

Mr. Donovan: He seems to have a fair recollection of it. Enough so that if I asked him whether he recalls these statements as made by Mr. Thomas, President of the UAW-CIO—he ought to be able to definitely affirm or deny them.

Mr. Nelson: The trouble with it is that at the most we have only a press report. That evades getting anybody that knows what was said. I object to it because it is pure hearsay. Mr. Keys and the Association are obviously in nowise responsible for any printing that Mr. Thomas or any other officer of organized labor may have of the Foreman organization. It is of interest to us but I 264 do not see how, Mr. Examiner, we can be bound by it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think Mr. Donovan has another purpose in mind.

Mr. Donovan: Am I permitted to finish the question I wish to ask him?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Finish the question.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): (Reading):

"Welcome, Foreman's Association of America! For the benefit of the foremen who haven't got the inside dope, here it is. The first general get-together of this International Association will be held at 2 P. M. Sunday, March 26, 1944, at Nielsen's—78000 South Western Avenue. Liquid refreshments will be served and there will also be a delicious Smorgasbord. On the program for that meeting is the signing of the charter, acceptance of new members, a short talk by an International representative of the Foreman's Association on foremen's problems in Chrysler plants and arranging of a social program for the spring season. There will be over 200 foremen and general foremen in attendance and any foreman who is interested is invited to attend. The initiation fees and dues are the same as our own UAW-CIO—$2.00 initiation fee and $1.00 per month dues.

We, of the UAW-CIO, watch the organizing of this 265 group with interest, as we know if the foremen are organized they will be better equipped to understand our problems and the principles and facts of grievance procedure through Union negotiation."

You do not recall that information or that testimony having been read into the record in the foremen's panel case, Mr. Keys, or do you?

A. Without going over the transcript I could not say. I do not recall it but I do recall a pamphlet was read or a bulletin or something like it, I do not recall.

Q. If I told you that that was introduced as a page from the CIO Dodge Victory News, the issue of March 24, 1944 in Chicago, the Dodge Chicago plant, would that assist your recollection any?

Mr. Nelson: My objection to that question, Mr. Examiner, is that it would not make any difference. He cannot establish a document by showing that it was introduced in evidence in some other proceeding before some other tribunal. He is bound now by what the witness answers. By all the rules of evidence and what is fair he is bound by the witness' answers. The witness has already answered that he does not know as to the authenticity of it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The immediate question is whether or not the witness recollects or is refreshed 266 by counsel's statement. He may answer as to that.

Mr. Nelson: Suppose it was, Mr. Examiner, at most he would show it was offered in some other proceeding.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I understand.

Mr. Nelson: That would not qualify it in this proceeding.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We can only go one step at a time. Would it refresh your recollection?

The Witness: No.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): You do not know whether or not R. J. Thomas, President of the UAW-CIO, ever encouraged or cooperated with the Foreman's Association of America in its organizational efforts?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever talk to Mr. Thomas?

A. Yes, many times.

Q. About the Foreman's Association of America?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever talk to anybody else connected with the CIO—the high officials in the CIO about the Foreman's Association of America?

A. Yes.

Q. And you never received any assurances of welcome and cooperation such as that contained in this article I read you and which you say you do not remember?
267 A. All I ever received is that they thought our movements were right in principle and that we would have their moral support, that is all.

Q. And that is the extent of your cooperation from the CIO, as I believe you said this morning?

A. To my knowledge, yes.

Q. Well, you would be pretty apt to know about that as president of the Foreman's Association of America, wouldn't you?

A. I would, yes.

Q. You recognize the CIO as a powerful, strong union, do you not, Mr. Keys?

A. I do.

Q. As a matter of fact, they hold the production contract in practically all the industries and companies in Detroit in which the Foreman's Association of America have sought to enter an organization, isn't that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Isn't it true that a great many of the foremen in your Association have come up through the CIO ranks and file of production workers?

A. That is right.

Q. In this area?

A. That is true.

Q. And have had experience with CIO Union methods?

268 A. That is true.

Q. Now, in the summer of 1943, didn't you go down to Cleveland to confer with CIO high officials?

A. I did.

Q. And that included R. J. Thomas, did it not?

A. It did.

Q. And Mr. Phillip Murray?

A. It did.

Q. And you discussed Foreman Association of America affairs with those gentlemen at that time, did you not?

A. I did.

Q. At the Hotel Statler?

A. Right.

Q. And you still say you received no assurances of cooperation or encouragement?

A. Only their moral support.

Q. Wasn't it shortly after that that the CIO announced, within your knowledge, that they would—if anyone started fussing around with any organization—started fussing around or interfering with the Foreman's Association of America that the CIO would take them over?

A. I never heard such a statement and I never read such a statement.

Q. You never heard that?

269 A. I was told by people whom you have mentioned in Cleveland that if we had any strikes and put up a picket line they would cross them and not pay any attention to them. That is the kind of support we got. If that is what you want to know.

Q. Wasn't it a short time after that meeting also that the CIO announced that they would not permit any CIO rank and file member to be made a foreman during the strike of the Foreman's Association or while such strike was in progress?

A. I read such a statement in the newspapers in this town, yes.

Q. And the only information you got from the CIO on its cooperation with the Foreman's Association of America was from the newspapers, is that right?

A. The only cooperation we got?

Q. The only knowledge you had of the CIO on cooperation with the Foreman's Association of America was what you read in the newspapers, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And you do not know very much about their cooperation in the April and May strikes of the Foreman's Association of America here, do you?

A. Not unless you describe the cooperation. I do not know what you have reference to.

270 Q. Well, I want to ask you a little more about that shortly. As a matter of fact, Mr. Keys, do you recall that you had a War Labor Board hearing January 6, 1944? That is, I mean by "you" the Foreman's Association of America.

A. In Washington?

Q. Yes.

A. I recall that.

Q. And do you recall that from January 13th to the 21st you had a series of strikes by the Foreman's Association of America at the Chrysler plants?

A. I recall the series of strikes. I am not positive of the dates.

Q. And do you recall during the hearing of the Foreman's case before the War Labor Board panel of reminding Mr. Iserman, the Chrysler counsel,—I think I can quote your words exactly: "Don't forget, Mr. Iserman, that we had eight more plants go out of Chrysler plant—of foremen in Chrysler plant." Then Mr. Iserman said, "Yes, are you proud of it?" and you said, "No." Do you recall that?

A. No.

Q. You don't remember that testimony?

A. No. Where did that testimony take place? I never testified before the Board. Mr. Nelson testified.

271 Q. Now, you were sitting in the chair here that corresponds to the chair that the Board counsel occupies and Mr. Iserman was addressing the War Labor Board panel and you interrupted him with the interjection "Don't forget, Mr. Iserman, we had eight other Chrysler plants out," meaning the Foreman's Association of America, and Mr. Iserman said, "Yes, that is right, are you proud of it?" And you said, "No." You do not recall that at all?

A. Is that in the record?

Q. For your information it is in the record, Mr. Keys.

A. I do not recall the statement. If it is in the record I said it.

Q. If it was shown to you you would not deny it, would you?

A. I would not deny it if it is in the record, no.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, when the foremen staged a strike—take for instance the series of strikes that took place in the Briggs, Hudson, Packard, Gar Wood, and Aeronautical Products and the strikes that were mentioned in the War Labor Board hearing here,—as a matter of fact, it was quite helpful to the objective of the Foreman's Association of America, was it not, during those strikes, to have the CIO refuse to allow a CIO rank and file member to be made a foreman? Wasn't that an advantage to the Foreman's Association of America who were on strike?

A. Yes, I would say it would be.

272 Q. It would tend to keep more foremen from functioning for the Company, would it not?

A. Well,—

Mr. Nelson: May I hear the question, please?

The Witness: I did not quite get the question. I am sorry.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Read the question.

(Question read.)

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): For the Company in the strike?

A. You are referring to the rank and file workers refusing to take foremen's jobs?

Q. Not permitted to by the CIO?

A. Naturally it would.

Q. There were a lot of your foremen out on strike in the plants I mentioned in April and May?

A. Yes, a lot of them.

Q. And there was a need, naturally, on the part of management; for foremen at that time, was there not?

A. I imagine there was. They have them on the job the rest of the time.

Q. And if you could get the rest or enough of the foremen out of one of those plants you could eventually close the plant, as far operation was concerned, isn't that right?

A. That is true.

273 Q. As a matter of fact, you did close some of them, didn't you?

A. We did.

Q. And among others you closed the Milwaukee plant of the Briggs Manufacturing Company, did you not?

A. I believe so. I do not recall whether that was one shut down or not.

Q. Do you recall what the Milwaukee plant of the Briggs Manufacturing Company was making at that time?

A. No, I do not, but it was war material of some kind, I believe.

Q. You do not recall the fact that they were making a plane that the Navy was in urgent need of at that time?

A. No, I do not.

Q. You do not recall having told one of the Briggs Manufacturing Company superintendents that that was a hot plant and that you were going to close it down to get the attention of the War Labor Board?

A. I do not recall it, I never said it.

Q. As a matter of fact, your action — the action of the Foreman's Association of America in those April and May strikes, did get the attention of the War Labor Board, did they not?

A. Eventually. Several months after the men were back at work.

274 Q. Well, on May 8, 1944 there was a decision of the National War Labor Board in the Soss case which gave the Foreman's Association of America some encouragement, you remember that?

A. I remember the decision. I went down and argued the case and we felt it was a right decision for the Board to make. That is one of the reasons we had this petition filed at present time.

Q. On May 18, 1944, following your strike — by the way, when did those strikes end which we have been talking about last spring in Detroit?

A. If you want dates I will give them to you.

Q. Well, it was at or around the first week in May, wasn't it?

A. May 17th, 18th and 19th that most of them terminated in those cases.

Q. May 18th, 1944 the National War Labor Board passed a resolution appointing a special panel to consider the foremen's situation, did they not?

A. You have reference to the resolution based on the Jesse Friedin opinion?

Q. I have reference to what I said. The resolution of the War Labor Board appointing a special panel, to consider the problems and the situation of the Foreman's Association of America?

275 A. Yes, they adopted a resolution based on the Chrysler strike of a previous date and not the strikes you have reference to.

Q. As a matter of fact, such a panel was appointed and came to Detroit and held extended hearings?

A. That is right.

Q. At which you presented the case for the Foreman's Association of America?

A. That is right.

Q. So you did succeed in getting the attention of the governmental agency in question, Mr. Keys, did you not?

A. Yes, they took jurisdiction. Under the War Labor Board Dispute Act they had no alternative. That is what they were established for.

Q. One of the reasons you stated those strikes was to compel some act by the War Labor Board to further your organizational efforts?

A. No.

Q. And your Union objectives?

A. Our Union objectives, yes.

Q. And they were collective bargaining and recognition?

A. Recognition and collective bargaining and grievance machinery, which, of course, goes with it.

Q. And you had hoped to obtain among other things your objectives, in staging these strikes — and that 276 is to obtain a certain degree of publicity, has it not?

A. No, sir.

Q. For the furtherance of your Union objectives?

A. No, sir. I wish we hadn't had a lot of publicity.

Mr. Donovan: Will you mark that as Company's Exhibit 2?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Board's Exhibit No. 2 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Did you in July, 1944 have a publication of the Foreman's Association of America known as "The Supervisor"?

A. Yes, we have had that since we established our organization.

Q. Did you from time to time contribute articles in that publication?

A. I did.

Q. Didn't you have an article in Volume III, No. 5 of July, 1944 which contained the following statement, and

I quote: "The truth will out," by Robert H. Keys? This article is under the heading "The Voice of Organized Foremen."

I am now quoting from your article:

"When thousands of the members of our Association walked off the job recently in some plants in this area, we organized foremen received nationwide 277 publicity."

Did you make that statement?

A. Yes, and we did receive it.

Q. And it inured to the benefit of your Union objectives, didn't it?

A. No, I do not think so.

Q. Then why were bragging about the publicity in this connection?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just a minute. He did not say that he was bragging about it.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Why did you state that?

A. I made a statement of fact. Mr. Donovan, I am used to making statements of fact.

Q. And you did it with no idea that the closing of the plants making Navy planes would have anything to do with your ability to attract the War Labor Board's attention for some action in favor of foremen?

A. That was a very long question and I did not follow it. Would you read it back to me, please, Mr. Reporter?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Read the question, please.

(Question read.)

The Witness: We were not attempting to attract the War Labor Board's attention. The answer is no.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): You were not trying to attract the attention of the War Labor Board?

278 A. No, the strike was not.

Q. As a matter of fact, wasn't it these strikes that did attract the attention of the War Labor Board and give you concessions which resulted in your calling the strike off?

A. Mr. Donovan. I cannot speak for the Board. I suggest you ask them.

Q. Did they ever ask you to call these strikes off?

A. Yes, they asked us to call them off.

Q. And you did that?

A. We did.

Q. Under what conditions?

A. To go back to work and that they would consider the situation.

Q. They would consider the situation? After that they appointed a panel, didn't they?

A. Yes, after that they did.

Q. And you had a hearing lasting some two months or better before the panel?

A. That is right.

Q. And that panel is still considering the situation of the Foreman's Association of America and its membership?

A. I presume it is. I never heard anything from it.

Q. You know that that is the case and that it has not been decided and that no report of recommendations 279 has been issued as yet, don't you, Mr. Keys?

A. I have no knowledge of it if it has.

Q. Don't you want to make the fair statement, which we all know, that it is still pending and undecided?

A. I presume it is but I have never heard a word since the closing of the case.

Q. Then, so far as you know it is still pending and undecided?

A. Yes, so far as I know it is still pending and undecided.

Q. Didn't you, shortly after this trip of yours to Washington, announce that you had gained what you had gained by the strikes and your actions in staging them? Among other things that you had obtained the appointment of this War Labor Board Panel and the contract at Ford's and the right to present grievances to the National Labor Relations Board? Did you ever make any statement like that?

A. The contract was not the result of those strikes. I wouldn't make such a statement about that contract. I may have made the statement that we had a contract, and I do not deny that I made the statement that we had made some gains as an organization. We have made gains. We would certainly be a very poor organization if we didn't.

280 Q. Mr. Keys, going back to this pamphlet which I questioned you about a few minutes ago and which Mr. McNally, one of your former witnesses, identified at the War Labor Board Panel hearing, I wish to refresh your recollection now a little further by some questions and answers wherein Mr. McNally was being questioned, and see if you can now give us a better recollection than you were able to before. This pamphlet that you were shown and which you read had been marked in that proceeding as Murray Exhibit No. 32, and these questions were asked of Foreman McNally:

"Q. I will show you a photostat copy of pamphlet marked Murray Exhibit No. 32, and ask you if you have ever seen a pamphlet of that kind before?

"A. I think I have.

"Q. And wasn't that pamphlet handed out by members of the Foreman's Association to production workers of the Murray Corporation, at the Ecorse plant, during that strike, around July 6th or 7th, 1943?

"A. If I remember correctly, that was handed out not only by foremen; it was handed out by workers, too.

"Q. It was handed out by workers, too?

"A. I believe it was.

"Q. In other words, the foremen of the Murray plant handed it out and production workers handed it out?

"A. I believe that's the way it was.

281 "Q. And when we are talking about production workers, we are talking about Local 2, UAW-CIO production workers, are we not?"

Do you recall any of that testimony, Mr. Keys, with respect to this Dodger or pamphlet now?

A. Yes, I think I do. If you are reading from the record, that must be the testimony, and I heard it, because I was there.

Q. I am reading from the reporter's record of the Panel hearing of June 28, 1944.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Keys, does the Foreman's Association of America accept into membership a rank and file production worker?

A. No.

Q. Why not?

A. Because he is not a supervisory employee.

Q. And you regard that there is something like a gap between a rank and file production worker and a supervisory employee?

A. No, not a gap.

Q. Well, they are not eligible for membership in your Association, are they?

A. No; neither are we eligible for membership in theirs.

Q. I did not ask you whether you were eligible for 282 membership in theirs. At any rate, you are not taking them in as members?

A. No, because we do not regard them as supervisory employees.

Q. One of the reasons would be that they have entirely different responsibilities than the foremen do, is that not correct?

A. To a great extent, yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Keys, again on his matter of cooperation with the Foreman's Association by the CIO, you know that—well, take the Briggs plant for one. I refer now to the time of the April and May strikes. You recall those strikes, do you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall while the foremen were on strike that the rank and file CIO production employees booed foremen who did not go out?

A. I read it in the newspapers.

Q. And they booed the superintendents?

A. I read it in the newspapers.

Q. And that stock and material was hid so as to impede the work of the foremen still remaining in the plant?

A. I didn't read that and I didn't hear it. It is news to me.

Q. You did not hear that testimony before the War
283 Labor Board Panel?

A. I don't recall it about the stock and material.

Q. You would not dispute it if the record were shown to you, however?

A. I would not.

Q. Do you recall that the rank and file production workers in the Briggs plant — and I now refer to the Mack plant — created such a general pandemonium and disorder, pounding on benches, and what-not, that operations had to be suspended by the Navy Department in that plant?

A. Yes, I recall something of that nature.

Q. And that they even booed the army and navy officers who came to the plant in the performance of their duties?

A. No, I don't recall that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: When you say recall something, do you mean that you recall the testimony or the fact?

A. I recall the fact where I heard it, read it or it was testified to. The way he is asking the questions, Mr. Examiner, he is not confining me to the testimony.

Q. Well, do you believe it happened?

The Witness: I don't know.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, I made this objection before. I do not think this is the proper way to show the 284 facts that Mr. Donovan wants to show. He asks the witness if he remembers this testimony taken before the War Labor Board. I said before, what difference does it make if he remembers the testimony as given. It does not establish a fact at all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, I agree, unless it is the present witness' testimony.

Mr. Nelson: He has never yet said he knew the fact, He has only said he heard it. That cannot establish the fact. It is only the narration of this witness about what somebody else said.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, I understand.

Mr. Nelson: I want to be as liberal as the rules permit but certainly no rules would permit a fact to be established in that manner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Insofar as your present objection applies to whether or not the witness believes it to be a fact, I will sustain the objection.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Now, Mr. Keys, on the strikes that took place in April and May, during that time you were president of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. I was.

Q. And you got reports every day of what was going on?

A. I did.

Q. You met with the presidents and officers of the 285 Foreman's Association Chapters throughout the Detroit metropolitan area during those strikes, did you not?

A. At the National office, yes.

Q. You were frequently conferred with by officers and members of local chapters, were you not?

A. The officers, yes; not so much the members.

Q. Yes, and you were in pretty close touch with what was going on during those strikes, were you not?

A. That's right.

Q. You knew what plants had been closed and when, did you not?

A. I did.

Q. And why?

A. And why what?

Q. And why they were closed?

A. They were closed for lack of supervision.

Q. That was your objective, was it not, to close those plants because of lack of supervision? And by lack of supervision?

A. No.

Q. You did not mean to close any of the plants?

A. We didn't think they would close.

Q. Well, you were hoping you could do it?

A. No. Management always maintained when supervision was out production was maintained at the 286 same level, and we took their word for it.

Q. As a matter of fact, the Briggs plant did maintain its plant at the same level while you were out on strike?

A. I believe so.

Q. And that is why you went to work and intimidated some of those—

A. (Interposing): We didn't intimidate anybody.

Q. And that is why some of them had to stay in the plant for a week at a time, because they were afraid to go home?

A. I don't know why they didn't go home.

Q. And some of them had to move their families out of town?

A. I don't know.

Q. You do not know anything about those things?

A. You said—

Q. (Interposing): Now, all you have to say is yes or no?

A. No, I don't.

Mr. Nelson: You know he does not know.

Mr. Donovan: Do you object to him saying no?

Mr. Nelson: I object to your standing here for purely publicity purposes, as you hope, asking this witness questions which you know he cannot answer as to the facts.

I have been very patient because the Trial Examiner
287 has ruled on this. But I make that objection again, Mr. Examiner, because Mr. Donovan has gone far enough for you to see that he has no proper purpose in going over it this way. He knows this man was not present at the Briggs factory and cannot give him any factual answers.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well. There was no pending question.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Mr. Keys, you stated a while ago that the Foreman's Association does not throw picket lines?

A. I don't believe I stated that.

Q. Well, do they?

A. Yes.

Q. You mean, some of your former witnesses testified to the contrary before the War Labor Board?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I will exclude that.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): So you did use picket lines during these April and May strikes?

A. They were referred to as picket committees; we never referred to them as picket lines.

Q. And at the Milwaukee plant of the Briggs Company, the CIO production men refused to run the picket line, did they not?

A. I don't know that.

Q. And that closed the plant for Saturday and Sunday, is that right?

288 A. I don't know.

Q. You never heard of that? You do know the plant was closed?

A. I heard it.

Q. What other plants did you hear were closed?

A. Packard Motor.

Q. Any others?

A. No, that's all I recall.

289 Q. Did you discuss those matters with the War Labor Board personnel when you went to Washington?

A. I do not—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) I do not see what relevancy that would have. I was there, he was there, and twenty other men were there, but what we said to the War Labor Board, I do not see what relevancy it would have here.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You may finish your answer.

The Witness: I started to say that I do not know which appearance before the Board you have reference to.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Were you not down in Washington in the Spring of 1944 at or around the time of these strikes?

A. Yes, following—the strikes were called off from Washington by long distance telephone.

Q. As a result of your visit down there, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And the reason you went down there is because war production had stopped in Detroit?

A. The reason we went down there is because the War Labor Board sent for us.

Q. Well, that is the reason they got you down there, is it not?

A. I don't know; I never asked them.

Q. As far as you know; you were just summoned down there to talk to them?

290 A. I can tell you what they said to us after we got there.

Q. What is the policy of the Foreman's Association of America with respect to running the picket line of another union?

A. We have never let anybody's picket line keep our members out of a plant. Our foremen always go in and do their jobs to the best of their ability—our members, I should say.

Q. So the Foreman's Association of America would run a CIO picket line any time?

A. If the Association wasn't in a dispute and it wasn't the foreman's dispute, yes.

Q. You would run it?

A. They would go in and go on their jobs, if that is what you mean.

Q. Have you any assurance, on the other hand, that the CIO would run picket lines of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. As I said before, I was told that they would cross our picket line, any picket line of the foremen.

Q. Is that the way you think the matter rests at the present time?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you feel that you can control strikes better than the CIO has controlled them — strikes of your members?

291 Mr. Nelson: I do not think that is a proper question at all. How about your controlling them, Mr. Donovan, like you have in the past?

Mr. Donovan: If I had some judges who aren't afraid of the cars, I could.

Mr. Nelson: If you could use the cars of the judges to crush workers, of course, you would keep on doing it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Objection sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Did you give any notice under the War Labor Disputes Act and again under the Michigan

State Statute requiring notice of strikes preceding these April and May strikes of foremen in the Detroit area?

A. No, we didn't know the strikes were going to happen.

Q. What obligations, in general, does a member assume when he becomes a member of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. What obligation to the Association?

Q. Yes.

A. He pays his dues, attends his meetings, lives up to the Constitution; he should believe in the principles of uniomism, and to fight for it.

Q. And he is supposed to attend meetings regularly?

A. He is supposed to, yes.

Q. How regularly do the members of your chapter meet?

A. The Constitution provides that the chapters should meet once a month.

292 Q. Actually, they meet oftener, do they not, than that?

A. They may, and some do.

Q. They did during the strikes in April and May, did they not?

A. Yes, they met every day.

Q. Speaking generally, now, is your Association bound by the action of the majority of the members.

A. No.

Q. If you have a strike and that appears to be the desire or vote of the majority, he is not obliged to join the strike?

A. No, he is not obliged to join the strike.

Q. No pressure or compunction of any kind is put on him?

A. Not from headquarters.

Q. He could stay right in the plant as foreman while the rest of the foremen in that plant went out on strike, as far as your Association is concerned?

A. No.

Q. What machinery is there in your Constitution and your by-laws, if you have any, with reference to strikes? Do you have any provision at all about strikes in your Constitution?

A. Yes, we establish a provision that the chapter must follow if they intend to strike, and that provision is, it provides for votes to be taken by members, strike
293 notices to be filed under the Smith-Connally Act and State laws, and so forth.

Q. Will you find in either of these constitutions the portion you are referring to?

Mr. Nelson: This is the latest one, Mr. Donovan (indicating).

Mr. Donovan: Well, I would like to have it located in the one, or in the ones that have been marked in evidence.

The Witness: You knew it isn't in there, Mr. Donovan. When you are talking about our constitution, we are not just talking about a couple of obsolete contracts; we are talking about the present Constitution.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Wait a minute. You say no reference was made in your Constitution with reference to strikes?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He did not say any such thing.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, he has some new constitution—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) It is in evidence.

The Witness: It was introduced.

Mr. Donovan: I do not think we need to get so excited about this. There is no provision for strikes in here. I am entitled to have an answer to my question.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You are not entitled to an answer when you mis-state the fact. If you will look 294 at Petitioner's Exhibit Number 2, you will find the existing constitution of the Association.

Mr. Donovan: I am entitled to ask questions about other documents than just this one the Trial Examiner has mentioned, and I do wish to ask him a question about Exhibit Number 3 and Exhibit Number 4.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you withdraw your earlier question then?

Mr. Donovan: If the Trial Examiner will tell me what it is, I will.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I know what it is, Mr. Donovan. Will you withdraw your question?

Mr. Donovan: Well, if the Examiner does not wish to re-state it, I will ask the Reporter to locate it. I think I am within my rights to ask questions about these exhibits.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Suppose you ask another question, then.

Mr. Donovan: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Will you examine Petitioner's Exhibit Number 4 and tell me if you can find any reference there with reference to strikes of any kind, how they are authorized, anything about them. If you find it, read it.

A. No, I can't find any.

Q. What is the date of that constitution, Mr. Keys?

A. November 2nd, 1941.

295 Q. At that time, did you have any by-laws that had any provision with reference to the manner or method of calling strikes, or anything about them?

A. No.

Q. Did you have any by-laws at all?

A. Only this Constitution.

Q. Well, you know when I say by-laws I do not mean Constitution, do you not?

A. I wanted to be sure I understood you.

Q. Are you clear now that I make a distinction between the two?

A. Yes.

Q. I will ask you the same question with reference to Petitioner's Exhibit 3, which appears to be on the face of it, the Constitution adopted at Dearborn Convention, Michigan, and amended at the Dearborn Convention in 1943.

A. I want to be sure I understand you correctly. You are asking me to find the procedure under which members must operate if they wish to strike?

Q. I want to know if there is any provision in there for the calling of a strike, of any kind, how it is called, how it is authorized.

A. No, there is no such provision.

Q. At that time did you have any by-laws which covered it?

A. Let me look again, will you? I think there is 296 something under the Executive Board. Yes, Section 1, Article 15. And this may also be in the same constitution that—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) That covers 1941?

The Witness: Yes, 1941:

"The National Executive Board shall execute the instructions of the Convention and shall be the highest authority of the Association between conventions, subject to the provisions of this Constitution, and shall have the power to authorize strikes, issue charters and punish all subordinate bodies in violation of this constitution."

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) That was in force as of what date?

A. This one was amended at Dearborn, Michigan, at the 1943 Convention.

Q. Was that the one that was in force during April and May, during the time of the strikes in those months, in 1944?

A. Yes.

Q. And was there any action taken pursuant to that provision prior to the strikes?

A. No.

Q. They occurred anyway?

A. Yes.

Q. And you could not control that?

297 A. We didn't know they were going to happen until the men were out on the streets.

Q. Then you could not control the strikes, is that what you want to say?

A. The men were very angry, they didn't want to go back to work and we tried to persuade them to go back.

Q. And your constitution and by-laws were not followed?

A. The Executive Board had not authorized them.

Q. That is right, and yet you had the strikes anyway?

A. We did.

Q. And you had how many going out at the same time—how many going on in how many different plants?

A. I don't know, seven or eight.

Q. And they all happened at or around the same time, in April or May of 1944?

A. That's right; we were very fortunate there weren't 45 or 50. We kept them to a minimum.

Q. But you had enough to get the attention of the War Labor Board, even with seven or eight?

A. Oh, yes, the War Labor Board know all the strikes that are going on all over the country.

Q. All of these plants were making war materials, were they not?

A. To the best of my knowledge, yes.

Q. And it would be just a question of the degree of 298 seriousness, how many plants you struck?

A. We didn't strike any plants.

Q. Well, you had strikes, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And those strikes were carried on by members of your Association?

A. They were.

Q. Did the Foreman's Association of America ever lodge a no-strike pledge anywhere at any time?

A. We did not.

Q. You have never taken that action?

A. We did not.

Q. You feel free to strike if you so desire without feeling the pull of a strike not to do so?

A. No one ever asked us for a pledge.

Q. And you never offered one?

A. No.

Mr. Nelson: That goes with recognition, Mr. Donovan.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Examiner, may we suspend here at this point?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well, we will reconvene tomorrow morning in Judge Moinet's courtroom at nine-thirty.

(Whereupon, at 4:30 o'clock p. m., Tuesday, December 19, 1944, the hearing in the above-entitled matter was adjourned to Wednesday morning, December 20, 1944, at 9:30 o'clock a. m.)

299 Room 737 Federal Building,
Detroit, Michigan,
Wednesday, December 20, 1944.

Pursuant to adjournment, the above-entitled matter came on for hearing at 9:30 A. M.

Before:

Samuel H. Jaffee, Trial Examiner.

301 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Gentlemen, the hearing is in order.

ROBERT H. KEYS

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Cross-Examination (Continued).

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Mr. Keys, do you recall yesterday being questioned about testimony given and statements you had made in the hearing before the War Labor Board Panel in which the Foreman's Association of America was present? Do you recall yesterday that you were asked whether or not in a conversation between you and Mr. Iserman at that time you said to Mr. Iserman, "Don't forget, Mr. Iserman, that we had eight more plants go out of Chrysler Plant—our foremen in Chrysler Plant." Then Mr. Iserman said, "Yes, are you proud of it?" And you said, "No." I asked you if you recalled that testimony and that statement and you said, "No." Is that correct?

A. That is right.

Mr. Nelson: Just a minute. Mr. Examiner, I do not see the relevancy or the materiality of this.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The answer may remain.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Are you still unable to recall that statement you made?

302 A. Yes, as I stated yesterday, I could not recall it but if it was in the record I will not deny it.

Q. And if I now read you the statement you made from the reporter's transcript at the session before the War Labor Board Panel of July 17, 1944, you listen and recall whether or not you recall these questions and these answers and these statements as they are transcribed by the Reporter in the session before the War Labor Board Panel on Monday, July 17? (Reading):

"Mr. Keys: Its significance is the fact that it constitutes a grievance of a foreman.

"Mr. Iserman: Anybody can stay at home nights and write up grievances. I think our problem is to see if they exist. The mere fact that they are written up contributes nothing to this case.

"Mr. Keys: I can only answer, Mr. Iserman, that 1200 of our foremen did not walk out because they were crazy; they have grievances and DeSoto is not the only plant. There were eight others. Do not forget that.

"Mr. Iserman: And you are proud of it?

"Mr. Keys: No, I am not proud of it."

I now ask you, do you recall the statement that I just read?

A. No, I do not recall having made it, but as I said before, if it is in the record, I will not deny that I made it.

303 Q. You do not deny it is a direct statement from your transcript, or rather, from the record of the War Labor Board Panel?

A. I do not know what you are reading, Mr. Donovan. If you will show it to me—

Q. (Interposing) I will be glad to. This is Book 13 of the daily transcript of the hearing of the Foreman's Association of America before the War Labor Board Panel at Detroit, Michigan at the session of July 17, 1944, which reports, by the way, were taken by the same reporter as is taking the present hearing. I believe it is true that you likewise received a daily copy of the transcript, the same as the attorneys for the Company involved, is that true?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you recognize this as Book 13 of the session of July 17, 1944?

A. Yes, that looks like the official report.

Q. Would you care to look at the page upon which the statement appears that I now read to you? Do you accept that as a statement you made?

A. If it is in the record, I do not deny it. That record consists of several thousand pages and there were many days of testimony and I cannot remember what I said and neither could you.

304 Q. I am offering it to you to refresh your recollection. You do not dispute now that this is what I read from page 1701 of the transcript of July 17, which is a statement that you did make on that day before the Panel.

A. No, I do not dispute it.

Q. Now, when you said at that time—when you referred to there being eight others, you referred to at that time eight other Chrysler plants, I take it?

A. I presume so, if I was speaking of Chrysler's.

Q. That is right, and you were speaking of Chrysler's. And those eight strikes were distinct and different from the Foreman's Association strikes in May of this year; that is, they were earlier?

A. They were earlier; that is the only difference.

Q. That is right, they were in January, were they not?

A. I believe so, yes.

Q. Yesterday, Mr. Keys, you made the statement with reference to the profits of the Ford Motor Company and stated, in substance, that they had increased since the contract with the Foreman's Association of America, which, I believe, you said was executed at or around May of 1944. Do you recall that statement?

A. No, I said I thought the profits had increased and that I thought I could prove it.

Q. Well, did you not say that naturally there were more profits after the contract of the Foreman's Associa-

305 tion of America with the Ford Motor Car Company?

A. No, I said naturally there were more profits if there was better cooperation between the workers and the foremen and more production and more efficiency.

Q. I show you page 123 of the Reporter's transcript of yesterday's proceedings—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) Would that not be the day before? The first day?

Mr. Donovan: I am sorry; December 18. You are correct.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan, continuing) —and ask you to read the answer you gave, starting at the bottom of page 125.

A. "Well, I think that the benefit that the Company has derived from this contract with the Foreman's Association is that it definitely increased the efficiency and increased the production, and, naturally, there were more profits."

Q. That is right. Now, you do recall making that statement, do you not?

A. I said a moment ago I thought so.

Q. Now, what were the profits of the Ford Motor Company for the quarter just preceding the execution of your contract?

A. I don't know.

Q. What were they for the quarter just following 306 the execution of your contract?

A. I don't know.

Q. Did you have in mind profits before Federal Income Taxes or after Federal Income Taxes?

A. After. I read in the newspapers that they had a larger surplus of cash on hand than they had ever had in the history of the Company.

Q. Did you understand "surplus" to mean profits?

A. Yes.

Q. And is it in that sense that you made the statement you did?

A. Partially, yes.

Q. Do you know whether or not any amounts were transferred to surplus from profits for either the years 1943 or 1944?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Did you ever see a balance sheet of the Ford Motor Company?

A. Not the Company's actual records. I have read the statements in the newspapers from time to time.

Q. Were you talking about net profits?

A. I told you a moment ago that I was talking about the fact that I had read, following the signing of our contract, a statement in the paper that they had a larger surplus of cash than they had ever had in the history
307 of the Company, or words to that effect.

Q. Did you have any information when you made that statement as to the facts regarding the surplus account which had occurred either during the six months prior to May, 1944, or after the six months, after May, 1944?

A. Will you read the question again?

(Question read.)

A. No.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Keys—As a matter of fact, do you know, for any month or any period whatever, either the year prior to 1944 or any period of months or quarters subsequent to then, what the profits per share of the Ford Motor Car Company were, or if there were any?

A. I didn't know there was any Ford Motor Company stock. Is there?

Q. I am asking you the question. Your answer, then, was not addressed to any profits for any particular period, I take it?

A. Of course not; there is no Ford Motor Company stock.

Q. That is your understanding of it?

A. That is my understanding.

Q. Now, Mr. Keys, you stated, I believe, that you were in Washington on May 17, before the War Labor Board, did you not?

A. Yes, I believe that is the date we were called 308 down there.

Q. And was General Henry H. Arnold, Chief of the Army Air Forces, present at that hearing?

A. Yes, he was.

Q. Did he state, at that time, in your presence, that he had a responsibility to the families of the crews that we send over enemy territory?

A. He did.

Q. And did he ask the question:

"What can I say to the crews' families of a bomber shot down over Germany, because it did not have adequate fighter protection?"

A. Yes.

Q. Did he say:

"Our bomber losses are determined by the bomber protection we can afford them"?

A. He did.

Q. And did he say:

"How can I explain to the relatives of crews who are wounded, how can I explain to the families of those killed"?

A. He did; he made similar statements to thos you have read. I don't know if those are his exact words or not.

Q. Are you familiar with the fact that there were Press reports in the Detroit papers of that occasion in Washington?

309 A. Yes.

Q. And if the Detroit Times, on Thursday, May 18, which would be the following day, in an article, on page 2—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) I am going to object, Mr. Examiner, to Mr. Donovan spreading this on the record of this case. I think this is just so obviously newspaper trumpery that it ought to be excluded. What do we care what the newspapers think of it?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I cannot rule on a question that is not finished.

Mr. Nelson: He is obviously preparing now to read from the Detroit Times. I object to it. I object to his reading anything from the Detroit Times. We are not trying this case from the newspapers, I hope, and who cares what the newspapers think.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The objection, insofar as it applies to the pending question, or part of the question is overruled.

310 Q. (By Mr. Donovan): In this Article, Mr. Keys, it was stated, and I quote:

"In Detroit, William Vallance, F. A. A. Vice-President, denied the General Arnold appeal had been the principal factor in ending the strike. Vallance claims the Foreman's Association had won a 'behind the scenes' victory for its objectives, and had terminated the strike on this basis."

Is that in accordance with your understanding, Mr. Keys?

Mr. Nelson: I object to that as absolutely irrelevant and immaterial. Mr. Vallance is not a witness and Mr. Keys did not make any part of the statement. It is just a piece of newspaper flamboyancy and I think the Petitioners in this case have a right to be protected from that kind of business on this record.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: My difficulty is that I do not know what the question means or what you are asking the witness, Mr. Donovan.

Mr. Donovan: I am asking the witness to give a little more information on the nature of the organization which is before the Board for certification in this proceeding. In the charter of relevant matters that are going into the record are excluded the nature of the organization involved. That was gone into in great detail by Mr. Nelson and Mr. Keys and I think we are entitled to cross-
311 examine on it. I think we are entitled to test the views of the president of the Foreman's Association of America, that being the labor organization that is the Petitioner here.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: But you have not—

Mr. Donovan (Interposing): If this is not so he can say so and if it is I think we ought to know it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I still do not know what you are asking the witness.

Mr. Nelson: In all fairness I do not know what he is asking the witness, either.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am addressing my remarks to Mr. Donovan for the moment, Mr. Nelson—Mr. Donovan, are you asking for instance—are you asking the witness whether or not the Vice-President said so or is he assuming that he said so or does the witness agree with it, or what?

Mr. Donovan: I am merely asking him if he knows whether or not Mr. Vallance was directly quoted or correctly quoted, if he knows?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is that your question?

Mr. Nelson: I object to it as irrelevant and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Objection is sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Mr. Keys, will you state whether or not you agree with the statement in the Detroit Press and the Detroit Times of May 18th where you were 312 quoted as stating that it was not the plea of General H. H. Arnold or that of Rear Admiral Ernest W. Pace that prompted the back-to-work decision, but rather because the Foreman's Association of America felt the War Labor Board was taking a more favorable attitude.

Mr. Nelson: I object to that as irrelevant and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Objection sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Is it true that you called the men back to work because the War Labor Board had taken a more favorable attitude?

A. No.

Mr. Nelson: I believe that is irrelevant and immaterial and I ask the answer be stricken with the question.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Stricken.

Mr. Donovan: The Examiner is preventing me from going into the reasons why the Foreman's Association of America took the action they did with reference to the May strikes?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am just ruling on the questions.

Mr. Donovan: You then rule the question out?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is right.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Now, Mr. Keys, do you recall yesterday that you said, and if I am quoting the substance correctly will you tell me so and if not I will be glad 313 to have you say so—that at the time you left the Ford Motor Company's employment you had a differential of approximately 15 cents as between you and the workers under you? Was that substantially your figure?

A. I said, as I recall it—I offered to get the proofs on it but you do not seem to want them. I cannot recall everything that has happened in the past three years, but that is my recollection, yes.

Q. Was that differential one that existed between you and the average paid worker in your department or between you and the highest paid worker or the lowest paid worker? Which was it?

A. The highest paid, as I recall it.

Q. You had 15 cents—you were receiving 15 cents more per hour than the highest paid workers in your department, is that right?

A. As I recall it, yes.

Q. At that time what was the range of pay of the workers under you in the Ford Motor Company department where you were foreman? What was the lowest paid rate and the highest paid rate?

A. The lowest rate would be, I think—I had some as low as 90 cents and up to $1.40.

Q. You had workers under you getting $1.40?

A. I had workers under me getting $1.55 at the time
314 I left. We are speaking of a little earlier period and I think that is what you are questioning me about.

Q. So that the highest paid worker under you at the time you left was receiving $1.55 an hour?

A. That is right.

Q. What were you receiving?

A. I was getting $1.65 and a nickel for nights.

Q. Well, did you count your 15 cents differential or figure it to include the 10 cents over the $1.55 workers under you and your five-cent night bonus?

A. Yes. I got that. It was money in my pay envelope.

Q. In your opinion, is that a fair differential between the foreman and the workers under him in his department?

A. No.

Q. You think it should be higher?

A. I do.

Q. How much higher than the highest paid worker do you think it should be?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Hasn't that been covered? I think he indicated that it should not be less than 25 cents and he hopes it would be higher than $1.00.

The Witness: Mr. Examiner, he keeps asking me the same questions over and over again.

Mr. Donovan: I think the Examiner will strike out the questions that are improper and you do not have to worry about that. May I have that last question answered?

315

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Had you forgotten the earlier testimony on the subject?

Mr. Donovan: My next question will not make a great deal of sense until I refresh his recollection on that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

The Witness: I said yesterday that I stated I thought it should be at least 25 cents and up to $1.00 for the higher classes of supervision.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): That is because he is a foreman, isn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. Mr. Keys, when you went down to Cleveland as you testified the other day, or yesterday I guess it was, just who did you see down there connected with the CIO?

A. Well, I saw Mr. Phillip Murray, President, I saw Mr. R. J. Thomas, President of the UAW-CIO, George Addes, Secretary of the UAW-CIO, Walter Reuther, Mr. Tom Groehn, sitting over here.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): What was the occasion of your going down there to confer with these gentlemen?

A. I wanted to determine for myself that they had no designs in organizing the foremen, and I asked them that.

Q. Did you fear that they had?

A. No, I did not fear that they had, but there had 316 been rumors and I wanted to determine for myself.

Q. Those rumors had come to your attention, hadn't they?

A. That is right.

Q. And you considered it important enough to make a trip to Cleveland to see the top CIO men and discuss that matter?

A. I did.

Q. And that was the only matter you did discuss with them with reference to the Foreman's Association of America, was it?

A. No.

Q. What else did you discuss with them with reference to the Foreman's Association of America?

A. I told them what the attitude of the employers was toward our organizational efforts, and that they eventually were going to result in a foremen's strike and picket line, and they told me that because of their pledge to the President that they would cross our picket lines. I told them that by the same token if their people were on wildcat strikes, we would instruct our men to go in and go on their jobs, regardless of their picket lines.

Q. And that is substantially the correct report of the matters you took up with them, is it?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you discuss the matter of any cooperation
317 between the two Unions at the time of the strike of either?

A. I never asked them for any and they never offered any. Mr. Phillip Murray did say that he certainly held the highest esteem and regards for our organization and that we were doing the right thing and deserved an organization of our own.

Q. Mr. Keys, do you see anything inappropriate in foremen being members of the same Union as the men under them?

A. I have never given a great deal of thought to it and I have never studied the past history of such units or organizations, but basing my opinion on the fact that they have been in existence for some forty years, my answer would have to be no.

Q. You do not approve, is that it?

A. No. I see no objections.

Q. You see no objections to it?

A. No.

Q. Well, then—

A. Don't misunderstand, Mr. Donovan. I said I am basing that no answer on the fact that they have been in existence for forty years. I know nothing about their organization except what I read.

Q. Nothing about what organization? The CIO?

A. The typographical and the maritime and the rail-
318 road workers where they have mixed units, supervision and employees and workers in the same bargaining unit.

Q. Are you talking about unions not active in the Detroit area?

A. Yes, I am talking about unions active in the United States of America.

Q. Confining the situation for the moment to the Detroit metropolitan area and the CIO, what would you say with respect to that as to the appropriateness of foremen belonging to a CIO Union?

A. I say that it is the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board to decide the appropriateness of any unit. What we may seek or what any other union may seek will be decided by the Board.

Q. Would you rather not give me your own views on that?

A. As I said yesterday, we always figured on remaining an independent union because we thought that we could service our members better that way.

Q. Why do you hesitate to give me a direct answer to my question?

A. What kind of answer do you want, Mr. Donovan?

Q. The answer you gave me is an answer to quite a different question. I asked you whether or not you considered it appropriate for a foreman to become a member of the CIO Union in the Detroit area?

319 A. I can only answer it through my interpretation of the law as it is written.

Q. I am not asking for the law but I am asking for your own personal opinion as to the appropriateness of foremen going into membership with a CIO Union in the metropolitan Detroit area?

A. Appropriateness from what angle? Mr. Donovan, give me a basis to decide whether it is appropriate or not.

Q. Do you know what I mean by membership?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what I mean by foremen?

A. I do.

Q. Then do you consider it appropriate for a foreman to become a member of the CIO Union?

A. What basis do you use as a judgment for appropriateness, is it law or appropriateness for the National Labor Relations Board or appropriateness for what reason?

Q. I want your opinion. If you do not want to answer the question, say so.

A. No, I answered it already.

Q. What is your answer?

A. I said give me a basis on which I can make an answer, and I will be glad to answer.

Q. You answer the question upon any different basis
320 or assumptions that are in your own mind.

A. If you are asking me if I think a bargaining unit composed of the two groups would work, I will answer that question, or any direct question, but when you say if it is appropriate or not, you have to give me a basis to answer it on.

Q. You feel you cannot answer it properly as to the appropriate or inappropriateness—

A. (Interposing): As to a general answer, I think it would be approriate. Yes, it would work, in my opinion.

Q. All right. Mr. Keys, speaking rather generally, do you believe that an employer should be held responsible for a foreman's interference with the rank and file workers in the matter of choosing a union or making anti-union statements, and that sort of thing?

A. If he forces the foreman to do it, yes.

Q. If a foreman would say to a worker, for example, "You better not join that CIO because the boss doesn't like it; it is liable to make a difference in your job," do you think management should be held responsible for statements of that type by a foreman?

A. Depending upon whether or not he was told to do so by his employer.

Q. Your answer would be if he was instructed to do that by an employer only in that event would management be responsible?

321 A. I would say management would be responsible in that event, yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And only in that event?

The Witness: I beg your pardon?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And only in that event?

The Witness: Yes, I would say and only in that event.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): And that would be true with any other action or conversation or conduct on the part of the foreman that might be interference with a worker within the meaning of the National Labor Relations Act?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you read that question, please?

(Question read.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is a pretty broad question, is it not?

Mr. Donovan: It is rather broad. Would you rather I rephrase it, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Frankly, I would have difficulty in answering it myself, but if the witness can answer it, all right.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Mr. Keys, if a foreman's attitude toward the rank and file CIO workers is such as to constitute interference with his free choice, or rather, their free choice of joining or remaining as members of the Union, speaking generally, would you say that is something management is fairly chargeable with?

322

A. If there is the least interference and he was forced to do it.

Q. And only in such cases as that would management have any responsibility for the actions of foremen?

A. Hasn't the Board in the past drawn its conclusions—

Q. (Interposing) I am asking you.

A. I said if there is the least interference there.

Q. Do you base your answer upon the fact that the National Labor Relations Board has held that a foreman's conversations of a discriminatory or interfering sort are not traceable to management and are not management's responsibility?

A. I don't follow you on that question.

Q. Do you base your answer on what you understand the National Labor Relations Board has held in such cases?

A. I base my answer on the fact that if the Board should find, in its investigation, that there is at least an interference, that the foreman was forced or told to do whatever he did, that was in violation of the act, the employer should be held responsible.

Q. But only in the case of that, in the case you mentioned?

A. I think the Board would hold him responsible if they found that.

323 Q. And you say that is the basis—

A. (Interposing): I think if the foremen are organized or unorganized, I will tell you that.

Q. What do you mean?

A. I mean, it would make a great deal of difference if the foremen were organized or not organized.

Q. Then, it would mean this, it would make a difference whether the foremen were members of the Union or were not members of the Union?

A. It would make a big difference.

Q. What is the big difference in the one case or the other?

A. Well, organized foremen don't permit unfair labor practices, and unorganized foremen are forced to do so.

Q. That is your distinction?

A. I think the organization of foremen is going to be one of the greatest boons to this country in stopping unfair labor practices.

Q. You say, then, if the foremen were organized, the fact that management will be responsible for what he says or does in the way of interference with workers' rights would be of no importance, because there would be nothing of that sort?

A. I think it would be reduced to a minimum.

Q. So management would not have to worry very 324 much about the actions or conduct of its foremen?

A. I don't know how much they would have to worry.

Q. Well, do you think there would be any difference in the responsibility of management where the foremen were members of the Union, or were not members of the Union?

A. Any difference in their responsibility?

Q. In the management's responsibility, what would be the difference, so far as management's responsibility for its foremen's actions are concerned?

A. Mr. Donovan, I think you are asking a lot of questions that can only be answered by the National Labor Relations Board itself.

Q. If you do not feel able to answer the question, just say so.

Mr. Nelson: That, obviously, is a question of law. I do not know how many questions of law you think this witness should answer correctly.

Mr. Donovan: Are you making an observation or an objection?

Mr. Nelson: I will object to it. You have been questioning him on the law for the last half hour, and he has done fairly well.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is a question of opinion, I suppose.

Mr. Nelson: It may be a question of opinion, and 325 I am willing he should go as far as the Trial Examiner sees fit on this.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I mean, it is a question of opinion as to whether or not the witness has done pretty well so far or not.

Mr. Donovan: I will strike the question. I think the discussion has been illuminating enough for our purposes. If it is troublesome to counsel, I will reframe the question.

Mr. Nelson: Well, it is not that it is troublesome; I think it is a question of law, as I said.

Mr. Donovan: All right, if it is stricken, there can be no quarrel.

Mr. Nelson: No.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Mr. Keys, I believe you stated that the series of strikes of the Foreman's Association in the Detroit plants during April and May of this year, 1944, were unauthorized?

A. That's right.

Q. And, by that you mean, they were not inaugurated in accordance with the Constitutional provisions of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, your charters that you grant to chapters correspond roughly to charters granted to locals of 326 other unions?

A. I don't know; I haven't seen the charters of other unions.

Q. You do grant charters to locals, do you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have introduced some in evidence here?

A. Yes.

Q. And those charters are subject to revocation on occasion for violation of any constitutional provision, are they not?

A. Right.

Q. And members can be disciplined by the Foreman's Association of America, if they so choose, in a proper case, under your Constitution and by-laws, can they not?

A. Right.

Q. Was there any charter revoked or any member disciplined, that you know of, from May 1, 1944, to date, in the Foreman's Association of America?

A. No.

Q. Whatever happened during those strikes had your approval, did it?

A. It didn't have our approval, as far as the men walking off the job. As far as understanding why they walked off the job, I thoroughly understand it and I think a lot of other people do, and if you would 327 like the reasons, I will give them to you.

Q. I would like to have you answer my questions. Your counsel will let you talk about things like that when he gets you back. Mr. Keys, when a man becomes a member of the Foreman's Association of America, speaking by and large now, he becomes bound by the majority action taken by the Union, does he not?

A. If he is a good union man, yes.

Q. If he is a loyal union man?

A. Yes.

Q. And you like to have loyal union members, do you not?

A. That's right.

Q. And once a man becomes a member, you rather expect he will be loyal, do you not?

A. We do.

Q. If a majority favors a strike and some individual member, in his private opinion, does not favor it, you, nevertheless, expect him to be loyal, to be a loyal union member and go along with the action?

A. I stated yesterday he had no obligation, but if he is a good union man he probably will, yes.

Q. Mr. Keys, have you any familiarity, in a general way, with the contracts in existence in the metropolitan area of Detroit between the UAW-CIO and the large employers?

A. I have read most of them some time or other.

328 Q. Are you familiar—you can say if you are not—with the fact that those contracts, by and large, exclude foremen as direct representatives of management, speaking generally now?

A. Well, the phraseology is not what you quoted, they are excluded, yes.

Q. But you say not as direct representatives of management?

A. Not in all contracts; they are in some.

Q. You do not deny that that is in some of the UAW-CIO contracts?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean, the phrase, "as direct representatives of management"?

Mr. Donovan: That is right.

A. Without refreshing my memory, I will have to say I don't know.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): I thought you said a minute ago they were in some but not in others?

A. I said they may be in some.

Q. Now, Mr. Keys, you filed a brief here at the conclusion of the War Labor Board Panel, did you not?

A. Yes, our counsel filed a brief.

Q. Well, refreshing your recollection, I will show you a copy of the brief of the Foreman's Association of America which was given to us as a copy, and ask you 329 if you can see your name at the bottom of that brief, with Mr. Nelson's?

A. Yes, I signed it, if that is what you want to know.

Q. And is that the brief of the Foreman's Association that was filed with the War Labor Board Panel who sat in Detroit during the summer on the foremen's case?

A. Yes, it looks like a copy of it.

Q. You identify it as a copy of the brief, the original of which was filed with the Panel?

A. Yes.

Q. In this brief, in the last paragraph, the following statement is contained:

> "As a concrete suggestion, we urge that the recommendation by the Panel to the Board include the matter of a joint committee on grievances in each plant of the managements, consisting of not less than three representatives of the employer and three representatives of the foremen, together with appropriate building and department chairmen and committees."

Now, that is the only concrete suggestion that that brief contained in the way of a request to the Foreman's Panel, was it not?

A. That is the only suggestion about the grievance machine if that is what you mean.

330 Q. Do you not recognize this language as the language of your brief, in the concluding paragraph?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the concrete suggestion was the appointment of the Labor-Management Committee, was it not?

A. I don't think it refers to it as Labor-Management Committees.

Q. Well, it was a joint committee composed of representatives of management and representatives of the foremen, was it not?

A. That's right.

Q. You can characterize that as you like, but that is what you said, nevertheless, is it not?

A. You are reading from the brief.

Q. Well, you do not claim I read it incorrectly?

A. You did when you spoke of it as Labor-Management Committee.

Q. No, that was a characterization of it, Mr. Keys, and you do not like that characterization, and you do not think a committee composed partly of management and partly of foremen is such a committee?

A. Yes, I do, I never said that. A committee like that could certainly be described that way.

Q. Why did you ask the Panel for a committee of that type?

331 A. To settle grievances.

Q. But you did not believe in that type of machinery, did you, at that time?

A. Yes, we believe in it. We don't say it is the best in the world, but we believe in it.

Q. You made certain radio addresses in Detroit, did you not, during the year 1944?

A. Yes.

Q. And you made one address on April 20, 1944, did you not?

A. I don't recall it offhand.

Q. Did you not introduce in evidence and supply all counsel with printed copies of your radio addresses made on behalf of the Foreman's Association of America over radio station CKLW?

A. Yes.

Q. You recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recognize the document that I show you as one such radio address, a printed pamphlet form (indicating)?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you not say in that address—did you not address on that occasion yourself, right after the opening, "Good evening, ladies and gentlemen," on April 20, 1944, as follows:

332 "At that time both the War Production Board and the manufacturers were making a great splurge with the establishment of labor-management committees, but week after week we foremen pointed out the fallacy of depending on such committees to create a new spirit of cooperation. We were the only voice in the country last year that predicted failure of the committee idea. Subsequent events have vindicated our judgment, for what has happened to these committees? The sad fact is that they were a colossal flop, and while they still exist in name in many plants, they long since have ceased to function or serve any useful purpose."

You do not deny you made that statement over the radio?

A. No, I don't deny it; I made that statement.

Q. As a matter of fact, when you filed this brief with the War Labor Board Panel, that was not really what you wanted from the War Labor Board Panel, was it?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Pardon me, what was the date of the brief?

Mr. Donovan: The brief is undated, but it was filed at the conclusion of the War Labor Board Panel hearing.

Mr. Nelson: I will agree with you on the date, if you like. I would say it was the last week in August, and if you like you can fix it on the last day of August, 333 to give it a specific date.

Mr. Donovan: That is my recollection also, Mr. Nelson.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, you have a difference in dates.

Mr. Donovan: Maybe that is what I was going to ask him, Mr. Examiner. Do I have a question pending?

Mr. Nelson: We agreed on the date for the record, if that is agreeable to the Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: I am asking if there was a question pending.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: If there is a question pending will you please read it?

(Question read.)

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Is that still what you want?

A. Yes, we want a grievance committee. I wasn't talking about a grievance committee in that radio talk, though. The people, the public knew it; you should know it. I was talking about joint labor management committees having nothing to do with grievances.

Q. Is it not true at the time you filed this brief, and at the time we were before the War Labor Board Panel, and today, that what you want is collective bargaining 334 and a contract in recognition of the foremen, just like the CIO has it?

A. Yes.

Q. That is what you want?

A. Yes.

Mr. Donovan: That is all.

Mr. Nelson: Could we have our morning recess at this time?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will take a five-minute recess.

(Recess taken.)

335 Trial Examiner Jaffee: The hearing is in order.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Mr. Keys, I wish to show you a transcript of the Court Reporter's of the session of July 18 before the National War Labor Board Panel, where you were present and conducted the case on behalf of the Foreman's Association of America in Mr. Nelson's absence and ask you if you can identify this as the Reporter's transcript, Book 14 of that session, of which you likewise received a copy.

A. Yes, that looks like the official report.

Q. Will you state whether or not you can recall the following conversation between you and Mr. Iserman at page 1954 in the July 18 session (Reading):

"Mr. Iserman: As pertinent to the discussion that just preceded the recess, I would like to read into the record two paragraphs of a News Story that appeared in the Detroit News on May 19, 1944, in which Mr. Keys, the president of the F. A. A., is quoted:

"'In commenting on the "tremendous gains made for the Association" in the strike, Keys said today:

"'Before the strike, we didn't have a voice anywhere. But in the last two weeks we gained for the foremen the right to appear before the NLRB, the right to protest against discrimination; the right to certify disputes coming under the War Disputes Act;
336 and a contract with the Ford Motor Company.'

"May I ask, Mr. Keys, if that substantially is a correct statement?

"Mr. Keys: Substantially, yes. It is not the exact phraseology."

Do you recall those questions and having made those answers, Mr. Keys?

A. I do.

Q. Isn't it true, Mr. Keys, that since your contract and your dealings with the Ford Motor Company, there were more strikes at Ford's than at any other plant, of foremen?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You are speaking of the contract signed May 9, 1944?

Mr. Donovan: It was preceded with some arrangements as to classifications prior to that time.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Mr. Keys, isn't that a fact?

A. Are you referring to the May 9, 1944 contract?

Q. Since the time of your first arrangement with the Ford Motor Company, something less than a contract, which you described as an agreement with respect to classifications and so forth.

A. Yes, there had been more strikes but of shorter duration.

Q. Isn't it true the Ford Motor Company is the place where you had the greatest success in organizational 337 efforts on behalf of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. No, not with organization efforts. We have Packard organized one hundred percent while Ford is not organized one hundred percent. We have obtained a contract from Ford, if that is what you mean.

Q. That is right. At that time, prior to the United Stove Company, that little company, that is the only contract you have been able to obtain from a Detroit employer, isn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. You received the greatest concessions from the Ford Motor Company as compared with any other motor company, did you not?

A. We have.

Q. Now, this radio talk which I called your attention to a few minutes ago, was one of a series extending over a period of months in 1944, was it not?

A. Yes, I think I made 39 of them altogether.

Mr. Donovan: That is all, I think, at the present time.

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, in connection with the Ford situation, isn't it a fact that the supervision at the Ford Motor Car Company is in somewhat of a different situation than that in other factories?

338 A. Yes, the structure of the layout—is that what you have reference to?

Q. Yes, the structure of it is different and generally speaking, the ratio of supervision to maintenance and production workers is higher, isn't it, at Ford's?

A. Well, by higher—

Mr. Dahling: I do not quite understand that question.

The Witness: I do not understand it either.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) To put if in a different form, there is more supervision at Ford's, generally speaking, than in other factories?

A. Yes.

Q. And there is a greater need for supervision in the factory and the way it is run?

A. In my opinion, yes.

Q. And that is your experience too?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is your information from other plants as you have been president of the Association?

A. That is right.

Q. In other words, to some extent, the Ford situation is a special situation, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. But in fact, does it involve the principles in substance that you find in other factories?

339 A. Yes.

Q. And the same relative circumstances so far as supervisors are concerned?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Keys, following the Maryland Drydock decision, did you take part in the filing of an unfair labor practice petition at the Soss Manufacturing and the Republic Steel Company on behalf of the chapters of the Association?

A. I filed them previous to the Maryland Drydock decision and upon their dismissal by the Regional Office, I appealed to the National Board in Washington following the Maryland Drydock case.

Q. They were finally disposed of after the Maryland Drydock decision?

A. Yes, the Board had a hearing in Washington on either January or February 15, 1944.

Q. And sustained its own power to entertain unfair labor practice petitions on behalf of foremen?

A. The decision of the Board was that foremen are employees within the meaning of the Act and it is an unfair labor practice to discriminate against them because of their union activities.

Q. And that decision followed the Maryland Drydock decision?

A. Yes.

340 Q. Of course, the Maryland Drydock decision was a two to one decision?

A. That is right.

Q. That was known to you?

A. That is right.

Q. And there was, what we think, is a very cogent dissenting opinion in that case?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The Soss decision was also two to one, wasn't it?

The Witness: No, unless I am mistaken, the Soss case was a unanimous decision.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, that was a special concurrence.

Mr. Nelson: I believe the Examiner is correct. It was not a dissenting opinion so far as sustaining the power of the Board is concerned. Mr. Keys, you understood the power of the Soss and read the publication that in those decisions it was unanimous?

Mr. Donovan: I have no objections to counsel discussing legal matters with the witness although he did not like me to do it.

Mr. Nelson: I allowed you to do it, Mr. Donovan, except when you got down to legal responsibilities. Then I thought you got down beyond the witness' possible depth.

341 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, to put it colloquially, ever since the Maryland Drydock decision, your counsel and you and the representatives of the Association have been needling the responsible parties just as far as we dared about the Maryland Drydock case?

A. Yes, I talked with them at every opportunity I had on the subject.

Q. And you made it perfectly clear that you intended to change that decision when the facts were available to do so?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is your effort in this case?

A. It is.

Q. Coming now to the Briggs matter on which Mr. Donovan questioned you yesterday, were there certain advancements by the Briggs Manufacturing Company immediately prior to or during the strike affecting the supervisory force?

A. Yes.

Q. What were they?

A. Well, the Briggs Manufacturing Company advanced to position of assistant superintendent, a number of foremen during the strike and I think some since. Our investigation discloses that these advancements were given to men who did not participate in the strike and who crossed the picket line and went into work and so forth.

342 Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I move the answer be stricken. It is irrelevant and immaterial as to what might have happened in the Briggs plant. That apparently is one of their grievances and in this proceeding has no place. There is no place for that sort of testimony in this proceeding.

Mr. Nelson: May I respond to that, Mr. Examiner? To remind you that yesterday Mr. Donovan went at great length into what happened, as he claimed, at the Briggs and I expect to be very brief about this.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I cannot for the moment see the relevancy of the particular question and answer.

Mr. Nelson: The advancement of men under false designation is a matter of great importance to the foremen, Mr. Examiner, and particularly when it takes place as a strike measure—

Mr. Dahling: (Interposing) I am sorry, I did not mean to interrupt you. I thought you were through.

Mr. Nelson: No, I am not. I expect to show a presently subsisting dispute and difference growing out of that situation.

Mr. Dahling: I make the same objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I gather from what you last said, Mr. Nelson, that you had more questions along the latter line?

343 Mr. Nelson: I want to follow it out and complete the showing with respect to advancement of foremen to designations of superintendent and assistant superintendent during the strike and then the aftermath of doing so. That is my purpose.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The answer may remain as a basis for further questions. I will overrule the objection for the time being. It may be renewed later.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) You may answer the question, Mr. Keys.

A. Well, as I explained how they had been advanced to the positions of assistant superintendent.

Q. And their previous rank was what?

A. Foremen.

Q. Now, do you have a presently subsisting dispute and difference relating to those men who were advanced by the Briggs Manufacturing Company during that strike?

A. Yes, we do.

Mr. Dahling: I object again, Mr. Examiner. In this proceeding we are not dealing with grievances that the particular union may have. We are dealing with the problem of whether or not these foremen are an appropriate unit and following, whether they should have collective bargaining. I call your attention again, Mr. Examiner, 344 to the fact that for months of this year at the hearing before the War Labor Board, the Foreman's Association of America went into that matter of grievances trying to show that they have grievances. They were very unsuccessful, in our opinion. If we are going to have this hearing develop into that sort of a hearing, it will go on indefinitely because we must have the right, if they bring these things up, these grievances, to introduce testimony to show that they do not exist and that they have no substance. If we are going into Briggs where they may have a grievance and bring that up and if you are going into the other companies where they may have a grievance, we will have to bring the testimony in from other companies for the same purpose. I think we are going too far afield.

Mr. Nelson: On the issue of an appropriate bargaining unit, Mr. Donovan brought out very carefully yesterday the line of demarkation and the witness testified as to that and he said in substance that where the designations were a false designation for a particular purpose, then his answer would have been qualified in certain respects and he gave a series of answers to Mr. Donovan's questions. This bears directly on what Mr. Donovan brought out with respect to the Briggs strike and an appropriate bargaining unit and other things. I assume Mr. Donovan had some purpose in questioning about that strike and I accused him on the record of looking for publicity in the 345 newspapers. If he has a serious purpose which relates to the fixing of the appropriate bargaining unit, then this question is directed to that end.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Have you completed your questioning on that point?

Mr. Nelson: I have one more question after this one.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, may I suggest that the petition discloses in paragraph 5, "The alleged appropriate bargaining unit includes employees classified as assistant foremen, foremen, general foremen, and employees classified as foremen who are referred to as special assignment employees." That is the unit we are talking about here. We are not talking about assistant superintendents and the Briggs Manufacturing Company. If there is any argument about who would fall in these classifications set forth in paragraph 5 of the petition, it would be an argument with respect to Packard supervision, and not Briggs.

Mr. Nelson: The same principle would apply.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness may answer. The objection may be renewed when counsel has completed his examination on the Briggs situation.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Do you have a present dispute relating to those foremen at Briggs that were referred to by Mr. Donovan yesterday as assistant superintendent and superintendent? Is that correct, you do have such a dispute?

346 A. Yes.

Q. Now, just two more questions. Are those the men to whom he referred as sleeping in the plant during the strike?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the dispute?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Briefly.

Mr. Nelson: Yes, briefly.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, do I understand that my objections go to all of these questions?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

The Witness: They created too many assistant superintendents in that manner. They are now removing all the general foremen and putting them back as foremen; removing the foremen and putting them back into the rank and file as workers and placing these so-called assistant superintendents on the general foremen's jobs and still continuing to call them assistant superintendents and presumably paying them more than they have paid their general foremen for doing the same work they are now doing.

Mr. Donovan: I will ask that the answer be stricken as to presumably paying this or that.

Mr. Nelson: I have no objection to having that stricken out.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: So much of the answer which follows the word "presumably" is stricken. The 347 rest may stay.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) The so-called assistant superintendent and superintendents with functions heretofore performed by foremen and assistant foremen—those foremen and assistant foremen were members of this Association and were now demoted for that purpose?

A. That is right.

Mr. Donovan: I have an objection to the last question and ask that it be stricken. It is too general to have any meaning and it should not go on the record here against Briggs or any other employer, unaccompanied by any definite statement of facts as to any individual superintendent, assistant superintendent or foreman. It is unrelated to any date in time whatsoever and it is unrelated to any plant. In the form that it is, I think that it is highly objectionable and it should be stricken. Counsel should be asked to adduce testimony in the proper way if he decides to develop the factual end he is evidently seeking here.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: This last evidence as to the situation at Briggs may remain for the limited purpose of indicating the nature of the dispute and not as independent evidence as to the truth of any particular contention in that dispute.

Mr. Nelson: We are contented with that ruling. We offered it, as stated previously, I think—that is a 348 fair ruling and we are contented with it.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, again I ask that it be stricken in entirety as bringing in matters which are irrelevant and if which not answered by the Company in this case, may have an effect upon the decision.

The mere fact that they are admitted for the purpose of showing that there is a dispute does not take away the sting that might be placed upon the testimony—upon testimony of this character. That a company, not in this proceeding, has been demoting general foremen back to foremen and upgrading other people, with the implied claim that that is being done because of union activities or non-union activities.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not see how it is at all relevant. Whether or not there is any sting—I assume depends upon whether or not the fact-finding tribunal goes beyond by ruling. I have limited it. My ruling as I have indicated, places a limitation which is of a nature which any preliminary fact finder may make. That in turn creates a danger inherent in all trials, I presume. Such experience as I have indicates that it is a danger which is sometimes overemphasized. I think since I have specifically indicated the limitations on the testimony the ruling ought to stand. If the Board should go beyond me, I assume you will have just cause to complain.

349 Mr. Donovan: I think if it is allowed to stand, it should definitely appear that it is nothing more than a claim and an unproved claim by the Foreman's Association of America. It is a mere statement which they have made. It is a claim with no statement of fact to support the claim.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) I will let it stand for the limited purpose I have already indicated.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, on inquir of Mr. Donovan this morning, you gave some testimony relating to the function of a foreman in an unfair labor practice matter. That is, assuming in substance, that a foreman assumed to oppose the affiliations of a worker under his supervision with the union of his choice. You used the word "told"—told whether the foreman was told by the employer to do this or not. I want to inquire whether you would include in the same category a foreman who took that step where the policies of the employer had been made known or was quite clear to the workers in the shop and the public or either one of them.

A. Yes, where the policies of the employers are such that it is known to the community and the public, I definitely would include that, yes.

Q. Let me ask you whether, up to the present time in the history of the Foreman's Association of Amer-
350 ica, that it has been brought to your attention, that there has ever been a case of complaint by a maintenance and production worker of unfair labor practices wherein the foreman was involved, that is, up to the present time.

A. No.

Q. In other words, up to now there has never been a complaint by any maintenance or production worker that a foreman had taken steps that could be described as unfair labor practices within the meaning of the Wagner Act?

A. So far as the membership of our Association is concerned—

Q. (Interposing) Yes, so far as the membership of the Foreman's Association of America is concerned, that is a true statement, isn't it?

A. We have had not a single complaint.

Q. You said something yesterday about a Wage and Classification agreement entered into in 1942 with the Ford Motor Company.

A. Yes, November 5, 1942.

Mr. Nelson: I ask the Reporter to mark this as Exhibit —Petitioner's Exhibit 12.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 12 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, my recollection is 351 that you said it was the first agreement between the Association and the Ford Motor Car Company.

A. Yes.

Q. I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 12 for identification and ask you if that is a true copy of the Wage and Classification Agreement.

A. Yes, that is a true copy.

Mr. Nelson: I offer the contract in evidence and I offer a copy to the attorney for the Board and the Company and I offer the original to the Trial Examiner.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, we object to the admission of Exhibit 12 into evidence on the ground that it is an agreement that relates to matters between the Ford Motor Company and the Foreman's Association of America. There has been no showing that the condition in that Company is the same as the condition in the Packard Company and it is, therefore, without weight in this proceeding and should not be received.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 12 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) You also said that following that, there was an agreement entered into between the Association and the Ford Motor Company preliminary to a further agreement?

352 A. Yes, we signed an agreement agreeing to negotiate a contract.

Mr. Nelson: I ask the Reporter to mark this exhibit 13.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 13 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) And Exhibit 13 is that agreement and the original of the agreement is available for inspection, is it not?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: I offer the exhibit in evidence. I offer copies to the attorney for the Board and to Packard Motor Company counsel and the exhibit itself I offer to the Examiner.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, without repeating it again,

I make objection to the admission of this document marked for identification as number 13, the same objection that I made with respect to Exhibit Number 12.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 13 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I think further on cross examination yesterday you stated that the presently effective agreement between the Association and the Ford Chapter, 353 of the Ford Motor Company, had been submitted to the War Labor Board jointly by the Company and the Association for its approval, is that correct?

A. I don't recall whether I said jointly or not. It had been submitted and had been approved, yes.

Q. And it was submitted in writing?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: I ask the Reporter to mark this as Petitioner's Exhibit Number 14; it is an eleven-page document.

(The document above referred to was marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 14.)

The Witness: Mr. Nelson, to clarify my statement of a moment ago, the War Labor Board held a hearing at which the Company and the Association appeared personally.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) In addition to this written submission?

A. In addition to it, yes.

Q. I will make the showing on the written submission and ask you if Exhibit 14 is a copy of the letter of transmittal jointly by the Company and the Association to the War Labor Board, and whether the original is available for inspection?

A. Yes, I signed that on behalf of the Association.

Q. And the Company signed it on behalf of the Company?

A. Yes.

354 Q. And it was submitted?

A. That is right.

Mr. Nelson: I offer this in evidence. I offer a copy to counsel for the Board and a copy to counsel for the Packard Motor Company and the original to the Examiner.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, I would like to ask counsel if what has been referred to as a submission to the War Labor Board was a case or a pending matter before the War Labor Board which received a number, or was this merely an informal report to the War Labor Board of the proposed contract submitted in letter form?

Mr. Nelson: There was a proceeding before the War Labor Board. You have the number there.

Mr. Donovan: I would like to have that number and the date of the case and the directive issued, if any, by the War Labor Board with respect to this contract.

Mr. Nelson: If you will be a little patient, I still have some more papers to submit. I think the latter part of your request will be complied with.

Mr. Donovan: How about the number?

Mr. Nelson: We have here a case number 30-1444 on a communication from the National War Labor Board that is marked, "Second Ruling of the Board." I believe that is the correct number and that document will be offered just as soon as we can chronologically get to it.

355 Mr. Donovan: What is the number, please?

Mr. Nelson: They mark it "No. 30-1444."

Mr. Donovan: What was the title of the proceeding?

Mr. Nelson: Well, on that paper, it is entitled, "National War Labor Board, Region XI, Detroit, 26, Michigan, in the matter of Ford Motor Company and Foreman's Association of America, Ford Chapter Number 1," and it is accompanied by that case number as given.

Mr. Donovan: Do I understand that counsel is introducing the document he has just talked about?

Mr. Nelson: It will come in its chronological order, and I will offer it in evidence.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I assume it is objected to, similar to the objection offered to Petitioner's Exhibit 14?

Mr. Dahling: Yes, Mr. Trial Examiner, it appears to be nothing more nor less than a request for approval of a rate change to be put in effect in the Ford Motor Company. We consider it incompetent and irrelevant and having no bearing on the issues in this proceeding.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Same ruling. Proceed.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Was there a ruling of the National War Labor Board received following the submission of Exhibit Number 14, Mr. Keys?

A. And following a hearing.

356 Q. And following a hearing; that is, the Company and the Association went to the War Labor Board?

A. Yes.

Q. And reported personally and orally to the Board on the matter, is that right?

A. Well, they requested that we come over there for a hearing.

Q. And you did so?

A. And representatives of the Association and representatives of the Company appeared before the Panel, and following that appearance we received approval of our contract in its entirety.

Mr. Nelson: I ask the Reporter to mark this letter from the National War Labor Board, dated October 28, 1944, and the accompanying paper, as Petitioner's Exhibit Number 15.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 15 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Did you receive in due course from the National War Labor Board the letter of enclosure which I have caused to be marked Petitioner's Exhibit 15, together with the paper attached thereto?

A. Yes, this was their first notice to me.

Mr. Nelson: The letter is dated October 28, 1944 and the accompanying petition is designated, "First Ruling 357 of the Board," bearing the date October 28, 1944, and the case number is number 30-1444, and I offer it in evidence. I offer a copy to counsel for the Board, a copy to counsel for the Packard Motor and the original to the Examiner.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, we have the same objection. It appears now that this is nothing more than an application for a wage adjustment, which, apparently, was granted by the War Labor Board. Certainly, it has no relevancy in this proceeding.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Received.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 15 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) You received a second communication from the National War Labor Board, did you, Mr. Keys?

A. Yes, they had made a reservation in their first decision.

Q. Covering paragraph 18?

A. Covering paragraph 18 of our contract, because it was something that was new to them in the way of contractual provisions and they wanted time to study it.

Mr. Nelson: I ask the Reporter to mark the letter dated November 16, 1944, and the letter dated November 14, 1944, and the accompanying paper marked, "Second Ruling of the Board," as Petitioner's Exhibit Number 16.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 16 for identification.)

358 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I ask you, Mr. Keys, if this is that second communication you received, that you referred to, and if the original is available for inspection? (Indicating.)

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: I offer the exhibit in evidence, a copy to counsel for the Board, a copy to counsel for Packard Motor and the original to the Examiner.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, just a word of explanation about this. You said the Board had reserved its ruling on paragraph 18 of the contract, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. After the hearing it had reserved its ruling?

A. Yes.

Q. Then, in the second ruling of the Board on November 14, 1944, it referred to paragraph 15?

A. Yes, but that was an error.

Q. Yes, that was an error, and that error is corrected in the letter of November 16, 1944?

A. That is right.

Q. When it was called to their attention?

A. That is right.

Mr. Dahling: Same objection, Mr. Examiner.

Mr. Nelson: There is nothing further of this witness at this time. We offer him for further cross-examination, if desired.

359 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Petitioner's Exhibit Number 16 is received.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 16 for identification was received in evidence.)

Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) Mr. Keys, there are several matters I am not sure that the record clearly reflects about which I would like to ask you.

A. All right, sir.

Q. I believe you testified that subsequent to the signing of the Ford agreement in May, 1944, and up to the present time, there have been other supplemental agreements entered into between the Ford Motor Company and the Foreman's Association, is that correct?

A. That is true.

Q. Two supplemental agreements, were there?

A. Two have been signed and they are negotiating on one at present.

Q. I see. Can you just tell us briefly what matters are covered by these two supplemental agreements?

A. I was not a member of the negotiating committee that negotiated them, and I probably couldn't give you that information as well as a member of the committee. I have copies of them if you wish to see them.

360 Q. All I am interested in knowing is what, in general, did those supplemental agreements deal with?

A. Well, our contract provided, under Section 23, I believe, that old grievances that had been—that had not been settled to the satisfaction of a foreman-member of our organization under the old Wage and Classification agreement could be written up as a grievance and processed and there were quite a number of them. As a matter of fact, I think it ran into three or four hundred throughout the entire Ford industry. So one of the supplemental agreements was to establish a date line for accepting them and for meeting to pass upon them, or to dispose of them by the Association and the Company.

Q. So that one matter, then, was a change in the method of handling the grievance machinery under the contract?

A. Under one article of the contract—old grievances originating from the original agreement of 1942.

Q. And was that the sole matter covered in one supplemental agreement?

A. Yes.

Q. What was, just generally, the subject matter or matters covered by the second supplemental agreement?

A. In order to give you a correct answer on that, I would like permission to ask one of the members of the committee; he is sitting right there. You see, I 361 was not in on one of those negotiations at all.

Q. You have no personal knowledge, then, of the matter covered by the second supplemental agreement?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: First or second?

Mr. Karasick: Second.

The Witness: The first and second agreements have been submitted to me. I have read them but it has been quite some time back, and I am not too familiar with the contents.

Mr. Karasick: Very well.

Mr. Donovan: Does this still relate to the Ford Motor Company; that is, the supplemental agreements?

Mr. Karasick: That is correct.

Mr. Nelson: I would volunteer a bit of information here. The second one relates to misclassification of foremen, and there is one signed in the last two days relating to seniority, making the third supplemental agreement arrived at. This last one is so recent we do not have a copy of it.

The Witness: That is true.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) With that statement of counsel, does that refresh your recollection as to the subject matter covered by each of the supplemental agreements?

A. I would rather not try to answer that, to describe the subject matters of those agreements personally, 362 because I wasn't in on the negotiations.

Q. Very well. I believe you testified, Mr. Keys, that there were no geographical limitations placed by the Association on chapters which were chartered by the Association.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, did you mean by that, that a chapter could exist in any part of the country, or did you instead mean a chapter would have jurisdiction over any geographical area irrespective of how large it might be?

A. I meant it could exist in any part of the country.

Q. Is the jurisdiction of a chapter chartered by the Association in each case defined to geographical area covered by the chapter?

A. No, just the plants covered by the chapter.

Q. So, in that respect, then, the jurisdiction is defined, is that correct?

A. That is true.

Q. Yesterday you stated that in the consent election which was conducted in case number 7-R-1279, involving the foremen employed at the Packard Motor Company, there were 130 challenged ballots?

A. That is the figure that I stated.

Q. Now, what was the reason for the challenge and who challenged them?

363 Mr. Dahling: Just a minute, please. Does this have any relevancy at all, about some prior petition that is not before the Board now? This proceeding, if it proceeds as expected by the Association, will result, presumably, in an election at some future date. I can see no relevancy whatever to some past election which is not at all an issue here, nor whether or not the votes were challenged in that election.

Mr. Karasick: I might only say, Mr. Examiner, that I am not interested in eliciting any fact that is not relevant to this proceeding. My duty is to get a full and intelligent record for the Board. But the question of the Packard consent election has been gone into previously in this proceeding. Mr. Donovan himself has asked questions at great length about it?

Mr. Donovan: I did not ask any questions about it.

Mr. Karasick: Then I am mistaken. The record will determine that.

I do think since there is some question about the matter, it should be clarified for the convenience of the Board.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you claim the figure is wrong, or what?

Mr. Karasick: No, I merely wanted to know what the basis was for the challenge, but if the Examiner
364 feels that it is not material, I am perfectly willing to drop it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think we have enough on it.

Mr. Karasick: Very well, I withdraw the question.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of the witness?

Mr. Karasick: Yes, just a moment, please.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) I believe you also testified, Mr. Keys, that after the consent election I have been referring to, you received only the election results from the Regional Office of the Board, is that correct?

A. Yes, I received a document showing the results of the election.

Q. I hand you Board Exhibit Number 19, and ask you if that is the document you referred to when you said you had received a copy of the election results?

Mr. Dahling: Just a moment, witness. Mr. Examiner, we, of course, objected to the introduction of that exhibit, and without repeating it, we make the same objection to this whole line of testimony.

Mr. Karasick: Since the matter has been gone into, I think it should be gone into with clarity. The witness has testified he received a copy of the election results only. I want to know whether the witness received a copy of the report on the consent election which was sent out by the Regional Director.

365 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Dahling is merely preserving his objection. He may answer.

Mr. Dahling: Yes, Mr. Examiner.

The Witness: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) That is what you meant by saying you received the election results?

A. Yes, I referred to that yesterday in my testimony as the certification of the election results. That is the document I had in mind.

Q. Now, both Mr. Donovan and Mr. Nelson questioned you with respect to the responsibility of Management for foremen's activities concerning the possible commission of unfair labor practices, and you answered their questions. Your answers to those questions were your understanding of what the Board decisions held in cases involving such questions?

A. Yes. Of course, I was giving my opinion only.

Q. I see. That was your understanding, is that it?

A. Well, I have read Board decisions; I am not too familiar with them, but that was my understanding, yes.

Q. In formulating policies or in giving advice to members of the Association with respect to their duties and responsibilities concerning Management under the decisions of this Board, do you consult legal counsel and get legal advice as to specific situations and as to gen-

366 eral problems concerning those matters?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I may say, Mr. Karasick, that I had not thought Mr. Donovan was asking these so-called legal questions, to begin with, merely to get legal information.

Mr. Karasick: Nor am I, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: But as questions having some bearing on the opinion expressed by the witness.

Mr. Karasick: I am trying to find out the basis for that opinion. I think the Board should know it.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) Do you understand my last question, Mr. Keys?

A. On any matter that comes to my attention, as President of the Foreman's Association of America, pertaining to the law, I consult with Mr. Nelson, our counsel. I refer it to him and if there is any type of action to be taken, so on and so forth, he advises me.

Q. Your opinion concerning the situation we are now talking about, was that an expression of your opinion as to what the decisions of the Board are and have been?

A. That's the way I understood it, yes.

Q. You were asked whether or not the Foreman's Association approved of certain strikes which have taken place in this area, and you said they had not; that the 367 Foreman's Association of America, nevertheless, had not disciplined its members for participating in such strikes. Is there any reason for that?

A. Yes, there is a definite reason. We were warned and asked by the membership to permit them to strike. We still have such requests. There is hardly a day that goes by but what we get a request for permission to strike from one of our chapters, and we have withheld that permission. When the situation got out of hand, when they felt they had to strike to protect themselves and preserve their jobs and so forth, and they did strike, we haven't disciplined them in any manner, although we have provided in our constitution stricter regulations governing strikes. We have made the procedure quite lengthy and the chapters must follow it if they wish to participate in a strike.

Q. Are you acquainted with the general functioning of labor-management committees throughout the country that were set up under, I think, the War Production Board Program?

A. Yes, I made quite an investigation of them at one time. I thought they were going to be very good originally.

Q. Do those labor-management committees have any power to handle grievances or deal with matters relating to collective bargaining?

A. No, they were not established for the purposes of 368 settling grievances.

Q. Were they production committees, mainly?

A. To increase production in the plants, yes.

Q. In your radio addresses, were you referring to labor-management committees, as such committees, or labor-management committees that might be composed of grievance committees composed of equal numbers of representatives of Management and equal numbers of representatives of Unions?

A. I was referring to labor-management committees whose only purpose was to increase production.

Q. From May, 1944, up to the present time, have there been any more or have there been less strikes involving—or disputes or disturbances—involving foremen at the Ford Motor Company than for a similar period prior to that time?

Mr. Donovan: Prior to what time?

Mr. Karasick: May 4, 1944, prior to the contract.

Mr. Dahling: You mean, for a similar period of months—October, November, December—approximately three and one-half months?

Mr. Karasick: I mean, for the period from May, 1944, when the contract was signed at the Ford Motor Company, up to the present time, have there been more or less labor disturbances than there were for a similar period prior to that?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What do you mean by "similar period"? Do you mean the same number of months just prior?

369

Mr. Karasick: That is right.

Mr. Donovan: That has all been gone over, the strikes, the number of men participating, and so forth.

Mr. Karasick: I may suggest, Mr. Examiner, the very reason I am doing this is to make a complete picture. Mr. Donovan, himself, asked for a period from the Wage Classification Agreement up to the present time. I want to see if that picture holds true throughout the period, and I am merely breaking it down now. I am asking about the general picture.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, go ahead.

A. In my opinion, in my testimony, rather, I gave the dates and described all the strikes I am familiar with. Since May 9, 1944, the day on which we signed the present contract, there have been two brief strikes that I described, and one protest that we didn't consider as a strike. In the same period, before May 9—well, there were only three strikes before the signing of the May 9 contract, and I don't know whether that would fall in that period or not without checking. They were strikes, and large numbers of men were involved and they lasted longer.

Mr. Karasick: No further questions.

Mr. Nelson: I have a couple questions.

Redirect Examination.

370 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, there has been one subject matter here of interest that I think none of us have touched, and I may preface my question by reminding you that your testimony is that there are four grades of foremen involved at the Packard Motor Car Company, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And there are six included, as shown on page 25 of the agreement with the Ford Motor Company, four grades of foremen involved in the agreement or covered by the agreement with the Ford Motor Company, is that right?

A. Well, it's broader than that. There are six classifications of foremen. Then, in the fire department, you have the lieutenants up to the assistant chiefs, included. Then we have the Marine group, which are mates and pilots. So, in reality, we have about ten or more classifications of foremen in the Ford Motor Company included in the unit.

Q. In the main, however, you have the six classifications?

A. The big bulk is in those six.

Q. And is it a fact you may have all six of these classifications in one building?

A. Yes.

Q. And you frequently do have?

A. Yes.

Q. I want to inquire, in general, of course, whether your experience in the Ford Chapter—and you may in-

371 clude both the period before and after the making of the contract—has brought you any difficulty in dealing within the Association with a classification as broad as that or as numerous as that?

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I would like, again, to repeat my objection to any testimony with respect to these matters at the Ford Motor Company. I am making this objection again, so it will not be lost sight of.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

A. I will speak of the period subsequent to the signing of the May 9 contract. The reason I speak of it is because the Ford Motor Company, during negotiations with us, wanted to break the bargaining unit into several separate units.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Based on classifications?

A. Based on classifications. We, of course, requested a unit, a single unit embracing all of the classifications covered by the contract. However, we did agree—

Q. (Interposing) May I interrupt you a moment and ask if you had some specific negotiations relating to this subject matter with the Ford Motor Company?

A. Oh, yes, several days of it.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. However, we did arrive at this solution as presently provided for in the contract. We did set the Marine 372 group up as a separate unit with their own bargaining committee, because their problems are entirely different from the problems of the foremen in the shop.

Q. They are on the lakes and their conditions are different?

A. That is right, they have their own committee, although an officer of the Association can sit in and be present during their negotiations, and so forth, during the processing of grievances. We took the other six classifications of foremen and lieutenants up to the assistant chiefs in the fire department, we put them in one unit, but for purposes of representation, we broke it into three categories. We took the general foremen and the assistant general foremen and made that one level. We took the general shift foremen and the division foremen and made that a level, and we took the division shift foremen and the shop foremen and made that a level, and each level has a representative who is classified from that level, and those three representatives constitute a plant-wide committee, so that when they go into negotiations or discuss a problem, there is a member on that committee of each of the levels of supervision in the plant, and it has proven very satisfactory to our viewpoint, and I feel that the Company thinks it is very satisfactory also.

Q. They have made no complaints.

A. No.

373 Q. (By Mr. Nelson): That is on experiences up to the present time?

A. Experiences to the present time. In fact, we have even added representation of a couple of the plants where there weren't enough.

Q. Now, in matters of grievances or matters of controversies, no matter what the level of supervision they originated in, they finally wound up in a single channel for handling?

A. That is right.

Q. In a unified single channel?

A. That is right.

Q. I will ask you that question in just a little different form to reach another aspect of it. You had from the beginning a unified chapter at the Ford Motor Company, didn't you?

A. That is right.

Q. One chapter representing all levels of supervision and these extra ones you have indicated?

A. Yes, and all four plants that were organized.

Q. Within the Association and among the supervisory forces referred to affected by this contract, so far as you know, was there any complaint about the unity of the bargaining unit?

A. No, they are very well pleased with it.

374 Q. The foremen themselves are very well pleased?

A. That is right, they attend the same meetings, get acquainted and they assist each other. They set up a spirit of cooperation.

Q. And it extends from one level to the other, does it?

A. Yes. I can answer that question this way, by saying we referred back to the membership, the Ford Motor Company's original plan establishing separate units for each level of supervision. The membership rejected it on the ground that they would rather not have a contract than accept that. The negotiating committee took it back to the Ford Motor Company and said that they would rather do without a contract than accept it, that is the Ford Motor plan, and that the membership had instructed them to say so.

Q. Let me ask you this: Have you experienced any difficulty within the Association or organizations with the Ford Motor Company either for contracts or handling matters under it because of the unit of bargaining?

A. Absolutely none.

Q. There is no complaint either from the Company or the men?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. And as a matter of fact, do you have in mind that the Ford Motor contract provides for this repre-
375 sentation at all the Ford plants throughout the country?

A. The contract covers all of the Ford plants automatically when we have a fifty-one per cent majority or a majority of the Ford foremen as members.

Q. In that plant?

A. In that plant.

Q. And you are bearing that in mind in giving the answers to the questions I have just asked you?

A. I am. The description I gave you of the three plantwide committeemen or representatives a moment ago covers the Rouge, the Bomber plant, which also has the same setup, the Lincoln plant has it and so on and so forth. Each of the four plants where we have a majority represented and they are covered by the contract, they have their own representatives, their own chairmen, plantwide representatives and so forth.

Q. And you have been bearing that in mind in stating that there was no complaint and no difficulty?

A. That is right.

Mr. Nelson: I believe that is all, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of the witness?

Mr. Donovan: I have one question here regarding which I believe there was a misunderstanding. I would like to clear that up before the witness is finished.

376 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Go ahead.

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Mr. Keys, you were asked if there was a—there was a little confusion, I think, respecting different statements alleged to have been put in the newspapers at or around the time of your War Labor Board hearing, May 18th and May 19th. You were asked, I believe, on one occasion this morning or yesterday—I guess that was yesterday—whether or not—and I would like to ask you this now in order to segregate these questions—I would like to ask you now if it was stated in the Detroit Press on May 18, 1944 or at any other time near that, that you were quoted as saying that it was not the belief of General H. Arnold or Rear Admiral Price which prompted the back-to-work decision and that rather the Foreman's Association of America felt that the War Labor Board was taking a more favorable attitude. If that statement was attributed to you, will you state whether or not you agree that would be your views or not?

Mr. Nelson: I am going to try to keep out of this newspaper business if I can, I object to this.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the form of the question is objectionable.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Will you state whether or not if such an assertion was attributed to you by anybody, 377 whether or not that is correct or incorrect?

Mr. Nelson: I object to that as irrelevant and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The objection is sustained as to the form of the question.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Do you say that the reason you got the men back to work was because the Foreman's Association of America felt the War Labor Board was taking a more favorable attitude or not?

Mr. Nelson: I believe, Mr. Examiner, that that is immaterial.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You may answer.

The Witness: No.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): That is not the reason?

A. No.

Q. And if any such statement appeared in the Press, if it did, then it was inaccurate so far as you are concerned?

Mr. Nelson: I think that is immaterial. Inaccurate statements of the Press are the commonest things in the world.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I will not comment on that. Let the witness answer. Read the question, please.

(Question read.)

Mr. Nelson: I would like to call your Honor's attention to the fact that I want to keep out of the newspaper
378 business if I can.

Mr. Donovan: I know you would like to.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Perhaps I am prejudiced. We will go off the record for this discussion.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Donovan, suppose you ask the question again.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): If such a statement appeared in the press what prompted you to take or rather get the men back to work after those May strikes? It was not because of the statements made by General H. H. Arnold or Rear Admiral Ernest W. Price, was it, or was it because you felt—the Foreman's Association of America that is, felt that now the War Labor Board was going to take a more favorable attitude? Did you ever make any statement like that?

Mr. Nelson: I object to it as being irrelevant and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

Mr. Nelson: The whole thing is irrelevant.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Keys, you said no, didn't you?

The Witness: I said no.

Mr. Donovan: If one of your officers of your Association said that he also denied that General Arnold's appeal had been the principal factor for ending the strike and 379 if he claimed that the Foreman's Association had won a "behind the scenes victory for its objectives" and terminated the strike on that basis, would you or would you not agree with that?

Mr. Nelson: I object to that as being irrelevant and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The objection is sustained.

Mr. Donovan: It is sustained?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: All right. That is all we have.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of this witness?

Mr. Nelson: I believe not.

Mr. Donovan: No, we have none.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I have one, I think. Mr. Keys, let me say preliminarily that this question has to do with the Ford Motor Company and I am going to assume that counsel for the Company objects, so that he will not feel embarrassed in objecting to an examiner's question. I might say parenthetically that hereafter if I do ask questions I wish you would not feel embarrassed in objecting to them. There have been occasions when I have been known to sustain objections to my own questions.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee): Mr. Keys, you have testified in connection with your supervisory experi-

380 ence at the Ford Motor Company, that if a departmental committeeman from the United Automobile Workers came to you and the matter involved policy that you could not handle it but would have to refer it to the Labor Relations office?

A. That is right.

Q. How do you define, in that connection, the term "policy"?

A. Of course, we had to use our own judgment on a lot of cases that came to us. There were certain cases where we attempted to make a settlement which were overruled by the higher authorities. If it was something that we knew we could do as a foreman without being called on the carpet for it we would do it. If there was any doubt in our mind as to whether we had the authority to do it or not, we would refer it to the higher authorities.

Q. As I recall your earlier testimony, you said among other things that you might try to get a pair of gloves for an employee who complained that he could not get them?

A. That is right.

Q. And that you might direct the mopper-upper to mop up the oil around the machines where it was laying?

A. That is right.

381 Q. I gather from your testimony that it is your opinion—and if I am wrong you can correct me—that you do not consider your role in such matters involves "policy"?

A. Certainly not. The formulation of policy in any manner and—well, perhaps using the oil as an example, it certainly is the policy of the Ford Motor Company to use the term "policy"—to keep oil off the floor. Therefore, I knew that I was administering the Company policy when I had the mopper mop up the floor and I did so. The large bulk of the grievances were of the nature that the foreman could dispose of them because they were minor things like mopping up the oil, getting a pair of gloves or helping a man get tools quicker. One of the grievances the workers had was that they had to stand in line ten or fifteen minutes after the bell rang to check their tools in at night. As a foreman I would attempt to get the crib man to expedite that for the men.

Q. You were asked about certain statements or pamphlets entitled "Foreman's Guide to Labor Relations." It is bulletin 66 of the United States Department of Labor or one of the bureaus of the department. One of the excerpts was a statement on page 10 reading as follows: (Reading):

"It goes without saying that the foreman's primary responsibility is to protect the interests and rights 382 of management."

I understood you to testify that you did not agree with that. Have I quoted you correctly?

A. That is right.

Q. What is wrong with it, if anything?

A. Because if he put the interest of management or his employer before anything else well, he might even commit murder.

Q. Well, I assume to begin with that his primary interests, if I may use the expression "primary interest" is to God, and his country and things like that. Such matters aside for the moment, if you can separate them, what is wrong with the statement I have just read?

A. If the statement confines itself to his duties as a foreman and solely on his job then his primary interest would be to do his job on behalf of his employer, yes.

Q. Let me put it in another way. The statement I just read begins "It goes without saying that the foreman's primary" and so forth and so forth. In other words, is it his primary responsibility as a foreman—and I emphasize the word "foreman," to protect the interests and rights of management?

A. Well, I am trying to confine myself now to just his foremanship and his period of employment in the plant.

Q. Let me put it another way.

383 A. I still cannot see where it is his primary objective to protect the interests and rights of management if he has to do things that hurt other people.

Mr. Donovan: May we have the record reflect the long pause after the Examiner's question which the witness took before he just answered?

Mr. Nelson: It is agreeable with me.

The Witness: If the employer considers it to his best interests to discriminate or discipline or discharge employees it is certainly not the foreman's primary responsibility, so far as I am concerned.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee): Let's put it this way: You spoke of a situation where a foreman gets a differential of let us say 15 or 20 or 25 cents; why does he get it?

A. Because of the nature of his duties and responsibilities.

Q. Well, he gets paid, doesn't he, to take care of those responsibilities for management?

A. Yes, but there are limitations. If it is looking after machines and seeing that production is produced and so on, within the limitations of what he is paid to do, then that is his primary responsibility but when it gets out of bounds it certainly is not. If his employer is seek-

384 ing to have him as a supervisor, protect his interests and rights by discrimination and other things, certainly that is not his primary responsibility.

Q. I want to change the language which I just read from this bulletin, slightly, and see if you will agree with it. (Reading):

> "It goes without saying that a foreman's primary responsibility within the scope of his job as foreman, is to protect the interests and rights of management."

A. Well, I will agree with it now.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of this witness?

Mr. Nelson: I have no further questions.

Mr. Donovan: We have no further questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness is excused. We will recess at this time until 2:00 P. M.

(Whereupon, at 12:30 P. M. a recess was taken until two o'clock P. M.)

385 After Recess.

(Pursuant to recess the hearing was resumed at two o'clock P. M.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The hearing is in order.

Mr. Nelson: Shall I call the next witness?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Nelson: I call Mr. Prosper Traen.

PROSPER TRAEN,

a witness called by and on behalf of the Petitioner, being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Mr. Traen, your residence, if you please?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let us get the name, please.

387 Q. You just went to work?

A. I went to work in the coal mines.

Q. Where?

A. In Illinois.

Q. How long did you continue in the coal mines?

A. About nine years.

Q. While there I suppose, Mr. Traen, that you were a member of the miners Union?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In what local, if you remember?

A. I do not remember the local.

Q. In what town or city?

A. In Christopher, Illinois.

Q. And you continued to be a member of that union throughout your period as a miner?

Q. Did you work at the face or on some other trade?

A. I worked during the nine-year period practically at all the trades in the mine.

Q. Was it electrified?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you worked as a miner, timber man, trackman, and motorman?

388 A. Yes, sir.

Q. Any other trades?

A. Machine man and cutting coal.

Q. Cutting coal? You were cutting coal there with machines?

A. Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Were those strip mines?

The Witness: They were shaft mines.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): The shaft was sunk and the vein was followed out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you apparently did not work on top at any of your trades?

A. No, sir.

Q. Your trades were all below ground?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, after that experience where did you go?

A. After leaving the coal mines I came to Detroit.

Q. By that time had you married?

A. 1926.

Q. And you have lived here ever since?

389 A. Yes, sir.

Q. Or hereabouts?

A. Yes.

Q. What has been your work or employment since that time?

A. I have been employed at the Packard Motor since that time.

Q. You came here and went to Packards and have been there ever since?

A. Yes.

Q. That is some eighteen years?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you do when you first went to Packards?

A. I hired in as an assembler.

Q. They were manufacturing automobiles and trucks at that time?

A. Automobiles.

Q. Automobiles?

A. Yes.

Q. How long did you work as an assembler?

A. As an assembler? I practically followed the assembly line up to the war period all the time. On assembly itself about one year and then I was given a promotion.

Q. Where were you promoted? To a supervisory position?

390 A. As a handy man, you might say.

Q. From the assembly line as such you went to a handy man about the assembly line?

A. Yes.

Q. And that went on for how long?

A. In the assembly work?

Q. Yes.

A. I practically started—I mean, I practically stayed in the assembly work all of the time up to this war period.

Q. Until 1941, following Pearl Harbor?

A. Yes.

Q. At any time up to 1941 did you have a supervisory position or rank?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did that begin?

A. Well, I was made a straw boss about, oh, I would say about twelve years ago, somewhere in that neighborhood.

Q. And what is your present position?

A. General foreman.

Q. You are employed by the Packard Motor Company now?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you are a member of the Packard Chapter of the Foreman's Association of America?

391 A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say you were made a straw boss about twelve years ago?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. On the assembly line?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And over what portion of the assembly line did you supervise?

A. At that time my supervision extended over the chassis assembly.

Q. And as straw boss, presumably,—or, did you have any foremen under your supervision?

A. At that time, I was the lowest rung of supervision.

Q. You had how many men under you?

A. At that time there was, in one period, we ran as high as 240.

Q. Under your supervision?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Doing what?

A. Assembling chassis.

Q. And how long did you remain in the position of a straw boss?

A. I think it was in 1935 when we built a new assembly line, and I was changed.

Q. What is the fact from 1926 to 1935 as to whether you were a member of any labor organization at Packards?

392

A. No, I was not.

Mr. Donovan: Did you say at Packard?

Mr. Nelson: At Packard.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): I understood you to say you worked there all that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When the organizing drive came on in 1935, 1936 and 1937 of the maintenance and production workers, you already were a foreman?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your present position, Mr. Traen?

A. General foreman, at this time.

Q. Now, when you say straw boss, there are four grades of foremen with whom we are concerned here—which one of those grades does that correspond to?

A. I would say to assistant foreman.

Q. And that is the lowest grade of foremanship we are concerned with here, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Corresponding to the assistant foremen, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the general foreman is where in this group of four foremen, where you are now?

A. It starts with assistant foreman, foreman, and 393 the general foreman.

Q. And that is the next to the highe t classification that we are concerned with here?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have, however, occupied, have you, the intermediate grades there of foremanship?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how many years were you a foreman?

A. About five years, I would say.

Q. On the assembly line?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your present compensation as a general foreman?

A. The base rate is $304.50 a month. That's for eight hours.

Q. Is there something for overtime?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any bonus involved in computing your actual compensation?

A. No, sir.

Q. With the overtime and your base rate, what is your average income per month?

A. I would say around five hundred, something like that.

Q. In the neighborhood of $500.00 per month?

A. Yes, it varies.

394 Q. It varies according to the amount of overtime?

A. Yes.

Q. But $500.00 would be a fair approximation of it, would it?

A. Somewhere in there, yes.

Q. What was it as a foreman?

Mr. Dahling: May we have the dates, please?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, I will fix the dates in a moment.

Mr. Dahling: Thank you.

A. As a foreman, I worked for $240.00 a month straight, I guess.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): And what was the last year in which you worked as a foreman?

A. I think it was 1941.

Q. Do you remember about what part of the year you passed from a foreman to a general foreman?

A. No, I can't just place it exactly.

Q. This $240 would be the last pay you drew, apparently, is that correct?

A. I started at $240, then I got a raise to $260.

Q. So your pay as a foreman ranged from $240 to $260?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that, again, is the base rate, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there overtime involved at that time?

395 A. At that time we got no overtime pay.

Q. As assistant foreman, what was the last year during which you worked in that position?

A. I just can't place the date.

Q. Do you recall your last pay as assistant foreman?

A. It was an hourly rated pay, but I don't remember it; it's too far back.

Q. But it was an hourly rated pay?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you remember the rate per hour that you were last paid as assistant foreman?

A. No, I can't remember it.

Q. In your present employment, presumably, you have some foremen under your supervision?

A. At this time, I have one assistant foreman.

Q. One assistant foreman?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have any foremen?

A. No, no foremen under my supervision at this time.

Q. Are you still on the assembly line?

A. No, I am up in the polishing line, now.

Q. How long have you been in the polishing line division now?

A. Since the war program started.

Q. At Packards?

396 A. Yes.

Q. How many maintenance or production workers, or both, do you have under your supervision?

A. At this particular time?

Q. Yes.

A. I think there is somewhere about seventy, right now.

Q. And you have one assistant?

A. One assistant, yes.

Q. And no foremen?

A. No foremen.

Q. Do you know why it is that that particular grade is omitted in your present setup? Is there any reason for it that you know of?

A. Well, I cannot see any particular reason why it should be.

Q. You say you mean that you do not see any reason why there should be a foreman and an assistant foreman under you?

A. I cannot see any particular reason why there shouldn't be one.

Q. Why there shouldn't be?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do these seventy men do?

A. They are in—some are polishers and some are platers, polishing and plating.

397 Q. And the parts are parts of what machine?

A. The parts that we produce—we were working on some parts for aircraft motors and some parts for Marine motors.

Q. Parts for motors?

A. Yes.

Q. Prior to the organization of the Packard Chapter of the Foreman's Association of America was there any organization among the foremen at Packards?

A. I understand that there was at one time.

Q. Did you take part in it?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Dahling: I move the answer be stricken as hearsay, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What is your understanding based on? Personal knowledge or something else?

The Witness: Personal knowledge. My understanding is based on the fact that I was contacted and asked at one time to join with this particular organization.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It may stay.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) You did not become a member of that organization?

A. I did not.

Q. Do you recall the year in which that took place?

A. 1937.

398 Q. When did you first hear of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. The first I heard of the Foreman's Association of America was when it was brought to my attention by another foreman in Packard Motor Company.

Q. Well, my question was when, if you can remember?

A. I think it was in October of 1942, I believe it was.

Mr. Donovan: We cannot hear the witness.

Mr. Nelson: He said he believes it is October, 1942.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I will give you this much assistance. Was it before or after Pearl Harbor?

A. It was after, I believe.

Q. How long after?

A. I think I can possibly refresh my memory a little bit here from these papers. Yes, it was in 1942 all right.

Q. Did you fix the month as October or some other month?

A. Yes, I think it is October.

Q. And some other foreman called the matter of this organization to your attention?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do about it?

A. Well, I contacted the offices of the Foreman's Association of America at that time to get more 399 information on it.

Q. Let me ask you whether you were interested?

A. Very much so.

Q. Why were you interested?

A. I was thoroughly convinced that there was a dire need for a foreman's organization in our plant.

Q. Was that with reference to experiences of other foremen or your own or both?

A. My experiences and other foremen also that I spoke to.

Q. What were the things that were on your mind at that time as indicating the need of an association or organization?

Mr. Dahling: Just a minute, please. I object to that question, Mr. Examiner, as again leading into this matter, I presume, of grievances. I want to get a little ahead of them this time. This hearing has nothing to do with that sort of thing. If counsel desires to develop that I want to head it off as far as possible.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness may answer to indicate merely his reason. It is not to be construed as independent evidence of the many facts, but that it is such reason.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I believe, Mr. Examiner, my question was what was his reasons for looking up the 400 organization that the other foremen had told him about.

A. Well, my reason was I knew that independently I could get nowhere in trying to reason with my superiors and I knew that collectively we could possibly arrive at certain things that would be fair to the foremen.

Q. And were there things in your experience that you regarded as unfair?

A. Yes.

Q. What were they, briefly?

Mr. Dahling: I make the same objection, Mr. Examiner. The witness has stated that there were things that he thought needed the support of unionization apparently, and I think that is sufficient. I do not believe there is anything further necessary.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness may answer with the limitations previously indicated.

The Witness: May I have the question again?

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) The Examiner permits you to answer. What were the things you wanted to take up in a collective form or that you regarded unfair in your situation? The Examiner limited you to your own views and your own experiences.

A. My experience was the demotions from time to time. As the trend of the time might go. If the production went down a little they did not hesitate to cut you down 401 from a salary to an hourly rate as they seen fit, without question or without asking you whether you liked it or not.

Q. Were there any other things that come back to you now?

A. Yes, the rates of pay, of course, were not commensurate with the hours we put in at that time. I remember personally putting in over eight hours—many hours over eight hours day after day, Saturdays and Sundays without any pay.

Mr. Dahling: May we have the time when this occurred?

Mr. Nelson: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): And you fixed the time as when you thought the foremen told you about it, which was October, 1942?

A. Yes.

Q. To what period do these facts apply that you are giving us?

A. These facts apply particularly to the period when we were building automobiles.

Q. Well, did they apply at the time, namely, October, 1942?

A. I believe it was on March 1, 1941 that there was a new policy which went into effect in the paying of foremen's rates.

402 Q. That is, they had a change?

A. There was a change, yes.

Q. Did that change remedy some of these things?

A. Well, it remedied the overtime pay to a certain extent.

Q. And whether or not you as a foreman were consulted about that change or as for your acquiescence to it—

A. We were not.

Q. When you looked up the Foreman's Association of America where did you go and what did you do?

A. When I looked up the Foreman's Association of America we went to Dearborn on Schaefer Road.

Q. By "we" whom do you mean?

A. I mean myself and several other foremen.

Q. Do you mind giving us their names?

A. Yes, I could give you some of them. Mr. Sietz was one of them, Mr. Sullivan was another, and Mr. Pawlowski—as a matter of fact, Mr. Nelson, I think the majority of the people you have on your original asked for charter were our first.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The majority of the people on the original application for a charter with the Packard Company?

Mr. Nelson: That is Petitioner's Exhibit 10.

The Witness: Yes.

403 Q. The majority of those people went with you over to the Carman Theatre Building, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see a representative of the Association there?

A. Yes, we met a Mr. Ross there.

Q. He was membership director at that time?

A. I believe he was, yes.

Q. You had a talk with him, did you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you, and all the other persons that went over from the Packard Company, have a talk with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do following that talk with Mr. Ross?

A. Following that talk with Mr. Ross we signed application cards.

Q. Right there and then?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many of them?

A. I think there was between 15 and 20, something like that.

Q. 15 or 20 men?

A. Yes.

Q. What grades of supervision were represented in that group of 15 or 20 men?

A. There was assistant foremen, foremen and general
404 foremen represented there.

Q. Did everybody sign?

A. Everyone that was there signed.

Q. Everyone who was present at that time signed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long a talk did you have with Mr. Ross?

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, I do not like to object to the questions on the part of counsel, but I do believe, for the sake of the record, that much of this material can be eliminated. It is not of particular value to the Board.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not think it makes much difference whether the talk was 20 minutes, 30 minutes, or 40 minutes; what time of the day it was, nor the kind of weather.

Mr. Nelson: I offer it on the spontaneity of the organization.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I know, but I do not think the length of the trial is of any particular moment.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) What did you do following this conference with Mr. Ross?

A. We went back to the plant and, of course, we talked about the foremen's organization with several more foremen.

Q. Did you do that in a meeting or individually?

A. Well, it was mostly individually, from man to man.

Q. Then what did you do?

405 A. Then the organization grew in leaps and bounds from there on.

Q. You mean at the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You finally made an application for a charter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were one of the signers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The charter was granted?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And the chapter was formed?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you become an officer of the chapter?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What office?
A. The first office was as a member of the Executive Board.
Q. What chapter?—I mean, of the chapter?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. By the way, have you ever held a national office?
A. No, sir.
Q. Have you ever, since that time, held an office in the Packard Chapter?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you held any other offices than that as a
406 member of the Executive Board of the Chapter?
A. Yes, sir, I am now president of the chapter.
Q. Since when have you been president of the chapter?
A. Since 1942.
Q. Were you the first president?
A. No, there was another president for a short duration.
Q. Than yourself?
A. Yes.
Q. And you have been president ever since, have you?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you have anything to do with the petition that was filed with the National Labor Relations Board for certification of your chapter as the bargaining agent or of the Foreman's Association as bargaining agent of the foremen and supervisory forces at Packard?

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I again object to testimony with respect to—I assume this is the first petition for certification that was filed—on the ground that we are not here considering that. There was a new petition filed, and according to the evidence I get in this case, that matter has been dropped, it is dead, and of no further interest that I can see in this proceeding.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Did you have anything to do with the negotiations leading up to the consent election? Were you at any of the conferences or interviews?

407

A. No, I don't think I was.

Q. Were you here when Mr. Keys described the conferences he had with Mr. Weiss in his office and one or more in the offices of the Seventh Region?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you at any of those meetings?

A. I was at one at the NLRB office.

Q. Now, do you recall whether there was any discussion at that time, Mr. Weiss being present, respecting the inclusion of general foremen in the bargaining unit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your recollection of that conversation?

A. I remember that Mr. Weiss objected to twelve general foremen on the list.

Q. Did he name them?

A. No, sir, not to my knowledge.

Q. Did he indicate what positions they held?

A. Yes, he indicated that they were general foremen of more than one department.

Q. Do you remember what was said as to how many general foremen in all there were at that time?

A. I believe at that time there was some 90.

Q. And the 12 were indicated by Mr. Weiss as being general foremen with supervision of more than one department?

408

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall what was said, finally, as to what should be done about including all or excluding them?

A. I believe it was finally agreed that we would exclude those particular twelve.

Q. And did you thereafter take part in the election?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you present at any of those conferences following the election? I mean, conferences with the Company?

A. I believe—no, I don't think I was; I don't think there was any after that election; not when I was present.

Q. Now, following that agreement in the Seventh Regional Office, were any general foremen advanced, at least by designation by the Packard Company, to the position so called of superintendent or assistant superintendent?

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I presume I have a continuing objection to all of this line of testimony with respect to this first arrangement now under discussion?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Dahling: Furthermore, on this matter of foremen being promoted to a so-called position, I object to that as being incompetent and irrelevant. I do not see any issue such as that involved in this case.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

409 The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, I would like to register an objection against the use of the word "so-called" in a question. I think the question should be reframed, unless that word "so-called" is stricken. It has the vice of carrying an unfavorable connotation against the Employer.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Of course, the questions are not evidence; the answers are.

Mr. Nelson: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) How many?

A. Two that I remember.

Q. What were they?

A. One was the vice-president of our Chapter and the other was the president.

Q. What happened to them?

A. They were promoted.

Q. To what ranks?

A. Superintendent and assistant division manager.

Q. And how soon after your organization were they promoted or how soon after their election to those offices were they promoted?

A. Well, it was less than a year. I wouldn't say just exactly.

Q. On their promotion to the offices of superin-
410 tendent and assistant superintendent, respectively, what did your chapter do? Did they remain in office or continue their membership or did they withdraw?

A. They were given withdrawal cards.

Q. And, presumably, you proceeded to elect men to succeed them?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that when you became president of the Chapter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Traen, following the consent election—by the way, I wanted to ask you about that—that was held in a building nearby, was it?

A. It was held in a voting booth.

Q. In what month?

A. I think it was in February.

Q. Of 1933?

A. 1943.

Q. 1943, I am sorry. And by "voting booth", you mean one of these little green houses that the City of Detroit furnishes for the voters?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. About how many people could get in that at one time?

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I cannot see how the size of the voting booth has any bearing on this case, or the time of the year.

411 Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am going to assume, unless it is contradicted, that it was cold.

Mr. Nelson: It was worse than that; it was zero weather, the men stood outside until they could cast their votes, and you will remember a request was made to cast their votes within the Packard Motor building at some convenient place. I think it bears very distinctly on the spontaneity and determination of these men to organize and cast their votes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: While you are not confined to one witness, how many witnesses you are going to use, I do not know, but I think it should depend somewhat on the relevancy of the issues involved.

Mr. Nelson: We have no witness so far who has bee personally present. It is all hearsay so far as that witne is concerned, as it was brought out on cross examinatio I offer now one outright witness on the circumstances.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am going to exclude it.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Did you undertake to adjust griev ances and conduct negotiations with the Packard Compan officials following the consent election?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you successful in doing so?

A. No, sir.

Q. With respect to what matters did you undertak

412 to discuss and negotiate with the Company?

A. We attempted to meet with the committee of th Company with a committee of our own.

Q. You mean a committee of the foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. What happened?

A. Just prior to the vote we were told that there woul be no further meetings with members of the Company b cause we were having a vote.

Q. How is that?

A. Because we were having a vote.

Q. Who told you that?

A. Mr. Weiss.

Q. Were you present when it was said?

A. Yes.

Q. Where were you?

A. In Mr. Weiss' office.

Mr. Dahling: We have no objection to this testimon and do not intend to negotiate, if that will save tim Furthermore, that we never did negotiate with any repre sentatives of the Foreman's Association of Americ..

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let's see if we can break thi up. I understood you to say in the beginning, Mr. Dah ing, that you have not negotiated and do not intend t negotiate with representatives of the Association.

413 Mr. Dahling: That is correct.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And you went on to say tha you never did negotiate with representatives of the Association.

Mr. Dahling: That is correct.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And to complete the thought, let me ask you, did the Company ever intend to negotiate with the Foreman's Association of America?

Mr. Dahling: The Company never intended to negotiate with the Foreman's Association of America.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Traen, how do you describe your present duties?

A. Present duties as general foreman?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, my duties at present consist of getting my orders from the superintendent in the early part of the day and issuing them down the line to the assistant foremen as to the quality and quantity of pieces supposed to be produced.

Q. Have you the power to hire new men? Can you hire a man?

A. I can request.

Q. You can request?

A. Yes, sir.

414 Q. To whom do you send that request?

A. I make out a request for help and I forward it to my superintendent for his signature.

Q. Can you discharge?

A. I can request a discharge.

Q. To whom do you send that for action?

A. The request is sent to the Labor Relations Office.

Q. Can you lay a man off?

A. That has to be requested.

Q. To whom?

A. To the employment department.

Q. Can you you send a man home?

A. The only time you can send a man home is if there is a complete agreement with the representative of the rank and file union as to whether you are able to or not; otherwise again you have to appeal to the Labor Relations Department for a decision.

Q. Can you send a man home for as much as one day or two days or three days?

A. There is a set rule of penalties that you can apply if it is proven that the man you are sending home is guilty of the charge you accuse him of.

Q. How far can you go without appealing to somebody above you in sending a man home?

A. You cannot go any further than unless the steward, I will call him, in the department, agrees with you. Then you can apply the penalty, but that is as far as you can go. If he disagrees it goes to the Labor Relations Department hands.

415

Mr. Dahling: That is the Union steward?

The Witness: Yes. If he agrees with you.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Can you raise a man's pay?

A. No, sir.

Q. Can you cut a man's pay?

A. No, sir.

Q. Can you recommend, under the present setup—

A. (Interposing) The price is set on each classification.

Q. By somebody else?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So you have nothing to do with that?

A. No, sir.

Q. In the event of a slowdown or a layoff, can you call a man back to work?

A. No, sir.

Q. Where does that go?

A. That is handled by—if you need additional help, you apply to the employment department and they in turn send the help to you.

Q. I am assuming that the man has once been satisfactory and has been employed and that he was laid off solely because of a slackness in work and that the work then picks up, can you call that man back to work or is that done by some other department?

416

A. The employment department.

Q. And perhaps you will get that man or some other man, as far as you are concerned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you recommend in that respect a request—

A. (Interposing) I have attempted to recommend but failed at it.

Q. You have had no success at it?

A. No, sir.

Q. What about promotions? Can you promote a man? I mean within your own department?

A. No, I cannot promote anybody. You can change from one classification to another, you can ask for a request to change from one classification to another.

Q. That goes where, that request?

A. That request first goes to your superintendent.

Q. But you cannot do it yourself independent of he?

A. No, sir.

Q. Can you transfer a man from one employment to another, from your department to another department, we will say?

A. No, you have to put in a request for a transfer.

Q. Where does that go?

417 A. To the employment department.

Q. Now, that testimony so far applies to the maintenance and production worker or the hourly rated workers under your supervision, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, coming to any supervision that is under your supervision. You said you had an assistant foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Under you?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you select that man yourself?

A. The selection is not final until your superintendent agrees with you on it.

Q. You have to refer to him?

A. Yes.

Q. He has the final say?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, can you transfer that man?

A. No, I cannot.

Q. Is there anything you can do to that man except direct him and inform him without the approval from your superintendent?

A. No, sir.

Q. And that applies to pay, transfer, rehiring, lay-off, discharge and disciplining and everything else, does it?

418 A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: You can cross examine.

Mr. Dahling: May we have a recess at this time, please?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will take a five minute recess.

(Recess.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The hearing will resume.

Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Traen, you testified you were first employed by Packard in 1926, I believe?

A. I think that's when it was.

Q. As an assembler, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what were your duties in that capacity?

A. I was assembling—you mean, right on the job?

Q. Yes. You started in as assembler. What did you do as assembler, what duties and responsibilities were you given on that job?

A. I was assembling on a chassis line.

Q. What do you mean by chassis line?

A. That's the part of the line where they assemble the frame part of the automobile.

Q. That is what is known as the assembly line?

A. That is right.

419 Q. Are there a number of assembly lines in an automobile plant?

A. There is generally one; sometimes it is broken, but there is generally one.

Q. And you were working on just a part of that long line?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was your work on these chassis as they came along?

A. Well, I did various jobs on the assembly line.

Q. Tell us about those jobs.

A. I remember working on axles, axle assemblies.

Q. When you say you worked on axle assemblies, what did you do to the axles?

A. Assembling the rear axle assemblies; that's the axle assemblies to the rear axle housings.

Q. You did just one operation, or did you complete the assembly?

A. I did one assembly at a time. I may work on one operation today and on another operation tomorrow. I was moved from job to job to fill in where there was absentees.

Q. At the beginning, that was not true, was it? That was after you became handyman?

A. It started no more than two weeks after I started.

Q. When you speak about the chassis line, that 420 means there are a number of chassis moving down a line, is that the correct explanation of it?

A. Yes.

Q. And different workers do different jobs as these chassis move by them, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your one job had to do with the rear axle assembly?

A. That was one of the first jobs that I did.

Q. And other workers on the line would have other jobs, that is, they would attach this to the chassis or tighten that bolt and that sort of thing?

A. Yes.

Q. I believe you testified there were 240 people in that department, workers in that particular department.

A. At one time there were 240, yes.

Q. About what would be the area of the plant that this first department that you were in would cover?

A. The first department I was in was known as the FF Department.

Q. How much, or what was the floor space?

A. Oh, it consisted of at that time, I believe it consisted of one complete court building and part of another building.

Q. How much would this court building be?

A. I couldn't say in feet how much it would be:

421 it was quite long, though.

Q. Would you say it is over 100 feet long?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. 200 feet?

A. I would say about—speaking roughly, maybe 500 feet.

Q. All I want is your best recollection, Mr. Traen.

A. It might be 500 feet, I don't know just exactly.

Q. These 240 men would be strung out along this assembly line for this 500 feet?

A. Yes, plus the feeder lines.

Q. Those feeder lines would be coming in from the side to feed the main central lines?

A. Yes.

Q. And you had nothing to do with the feeder lines and were on the main chassis assembly line?

A. I may have worked one day on the feeder line and the next day on the main line. I was moved around from time to time.

Q. And that is when you became a handyman, when you were moved around in this manner?

A. No, I was doing that some time before I was actually given the handyman title.

Q. You were then promoted to be a straw boss, which you say is the same as an assistant foreman?

A. Yes, it carries the same duties.

422 Q. Can you give us about the time you received this promotion?

A. Well,—

Q. (Interposing) Just your best recollection, Mr. Traen.

A. I would say it was somewhere around twelve years ago, or something like that.

Q. About twelve years ago? That would be about 1932, then, you would say?

A. Yes.

Q. And that would be six years after you first were employed by Packard?

A. Possibly.

Q. After you became an assistant foreman or straw boss, as you call it, what did you do? What were your duties?

A. As a straw boss?

Q. Yes, as a straw boss.

A. As a straw boss, I was a direct assistant to the foreman in charge of the FF line.

Q. Were there more than one foreman at that time? Was there more than one foreman at that time?

A. There was one foreman.

Q. One foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Was there a general foreman in that particular department?

423 A. I do not believe there was a general foreman at that time.

Q. And you say you were under him as his assistant? What did you do as his assistant?

A. Well, I worked directly under his supervision, so to say, checking the quality and quantity of cars that were moved down the line.

Q. You were on the floor all the time, I presume, during your shift?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long were you in that position as assistant foreman?

A. I think it was in 1935 or 1936 that we moved to a new department.

Q. You were then made a foreman?

A. No, I wasn't. I was put in charge of the chassis department in the X Division at that time, but if I recollect right, I was still under the category of assistant foreman.

Q. Assistant foreman? As I get your testimony, you took directions from your foreman and he instructed you as to what you were to do?

A. Yes.

Q. And you carried out these directions?

A. Yes.

424 Q. In carrying out these directions, you, of course, instructed the men under you as to their work, as to how it should be done, and so forth?

A. Yes.

Q. You were just carrying down through the chain these directions that you received from higher up?

A. Yes.

Q. Then you went into the X Division and you were still an assistant foreman. You were later promoted to a foreman, were you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And about when was that?

A. I don't know, I can't remember the date.

Q. After you were made a foreman, did your duties change?

A. Yes.

Q. After that, did you have assistant foremen under you?

A. Yes.

Q. And you directed the work of these assistant foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. They, in turn, carried that work down to the workers?

A. Yes.

Q. When were you made general foreman?

A. I think it was in 1942.

Q. It was in 1942?

A. I think it was, I am not too sure about it.

425 Q. Was that when you took over your present job?

A. A while after I took over the present job.

Q. Well, we will say they stopped manufacturing cars around February, 1942. Would that be about the day?

A. No, it was a little later than that. I was up in this department where I am now a while before I got the general foremanship.

Q. Your present department is known as what?

A. In letters, you mean? The symbol, you mean?

Q. Yes, the symbol.

A. S. D. E.

Q. What work is carried on in that department?

A. Polishing and plating.

Q. Is that in a separate building of the plant?

A. Yes, it is known as Building 19, on the third floor.

Q. About how large is that building?

A. Well, I am not a very good judge in feet. Possibly 150, possibly, I don't know; I'm not too sure.

Q. 150 feet long and about how wide?

A. Oh, maybe 50 feet.

Q. And you have about 70 men directly under your supervision?

A. At present, yes.

Q. What do these men do in that department?

A. On the third floor, we have polishers.

426 Q. What do they polish?

A. They polish, oh, aircraft rocker arms, various aircraft castings, marine connecting rods and marine cker arms.

Q. When you say they polish these, what is the operation?

A. Well, a casting may come in very rough and it may require a very fine finish and we polish it down to that very fine finish.

Q. It is necessary to have that fine finish if that particular part is to operate properly?

A. It is necessary to have that fine finish before it will go through inspection.

Q. If it does not go through inspection, it would not operate properly if it did not have the fine finish, is that true?

A. That, I don't know.

Q. You think it would operate perfectly all right even though you did not polish it?

A. We don't attempt to question the Army Inspection on any of those parts. We do them as they say they want them done.

Q. So you do not know whether or not this particular operation of yours is of any particular importance?

A. I would say any operation is of importance, because if it wasn't of any importance, they wouldn't have it done.

427 Q. That would be true, would it not?

A. Yes.

Q. And, therefore, it must be true that these particular parts must be polished in a certain manner?

A. Yes.

Q. And you believe that to be true?

A. Yes.

Q. About how many of these people do this polishing?

A. At the present time, I would say about—there must be about 56.

Q. 56 out of the 70 people you supervise?

A. Yes.

Q. What do the other 24 do?

A. The other 14, you mean?

Q. Yes, I am sorry.

A. The other fourteen are platers.

Q. What do you mean by platers?

A. Plating various items, such as chromium plating and cadmium plating.

Q. What do you plate?

A. We chrome plate some tools.

Q. What is the reason for plating those tools?

A. In some cases where they send them down from the tool room and request a certain amount of platings put on any tool, why; if they request a thousandth 428 additional plating on it, we put the thousandth on it.

Q. When you speak of a tool, what do you have in mind?

A. It might be tools from certain machines. Of course, we don't know where they come from nor do we question where they come from.

Q. Just so we will know about this, what is a tool, in automotive parlance?

A. Tools can fit in lots of categories. Parts might come to us called a tool that might have come from a fixture somewhere which might be badly worn and which they want built up. That, of course, comes to us as a tool. We have no way of knowing where it comes from: it just comes to us as a tool order.

Q. What I have in mind, Mr. Traen, is this, are these tools used to machine parts of the engines, or what is the purpose of having this tool? Do you mean, cutting tools?

A. No, they are not cutting tools. They may be parts of fixtures and they come to us under a tool order for a chrome buildup.

Q. When you speak of fixture, do you mean a fixture used on an assembly line?

A. Well, I don't know. They come all torn down, just parts of the fixtures. We don't know where they come from.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Does this material come to you? Well, we will take these connecting rods and the 429 parts you polish. Does that come to you on an assembly line, or how does it reach you?

A. The material is brought to us by truck.

Q. And are a certain number of pieces brought to you each shift?

A. Yes.

Q. By the way, what shift do you have charge of?

A. The night shift.

Q. Is there another foreman on the other shift?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have some of these parts to polish, we will say, on your shift, is that true?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you did not secure the proper quantity, would that have any effect upon production?

A. If the proper quantity was not delivered to me?

Q. Yes. If you did not deliver the required production in any one day, would that have any effect upon any of the other departments in the Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In other words, there are a large number of departments, aren't there, Mr. Traen?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the Packard Company?

A. Sure.

430 Q. And those departments are all inter-related and if one falls down it might stop all the rest of them?

A. It would only affect that particular part they are working on.

Q. But if you did not get out enough crankshafts for these engines, it would stop the assembly line of engines, would it not?

A. Yes, because the assembly line would be affected by crankshafts.

Q. And that would reduce the production of engines by the Packard Motor Car Company, wouldn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. So that it is important that you see you get your allotted production out each day?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, it is also very important that your production be up to quality?

A. Yes.

Q. You have to get by an Army inspection, as I understand it?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that inspection in your department?

A. No. We have one inspection before it gets to the Army inspection.

Q. Who is in charge of that inspection?

431 A. There is what is known as a Packard inspection.

Q. So that when you complete the polishing, it goes to the Packard inspection and then to the Army inspection?

A. Yes.

Q. What happens if the particular part is not passed by the inspectors?

A. If it is rejected, it comes back to us.

Q. And then it has to be worked over again?

A. Yes.

Q. Of course, if you had a lot of rejections, that would mean that the work of your department would be slowed up, wouldn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And that again might affect the production of these engines that Packard manufactures?

A. Yes.

Q. And those engines are manufactured, are they not, for the Army and Navy?

A. Yes.

Q. Now then, as general foreman, Mr. Traen, you have to plan your work, do you not, so that you can get it out according to schedule?

A. The schedule is planned for us.

Q. Yes. You receive this schedule and that schedule sets forth what you are supposed to produce in your 432 department, doesn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you do to bring about that production?

A. When I receive the schedule, then I must study the time on the particular scheduled part to see how much manpower I am allowed to produce a certain amount of parts for so many hours.

Q. Well, you say that you study the time schedule. Do you mean the time in which—

A. (Interposing) The time study.

Q. I do not understand what you mean by "time study."

A. Do you want me to explain the time study?

Q. Yes.

A. A part being produced in a department is always time studied by the time study department. That is to say, the amount of parts each man can produce in a certain amount of time.

Q. And if you have so many parts to produce, then you would feel that you would have to have so many men to produce them?

A. That is right.

Q. After you have studied that time schedule, what do you do next?

A. After studying the time schedule, the time study schedule,—that in turn tells me how many men I 433 will need on the job to produce the required amount of production.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Then it is just a matter of arithmetic?

The Witness: Yes, that is what it is.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Are some of the men you have more efficient than others?

A. Yes.

Q. Could they produce more than the others might produce or do you just require each man to get out a certain number of parts?

A. Each man is required to produce the amount of parts.

Q. And that does not make any diffe ence whether some have greater ability than others and could produce more? They produce a certain amount during a shift?

A. That is right.

Q. If you find that you have not enough men to perform the job, what do you do?

A. Then I request from the superintendent for more help.

Q. And you make out some sort of form?

A. Yes, we have a request for additional help form that we make out.

Q. What is the usual reception given to that form when you send it in?

A. When we send the form to the superintendent we must explain why we need additional help, and if 434 he so approves and signs his name to it, it is forwarded to the division manager.

Q. And then the division manager supplies you with that additional help?

A. I know that he sends the requisition to the employment department and they supply the help.

Q. And after you then have the number of men you need in your department, what do you do about arranging them?

A. When the required number of help comes in a department, why, we turn them over to the assistant foreman and he in turn places the men on some particular job where the required parts are needed.

Q. Then each man does not perform an identical job?

A. No, not necessarily.

Q. There are different types of jobs in the department?

A. That is right.

Q. And you have to select the men that are capable of doing this particular job, do you not?

A. Well, we have no way of knowing when a new man comes in, what his ability is. We have to put him on a job and find out.

Q. We will get to that later, Mr. Traen. Now, what do you do if you find that these trucks are not coming through with the material on them that is to be polished?

A. Well, when the material does not come through,
435 I call the foreman in charge of the trucking department or stock department and relay a message to him.

Q. And you ask him to get it through to you to keep your production up?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, after you have completed your operation—rather, after your department has completed the operation on these parts, what do you do then?

A. After the operations are completed if they are passed through inspection and okayed, then I am all done with it.

Q. Do you then see that they are trucked to the next operation?

A. No, I don't. That is up to the foreman in charge of the trucking department.

Q. However, if it accumulated, you would call again to get them out of your way?

A. Certainly.

Q. In connection with these polishing jobs and also with the plating jobs, do you work according to a certain specification?

A. In some jobs—on some jobs we do.

Q. You are required to meet certain specifications?

A. Yes.

Q. On your polishing jobs, what would the specifications be? Would it have to have a mirror-like surface,
436 or what is the rule?

A. Well, the polishing job that we do now is more or less of a rough polishing job. The actual fine polishing has been done away with.

Q. That has been done away with at the present time?

A. To a large extent, it has.

Q. Did you originally have a fine polishing job on these parts?

A. Yes, sometime ago.

Q. And it was found not necessary? Was this change made to increase production?

A. It was found unnecessary, as I understand it. I do not know but I just got the instructions that we could cut that fine polishing out and that is what we do.

Q. Even so, it has to be polished down to a certain point, I take it?

A. Yes.

Q. And it is your responsibility to see that that job is done and properly done?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you found that a number of these parts were coming back to you because of failure to pass inspection, what would you do about it?

A. In all cases where we find rejected parts, we always—

437 I always consult with my assistant and try to inquire as to where the particular parts came from or who produced the particular parts. Then, in turn, we discuss the flaw with the man who produced the parts and try to point out to him where he was wrong.

Q. When you say you discussed that with your assistant, you mean the assistant foreman in your department?

A. Yes.

Q. Then you go to the man himself with the assistant to discuss the reason for the part having been rejected?

A. Yes.

Q. Of course, if a large number of parts are rejected, that increases the cost or might increase the cost materially, Mr. Traen?

A. Well, it would. I would have no way of knowing. I do not know just what the cost of that material is. I imagine it would increase the cost.

Q. And it would really be your duty, then, to see that there were just as few rejections as possible, would it not?

A. Yes.

Q. And your one purpose, rather, one of your purposes would be, of course, to keep the cost down?

A. My one purpose there is to do a good job, and if that is doing a good job, that is what I want to do.

Q. In doing a good job, you would, of course, keep 438 the cost down?

A. I would keep the scrap down as low as I can.

Q. Now, we will say you send for these extra men you may need some morning, and you look them over, you say, and then you put them to work and you find that a couple of those men cannot produce, they do not know anything about the job, what do you do?

A. If we have individuals who cannot meet production as to quality and quantity, there is an agreement with the rank and file organization that we can give them what they call a reasonable length of time for a tryout, and if these people fail to meet the requirements in that reasonable length of time, we refer them back to the employment office.

Q. And you ask to have them taken out of your department?

A. We request that, yes.

Q. During that training period, your assistants train these people?

A. The leaders in the department and the assistant foreman.

Q. And that assistant foreman does this job at your direction, I take it?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you ever give a hand on that sort of thing?

A. No, I don't have to do that.

Q. Now, in connection with this polishing and plat-
439 ing, I presume that you use certain tools or fixtures?

A. Yes, we use polishing wheels.

Q. Polishing tools?

A. Polishing wheels.

Q. Is that a tool with emery on it, or is it some other type of apparatus?

A. It is a tool with emery on it.

Q. And they hold the part to the emery wheel and that brings about the polishing?

A. That's right.

Q. It is necessary to see that these tools and fixtures are maintained in good working order, is it not?

A. Our emery wheels are shipped out daily to a room where the emery is put on and the wheels are put in good shape.

Q. And if any defective wheels should come in, of course, it would be up to you to see that they were not put on the machines and used, would it not?

A. If defective wheels are sent to us, the polisher, himself, will never put one on.

Q. What happens to that then?

A. He cleans the wheel off and sends it back up for remounting.

Q. Does he send that himself or is that called to your attention or your assistant's attention?

A. If it happens too often, it is called to our attention.

Q. What do you do then?

440 A. We, in turn, contact the foreman in charge of the room fixing the wheels and explain that such a condition does exist.

Q. In that connection, it is, of course, necessary, is it now, that these tools be properly used?

A. Yes.

Q. If they are not properly used, why, of course, you would wear them out too rapidly, particularly your emery wheels?

A. Yes.

Q. Would it be your duty or the duty of your assistant to check back to see that you did not run up the cost by using too much material?

A. Well, that's something, on these particular wheels having experienced polishers, we don't run up against that.

Q. That is, when you have experienced polishers, you have no trouble?

A. That's right, and I have experienced polishers at the present time.

Q. If you got a new man on the job, one of your duties would be to see that he did not destroy tools?

A. If a worker works in such a way as to destroy tools, why, he don't do a good job.

Q. You are interested, are you not, in keeping costs in your department down?

441 A. I am interested in turning out a good job.

Q. That did not answer my question. Are you not interested in keeping the cost of your department down?

A. Well, the cost of the department, of course, is something I very seldom see. The cost of any one item I very seldom see.

Q. That may be true, Mr. Traen, but you still have not answered my question. Do you or do you not have interest in keeping the cost of your department down as low as it can be efficiently kept down for the benefit of the Company and for the benefit of the taxpayers today?

A. Yes, as I said before, efficiency is one of the things, and efficiency, I imagine, comes into that.

Q. You believe your efficiency will keep these costs down?

A. I believe so.

Q. If it is a question of efficiency, efficiency against cost, you would go for efficiency first?

A. Well, I imagine the efficiency directly affects the cost.

Q. Now, I believe you testified that you considered it your responsibility and duty to Management to eliminate scrap, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Where, in your department, would you have scrap?

442 A. Well, I may have scrap parts in case an operator got a little careless and possibly ground a part down under size. I would have scrap then.

Q. You have to keep constantly putting calipers, or measuring apparatuses, on these parts to see that you do not cut down below the specifications?

A. The operators have specifications for their work.

Q. I suppose you could also have scrap in your plating department?

A. Yes, it is possible.

Q. Those plating materials are quite hard to get at the present time, are they not?

A. Yes, at times we find them hard to get.

Q. And so you operate efficiently, I presume, but you also see to it that you do not have too many men in your department, is that correct?

A. The man load is figured, as I said before, according to the time study, and we are allowed a certain amount of men to produce a certain number of parts.

Q. If you have more men than that for some particular reason, you would request a removal, would you?

A. We would request a removal, yes.

Q. Now, when these men are sent to you, we will say, we will say you requisition some men for the job, do you talk with them before you put them on the job?

443 A. Yes.

Q. And knowing the requirements of the job, you size up these men to see what sort of a job you think they would do?

A. I talk to them and try to inquire as to their past experience.

Q. You know what type of experience is necessary for the work in your department and the various jobs and it is your idea to select the right man for the right job, is it?

A. About the only inquiry we can make, as far as my department is concerned, if an employee comes in, I can inquire as to whether he had any experience in that particular line of work.

Q. If he has had no experience in that particular line of work, you conduct your inquiry as to what types of work he might have done, to see if he might fit into any other operation you have?

A. We find, as a general rule, when the employment department sends these people in as polishers, we find they have had some experience.

Q. But even so, I suppose some of the men that come in would work better on one type of job than on another type in your department?

A. That could be possible, but we don't know that 444 until we find it out.

Q. But when you do find it out, you exercise your discretion and judgment in moving them around, do you not?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, when these people come in—I believe you said you put them on the job—but are they given instruction on the job?

A. Yes.

Q. And I believe you used the word leaders, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Where do these leaders fit in, are they below the assistant foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. Are they directly responsible to him?

A. To the assistant foreman?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In connection with the instruction, is he the chief professor?

A. You mean the leader?

Q. Yes.

A. The leader does the instructing?

Q. Subject to the supervision of the assistant foreman?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what do you do, we will say, in the event you have a man who is constantly absent?

445

A. If a man is constantly absent, why, we take his record and send a query through to Labor Relations notifying them of this man's bad record and ask for a disposition on it.

Q. Do you ever recommend that these men be taken out of your department?

A. We have recommended it.

Q. Have you ever recommended a discharge in a case of that sort?

A. The recommendation goes directly to Labor Relations.

Q. But I mean, have you ever made such a recommendation?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And have your recommendations been carried out by Labor Relations?

A. Not always, by no means.

Q. Have some of them been carried out?

A. After they had an extended hearing.

Q. Now, you talk about extended hearings. Why are these hearings held, Mr. Traen?

A. Well, I imagine the hearings are held to see if the parties are guilty as charged.

Q. These hearings are held because they are required to be held under the UAW-CIO contract, are they not?

A. Yes, there is such a clause in there.

Q. Yes. You know that to be a fact, do you not?

446 A. Yes.

Q. And if the steward does not agree with the recommendation you make, a hearing can be held, is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. You have found, have you, that sometimes the Labor Relations Department does not agree with you?

A. Often.

Q. Are you of the opinion that you were one hundred per cent right in all those cases?

A. Well, I wouldn't say one hundred per cent right, but I certainly try to practice good judgment and when I make these recommendations, to my mind, there is no shadow of doubt.

Q. But you appreciate the fact that other people might put a different conception upon the facts in the case?

A. That is possible.

Q. And you do not believe that Labor Relations is disagreeing with you because they do not like you?

A. No, I don't know whether they like me or not; I don't ask them.

Q. I mean, that is not your feeling, that they disagree with you for that reason?

A. There may be a lot of reasons why they disagree, and I don't ask them why.

Q. They may have a perfectly good reason for 447 disagreeing with you, is that not correct?

A. That is possible too.

Q. Well, we will say a man comes in your department and he has been drinking, what do you do?

A. If a man has been drinking or if he comes in drunk?

Q. Let us say he comes in drunk.

A. If an individual comes in drunk, we ask the guards, the plant guards, to remove the individual.

Q. Do you make any report on that?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. But you could make a report, could you not?

A. I could make a report to my superior.

Q. You could accompany that report with a recommendation as to the discipline, could you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have, have you not?

A. Yes, I have.

448 Q. Well, let's take the case of workers in your department getting into a fight, what action do you take about that when that happens?

A. The workers get into a fight in the department? There is a defined penalty set for such violations.

Q. That is set by management, is it?

A. Yes.

Q. What is that penalty?

A. At the present time I think it is three days off—three days off and then there is another penalty of two days off or something like that.

Q. What do you do when you discover these men fighting after you have stopped them from fighting? Do you recommend any disciplinary action?

A. After that we do make a recommendation to the Labor Relations office.

Q. If the steward agrees with that recommendation is it necessary for a foreman to send it up to the Labor Relations office?

A. If the steward agrees with the recommendation the penalty goes into effect.

Q. And that is the end of the case?

A. Yes.

Q. That is also the situation in connection with these other disciplinary measures you might use, if the 449 steward agrees with them, and if it is a question of days off and that sort of thing, it automatically goes into effect, is that the fact?

A. Not always.

Q. You mean that there can be an appeal by the worker beyond the steward?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is also covered by the contract with the UAW?

A. Yes, I believe they appeal to a higher office in the Labor Relations office.

Q. So that the principal reason why your disciplinary measures are not carried out would be that the workers may have a right of appeal under their UAW contract?

A. They do have a right of appeal.

Q. And if it was not for that, however, these penalties of days off for fighting and that sort of thing, would be automatically placed in operation?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean if the steward agreed?

Mr. Dahling: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): If there was no contract covering it. The point I am trying to make is that Labor Relations are not holding up the foremen on disciplinary penalties involving days off. They go through au-

450 tomatically unless they are held up because of a union contract. Isn't that true?

A. Not always.

Q. What happens in those "not always" cases?

A. There are many times when requests are put in of that type to Labor Relations, and although you might attempt to hear the case, oftentimes it is put off as much as thirty days before you hear any more about it. In fact, you forget about the case before they are again called to your attention.

Q. It is put off by whom?

A. I don't know.

Q. Who are those cases between?

A. Labor Relations and the rank and file representatives of the Union.

Q. Of the Union?

A. Yes.

Q. What happens if you find people gambling in the department?

A. Once again there is a set penalty set by management for any individual caught gambling.

Q. What is that penalty?

A. I think it is three days off.

Q. And you automatically assess that penalty against the people found gambling, don't you?

451 A. We send a query through the personnel office.

Q. When you say query, what do you mean by that?

A. A request for a particular penalty being applied.

Q. Isn't it a fact that under the form you apply the penalty and make no request at all?

A. No, we must make a query, there must be a query.

Q. In other words, under the form for gambling you have to request that the penalty be applied?

A. As set, yes.

Q. You do not apply it yourself?

A. No, that is a set penalty.

Q. Now, in connection with grievance matters, which the workers might bring up, where do you, as general foreman, stand in that picture?

A. The grievances, I would say, not concerning Company policy, are generally brought to the foreman's attention.

Q. Now, you say "Company policy." What do you mean by "Company policy", Mr. Traen?

A. Well, such as hours worked, rates of pay or policies that might affect other departments than your own. That I understand is set by management.

Q. Those are set by management but you, as a matter of fact, do carry a lot of the policies of management, do you not?

A. Meaning what?

452 Q. Well, isn't it a policy of management; we will say, that men who are caught gambling be given three days off? Wouldn't that be a policy of management?

A. I do not know that you could call that a policy. I think it is an agreed fact between the rank and file officers and management.

Q. Well, it is part of your duty, is it not, to keep your department clean so that it will properly function?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you say that that is a policy of management or not, to keep the department clean?

A. Well, I do not know whether you would call it a policy or not. It is certainly for the good of the men in the department and your own good. It pays to keep your department clean.

Q. I want to know what you mean by "policy," Mr. Traen. It would be the policy of the Company, would it not, to make these engines for the government and see that all of those parts are properly machined and the parts you are working on are properly polished?

A. That again is not a policy, it is an absolute necessity.

Q. That is true.

A. Before they can sell that part.

Q. Do you differentiate between a rule and a policy,
453 Mr. Traen?

A. There might be some differentiation, yes.

Q. Wouldn't the rule ordinarily be established to carry out some policy?

A. Possibly, yes.

Q. So that in carrying out these rules, if you care to call them that, of management, you as a foreman are carrying out the policy of management, are you not?

A. We may carry it out as they set it down.

Q. You do not make the policies, you mean?

A. No, we follow the policies, to a certain extent.

Q. The policies of management, that is. It is a part of your duties to carry out that policy, is it not?

A. Yes, to follow the policies as they set it for us.

Q. You as a general foreman, can make recommendations to your manager or the higher ups in the line, can you not?

A. Regarding what?

Q. Regarding the improvement in the operation of your department, for instance?

A. Well, we can make recommendations for certain improvements, yes.

Q. And you could recommend that an operation be carried through in some manner other than that which it is being carried through and which in your opinion 454 would be more efficient, isn't that true?

A. No.

Q. You could not make such a recommendation?

A. No, that is generally taken care of by a department.

Q. I asked you if you could make such a recommendation?

A. I could make it but it does not necessarily mean it would be acted upon. That function is carried by another department.

Q. But you could make recommendations which in your opinion would increase the efficiency of your department?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever made any such recommendations?

A. Yes, from time to time.

Q. And some of those recommendations have been carried into effect, haven't they?

A. Not until after the department directly connected with that particular phase of the work had come down and discussed it with myself and the superintendent.

Q. After it was discussed by the superintendent and you and the department heads, some of them were placed in effect, were they not?

A. Once in a while, yes.

Q. Is there any question in your mind that with your long experience here that you have made some recommendations that were eventually carried into effect?

455 A. There have been some carried into effect.

Q. As a matter of fact, after this change has been made it becomes the policy of the Company to do the job in that way, doesn't it?

A. Well, I do not know where you connect policy with anything like that. I cannot understand that.

Q. At any rate, it becomes the manner of handling the operation of the Company after that time?

A. After the time—that is the way the operation is done.

Q. You, of course, by your recommendations, were responsible in changing them over from the way they were operating?

A. I just suggested it.

Q. You made these suggestions and your suggestions were carried out?

A. Carried out by other parties.

Q. That you say, however, is not, in your opinion, a change in the policy of the Company?

A. No, I do not think so. It is just a change in the way the work is going to be done or the way in which the operation is going to be followed at times.

Q. Mr. Traen, will you just list for us some of the things that you think come within the definition of policy?

In the third place, I think we are spending a good deal of time on what we might term "policies" for a minute. I can easily see why people might apply different definitions to it, although they are thinking about similar facts. For instance, it might be, in one sense, said to be the policy of the Company to keep the plant clean. It 463 might be the particular "policy" of the sweeper-upper to apply his broom east and west rather than north and south, or, in another sense, you might say it is his rule, practice or his custom. I should suppose, using the rather extreme example I just referred to, that we should not properly dignify that particular operation to describe a policy. But, personally, I do not think it makes much difference whether we call it policy or something else, so long as we agree on the primary facts.

I am wondering whether or not it pays to spend so much time on questions which involve adjectives, or questions which involve inferences to be drawn from evidence, if, to begin with, we can agree on the primary facts. I do not ask you now to indicate any agreement on what I have said; I merely throw it out to you gentlemen with the hope that some way might be found to shorten the rest of this hearing on matters concerning which I anticipate there may not be much dispute at all.

We will adjourn until nine-thirty tomorrow morning.

(Whereupon, at 4:35 o'clock p. m., Wednesday, December 20, 1944, the hearing in the above-entitled matter was adjourned to Thursday, December 21, 1944, at 9:30 o'clock a. m.)

464 Room 737 Federal Building,
Detroit, Michigan
Thursday, December 21, 1944.

Pursuant to adjournment, the above-entitled matter came on for hearing at 9:30 A. M.

Before: Samuel H. Jaffee, Trial Examiner.

466 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Gentlemen, the hearing is in order. Mr. Traen, will you take the stand.

PROSPER TRAEN

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Cross-Examination (Continued).

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Traen, you have testified that you are a general foreman?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I do not believe we went into your duties and responsibilities in that connection. I would like to go into that briefly this morning. You as a general foreman have charge of just one department, is that right?

A. S. D. E.

Q. And other general foremen have charge of more than one department?

A. They may have some that have charge of more than one.

Q. And you do not know of that situation, however?

A. No, I do not. I wouldn't know the departments, or anything like that.

Q. You have under you just one assistant foreman?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether other general foremen have under them and supervise more than one foreman 467 or assistant foreman?

A. They do.

Q. And in some cases they may have a number of general foremen and a number of assistant foremen, is that right?

A. I didn't get that.

Q. In some cases the general foreman may have under him a number of foremen and a number of assistant foremen under his supervision?

A. Yes.

Q. As a general foreman, of course, it is your responsi-

A. What I think comes under the definition of the policy?

456 Q. Yes. What you have in mind as coming within the definition of policy?

A. As I said before, I made the statement before what I thought policy was, such as fixing the rate of pay for employees, setting the hours of work or changing certain rules that affect more than your own department. That is the policy of management. For any rule put into effect that affects all the departments throughout the plant is a policy that is set down by management.

Q. And those rules would be principally, as I take it, fixing rates of pay and setting the hours of work. That would be it generally, and perhaps covering the entire operation of the Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any more specific rules in mind?

A. No, there may be more but I do not have any in mind right now.

Q. Do you, in connection with the operation of your department, encourage the workers to make suggestions as to the manner in which the department could be improved?

A. I do not have to do that because there is a plan in effect there under the "Work to Win Suggestion Program." That takes pretty good care of that situation.

Q. If one of your workers came up and had an idea

457 about improving the operation of your particular department, I presume you would talk to him about it?

A. If he came to me I would talk to him. I will talk to anyone that comes to me.

Q. If you thought it was a good idea you would pass it on up to the next level of supervision above you, wouldn't you?

A. Under the present plan you put it in the "Work to Win" suggestions.

Q. By the way, who would be the superior to you, the person you would report to?

A. Mr. Miller is the one I report to.

Q. What is the title of his position?

A. I understand he is assistant manager now. I am not so sure of that.

Q. When you say "assistant manager," assistant manager of what?

A. Assistant division manager.

Q. Your division is the F. F. Division?

A. It is the "S" Division now.

Q. And he is the assistant manager of that division?

A. Yes.

Q. Who would there be next above Mr. Miller?

A. The division manager, Mr. Winfield.

Q. Following that up the line who would be next above Mr. Winfield?

458 A. I understand Mr. Riefel.

Q. And Mr. Riefel has what position?

A. I understand he is manager over the Y and S Division.

Q. That would be the car and Marine division, would it not?

A. Yes.

Q. Then, if you know, who would be next in line above Mr. Riefel?

A. Why, I think it goes up to the vice-president from there.

Q. If you don't know, I will not continue to ask you about that.

A. It does go up to the vice-president from there.

Q. When these workers come to your department, I believe you stated that they all have been classified. What do you mean by that?

A. They come in under certain classifications.

Q. What classifications would they come in your department?

A. For instance, the polishers come under the classification of C. F. 102, in my department.

Q. What does that mean?

A. That is just a figure for that type of work. In 459 other words, that is the symbol they use for that type of work.

Q. Having that classification, they are paid a certain rate because of t) classification?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you use those people for anything else except polishers?

A. No.

Q. Is there another classification higher than that in your department?

A. No.

Q. Is there a classification lower than that in your department?

A. On that same type of work you are talking about?

Q. On any particular type of work.

A. I beg your pardon, I thought you meant in the polishing.

Q. You have reason to believe it that way, because of the way the question was stated. What I am getting at is that you have in your department people who have lower classifications than these polishers?

A. Yes.

Q. Polishers have a rather high classification, have they not?

A. Yes.

460 Q. What have you to do with the recommendation of changes in classifications?

A. I can recommend a change in classification. There is a regular form that such recommendations come on.

Q. Have you recommended such changes?

A. Yes.

Q. As a matter of fact, you consider it a part of your duty to make such recommendations, do you not?

A. Whenever the labor loads so require that we have to change down to a certain amount of people due to production reduction, in the force or production, then if these people must go down to a lower classification, why, it is of course up to us to put in the request.

Q. Yes, but how about recommending that they be given a higher classification?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever recommend that a worker be given a higher classification?

A. You can recommend higher classifications if the need is there for an individual in that particular job.

Q. And in connection with that recommendation you look over the workers in your department and exercise your best judgment and discretion as to which man should receive that recommendation, do you not?

461 A. No, I think you better talk it over with the steward if you want to live right with the people.

Q. Having that in mind, you do exercise your judgment and discretion in picking out the man which you think should be reclassified and have his classification raised, do you not?

A. No, you generally try to—they generally try to apply that to the older men in the department.

Q. In other words, you would recommend the upgrading of an older man, even though he was only half as efficient as a younger man, in your department?

A. You never know how efficient a man is going to be on a certain job unless you try him.

Q. In other words, if you are going to classify a man for a job in your department and are going to recommend a man for a job in your department, you have to have some idea of what he can do?

A. Yes.

462 Q. And does that give you some idea of what the man might do on another job?

A. Sometimes, yes.

Q. As a matter of fact, it is part of your job to be able to do that, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. That is what you are being paid for?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: May I make a motion that we adjourn at this time, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Before granting that motion, I would like to make two or three observations, if I may.

In the first place, I have the feeling that in a large part there may not be much dispute about the facts, although there may be considerable dispute about the inferences to be drawn from the facts.

In the second place, it seems to me it is possible, in particular instances, for you gentlemen to agree upon the primary facts.

bility to see that your particular department functions properly?

A. Yes.

Q. It would be the duties of any general foreman to see that his department or departments function properly?

A. Yes.

Q. Of course, as a general foreman you are responsible for the production of your department, are you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And other general foremen who may have several departments would be responsible for the production of their departments?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you advise with your superior—by the way, who is your superior? You testified yesterday but I have forgotten.

468

A. Mr. M[redacted].

Q. What is his position?

A. I understand he is the assistant division manager.

Q. And also in connection with your Labor Relations cedures?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And also in connection with your labor Relations questions in your particular department?

A. Yes.

Q. And that would be the duty generally of general foremen to advise with their superiors or superior in connection with those matters, would it not?

A. Yes.

Q. I believe you testified that as a general foreman you assist the assistant foreman who is under you in connection with his problems and advise with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that would have to do with the safety and cleanliness of the department and the general functioning of the department?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I assume also that that would be the duties and responsibilities generally of all general foremen in the Packard plants?

469 A. Yes, sir.

Q. If your assistant foreman decides that he needs more men for the operation of his plant, do you pass upon his requisition?

A. We discuss the need for them together.

Q. It is you who eventually decide, however, as to whether or not you do need more men?

A. If I need more men?

Q. In the final analysis, it is your decision, however. You advise with him and you make the decisions yourself, do you not?

A. Yes, I make the recommendation.

Q. Do you know what compensation is paid to the highest paid employee in your department?

Mr. Nelson: You mean under his supervision?

Mr. Dahling: Yes, I assume that would be under his supervision.

The Witness: Which would be the assistant foreman?

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Yes. Do you know his salary?

A. $1.46, I think it is, $1.46.

Q. What is the hourly rate of the highest paid worker in your department under your supervision?

A. $1.35.

Q. Mr. Traen, when you come on to your shift or when you start your shift, whatever you call it, do you 470 have instructions left by the general foreman for you, the foreman who preceded you?

A. Well, we may have instructions if we run the same part that he runs and if they have any trouble during the day he may leave word as to what trouble he has been having during the day.

Q. And possible suggestions as to corrections?

A. Possibly.

Q. And do you do the same thing at the end of your shift? Do you leave memoranda for him as to the problems that have arisen and might arise in his shift?

A. Yes.

Q. Of course, you as a general foreman, could recommend the promotion of your assistant foreman?

A. The promotions of assistant foreman must be discussed with my superior.

Q. But you could recommend his advancement if you felt he merited that?

A. Yes, I would have to discuss it with him, though.

Q. And your recommendation would have considerable bearing on the matter?

A. It might have.

Q. By the same token I presume you could request his discharge if you felt he was not efficient or warranted discharge?

471 A. I could request it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not know how much value a mere statement that a person could do something means. I suppose I could make the request also.

Mr. Dahling: I was going to follow that with another question, Mr. Examiner. I believe the witness testified his recommendations have been followed by the upper supervision.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Have you ever recommended a promotion of an assistant foreman?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. And your recommendations are considered by your superiors, are they?

A. In this particular case, it was.

Q. It was. Now, yesterday we were discussing your authority to discharge a worker, and I believe you stated that all you could do was recommend the discharge; is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, Mr. Traen, if you discharge a worker you first have to give twenty-four hours notice, do you not, under the Union contract, the CIO contract?

A. That is right.

Q. And you give that notice to the chief steward of the Union?

472 A. That is right.

Q. Now, if the chief steward of the Union does not object and asks for a hearing, is not that man automatically discharged?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. You mean that someone else could overrule your discharge; and who would overrule your discharge?

A. Labor Relations, upper Labor Relations; it has happened to me.

Q. Well, has it ever happened except in case there was a hearing which was asked for by the Union?

A. There is always a hearing.

Q. Well, if the Union did not object to the discharge of the man there would not be a hearing, would there?

A. You asked me if the discharge was agreed to by the steward, is that right?

Q. By the steward, yes. Then there would not be a hearing, would there?

A. Not necessarily. As I said, there has been hearings after the steward has agreed to it.

Q. Well, that is because the man has gone to the district steward of the Union and asked for a hearing, isn't that true, or to the plant committee of the Union?

A. Yes.

Q. But those hearings have been brought by the man
473 going to his Union, and not by management, isn't that correct?

A. I believe so, yes.

Q. So then, if you discharge a man and the Union does not ask for a hearing, that discharge goes through, does it not?

A. Yes, if the steward agrees to it and nobody asks for a hearing, it does go through.

Q. And you have had a number of cases where you have discharged employees where you have not had a hearing, haven't you?

A. No, I have not had any number of them.

Q. No number of them?

A. No.

Q. But you have had some?

A. I had a few of them.

Q. And you also have had cases where a hearing is requested by the Union and the hearing has been held?

A. That is right.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 2 for identification.)

Q. Mr. Traen, I show you a paper marked Company's Exhibit 2 for identification, and ask you what it is, if you know?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is that supposed to be Com-
474 pany's Exhibit 2?

Mr. Dahling: Yes, Company's Exhibit 2.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, that designation was previously used in connection with a paper called the Supervisor,—that would be No. 3.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 3 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): I show you paper marked Company's Exhibit 3 for identification, and ask you what it is?

A. This is a query form, a clearance form, clearance query form, sent you and signed by myself and agreed to by the steward.

Q. Now, when you say a query, that is just a designation or a term that is used in Packard, isn't it, for a report? Would you say that another term for it would be "Report"?

A. Well, it is a notice that is sent through to the designated people on that report that such action is required or asked for.

Q. Yes. And you say that you have signed this query or report. That is your signature?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: I will offer Exhibit 3 in evidence.

I have not had time to have photostatic copies made of some of these exhibits, and if admitted, I would therefore request permission to withdraw the original and 475 substitute photostats.

I will present the exhibit to counsel for the Petitioner for inspection.

Mr. Nelson: There is no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Proceed.

Mr. Karasick: May I see the document?

Mr. Dahling: Oh, I am sorry, I have not presented it to the attorney for the Board.

Mr. Karasick: There is no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received.

Mr. Dahling: Exhibit 3, Mr. Trial Examiner, is dated October 3, 1944, it is from P. Traen to Mr. C. E. Williams.

Q. And who is Mr. Williams, Mr. Traen?

A. He is in the employment department.

Mr. Dahling: It is very short, and I would like to read it into the record.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

Mr. Dahling: The query or report reads as follows (Reading):

"SDE-1547, Darrel B. Shelton is an habitual absentee. He was called into my office last week and warned regarding his attendance, at which time he was told that he would be given a twenty-four notice if he was absent in the future.

"On 10-2-44 he reported for work at 2 A. M. in a 476 very intoxicated condition, and, therefore, was sent home. The employee reported for work today and left his post without asking permission. As we cannot maintain efficiency with this type of employee, we are, therefore, waiving the customary twenty-four notice and clearing him from the SDE roll."

That is signed "P. Traen."

Q. And, Mr. Traen, there is another signature on Exhibit 3, after your signature. Can you identify that person?

A. Yes, that is William Bonkowski, the chief steward.

Q. So this is a case where a man was discharged by you and the chief steward agreed to the discharge, is that the case?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there was no hearing on this case, is that true?

A. No, sir.

Q. And the discharge went through automatically?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: Might it be stated in the record, Mr. Dahling, that you read only the body of the exhibit? There is no need to do it if you are going to offer it in evidence. There are other notations thereon.

Mr. Dahling: If you would like I will put them all in the record. It was just the body I have read. I 477 offered it and understood it has been received.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: May I have permission to withdraw the exhibit and substitute photostatic copies?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: Will you please mark this as Company's Exhibit 4 for identification?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 4 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Traen, I show you a paper marked Company's Exhibit 4 for identification and ask you what it is?

A. This is a query made out on the violation report from our plant guards. The violation report was a gambling charge. The gambling charge has a set penalty in the plant there. Here it is three days off. That, of course, we have to follow on our query and ask for that particular three days on that set penalty.

Q. As a matter of fact, you did not ask for it, you just gave him three days off, didn't you, Mr. Traen, according to that query?

A. On this query it appears Mr. Cussrow, our Labor Relations man, must have had a hearing on it before we could apply the three days.

Q. But at any rate if there was a hearing on it it would be because the Union had asked for that hearing?

478

A. Yes.

Q. Otherwise the three days would have followed automatically as given by you?

A. As set forth by the policy of gambling, that follows a gambling situation.

Q. By the way, your signature appears on Exhibit 4?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was prepared under your direction, I take it?

A. Yes.

Q. I notice that this one sentence, "This being your first offense you are, therefore, being penalized with three days off for this offense, December 4th, December 5th, and December 6th"—those are the dates which you designated as the penalty dates?

A. That is right.

Mr. Dahling: I offer Exhibit 4 in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: Have you shown who Mr. Cussrow is?

Mr. Dahling: The witness testified that Mr. Cussrow is from the Labor Relations Department of the Company, and further that there was a hearing on this case requested by the Union. I offer Exhibit 4 in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: No objection.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received.

479 (Thereupon the document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit No. 4 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): If there was a hearing held in connection with the penalty which was imposed as appears on Exhibit 4, it would appear therefore that at this hearing your directive was carried into effect?

A. Yes.

Q. They did not overrule you in this case?

A. No, not in that one.

Mr. Dahling: May I have this marked as Exhibit No. 5 for identification.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 5 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): I show you a paper marked Company's Exhibit No. 5 for identification, Mr. Traen, and ask what it is?

A. This is another violation for an employee who had whiskey on his person, which was a violation of the Company regulations. It was requested that he get one week off for this violation. I believe there is also a penalty on that in the regulations.

Q. And your signature appears at the bottom of this exhibit?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was prepared by you or under your direction?

480 A. It was prepared under the direction of the superintendent.

Q. This one was prepared under the direction of the superintendent?

A. Yes.

Q. But you signed it?

A. Yes.

Q. And it arose in your department?

A. Yes.

Q. And you say there is a recommendation as I read this "As this is a violation of the Company regulations, we are hereby notifying you that you are to be sent home for one week." Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. So this notice went to the man and he was laid off, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And you think there was a hearing on this?

A. There was no hearing on that case.

Q. You stated that this came through as a request from the superintendent?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was a direction to you to take action in this particular case?

A. Yes, the reason that came through the super-
481 intendent was because it was investigated by the plant guards. This individual who got the week off happened to be the chief steward.

Q. You mean the chief steward of the Union was guilty of this particular offense, Mr. Traen?

A. Yes.

Q. And you could not very well refer back to him for action by the Union?

A. It was referred back to him. You see his signature on there.

Q. And there was no hearing then?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Dahling: I offer Exhibit 5 in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: There are no objections on our part.

Mr. Karasick: No objections.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit No. 5 for identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, would you care to look at it?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: No, it is all right.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark that as Company's Exhibit 6 for identification?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 6 for identification.)

482 Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Traen, I show you a paper marked Company's Exhibit 6 for identification and ask you if your signature appears thereon and what it is.

A. This is a query asking the removal of a man who does not meet production requirements, and of course, affects the efficiency of the department; and the removal has been agreed on by the steward and by the head of the Labor Relations Department, at that time Mr. Watts; signed by myself.

Q. And you originated this query?

A. Yes. You have to originate those queries for the good of the department.

Q. And you say, however, that it is a request. Does that term appear anywhere on this exhibit?

A. It may not appear there, but nevertheless it is a request, signed by the personnel man on the bottom there that it has been okayed.

Q. Would that indicate that there had been a hearing?

A. It might indicate that.

Q. Well, was it necessary, if the Union did not object, that this should be approved unless you asked for the approval?

A. When Mr. Watts was there we did send all those queries down for his okay.

Q. But it was not necessary that you do that; there
483 was no company rule that required that?

A. We were required to do it at that time.

Q. Who told you to do that?

A. Our boss, our superior.

Q. Who was your superior?

A. Mr. Miller.

Q. Mr. Miller.

A. Yes.

Q. And when did he tell you to do that; what was the date, if you remember?

A. No, I don't remember the date.

Q. Is that rule still in effect?

A. No, there has been a change made in the Labor Relations.

Q. And to get this straight, that at the time Mr. Watts was there,—and this exhibit is dated, apparently it is dated June 29, 1944, or about that time; would you say that is correct?

A. It is kind of hard to see. That looks like 6-28-44. There is another notation on there. I don't know what that means.

Q. That would be in June of this year. Then in June of this year, according to your testimony, when you discharged a man, you referred it to Mr. Watts for his approval. Who was Mr. Watts?

484 A. He was a Labor Relations man on the night shift.

Q. And since that time, that procedure has been changed?

A. There have been changes in the Labor Relations, yes.

Q. And at the present time you do not refer these matters to Labor Relations if the steward approves?

A. If the steward approves,—there is a regular form that goes through Labor Relations, notifying them of the fact.

Q. But they take no action?

A. Not unless the action is asked for by the steward.

Q. And in this case, if the recommendation was needed in June of 1944, or the approval of Labor Relations, Mr. Watts actually approved, didn't he?

A. That is right.

Mr. Dahling: I offer Exhibit 6 in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: There is no objection.

Mr. Karasick: There is no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Received.

Mr. Dahling: Would you care to look at it, Mr. Trial Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: No, thank you.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 7 for identification.)

485 Q. I now show you a paper which has been marked Company's Exhibit 7 for identification, and ask you if you signed this paper, and what it is?

A. This is the same type of a gambling violation, only in another form, that you had just a few minutes ago.

Q. And you signed this?

A. Oh, yes,—signed by myself and signed by the chief steward.

Q. And you assessed the penalty for the gambling?

A. The penalty was assessed as per the regulations.

Q. And the worker was given three days off?

A. Yes.

Q. And your statement on the exhibit in that connection is this: "He is being given three days off for this offense, effective 2-22 to 24"

Mr. Nelson: There is no objection.

Mr. Karasick: There is no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 8 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) I show you, witness, paper marked Company's Exhibit 8 for identification, and ask you what that is?

A. This is a report from the guards, another violation of intoxication in the plant, and a recommendation that they be given a week off for this plant violation.

486 It appears that there must have been a hearing, according to this statement here that I see, by Mr. Youngblood, who was in the personnel office, and that the decision of a week off is changed and made into two days.

Q. Now, this query is one that was issued by you, Mr. Traen?

A. If I signed it, it was. My signature does not appear on there, although it is typed on.

Q. That is why I am asking you the question; I do not want you to accept it as your own, Mr. Traen, unless you can recognize it as having been prepared by you.

A. I believe, if I remember this case right, this happened on a Sunday night; I think it was a Sunday night that this happened on, that this violation was actually,—that the guards actually caught the gentlemen in this violation.

487 Q. But who would have typed your name on the query, Mr. Traen, don't you know?

A. The clerk could type my name on there. However, the E. T. behind my name designates the clerk. I don't know—I cannot place the letters designating who typed the query.

Q. Do you have sufficient knowledge of the incident to state that this query was prepared for you or under your direction?

A. The query was prepared by the clerk.

Q. And it was not prepared by you?

A. No.

Q. And you have no particular knowledge of the situation?

A. The only knowledge I have of the case in question is that it did happen on Sunday night. The violation was sent to us during the week and then, of course, the penalty was attempted to be assessed and as you notice there, it was changed by the personnel office.

Q. This would have been a form of query that would have been sent through on that type of offense?

A. Yes.

Q. In this case you say there was apparently a hearing and your recommendation was reduced from a week to two days?

A. That is right.

Q. In this query you state—or rather, it is stated, "for this plant violation, I recommend that he be given a 488 week off." The other forms we have here and the exhibits that have been admitted in evidence use different language. For instance, on Exhibit 4, the language is this: "This being your first offense, you are therefore being penalized with three days off for this offense." Why would there be a change in the language used in the two forms?

A. It often happens on who the particular clerk is who types it out. We may have a clerk who words a query different than others do although they might mean the same thing.

Q. It might be possible also that in certain cases you would merely recommend action to be taken.

A. We always recommend the action to be taken, regardless of what the query says.

Q. Well, Mr. Traen, in Exhibit Number 6, which has to do with a man named Joseph Whitehead, the query reads this way:

"This employee has not attempted to meet production requirements for several days and therefore, this is a 24-hour notice that he is to be removed from the S. D. E. roll."

You testified, I believe, that that is the one that was approved by Watts?

A. Yes.

Q. I believe you testified, Mr. Traen, however, that 489 at the present time if you send through a query discharging a man and the steward agrees, no one else is required to approve it.

A. Not unless the man takes it up to the higher official in his organization and then, of course, they have a hearing between the steward and myself and it goes through the regular procedure again.

Q. But again, that is because the Union asked for this hearing, isn't that true?

A. Right.

Q. If the Union did not ask for a hearing, the discharge goes through automatically?

A. Yes, it goes through the employment office and they clear the man out.

Q. Isn't that true with respect to any penalties which are assessed for gambling if there is no appeal by the Union, or rather, let me put it this way: If the steward approves, that kind of penalty is assessed automatically, isn't it?

A. Yes, there is a penalty—did you say for gambling?

Q. Yes, let us say for gambling.

A. There is a penalty for gambling of a regular three days off.

Q. You say it is a regular three days off? What if a man was caught gambling on two occasions? Is it still three days off?

490 A. I think the second offense is six days off.

Q. What if he was caught three times?

A. It may be a discharge. There is another item back there on the third time and I do not know whether another six days or a discharge is attached. I haven't the regulations here right now and I do not know just what it is. There are quite a few on there.

Q. In all of those cases—the one where you determined the fact of what happened and issued the query requesting a penalty, they go through automatically unless the Union objects and asks for a hearing?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just a minute.

The Witness: You recommend the penalty and then it goes through.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) You say you recommend it? Who do you recommend the penalty to?

A. You recommend that that individual—this card may be pulled from the clock alley, and refrain him from coming in or you recommend to the personnel office, notifying them of the fact that this individual is being penalized.

Q. What I am getting at is when you recommend something there usually is another person concerned, you recommend to someone?

A. Yes.

Q. Who do you recommend a discharge to after the 491 steward, or rather, when the steward has approved it and there is no Union objection?

A. Well—

Q. (Interposing) Do you mean by "recommend" merely sending the notice through?

A. Yes, you send the notice through the employment office and they take the necessary steps to remove the man from the roll and do the actual clearing out.

Q. And that is what you mean by recommend?

A. That is right.

Q. They do not pass on the merits of the case once the Union has not asked for a hearing?

A. No, they remove the employee.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark that as Company's Exhibit 9?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 9 for identification.)

Mr. Dahling: I believe I offered Company's Exhibit 8 for identification in evidence.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received.

Mr. Dahling: I am sorry, I do not wish to offer Exhibit 8, Mr. Traen did not sign that exhibit.

Mr. Nelson: I want it just the same. We will offer it if you do not. I would like to do it now while I am reminded of it.

492 Mr. Dahling: I have no objections. The only reason I did not offer it was because Mr. Traen was a little uncertain about the case and did not sign it.

Mr. Nelson: He knew the circumstances and we are agreeable to offer it if you will not do so.

Mr. Dahling: I am perfectly willing to offer it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit No. 8 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) I show you a paper, Mr. Traen, marked Company's Exhibit 9 for identification and ask you if this paper was signed by you and what it is.

A. This is the same type of violation I spoke about regarding the chief steward who had whiskey on his person, these two were together. (Indicating)

Q. This is what you would call a whiskey violation?

A. Whiskey on his person or whiskey while on Company property, there was a regulation on that.

Q. This was approved by the chief steward for the Union?

A. Yes.

Q. And therefore, it went into effect automatically?

A. Yes, it went into effect.

Mr. Nelson: This is exhibit 9?

Mr. Dahling: Yes.

Mr. Nelson: There is no objection.

492-A Mr. Karasick: I have no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit No. 9 for identification was received in evidence.)

493 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Traen, I do not know whether you noticed or not, but I will state that these exhibits that have been introduced running from Company's Exhibit 3 to Company's Exhibit 9, I believe, are all dated in 1944. They are typical, are they not, of the queries, as you call them, that are issued by you and other general foremen and foremen?

A. I do not know about the other general foremen.

Q. You have issued others of the same character from time to time?

A. From time to time I may have issued them.

Q. And these would be a good example of the various types issued by you?

A. Yes.

Q. And I presume you issued those over a period of years, have you not?

A. In one form or another, we might have over a period of years, since they were required.

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 10 for identification.)

Mr. Dahling: Did I offer Exhibit 9 in evidence? I am sorry, I have forgotten.

Mr. Nelson: I will agree that you did, and I said that there was no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is already in, gentlemen.

494 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Traen, in your testimony yesterday you said that it was one of your responsibilities and duties to request changes in classification. I show you paper marked Company Exhibit 10 for identification and ask you if that was signed by you, and what it is.

A. This is a request for change in classification from polisher to plater. The polisher's classification is known as C-102, and the plater's classification is known as CF-105; approved by the division manager and signed by myself, checked by the time study man, and agreed to by the individual or the employee in question.

Q. And this is the form that is used in case of a change in classification?

A. Yes.

Q. Or one of the forms?

A. That is one of the forms.

Q. And it was first signed by you, as I take it, then approved by the division manager?

A. That is right.

Q. And then it went through the time clock for the necessary adjustments of the record?

A. That is right.

Mr. Karasick: There is no objection.

Mr. Nelson: There is no objection.

495 Trial Examiner Jaffee: It may be received.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit No. 10 for identification was received in evidence.)

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 11 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Witness, I show you a paper marked Company Exhibit 11 for identification, and ask you if your signature appears thereon, and what it is.

A. This is a requisition for additional help on the classification C-105,—a requisition which is forwarded to the assistant division manager, who has his approval on it, and also the division manager, who has his approval on it, asking for two platers, signed, but that is not my signature.

Q. That is not your signature on there?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whose signature that is?

A. I don't know who that is.

Q. Well, does it happen sometimes in your department that your assistant might sign your name?

A. No.

Q. And you feel that this might be a forgery, then?

A. I don't know what it is. It is not my signature.

Q. This is dated September 20, 1944. Do you have any personal knowledge of having made a request of this character? I mean, I am not pressing you, witness.

496 A. No, I don't remember. There have been so many people move in and out of that department.

Q. Then I will ask you this: Is this the form which is used; which would be used by you—and I am referring to the document marked Company's Exhibit 11 for identification—is that the form which you would use in your department if you requested additional help?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean the actual blank itself?

Mr. Dahling: The blank itself.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Is this the blank?

A. That is the actual help requisition.

Mr. Dahling: Well, inasmuch as I am going to introduce these forms, I think that I will withdraw any further question with respect to this exhibit.

Mr. Nelson: I would like that exhibit in evidence. It will be perfectly satisfactory to us to have it, because we were going to offer the form, but this being the form in a particular case, I would prefer that it would be offered just as it is. That is an actual case from the Company's file, and I prefer that one to just a blank form.

Frankly, I want this one because it is, as we claim, made out by a clerk with his name on it,—no more than a clerical operation.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Traen, do you do any 497 manual labor in your department?

A. No, sir.

Q. You are not permitted to, are you?

A. No, sir.

Q. And that is the union rule?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the same applies to your assistant?

A. Well, the assistant foreman from time to time may get in and do—

Q. That is, give a hand?

A. Yes.

Q. But he is not supposed to under the union rules, is he, under your contract?

A. I don't know whether there is anything in the contract regarding any specific individual.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I suppose, Mr. Dahling, when you refer to "Union rule," you mean the provisions of the UAW contract.

Mr. Dahling: Yes, I am sorry, I should have been more explicit about that, Mr. Trial Examiner. We are so accustomed to referring to the Union rule as the contract, that we sometimes forget ourselves.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Then, in addition to this assistant foreman, what other help do you actually have in this department?

498 A. Well, I have leaders.

Q. You have leaders?

A. Yes.

Q. You spoke about a clerk. Where would this clerk fit into the picture?

A. Well, there is clerks in the division office, and also I have a clerk, a time clerk in my own office.

Q. And you have a time clerk in your office under your supervision, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And these clerks in the division office, do you use those to make out some of your queries?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they are available to you?

A. Yes.

Q. For that purpose?

A. Yes.

Q. Would it not be possible that you might request them to make out a query, and they might sign it in typewriter and send it through for you?

A. Before the query actually goes through, it has got to be signed by myself.

Q. And you would say that every query that ever went through was signed, every query that you originated was signed by yourself?

499 A. That I originated?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I would not say that.

Q. In other words, some of them might have gone through with a typewriter signature?

A. You never can tell about that.

Q. And might have been queries that you yourself originated, or requests for material or something of that sort, that would go through automatically on a typewritten signature placed on there by the clerk, to whom you had dictated your request, is that right?

A. It could be possible.

Q. Well, coming back to Company's Exhibit 11, as I understand, this exhibit has been offered and is now in evidence.

Mr. Dahling: Did you offer it, or am I supposed to offer it?

Mr. Nelson: If you do, I do not have to. If you do not, I will. It is your exhibit.

Mr. Dahling: I will offer Exhibit 11 in evidence, then.

Mr. Nelson: There is no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit No. 11 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Did you have any recollection that you were sent two men too many on September 500 20th, 1944—or let me put it this way: You were sent additional employees that you did not want on that date?

A. Why, I don't remember that, because there have been a lot of people moved, particularly in that department, in the last few months, on account of the classification changes and people stepping down from a higher classification to a lower, and there is so many people moving through there that it is hard to remember.

Q. Well, whose signature is that just opposite,—

A. (Interposing) That is the division manager's signature.

Q. And that is his actual signature?

A. That is Mr. Winfield's signature.

Q. And the signature above Mr. Winfield's on the exhibit, is whose signature?

A. Mr. Miller.

Q. And so they both actually signed this help requisition slip?

A. Yes, they have got to okay all of them before any of them can be effective.

Q. So in signing it, I presume it came to them in the regular course of business, did it not?

A. Yes, it is the regular course of business. As I said before, it is not effective until they sign it.

Q. And they assumed, apparently, that when it came 501 to them, it had originated in your department?

A. They assumed it, yes.

Q. And they approved a requisition from your department for two men?

A. Yes,—their names on that requisition would make it effective, whether mine was on there or not.

Q. Yes. Now, that being the case, the two men would have reported to your department, would they not?

A. If they signed it to be allowed to—and let the requisition go to the employment office, the men would report.

Q. Is there any reason to believe that this did not go through the employment office?

A. It looks like it has gone through.

Q. Well then, you received two men in your department pursuant to this help requisition?

A. Possibly, yes.

Q. And isn't it positive that you received them?

A. Well, as I said before, those two individuals who—I think there is names on there, I don't just remember right offhand, whether they came in—but ordinarily, whenever the division manager and the assistant division manager signs a requisition, if the help is available the employment office will send them through.

Q. So you would not deny that those two platers
502 came to your department in response to this help requisition?

A. No, I would not.

Q. And you have no recollection that on or about September 20th, 1944, you had too many men in your department?

A. No, I have no recollection of that.

Q. And if you had had too many men, wouldn't you have reported that fact?

A. If I had too many men I would report it to my division manager or assistant division manager.

Mr. Nelson: As far as we are concerned, we are willing to concede for the purpose of the record that those two men probably did come through, regardless of the witness' recollection of the incident.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark that as Company's Exhibit No. 12 for identification?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 12 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Witness, I show you a paper marked Company's Exhibit Number 12 for identification and ask you if your signature appears on this paper and what it is?

A. My signature does appear on it and this is a transfer of labor hours from the S. D. E. group to S. D. E. group number 1. It means that individuals or two individuals from group 2 worked in group 1 on that particular day and the labor hours were transferred from one 503 group to another to make the efficiency come out.

Q. And you arranged for that through the use of this form which you have signed?

A. That is right.

Mr. Dahling: I offer Exhibit 12 in evidence.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is that a matter of taking care of the bookkeeping?

The Witness: It is a matter of keeping the hours up to date. If the hours are charged in group 2—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) It is a bookkeeping situation?

The Witness: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Nelson: No objections.

Mr. Karasick: No objections.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit No. 12 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) This Exhibit 12 is marked "Transferred labor." You mean that labor is sometimes transferred from other departments to your department or that you transferred to another department?

A. No, I transferred those from one group to another group.

Q. You transferred these men from your group in your department to another group in your department?

504 A. For the day temporarily, I just placed them from one group to the next group.

Q. You thought you needed them there to get greater efficiency by moving the men around?

A. It was a case of filling in with absentees.

Q. To get your efficiency, you have to take care of absenteeism and shuffle your men around to keep up production even in the event of absenteeism?

A. That is right.

Q. All right.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark that as Company's Exhibit 13 for identification?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 13 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Traen, I show you Company's Exhibit 13 for identification and ask you if your signature appears thereon and what it is?

A. This is what is known as an "Employee's designation Pad." And in this particular case it notifies the guards at the gate that this employee is carrying personal property out through the gate.

Q. This paper, or this particular form notifies the guards that the party per letter is carrying out personal property but you could use the same type of form to permit some employees to go to another department, could you not?

505 A. I believe—may I see that, please? Is that one of the old ones? Yes, there is a place on here to permit an employee to go from one division to another, it says.

Q. And you say this is your signature on the exhibit?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: I offer Exhibit 13 in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: No objections.

Mr. Karasick: No objections.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit No. 13 for identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Nelson: I understand our consent to this exhibit was conditioned upon a recess at this time.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You are a little bit early. We will wait fifteen minutes more.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Traen, you say that you use this form to permit an employee to go from one division to another division? If someone applied for that permission and you felt that he had reason to go, you would fill out this form Exhibit 13 and give it to him and he could get into another division, using this form?

A. Not all of them. He cannot go in a restricted division.

Q. That is just what I am getting to. At this time it is quite important to see that only certain people get 506 to certain divisions, is it not? It isn't like it was in peacetime. Under your rules, there are quite a few restrictions about people going from different parts of the plant to other parts of the plant, aren't there?

A. That is right.

Q. You know, necessarily, of course, that you have to have in mind these rules and regulations and be certain of your man before you permit him too much freedom through the plant?

A. I do not have to have the rule in mind. The plant guards are all over the place and they will remind him quick enough of the rules if he tries to cross any particular place.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Dahling, do you mind specifying whether these rules are Company rules, Union rules, or Army and Navy rules?

Mr. Dahling: I do not care what kind of rules they are. In time of war you cannot allow free egress or entry to these departments. You have to get a company pass for the purpose and that is an important function on the part of a general foreman.

Mr. Nelson: It is my point to suggest whether it is a military rule, a rule of the Company or a rule of the Union. It is probably agreed on that they are necessary by everybody. I want to know who laid the rule, the Army,
507 Navy, or who did?

Mr. Dahling: Who laid down these rules which require passes to go between the various departments or divisions?

The Witness: I believe the Army and Navy have restricted areas that they do not allow anybody but the employees to go in.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark that as Company's Exhibit 14?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 14 for identification.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is nobody but employees of that particular division.

The Witness: That is right.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Witness, I show you a paper marked Company Exhibit Number 14 for identification and ask you if your signature appears thereon and what it is?

A. My signature is on here and this is a time reception report. This report is made out to notify people who work in the clock alley that certain individuals were absent that day or that they were late for that day and it also has a place in case of certain individuals working overtime for that day. It also remarks whether the individual is AWOL or AWL.

Q. What is the distinction?

A. Away with leave or away without leave.

508 Mr. Dahling: I offer Company's Exhibit 14 in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: There is no objection.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit No. 14 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) What is the purpose of making out this report? It shows whether they were absent without leave or with leave. Is that in connection with determining the amount of pay they are to receive?

A. No.

Q. Well, why do you make it out?

A. We make it out so that the clock station attendant can verify that these people were in the department for a certain amount of hours or not in the department for a certain amount of hours.

Q. You then make it out as a check against the clock card?

A. Yes, for bookkeeping uses.

Q. In other words, a man may stay in the department after working hours and check out later and his clock card may show his presence in the building for some time after his shift ended, would it not?

A. His clock card would show he rang out some time
509 later than the quitting time, is that what you mean?

Q. Yes, for that purpose this report is made as a check against the clock card, that is one of its purposes?

A. That may be one of them.

Q. Will you give us any other you have?

A. If an individual reports in late, we report it on that sheet and they also verify it.

Q. And if he reports in early or if he leaves early, I mean, it is reported here also?

A. If he leaves early, we report it as so many hours worked.

Q. It is a rather important report, as far as keeping down the cost to the Company is concerned, is it not?

A. I do not know how that would affect cost.

Q. Wouldn't the cost be affected if the man could clock out and was paid by the clock card and only worked less time than his clock card would show?

A. Yes, if they were allowed to do that.

Q. You say that you make this report if a person is tardy, the purpose of that is to see that he is docked for that particular time which he was tardy, is that not so?

A. If a person is tardy it shows on the clock card and we verify it.

Q. Then this is a verification of the clock card?

A. We verify that that individual did not report
510 in the department.

Q. Then, that is for the purpose of seeing that these people are not overpaid and paid for work they did not do?

A. They cannot get paid for what they do not have on the clock card.

Q. If the time reception report differed from the clock card, which would prevail?

A. If the time receipt report differs from the clock card, it is called to our attention for verification.

Q. So the purpose of this is to see that the man gets paid for the time he worked and does not get paid for the time he does not work, isn't that one way to say it?

A. The purpose of it is that the man should get paid for the same time he rang on the card, for the time he rang in until he rang out during the regular working hours. As I stated before, there is a place on there for overtime. If an individual works overtime we also marked it. It is recorded and they pay the man accordingly what he has on the clock card.

Q. What if someone rings his card in for him?

A. If someone rings his card in and he is absent?

Q. Yes.

A. Then, of course, we report him absent from the department.

Q. And that would appear on this report?

511 A. Yes, that appears on that report.

Mr. Dahling: I offer Exhibit 14 in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: I believe Exhibit 14 was offered in evidence and received. I had no objection to it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: If it has not already been received it is now received.

Mr. Nelson: I would like to ask the witness a question about Exhibit 14, if I may.

Mr. Dahling: I have no objection.

Mr. Nelson: As you understand Exhibit 14, it is a bookkeeping arrangement?

The Witness: That is right.

Mr. Nelson: As to Exhibit 13, it is agreed that I may ask just one question?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Mr. Nelson: Is it true that Exhibit 13 must be signed by the superintendent or division manager?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Nelson: And it is good only in his division?

The Witness: Is that on the help requisition?

Mr. Nelson: It is on the pass that must be signed by a superintendent or division manager and is good only in his area of the plant?

The Witness: That is right.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The employee designation
512 pad, Exhibit 13 is what you are referring to?

Mr. Nelson: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Traen, you have just told your counsel in answer to a question that these reports here are bookkeeping entries.

Mr. Nelson: That was Exhibit 14.

Mr. Dahling: That Exhibit 14 is a bookkeeping entry which you made out—you make out quite a few reports other than those I have shown you as examples here, do you not?

The Witness: We make out a daily efficiency report.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) And possibly other reports?

A. I think you have covered it pretty well; there may be others.

Q. You make out a report, do you not, if there is a request for a leave of absence?

A. A request for a leave of absence?

Q. Yes, must that be signed by you?

A. Yes.

Q. And the absence would not be permitted unless it was signed by you, would it?

A. Well, whether I allow it or not, the absences generally take effect.

Q. What do you mean, it takes effect?

A. It doesn't make any difference whether I make 513 it or not, if the individual decides to take off, he takes off, and that's that.

Q. You mean that during wartime they do anything they want in that connection?

A. If at the present time an individual wants time off, he just takes it off.

Q. You are speaking of workers in your department?

A. Yes.

Q. And they are not fearful of being penalized when they take time off without getting permission?

A. Apparently not, because when they want to take up to three days, they are not penalized—they can have three days off.

Q. That is permitted at any time, using their own discretion as to when they want to take it?

A. There isn't anything I can do about it.

Q. They do not ask you?

A. Not for three days.

Q. So that you might, in running your department, come in there and find half your department gone?

A. I never have.

Q. But it would be possible if that is the arrangement that they can take the time off without making request for it.

A. There are a lot of things possible but I never 514 found it that bad.

Q. Why do they take those liberties?

A. Well, I do not know why they take time off. There are various reasons why people take time off.

Q. These people who are taking the time off, were the workers, I believe you said?

A. Yes.

Q. And they are members of the UAW-CIO?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever disciplined or attempted to discipline these people for not coming to you and requesting permission in advance?

A. No.

Q. In other words, as far as your department is concerned, they can go any time they want to go?

A. Up to three days, as far as any department is concerned, if they want to go.

Q. Then, why do you use this form requesting leave of absences? The one I have in my hand is signed November 29, 1944 and that would be a leave of absence for over three days.

A. I cannot [illegible] it.

Mr. Dahling: I am sorry. I will show it to you. Will you mark that as Exhibit 15, please?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 15 for identification.)

515 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Witness, I show you Company's Exhibit 15 for identification and ask you if it is signed by you and what it is?

A. This is a request for a leave of absence for an employee who was apparently going out of the state on business and requested—the requested date was 11-9-44. The employee was to return on 11-27-44 and it is signed by myself and approved. There are two signatures on there that I cannot make out. The name of the individual is Mr. Ballinger. Mr. Ballinger asked for the leave of absence and it stands out very clearly in my mind, particularly because when this man reported back to work he was not allowed to come in, even though the request had been put in for a leave of absence. He was not allowed to report back in. He was held in the employment office. The employment office insisted that this man be cleared off. I had to forward the necessary card for clearance and in contacting my superior, he in turn attempted to get the individual back in. This man was not put back until the members of the personnel department went to the employment department and had the man brought back in.

Q. In other words, there was a misunderstanding in the personnel or employment department which resulted in this case?

A. It stands clearly in my mind because he was a leader of—

516 Q. Mr. Traen, you volunteered that testimony, did you not?

A. You asked me about that particular part.

Q. I did not ask you what happened subsequent to that time, did I? I did not ask you what happened when the man came back, did I?

A. I gave you the information.

Q. Yes, you volunteered that statement, didn't you, Mr. Traen?

A. You asked me with reference to that particular paper and I gave you that.

Q. Well, I believe the record will show that it was purely volunteered, and you did that for the purpose of throwing something into this case against the Company, did you not?

A. No, I gave you the facts.

Q. It was not a deliberate attempt on your part to try to show that the Company is doing things wrong?

A. No, I am giving you the facts of the particular case. The reason it stands out so clearly in my mind, as I said before, is because this man is a leader and I was very anxious to get him back to work.

Q. And what did you do when you heard about this incident in the personnel department?

A. In the personnel?

517 Q. Yes, when they would not let the man come back.

A. Oh, that came from the employment department.

Q. Or from the employment department?

A. Yes.

Q. You heard about it, did you?

A. Yes, they called me and I,—

Q. What did you do?

A. I contacted my superior.

Q. And you contacted him with the purpose of getting the man back to work, I suppose?

A. Certainly.

Q. In other words, you "went to bat" for the man, to get him back in?

A. I wanted him back, yes.

Q. And you got him back, didn't you?

A. After I went to the personnel office and had the personnel office man go down there to get him back.

Q. That is true, but you "went to bat" for this man, and eventually, true once you started, the man got back into the plant again?

A. Yes, he got back.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Why did you want him back?

The Witness: As I stated, he was a leader in the department, and I only have two, and I needed him bad.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: For what purpose?

518 The Witness: He is the man who instructs the employees as to how their work should be done, follows it very closely with the employees.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Trial Examiner, may we have our recess now? I think we are five minutes behind, aren't we?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, a five minute recess.

(A five minute recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Traen, you stated just before the recess that any worker could be absent for three days without asking for leave of absence. I believe that was your statement?

A. Yes.

Q. And when he came back he would be taken back into the department and put to work again?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And nothing would be done about it?

A. Not if he is only out three days.

Q. If he was over three days, what would happen?

A. If he is over three days, then there is a rule to the effect that on the fourth day you request his removal from the roll.

519 Q. And if a man should happen to be three days absent one week, three days absent in the next week, and that continued along, one day the next week, and that continued along for a period of time, what would you do about it?

A. On a chronic absentee, you might say, is that what you mean? He has lots of absence? If he has a sufficient amount of absence through a period of time, why, once again you request the removal of the individual from the department.

Q. Well, when you say "request," you send through one of these queries, do you not, either clearing him from the roll or getting rid of him?

A. Yes, you send the query through the personnel office notifying them that you want the individual removed from the roll because of his absenteeism.

Q. And as a matter of fact, Company Exhibit 3 is one of those queries in which you removed Darrel B. Shelton as an habitual absentee, isn't that true? I hand you Exhibit 3 for reference.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I suggest that it may not be fair to incorporate in the question the phrase, "You removed," in view of the witness' answer that he merely requests or makes recommendations.

Mr. Dahling: Well, I thought that we cleared that up, where he said that the recommendation merely 520 meant that he sent it through for recording.

I will develop that further on this exhibit, Mr. Trial Examiner.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Traen, you have in your hand Exhibit 3. Is that what you call a recommendation?

A. Yes, this is a recommendation that this individual be removed from the,—

Q. (Interposing) Now, to whom do you send that recommendation?

A. There is copies here.

Q. Yes, but now, what do the people who receive those copies do about that? Do they overrule you?

A. Yes, it has been done.

Q. But that is only done on a Union objection to the clearance, is it not?

A. Ordinarily it is, yes.

Q. When you say "ordinarily it is," didn't you testify at least once, and I think several times, that where the steward agreed with you and the man did not take it up further with his Union, the clearance went through automatically? Didn't you so testify?

A. I told you that when the steward agreed with these, that the removal was carried out, yes.

Q. Then they carry out the removal simply by clearing it from the rolls, isn't that true?

521 A. They remove the individual from the rolls, yes.

Q. There is no further hearing in the matter at all?

A. Not unless the man asks for it.

Q. And the man asks for it through the Union?

A. That is right.

Q. So you are not recommending the removal, you are removing him unless the Union objects, isn't that true?

A. I don't remove the man.

Q. Well, you mean you do not go through the mechanics of striking his name from the roll, is that what you mean?

A. That is right, the employment department removes his name from the roll.

Q. But that is merely clerical work on their part, again, isn't it?

A. I don't know what they do. I have never been in there.

Q. But they do not come back to you and say, "No, we won't remove this man unless there is a hearing"?

A. I am trying to recall some cases now. No, personally, I have not had anything like that happen, although I have heard of several of them.

Mr. Dahling: I move to strike that out as not responsive to the question.

Mr. Nelson: I submit that it is responsive.

Mr. Dahling: No, it is not.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It may not be,—

522 Mr. Dahling: And furthermore, it is hearsay evidence.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It may not be directly responsive. However, it bears on the subject sufficiently closely that I think it ought to stay.

So far as it being hearsay is concerned, while it may be hearsay, it is of a nature which is clearly material, I think it is sufficiently relevant and has sufficient cogency that it should stand.

The Witness: Mr. Trial Examiner, the individual can be brought up to whom it has happened.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Traen, will you give us the date and the name of the individuals in this case that you say you have heard about?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the name?

A. I could not give you the exact date.

Q. Approximately?

A. But I can tell you this: That in the last, I would say the last three weeks, a certain Mr. Sumner in S. D. E. department asked for the removal of individuals from his department because he had too many men, and the following day they were all replaced, regardless of whether he liked it or not, they were sent back, and they were sent back by the employment department.

Q. And they remained in his department from then on?

523 A. Since then, of course, he has had a large turnover of people, due to cutback in production, and there has been quite a few people removed, and he is right now in the process of removing.

Q. Were those discharges, or were they simply a case where he thought he had too many men?

A. They were a case where the people had not met the requirement, quality, quantity of production and he asked for the removal, and sent them to the employment department, and I remember distinctly him telling me that the following day when he reported for work, each individual that he had asked to have removed was reported right back in his department.

Q. Now, what were the names of those individuals, if you know them?

A. No, I don't know the names of the individuals. I could get them for you.

Q. You say that is within a period of three weeks?

A. I think it was within the last three weeks or so, yes.

Q. And do you know the name of the person in the employment department who handled this matter?

A. No, I don't. I could possibly get it, but I don't know it offhand.

Q. Now, that is the one case you are telling us about. Let us have all the facts and details in the other case that you are referring to. Your testimony indicated that there was more than one.

524

A. I can cite you a case of my own that comes to memory just now.

Q. This is one case that you had?

A. Yes.

Q. And that covers a period of how many years?

A. This is a recent case that comes to my memory.

Q. A recent case?

A. Yes.

Q. And will you give us the particulars and the name of the employee involved, the department, and the time of occurrence of the event?

A. Yes, in this particular case it was also a drinking violation, pretty well connected with the two which you have offered as evidence today.

Q. And those two,—the discipline was applied?

A. They were connected, yes. They were pretty well connected together. The removal was requested of this individual, not only through me, but through the assistant division manager, and agreed on through the first step in the grievance procedure.

Q. When you say agreed on in the first step in the grievance procedure, what do you mean?

525 A. Of the UAW-CIO grievance procedure with the men.

Q. You mean it was agreed to by the steward, the chief steward?

A. Yes, by the Labor Relations also; and much to my surprise, the following day the individual was back on the job again.

Q. Do you know whether there was a hearing held?

A. There was.

Q. There was a hearing?

A. There was.

Q. And that was a case where they did not follow your recommendation?

A. The total sum of the hearing, as I understand, of the day before,—of course, I was not present, I don't know, I am giving you this as it was handed to me—

Q. (Interposing). When you say "hearing," that was a hearing between the Union, the CIO and Management?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was as a result of that hearing that your so-called recommendation was overruled?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, that is not the case of their overruling you when there is no hearing, is it, Mr. Traen?

A. No, in this particular case, as I said before, the violation was agreed to by the steward, of course. Also,

526 as I said before, investigated by the Labor Relations Office, and they, too, recommended that this individual be removed from the roll.

Q. Yes, but you did state that someone higher up in the Union then brought about a hearing?

A. That is right, the following day.

Q. The following day?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, it was not Management that brought about the hearing, it was the Union that brought about the hearing under the Union contract procedure, wasn't it?

A. Well, it certainly was Management who agreed to put the individual back.

Q. Well, that is true, but that was the result of a hearing in which Management and the Union's parties present did not agree with you, wasn't it?

A. They did not agree with me?

Q. They did not agree with you.

A. That is right, they did not agree with me.

Q. They did not agree with you, that is right. Now, had the Union not requested this particular hearing, would your discipline have gone through?

A. Well, it might have gone through unless the individual would have appealed to higher Management.

Q. Well, as a matter of fact, you are talking about 527 incidents now, you have given us this one incident. Give us one where they appealed to higher Management and you were overruled.

A. I have not got any of my own where they appealed to—

Q. (Interposing) And so we get down to this exhibit 3 again, where the discipline was discharge, you signed the query, it was approved by the chief steward, and the man was discharged. And that is the usual procedure unless there is a Union hearing, isn't it?

A. That is right.

528 Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Now, you did not like it when you were overruled in the case of this man you talked about who was given a hearing and your disciplinary action was reversed, did you?

A. It didn't make much difference whether I liked it or not.

Q. You felt you were right and that the man should have been discharged?

A. As I stated before, in all cases, before a recommendation of that type is made, as far as I am concerned, I try to be fair. I want to be fair and I try to investigate it thoroughly before I make any recommendation.

Q. And you use your best judgment in those cases?

A. To the best of my ability.

Q. And you exercise your discretion in those cases?

A. Absolutely.

Q. As a matter of fact, you do that in all of these cases involving discipline, do you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And you make what you consider a complete investigation, do you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You go into the man's background?

A. As far as the employee is concerned in the department?

529 Q. And there might be certain cases in the exercising of that judgment you would think, "Well, I won't recommend that man for discipline, there are reasons why I feel it shouldn't be done," is that right?

A. All violations reported by the plant guards, of course,—that is what you have reference to?

Q. I am referring to discipline which you yourself impose because of something which you have observed and which comes to you through your assistant foreman and not through the plant guard.

A. Any violation that is reported to me is acted on according to the set regulations.

Q. Yes, but as to the question of you yourself disciplining a man where it is not reported directly to you but you have knowledge of the fact, do you at times feel that under certain circumstances there should be no discipline and, therefore, you exercise your judgment in reprimanding the man?

A. Yes. If there is any doubt I feel I have a right to exercise my judgment, especially if there is a doubt whether the penalty should be imposed or the man is guilty or not. I feel I have a right to exercise my judgment.

Q. Do you do that?

A. I certainly do.

Q. You do exercise your judgment?

A. Yes.

530 Q. However, when you have exercised that judgment and the Union asks for a hearing and the hearing follows as in this one case, the policy at the hearing disagreed with your judgment, did it not?

A. Yes, apparently so because somebody disagreed.

Q. You did not like that very well, did you?

A. As I said before, it didn't make any difference whether I liked it or not.

Q. Tell me, Mr. Traen, if the foremen were given collective bargaining, would that change that particular situation?

A. No, it would not.

Q. Do you think you would be able to make your discipline stick any better?

A. They would stay just the same as they do now.

Q. And you do not feel then that if management overruled you that under your particular agreement you could then overrule management?

A. No, sir.

Q. You gave us some hourly rate classifications—I think you testified as to the highest hourly-rated employee paid a worker in your department?

A. Yes.

Q. You have different classifications in your department, do you not?

531 A. I have two classifications.

Q. What are those classifications?

A. CF-105 and CF-102.

Q. CF-105, is that your top classification?

A. CF-102 is the polishers.

Q. What is the hourly rate of the polishers in that classification?

A. That is $1.35.

Q. In your other classifications—I forgot the number, what is the hourly rate?

A. $1.20, I think.

Q. Now, when you testified that the highest paid man in your department received—what was it, $1.35 or something like that?

A. That is the highest rate employee, the polishers, $1.35.

Q. What would be the proportion of polishers in your department out of the seventy men? How many would be polishers?

A. I think I told you yesterday I thought it was fifty-four. There are fourteen platers and the rest are polishers.

Q. What is the rate of the platers?

A. $1.20.

Q. $1.20?

532 A. Yes, sir.

Q. I get an indication from your testimony that I hope I do not characterize it unfairly, that you feel that you have a rather limited authority with respect to the things that you do and you fail in having the final word in these matters, is that one of your complaints?

A. I have no complaint in that category.

Q. Is that your feeling?

A. I follow my job as I am told to do. I do everything they tell me to do and I do it.

Q. Do you feel you are too restricted and not given enough authority?

A. No, that is strictly up to management what they want me to do and what they give me to do and I do it.

Q. In your department is there anyone who has any authority representing management other than you?

A. In my department?

Q. In your department?

A. I am the general foreman of the department, if that is what you mean.

Q. Do you carry out the directions that come to you from management?

A. That is right.

Q. And you exercise your judgment and discretion in carrying them out?

533 A. That is right.

Q. You feel that that is your duty and responsibility?

A. Absolutely.

Q. And you feel that you have sufficient authority given you to carry out these various directions that you receive?

A. According to this stuff you brought out today, that is the extent that I can carry it out.

Q. That is the extent that you can carry it out?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you feel the clerk that you talked about could do the job as well as you do it?

A. I do not know whether the clerk has the ability to handle my job or not. Perhaps he has.

Q. Do you know the clerk?

A. Yes.

Q. You use the clerk in your business, do you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have some idea of the capability of the man, whoever the person may be?

A. On the clerical end of it, yes.

Q. He is good at the clerical job buf you do not think that he could run your job, do you?

A. I do not know, because I never tried it out.

Q. How much does that clerk receive, do you know?

534 A. I think it is $1.01.

Q. Your average pay is $500.00 a month, isn't it, Mr. Traen?

A. Somewhere in the neighborhood there, Mr. Dahling, I could not give you the exact figure.

Q. Why do you suppose you are paid more than your clerk?

A. Because of the type of work that I do.

Q. In other words, why are you paid more than the workers in your department?

A. For the same reason.

Q. And you say that the type of work you do is the reason—does that include the responsibility that you assume?

A. Well, do you care for me to define it a little? Possibly I can put it this way: An operator working on one job—all he has to know is that one job, it is expected of a foreman to know all the jobs.

Q. And direct the men as to how to do the jobs and as to the quality and quantity?

A. Yes.

Q. And to exercise your discretion in your department—in managing your department to see that that is the result?

A. To manage the department to the best of my ability and to get the efficiency out, that is the thing.

535 Q. And to follow the directions of the management, that you receive?

A. Yes.

Q. And to make recommendations or changes you think would better the efficiency?

A. Yes.

Q. All those things result in your being paid this $500.00 a month or being paid more money than the other people in your department?

A. That is right.

Q. I believe you attended the Packard School for Foremen, did you not, Mr. Traen?

A. Yes.

Q. How many sessions of that school did you attend?

A. I attended several sessions, I couldn't say how many.

Q. Over what period of time?

A. I remember attending some of the sessions when Mr. Sours was an instructor.

Q. How long ago was that?

A. I believe that was probably in 1943. I think it was in that time.

Q. Was that the first time you attended the Packard School?

A. No, I think there was one earlier, in 1941, I believe. I am not sure about it. I remember one where 536 Mr. Packard was the instructor at that time.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. who?

The Witness: Mr. Packard.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Were there various subjects discussed at this school?

A. Yes.

Q. As a matter of fact, the contract of the CIO was discussed and gone over, wasn't it?

A. Not until the last two sessions, I believe, the last session I attended the contract was gone over.

Q. How long ago was that?

A. Last week.

Q. And you had never seen the CIO contract before that time?

A. Oh, yes, I have seen it.

Q. You had a copy of it?

A. Yes.

Q. And a copy was given to you?

A. Yes.

Q. And you read the contract?

A. Yes.

Q. And you felt that that was a part of your duty as foreman to know about the provisions of the contract?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was particularly true because of the 537 grievance machinery set up in the contract?

A. Yes.

Q. And this school that you talked about is just for foremen, isn't it?

A. I do not know whether the assistant foremen attended now or not.

Q. I am using the word foremen in the broader sense.

A. You mean all classifications of foremen?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Has the school been going on since prior to 1939?

A. Yes. It might have been going on since then.

Q. And the foremen attended the school on the Company time, did they not?

A. Yes.

Q. And it is more or less of a discussion type of instruction, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. In connection with the school, do they take up subjects as "What it takes to be a foreman"? Do you recall that having been discussed?

A. Yes.

Q. And also the principles of general policy of the Company in connection with this business?

A. I do not know that they discussed very many 538 policies in the sessions that I was in.

Q. Did they discuss fundamentals in a business?

A. They might have at one time or another. There were several discussions: Each week the subject was changed.

Q. That is right. You attended that from time to time, the school, I mean, and you were designated to attend, were you not?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, you received notice as to the school and you received the schedule so you knew when you were to attend?

A. Yes.

Q. How long were the classes?

A. Well, they would run I would say from five to twenty-five or thirty.

Q. In other words, they were relatively small classes?

A. Yes.

Q. Did they discuss at these meetings getting along better with people?

A. Yes.

Q. And safety and accident protection?

A. Yes.

Q. And war materials of the automotive industry?

A. They might have.

Q. You do not remember?

539 A. No, there were a lot of them.

Q. There were a lot of subjects discussed?

A. Yes, a lot of subjects.

Q. Did they go into the question of taxation and income taxes and public welfare?

A. I member the taxation part and the income tax.

Q. I believe you testified that they also discussed management in business?

A. That I don't know. If I testified to that I don't know about it.

Q. I am sorry. How about a discussion of waste? Did you have some period for, or devoted to a discussion of waste?

A. Scrap?

Q. Scrap and waste and how to prevent it?

A. Yes.

Q. And discussions with respect to personal improvement of the foremen?

A. Yes, I believe they had a psychologist in there who talked to us.

Q. Did they at one session discuss generally the organization of the plant with you?

A. The line organization?

Q. Well, just the general organization of the Packard Company itself, its divisions and departments and so on?

540 A. Yes, they did.

Q. So that you would have some knowledge, some over-all knowledge of the whole picture?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you have a session in connection with how to delegate authority and deputize other people to act for you?

A. No, unless that was carried on with the foreman's improvement situation, that I might have been in there.

Q. You did have a subject along that line?

A. Along the line of better foremen or something like that.

Q. Along the line of how to give orders and have the orders carried out and how to develop leadership among other men?

A. How to approach people, yes.

Q. And how to get along with your employees?

A. Yes.

Q. And they stressed considerably, didn't they, the relationship between the foreman and the worker?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In other words, how to win friends and influence people?

Mr. Dahling: I don't know whether they used that as a textbook or not.

541 The Witness: It was along that line, though.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): They also discussed discipline, did they not, at one of these discussions in the school?

A. Yes, we had at one session—we had the Labor Relations man to come in—in fact, it was for two sessions just lately.

Q. The Labor Relations man would come in more or less be the leader? Wouldn't the class be conducted on a more or less conference method?

A. The classes were conducted by a thesis. The Labor Relations man was in there to explain certain functions of the organization and labor relations.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And to answer questions?

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): And you asked questions and got into discussions between yourself and the group on these problems?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you have one session considering the subject of morale?

A. Yes, I believe we did.

Q. And also considerable time was spent in discussing what it takes to make a foreman? Isn't that true?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have—

542 A. (Interposing): Something along that line to make a better foreman, or something like that.

Q. Then they also considered, did they not, at the school, the question of promotions and transfers?

A. On demotions and transfers.

Q. And also promotions?

A. Yes.

Q. And also on work classifications and rates of pay?

A. I don't know whether there was such discussion on classifications or not.

Q. You don't remember very much on that?

A. There were so many classifications, I do not know.

Q. And there was some discussion as to the rates of pay?

A. From time to time rates of pay would be bound to crop up in any discussion.

Q. And there was discussion with respect to Labor Relations?

A. Yes.

Q. And I suppose that there were quite a few discussions in that connection, were there not?

A. Definitely.

Q. Were you also given instructions or did you also have conferences in connection with how to handle a new man that came into your department?

A. Yes.

543 Q. And your approach that might be used to build him into your organization?

A. Yes.

Q. And also discussions upon departmental cleanliness and the results of cleanliness?

A. Yes.

Q. And also with regard to employee investigation and identification?

A. Yes.

Q. And you also discussed the selecting and training of additional supervisors, did you not?

A. We might have. I suppose we did. There were a lot of topics that we discussed.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: By the way, did you attend all the classes?

The Witness: No, I did not attend all of them.

Mr. Dahling: That is why I am trying to find out just what classes the witness did attend and whether he remembers the subjects that were discussed.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Did you attend a class in connection with safety promotion?

A. Yes, I had the safety promotion man in several classes and we talked about safety.

Q. Did you attend a session on the need for planning and how to plan?

544 A. I guess I did.

Q. You recall that, do you?

A. I think I did.

Q. And you had one session on promotion from within and training, did you not?

A. I am only guessing at some of these, I don't remember them all. They go pretty far back.

Q. You have been attending this school for quite a period of time, haven't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, as a matter of fact, you do feel it is part of your duty to train employees for the purpose of being promoted into supervision, do you not?

A. Training employees?

Q. Yes.

A. It is part of my duty to train employees to do a better job at all times.

Q. And you are training them to take over supervisory jobs?

A. Many of them do.

Q. And you may recommend that they be given a job in supervision?

A. I may recommend, but it doesn't mean that it will be acted upon.

Q. You have already testified that they have been 545 acted upon favorably?

A. Once.

Q. How many times have you recommended and it has not been acted upon favorably?

A. I couldn't say. Eighteen years is a lot of years.

Q. Mr. Traen, in order not to waste too much time here I am going to show you a list of subjects, beginning with the special series for the summer of 1941, and ask you to read off the sessions that you attended. Perhaps it might be better if you read it over and tell me those you did not attend.

A. I am sorry, I cannot go through here and tell you those.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean you cannot tell on the basis of the way the list is prepared, or what?

The Witness: Yes. You see, the wording might mean a certain subject that might have been taken up, although I say this—I didn't miss a lot of sessions but I did miss an occasional one, that is all.

Q. If the record would show that during the special series of the summer of 1941 there was discussed the training plan for supervisors and the application and understanding of the plan, the timing of the job, records required, advancement and upgrading, teaching procedures to be followed by foremen, would you say that you 546 attended most of those or all of those?

A. Most of them I attended. As I said before, I did not miss too many, but I might have missed a few. I tried to make them all when I could.

Q. When you missed them didn't you try to make them up by going with another session?

A. There were some that I missed that I was able to make up in other sessions.

Q. And you attended practically all of the hearings?

A. The largest part.

Q. From 1941 up to date the conferences covered the question of overtime, grievances—do you remember being present at that time?

A. Possibly.

Q. You have no clear recollection?

A. I have no clear recollection.

Q. You did at times, during the course of this study, go into the question of grievances?

A. Yes.

Q. Labor policies, government control of manpower, plant protection, the federal income tax, selective service, replacement schedule, safety and clean-up, manpower control, employment of women, a morale building program, the Packard Induction School, and the current tax payment act, do you recall those?

547 A. Yes, I remember a large majority of them.

Q. And you attended a large majority of those?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Please, Mr. Dahling, do not go too much on the tax aspect.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Yes. Following that in July of 1943 there were meetings with respect to the relations with employees training to meet Company problems, safety committee and planning, departmental problems, the answers for some departmental problems, plant efficiency, material control, inspection, tools and tool grinding, plant engineering, processing and lay-out, plant loafing and on the job training, foremen's responsibilities and authorities, plant guards and discipline, job relations training, quality control, army and navy inspection, do you recall attending most of those sessions?

A. Yes.

Q. And the school continued through 1944 and is still continuing, isn't it?

A. Yes, there was a lapse in there some time now but it is now in effect again.

Q. And you are receiving your notices as to when you are supposed to appear?

A. The last notice was every two weeks, I think.

Q. Every two weeks?

548 A. Yes.

Q. In 1944, do you remember attending classes where these subjects were discussed, understanding problem employees, handling problem employees, the quality and technique of leadership, selecting and upgrading employees, the foreman's attitude towards his job, handling grievances, the foreman and the shop steward, developing job satisfaction, increasing the personal efficiency of the foreman, maintaining a two-way channel of communication between top management and foremen and the psychological aspect of delegating authority and responsibility. Would you say that you attended those sessions?

A. I would say the majority of them I attended.

Q. Would you say that you could have attended them?

A. Well there were times there when the session was set for a certain hour and at those times I was so busy I forgot to go. That is all.

Q. That is realized. Your Company attempts to make arrangements for you to attend the same class with another session, do they not?

A. That is right.

Q. You receive a schedule showing when you can pick that up when you want to do so?

A. You do not receive a schedule, you are supposed to know that.

549 Q. But the full opportunity is given to you to attend all of these classes?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have been rather religiously attending?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you think it is a good thing?

A. It is all right.

Q. I presume that the purpose and idea is to give you a broader picture and help you do your job better?

A. That is right.

Q. Mr. Traen, you testified that you worked in the coal mines in Illinois?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you a member of the Mine Workers Union, is that the name?

A. Yes.

Q. How long were you a member of that Union?

A. For nine years.

Q. Did you ever hold any official position with the Union?

A. No.

Q. Were there any strikes while you were a member?

A. Yes.

Q. One or more than one?

A. There may have been more than that.

550 Q. And your recollection is you say, that there was probably more than one during that nine-year period?

A. Yes.

Q. As a member of the Union you went out on strike with the other members of the Union, I suppose?

A. Yes.

Q. Picket lines were established?

A. They had no picket line there.

Q. You mean they did not need picket lines when they struck, everybody struck?

A. That is right.

Q. Of course then there would be no need for anyone running a picket line, would there?

A. No.

Q. How long did this one strike last that you say you remembered?

A. Yes. I remember one that lasted six months.

Q. And there were possibly other strikes also?

A. There could have been other strikes.

Q. Do you remember any of duration that long?

A. No, that was the longest one.

Q. Mr. Traen, in the official report of the proceedings for yesterday, I am referring to page 291, the following question was asked by Mr. Donovan of Mr. Keys (reading):

551 "Mr. Donovan: What obligations in general does a member assume when he becomes a member of the Foreman's Association of America?

"A. What obligations to the Association?

"Q. Yes.

"A. He pays his dues, attends his meetings, lives up to the Constitution and he should believe in the principles of unionism and fight for it."

Would you answer that question in the same manner that Mr. Keys answered it?

A. Yes.

Q. And you believe that every Union member should believe in the principles of unionism and fight for them?

A. Yes.

Q. What are those principles you have in mind?

A. Some of the principles were quoted and jotted down at the beginning there.

Q. Well, one of the principles is the seniority, would you say?

A. Seniority?

Q. Yes, is that a principle of unionism?

A. Yes, a man should be able to protect his seniority.

Q. All for one and one for all, isn't that the usual statement that is made with respect to unions?

A. Yes.

552 Q. Your principles and objectives of unionism, right down the line, are about the same as, we will say, in the CIO and the AF of L?

A. Good unionism, yes.

Q. You say that is good unionism?

A. That is what I go for, good unionism.

Q. Those principles, whether they are properly carried out or not, are demonstrated in the various contracts and arrangements and objectives of these workers unions, are they not?

A. I suppose so, I don't have much to do with the contracts of other unions.

Q. Now, I presume also that anyone who believes in the principles of good unionism would be willing to go out and fight for them, as Mr. Keys said?

A. Yes.

Q. And one of the principles would be, would it not, Loyalty to the members of the Union?

A. Loyalty to one another, yes.

Q. Loyalty to one another? As a matter of fact, Mr.

Traen, the Constitution of the Foreman's Association of America on the cover sheet has the seal—I believe this is Exhibit 1, your Constitution?

Mr. Karasick: There are several constitutions.

Mr. Dahling: This is the 1941 Constitution.

Mr. Nelson: That is Exhibit No. 4.

553 Mr. Karasick: Petitioner's Exhibit No. 4.

Mr. Dahling: I am told that this pamphlet I have in my hand entitled, "Constitution of the Foreman's Association of America" is Petitioner's Exhibit No. 4. Now, that has on it a seal, has it not?

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): And on each side of the seal—on one side of the seal is the word "Leadership" and on the other side is "Fidelity," isn't there?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that the seal of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. That's the seal, there (indicating).

Mr. Nelson: More properly, it is the emblem.

Mr. Dahling: I think emblem is much better.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Is this the emblem of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. Yes, that is it.

Q. Now, this word "Fidelity," I suppose, means among other things, loyalty, does it not?

A. Yes.

Q. And faithfulness?

A. I suppose so.

Q. And a concern for obligations?

A. Concern for interest of others, I think.

554 Q. When you say "interest of others," of course you are referring to the members of the Union who are with you in the Foreman's Association of America?

A. Yes.

Q. And your loyalty, of course, when you refer to that—you are referring to loyalty to the members of your particular Association?

A. That is right.

Q. Mr. Traen, your Union, the Foreman's Association of America, is designated as an independent union. What do you mean by "independent"?

A. We mean not affiliated with any other organization.

Q. In other words, you have just the Foreman's Association of America and it is not affiliated with any other union?

A. That is right.

Q. And it is, however,—its chapters are a part of the Association itself?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you say, however, that the union, it is part of the labor movement?

A. Part of the labor movement?

Q. Yes, that is using the term labor in a broad sense?

A. Yes, it is a labor movement just like any other labor movement.

555 Q. Are you in favor of having the Union independent?

A. Very much so.

Q. Why do you think it should be independent?

A. Because we believe we can service our members better by being independent.

Q. Is that the only reason that you have?

A. That is the only reason I can think of right now.

Q. Do you think that it would be proper, in your opinion, for the Foreman's Association of America to take in the labor rank and file employees?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Why do you think that that would not be right?

A. They have a labor organization of their own.

Q. Let's say that they did not have a labor organization of their own, would you think that the Foreman's Association of America should permit them to take a membership in your Union?

A. Would I think so?

Q. Yes, I would like to have your opinion?

A. Only my opinion?

Q. Yes, your opinion?

A. My opinion is only one. As far as the Foreman's Association of America goes, things like that are decided far above me. I am only the president of Chapter No. 5.

Q. Yes, that is why I want your opinion.

556 A. And you asked me whether they should belong?

Q. Whether in your opinion the workers should be permitted to join your union?

A. No, I do not think they should?

Q. Why don't you think they should?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: This is all on the assumption that they have not a union of their own?

Mr. Dahling: Yes, if they haven't a union of their own.

The Witness: Well, the job is different than theirs, as far as that goes, there is a little difference in the category there.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Their jobs are not comparable to your jobs, are they?

A. No.

Q. And their duties and responsibilities are not comparable, are they?

A. No.

Q. Do you think that people who have the right to fire or recommend the firing or disciplining of workers should be in the same union with workers?

A. No.

Q. You do not?

A. No.

Q. In other words, it would not make for good

557 unionism if you included in one union people who had power to fire or recommend the firing, disciplining or changing of classifications of other members of the same union?

A. I do not know whether it would make good unionism or not. I have never seen it practiced or heard of being practiced. I wouldn't be able to answer it.

Q. What do you think about it?

A. I don't know, as I stated before.

Q. Do you think that would be proper?

A. I do not know whether it would be or not.

Q. You are the president of this Union and you say it is an independent union, haven't you any opinion as to the type of members you should have in your union?

A. Yes, we have definite opinions.

Q. Have you any opinions?

A. Our Constitution tells us that.

Q. That was the Constitution that was adopted for a purpose?

A. For that purpose, yes.

Q. And it includes only so-called supervisory employees?

A. That is right.

Q. I am asking you your opinion as to whether or not there should be included in a union people who have the right to recommend the firing or disciplining of others in the same union?

558 A. People who have the right?

Q. Yes.

A. To fire?

Q. Yes.

A. And hire?

Q. Yes, or to recommend it?

A. Or to recommend it?

Q. Yes.

A. People who recommend it, such as foremen?

Q. Yes, should they be grouped in the same union with people over whom they can exercise this power and authority?

A. No, I do not think they should be.

Q. Now, Mr. Traen, you were president of the Packard Local at the time of the strike in May, 1944, weren't you, or was it 1943—I am sorry, May of 1944?

A. The Packard Chapter?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you call that strike?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was there a meeting at which it was voted that the strike should be called?

A. Yes, there was a secret ballot.

Q. There was a secret ballot taken?

559 A. Yes.

Q. And the men voted to strike and you issued the strike order?

A. I didn't have to issue it.

Q. There was no proceeding under your chapter by-laws or constitution that required that?

A. After the ballot was counted that was all we needed.

Q. Did you take that matter up with your national organization?

A. I called their attention to it after the gentlemen walked out.

Q. You didn't have their approval at the time?

A. No.

Q. Did you attempt to stop it?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were unsuccessful?

A. Very much so.

Q. What attempt did you make to stop the strike?

A. My attempt to stop the strike was prior to the vote. In fact, it was my intention to even stop the vote. I was flatly told that if I continued the way I was I was going to be recalled immediately.

Q. In a case of that sort it would be the majority that ruled and they could recall you if they did not like what you did?

560 A. Yes.

Q. And that would go to any action your chapter might take? The majority would control?

A. Yes.

Q. And the majority in this case voted to strike, even though you did not want a strike?

A. Yes.

Q. And you had to go along with the majority?

A. Yes.

Q. And being a good Union man, you, of course, went along with them in a case of that sort?

A. Yes.

Q. How long did that strike last?

A. I believe it was a week or ten days—it was fifteen or—no, it was thirteen days, I believe it was.

Q. The plant was eventually closed down, was it not?

A. Yes.

Q. Closed down for lack of supervision?

A. Yes.

Q. And that resulted, of course, in a loss of production of Rolls Royce engines for airplanes and Marine engines for the PTs, didn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you as president of your chapter, give the notice required under the War Disputes Act as amended?

561 A. No.

Q. Did you give notice under the Michigan Labor Act requiring the giving of such notice?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever take any disciplinary action against anyone for this strike?

A. No.

Q. You felt that if the majority wanted to strike why that was their privilege and they could vote your chapter into a strike?

A. Yes.

Q. Was it a mere coincidence, Mr. Traen, that there were a number of other strikes in Detroit plants at the same time as the Packard strike?

A. Was it a coincidence?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know how the other strikes happened.

Q. I am referring to strikes of foremen?

A. That is what I understood.

Q. There were other strikes of foremen at that time in Detroit, were there not?

A. Yes.

Q. What other companies had strikes, if you can recall?

A. Hudson, Briggs, Murray, and there was the aeronautical Company and I think there were some more.

562 Q. And those strikes all occurred approximately the same time?

A. I would say within a week, or something like that.

Q. What company struck first, do you recall?

A. I believe it was Briggs.

Q. Well, was that called to the attention of your meeting when you held your strike vote?

A. No.

Q. And you did not know that Briggs had gone out at that time?

A. We knew, but that did not have anything to do with it.

Q. Did you know that Briggs had gone out at the time you called your strike meeting?

A. At the time of the vote, I believe we knew they were out.

Q. And you did not talk to any representatives of the Briggs Union?

A. No, not at that time.

Q. Did they send any communication to you?

A. No.

Q. And your strike had nothing to do then, I take it, with the Briggs strike?

A. No.

Q. And did you have any communication with any of the other foremen union officials or members that struck 563 at the other plants you named?

A. Prior to the time we went out?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Mr. Donovan: I am sorry I over-stayed my time. May we adjourn at this time?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well, we will recess until 2:15 o'clock.

(Thereupon, a recess was taken until 2:15 o'clock P. M.)

564 After Recess.

(Whereupon the hearing was resumed, pursuant to the recess, at 2:15 o'clock p. m.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You may proceed, gentlemen.

PROSPER TRAEN

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Cross-Examination (Continued).

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Traen, before the noon recess we were going into the matter of the foremen's strike at Packard's in May of this year. During that strike, did the foremen picket the Packard plants?

A. There was no picket line.

Q. When you say there was no picket line, you mean there were no pickets marching up and down?

A. That is right.

Q. And that is what you call a picket line?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have men stationed at the various gates?

A. There were members at the gates. I did not have them there.

Q. There were men at the gates?

A. Committeemen, yes.

Q. They were foremen?

A. Yes.

565 — Q. Packard foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. Were there foremen of any of the other plants there?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you inspect these foremen stationed at the gates from time to time?

A. No, I rode around the plant, if that is what you mean?

Q. You rode around the plant?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that once or twice or were you there every day?

A. I wasn't there every day.

Q. And the strike lasted about how many days?

A. About thirteen days, I understand.

Q. How many days were you at or around the plant during that period?

A. Maybe six days, or something like that. I am not so sure about that.

Q. Did you ride around the plant each one of those six days?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you notice that there were foremen stationed at the gates?

A. Yes.

Q. And so far as you know, they were there every day during the strike, were they not?

566 A. I wasn't there every day and I couldn't say.

Q. Did you have reports come to you that these men were there?

A. I have had reports that they were there.

Q. Did you request these men to leave?

A. Did I request them?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I never requested them to leave.

Q. During the time of the strike, did you have various meetings?

A. Yes.

Q. Each day?

A. Yes.

Q. Did the officers of the Union have a certain place where they met and could be found at all times?

A. Yes.

Q. Where was that located?

A. On Harper.

Q. On Harper?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you rent a place there?

A. Yes.

Q. And is that an office building or a store?

A. It is a hall.

Q. What was the address of the hall?

567 A. I don't remember. It is the place above Mr. Lapinski's flower shop.

Q. Where is that? Harper and what cross street?

A. Harper and Frontenac.

Q. And you had someone in those offices at all times?

A. Yes.

Q. And did reports come to you as to the progress of the strike?

A. When I was in there, there was some reports that came in.

Q. If you were not there, were some other officers of the Union there?

A. Yes.

Q. And you established that as a more or less strike headquarters, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. How many men, foremen, were on those gates at the Packard—on each gate?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, when you drove by, how many did you see on those six days?

A. Oh, they vary, I would say from let's say two up to a dozen or fifteen.

Q. What did the foremen do, these foremen at the gates?

A. They stood in groups and talked together.

568 Q. What if another foreman came up and evidenced intentions of going through the gate? What did they do.

A. I didn't see them do anything.

Q. Do you know whether they talked with that man?

A. They might have.

Q. And they might have tried to persuade him from going in?

A. That might be possible.

Q. That might be possible, even though he might have wanted to go in and work?

A. They might have talked to him, yes.

Q. What you mean by that is that they didn't slug him or knock him down?

A. Yes.

Q. They tried to persuade him not to go in because you were on strike?

A. Yes.

Q. After the strike started at Packard, did any of the officials of your Packard Chapter have any meetings with any of the officials or members of any of the other chapters of the Foreman's Association of America, which were on strike at that time, at other plants in Detroit?

A. After the beginning of the strike, after, I would say about—I don't know, but possibly a week later, or something like that.

569 Q. What was discussed at those meetings?

A. Foremen's problems.

Q. Did you get into any discussion of any solidarity—that is to say, that you would not go back at the Packard until they went back at the other plants?

A. No.

Q. And you had no discussion of that sort at all?

A. We were discussing foremen's problems.

Q. And you say you did not discuss those problems; did you discuss having foremen from the other plants help you out in picketing the gates at the Packard Plant?

A. No, we had no foremen from other plants, to my knowledge.

Q. From any other plants?

A. No, not to my knowledge.

Q. Did Packard foremen help out any of the foremen at any of the other plants?

A. No, not to my knowledge.

Q. And you remained on strike, I believe you said, 13 or 14 days?

A. I believe it was 13 days.

Q. Why was the strike called off?

A. It was called off at the request of our national officers.

Q. Your national office sent word to all of the 570 chapters to stop the strike?

A. Yes, we had word from Washington.

Q. And you hadn't asked them in the first place whether you should strike or not, had you?

A. No.

Q. Why did you then follow their request to abandon the strike?

A. Well, the membership deemed it that way and that is the way they voted.

Q. Then they voted again?

A. They voted again.

Q. And the majority voted to abandon the strike?

A. That is right.

Q. And the majority would rule in that case?

A. That is right.

Q. Were you the only foreman who was opposed to the strike?

A. No.

Q. There were a number of others?

A. There were others.

Q. About how many, would you say?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, would it be two?

A. Possibly two, and it might be more than that also.

Q. Would it be 100?

571 A. I couldn't say.

Mr. Donovan: I do not hear the witness very well. Mr. Examiner, would you ask him to speak a trifle louder?

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) It would be somewhere, then, between two and one hundred?

A. I didn't say that.

Q. Would it be between two and one hundred?

A. I wouldn't know. I had occasion to talk to a few of them.

Q. The few that you talked to were opposed to the strike?

A. Some were and some were not.

Q. But those who were opposed to the strike were bound by the majority rule and had to stay out?

A. That is something we did not discuss with those who were opposed to it.

Q. You didn't discuss that?

A. No.

Q. But they did stay out?

A. Yes.

Q. Even though they felt they should be in there working?

A. I don't know how they felt.

Q. Did any of them tell you that inasmuch as Packard was engaged in producing engines for the United States Army and Navy and war production, that you 572 should go back in and go to work?

A. No.

Q. Even though they felt that way, if they were members of the Union, they were bound to stay off because of the majority rule?

A. Yes, they did stay out.

Q. Which is the greater, Mr. Traen, your loyalty to your Union or to the Company?

Mr. Nelson: I object to that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Objection sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Before the Foreman's Association of America was organized, were there any strikes at the Packard Plant by foremen?

A. Foremen's strike?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't remember of any foremen's strike in a body. There might have been some individuals who walked out.

Q. Do you say there might have been? Do you know?

A. Yes.

Q. Did they walk out because they were associated with the Union?

A. They walked out because they were dissatisfied.

Q. When did that happen?

A. I have seen it happen numerous times during an eighteen year period.

573 Q. How many times?

Mr. Nelson: I assume that you are referring to more than one foreman?

Mr. Dahling: I was going to ask that as soon as I found out how many times these foremen walked out.

Mr. Nelson: Individual foremen walked out an indefinite number of times.

Mr. Dahling: He said that there were foremen walking out and he indicated strikes of foremen.

Mr. Nelson: Bodies of foremen? Bodies of foremen quitting and walking out? More than one?

The Witness: He asked about individual foremen.

Mr. Nelson: Individual foremen.

Mr. Dahling: I will ask a further question. We will forget that last one.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) I asked you if the foremen at the Packard's had ever gone on strike prior to the organization of the Packard Chapter of the Foreman's Union or Association, I believe you call it?

A. As a body, you mean?

Q. As a body.

A. No.

Q. And I believe that you then testified that at various times or at some time various groups of foremen had walked out, is that correct?

574 A. I never said groups. I said individuals.

Q. Individuals had walked out?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was because of dissatisfaction on the part of those individuals?

A. Yes.

Q. And there had never been any group strike action by foremen?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. And you have been there 18 years?

A. Yes.

Q. 18 years with no group action?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. And these individuals that walked out, did they just walk out and quit their jobs?

A. Yes, they had no alternative.

Q. But they had the privilege to quit?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I believe that is all.

Mr. Nelson: May I have your exhibit, Mr. Dahling?

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Traen, I suppose any working men at the Packard Company can hand in a recommendation or suggestion, can't he?

A. Yes.

575 Q. Well, for that matter, anybody could from the outside if they were so motivated?

A. Yes.

Q. So far as the recommendation or the suggestion is concerned, is the power to act upon them in the hands of any foreman of any rank, that you know of?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Traen, I notice that Exhibit 3, the clearance slip—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) Petitioner's or Company's Exhibit 3?

Mr. Nelson: Company's Exhibit 3, yes, sir. These are Company Exhibits I am referring to now.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson, continuing) —three, six, twenty-four-hour notice, twelve, the transferred labor slip, fourteen, the time exception report, they are all on onionskin. You observe that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Presumably, those are not the originals, is that the fact?

A. No, sir, they are not.

Q. Tell us now whether the originals of those onionskins contain signatures additional to those that appear on the onionskin?

A. They do.

576 Q. And what signatures?

A. The signature of the assistant manager.

Q. I observe that Company's Exhibits 4, 5—sorry, I withdraw that. Company's Exhibits 15, 8 and 10, I believe—there is a hole in it—and, no, just Company's Exhibits 15, 8 and 10 are carbon copies. While they are not onionskin, they are carbon copies, and presumably they are not originals?

A. No, they are not originals.

Q. And do you know whether these carbon copies contain all of the signatures that would appear on the original and main document?

A. All of the signatures are on—I think this is March 15.

Q. All of the signatures are on 15?

A. Yes.

Q. As they would be on the original document?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you.

A. (Continuing) And this one has the signature on, too. I don't know what it is.

Q. It is Exhibit 10, I believe. It is the requested change in classification, relating to the case of Locklaw Gonsowski, dated 12-6-44. That has the division manager's signature on?

577 A. Yes, and this one hasn't got all the signatures on it.

A. That is Exhibit 8, that is the penalty in the case of E. C. Williams?

A. That is right.

Q. What other signatures appear on the original, would appear on the original of that in the normal course, to make it a valid document?

A. On the original copy the assistant division manager's signature should be on there.

Q. Now, I must add to this list of carbon copies Exhibit 7, which I now do, and show you that is a carbon so far as the portion not originally printed is concerned, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, do all of the signatures appear?

A. No.

Q. Would they all appear in the case of the original?

A. Yes.

Q. What additional signatures would appear on that original document?

A. The assistant division manager.

Q. Before it would be effective?

A. Yes.

Q. While we are on the matter of forms, Mr. Traen, I am asking the Reporter to mark six additional 578 forms, beginning with number 17?

(Thereupon the documents above referred to were marked Petitioner's Exhibits Nos. 17, 17-A, 18, 19, 20, 21 and 22 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Showing you now Petitioner's Exhibits 17 and 17-A, I think we can agree without further direct questioning that 17-A is a carbon of 17, isn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. The original 17 is in sort of an orange color, and the 17-A is a greenish color, to distinguish the two readily?

A. Yes.

Q. But they are the same form?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that a form used by foremen now in the Packard Company?

A. In the Packard Company, in the Aircraft Division.

Q. Yes, it is a tool report,—it so indicates?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you make these out?

A. I do not have anything to do with that particular report. That is in the aircraft division.

Q. And who makes it out there?

A. The foremen in the aircraft division.

Q. The foremen in the aircraft division.

I show you Exhibit 18; that is a request for advance of wages due form. Is that a form used by you?

579 A. Yes, that is a request for advance in wages.

Q. And that is apparently used by foremen in the Packard Company Plant now?

A. Yes.

Q. And has been for some time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And form 19 is a form used, is it,—general group allowance?

A. That is aircraft division also.

Q. In use by foremen, however?

A. Yes.

Q. At the present time?

A. Yes.

Q. For the purpose stated on the blank, on the form?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Exhibit 20, is that a form currently in use by foremen—and when I say that, I mean in use in the performance of their duties?

A. Yes.

Q. By you, as well as others there?

A. Yes.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Nelson, will you just indicate what the nature of the form is? You see, you are giving us nothing but the number.

580 Mr. Nelson: Oh, I thought I had. I am sorry. If you just wait one moment, until I get through this, I will do that.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Exhibit 21 is likewise a form, is it?

A. Yes, it is a hospital pass card, a pass to the hospital.

Q. And Exhibit 22 is likewise a form currently in use in the Packard Plant?

A. Yes.

Q. By foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. In performing their duties?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, Exhibit 17 is a tool report; it has a serial number in red on it, and there is a carbon copy, because the back of the original is carbonized so as to carry on it a second sheet.

Exhibit 18 is request for advance of wages due.

Exhibit 19 is general group allowance.

Exhibit 20 is standard time allowance.

Exhibit 21 is, you said, hospital pass?

A. Yes.

Q. Pass to a hospital. That happens to be printed on both sides, it is in card form?

A. Yes.

Q. It is for a substantial amount of information, apparently?

581 A. Yes.

Q. And Exhibit 22 is a recommendation for a change in rate.

Now, Mr. Traen, together with the forms put in evidence in specific cases by Mr. Dahling in your testimony here today, do these Petitioner's Exhibits 17 to 22, both inclusive, cover the range of forms used currently by foremen in the Packard Plant?

A. It pretty well covers them.

Q. In the performance of their duty?

A. Yes.

Q. And these forms indicate the type of action and the type of information and recommendation that foremen currently make in the Packard Plant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And these are all, are they, in the performance of their duties?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if there are any others, we have just inadvertently overlooked them, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. We have tried to get them all?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: That was our purpose. Now, I offer exhibits 17 to 22, both inclusive, in evidence.

582 I offer them to counsel for the Company for examination. I regret that I only have one of each of those; but for obvious reasons, we did not feel that we had an unlimited supply at our disposal.

Mr. Dahling: There is no objection, Mr. Examiner.

Mr. Nelson: I will now offer them to attorney for the Board.

Mr. Karasick: There is no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: They will be received.

(The documents heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibits Nos. 17, 17-A, 18, 19, 20, 21 and 22 for identification were received in evidence.)

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 23 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 23, being eight pages of correspondence sized paper, clipped together, and ask you if you recognize what that is; or I will ask you directly if that is the contract presently effective between the maintenance and production workers, the hourly rated employees at the Packard Plant, where you work, and the Company?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. The one presently effective?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when you were referring to regulations that 583 were covered by contract between the Company and its hourly rated workers, you were referring to such regulations as are in or based upon this agreement?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: I will offer the document in evidence, and offer it to counsel for examination.

Mr. Dahling: I am not doubting your word at all, Mr. Nelson. I just want to be sure that our copy is the same as yours, that is all.

Mr. Nelson: Surely, that is agreeable. We, naturally, are acting on information in this respect ourselves.

Mr. Dahling: We have no objection; it apparently is from the same mimeographing machine.

Mr. Nelson: And I offer it to counsel for the Board.

Mr. Karasick: There is no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 23 for identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Karasick: Have you a copy of it that is available?

Mr. Nelson: I believe that we only have the one copy, but Mr. Dahling kindly lends us his, if you want to make a more detailed examination of it; and I deliver the original exhibit to the Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received in evidence.

584 (Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 24 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) In the course of your examination, Mr. Traen, you have been asked about rules and regulations, and I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 24, a correspondence size sheet of paper typewritten, dated as a re-issue December 14, 1944, and ask you if that is a list of the rules and regulations currently circulated by the Packard Motor Car Company among foremen in its plant?

A. Yes, sir, it is.

Q. And you received one in the proper performance of your duty?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are those the rules and regulations, or at least, some of them, that you referred to in your testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: We offer it in evidence. I offer photostatic copies to counsel for the Board and counsel for the Company, and I offer the original to the Examiner; and I offer it in evidence.

Mr. Dahling: There is no objection.

Mr. Karasick: There is no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Petitioner's Exhibit 24 is received in evidence.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 24 for identification was received in evidence.)

585 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Karasick, I believe you wanted a few minutes at this time?

Mr. Karasick: I would like to have a recess, your Honor, if we may.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Gentlemen, please come to order.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Reporter, will you mark that as Petitioner's Exhibit 25 for identification?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 25 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Traen, I show you Petitioner's

Exhibit 25 for identification which is denominated here as Labor Relations Division Organizational Chart, and ask you if that is a paper on correspondence size white sheet, that has been lately circulated among foremen in the Packard Motor Car Company Plant?

A. It is.

Q. And it indicates the line and degree of authority of respective men above the maintenance and production workers?

Mr. Dahling: If the witness knows.

Mr. Nelson: It has it on its face, Mr. Dahling.

Mr. Dahling: Then, perhaps we ought to let the instrument speak for itself.

Mr. Nelson: I offer it in evidence. I offer copies of the exhibit to counsel for their examination and the 586 original to the Trial Examiner.

Mr. Dahling: I have no objections.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I notice that the original has at the bottom in ink the words, "Issued to Departmental Supervision and discussed at foreman's meeting Friday, November 24, 1944." Is that offered as part of the exhibit?

Mr. Nelson: It is. I do not know whether it is on the others or not.

Mr. Donovan: On my photostat "foremen" is spelled f-o-r-e-m-e-n-'-s.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, that is what the original exhibit has, that which I have indicated in ink. There is another slip of paper which has the same thing typewritten and the word foreman is spelled f-o-r-m-e-n-'-s in typewriting and not in ink.

Mr. Nelson: I don't care which way it is spelled. I offer it in evidence.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It was obviously meant to be the plural.

Mr. Nelson: If it is on the original, I will take the slip of paper away.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In any event, Mr. Nelson, I do not think you have qualified the material at the bottom.

Mr. Nelson: I realize that. I will ask the witness
587 whether in fact he received his copy of this on Friday, November 24, 1944 or thereabouts.

The Witness: I received a copy but it might have been a day later than Friday, the 24th, a day later than the issue date on the copy.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Were you at the meeting, the Foreman's meeting where this was discussed?

A. Yes.

Q. And you received your copy there, did you?

A. No, my copy was delivered into my office later.

Q. Later?

A. Yes.

Q. But you heard the discussion on it at the meeting?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, I believe now it is qualified for admission along with the exhibit.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, may I ask the witness a question?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: The meeting was a meeting of the foremen's school?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: And that is what you mean by a meeting? It was a session of the Foremen's School?

The Witness: That is right.

588 Mr. Dahling: I have no objections.

Mr. Karasick: No objections.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I understand, then, that this was distributed by the Company?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received in evidence.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 25 for identification was received in evidence.)

(Thereupon the documents above referred to were marked Petitioner's Exhibits Nos. 26 and 27 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Before the noon recess today, Mr. Traen, Mr. Dahling was asking you about subjects which were discussed at the Foremen's School at the Packard Plant. I show you Petitioner's Exhibits 26 and 27, and I ask you to ignore the typewritten exhibit number there, and ask you if that is a list of the subjects discussed at the meetings in the periods specified in the exhibit?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What do you mean by the statement you are asking the witness to ignore the typewritten exhibit?

Mr. Nelson: "Packard Exhibit 26" at the top.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean that you are asking the witness to ignore the designation "Packard Exhibit 25" and "Packard Exhibit 26"?

589 Mr. Nelson: That is right, because it was in another proceeding. As a matter of fact, this was submitted in the War Labor Board proceeding, and it is an exact copy of that, unfortunately, which contains a duplication of the exhibit number.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I won't ask you, Mr. Traen, to identify each and every subject matter; just examine the sheet in general, and see if that is a fairly accurate list of the subject discussed in the various periods specified in the exhibit?

A. I distinctly remember some on the '39 and '40 here, although I do not remember all of them; I do remember some of them in here.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, if that is the exhibit which was put in evidence before the War Labor Board, we have no objection to its being received in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: I will say that it is, Mr. Dahling.

Mr. Dahling: On your statement, we have no objection.

Mr. Nelson: I offer it in evidence—both of them—and I offer them to Mr. Karasick. As a matter of fact, I checked with Mr. Dahling's questions this morning, and found that the list was accurate. You did not ask him about every subject, but as you went along, my list read like yours did, with the omissions that you made for your own purposes, I assume.

590 Mr. Dahling: The Examiner requested that we leave out text subjects, and so I complied.

Mr. Nelson: I am not questioning the omissions, but I checked as you went along, and the pencil marks indicate my checks as Mr. Dahling went along.

Mr. Karasick: I would like to inquire whether Petitioner's Exhibits 26 and 27 for identification cover in substance the same subjects taught at the Foremen's Training School, which were dealt with by Mr. Dahling in his examination of Mr. Traen earlier in the day.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He just said so, with additional information that Mr. Dahling had mentioned.

Mr. Nelson: My pencil checks are the ones that Mr. Dahling read this morning, in that order, in his questions to this witness.

Mr. Karasick: So there are other subjects not covered in examination previously?

Mr. Nelson: That is right; and I offer them to complete the showing as to what they covered in that school, and it is an exhibit offered in a previous proceeding by the Packard Motor Car Company covering the same subjects.

Mr. Dahling: And I might say, Mr. Examiner, it is an exhibit which we would have offered and we will offer, extended to include subjects since July, 1943; so it is the same exhibit. I did not ask questions as to all of the items.

591 A. I picked out certain items to see if the witness had been at these sessions.

Mr. Karasick: It is somewhat repetitive of matters covered in the prior examination, but since it would be rather difficult to take those out and have others in, I have no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Besides which, it is all in one place.

Mr. Karasick: There is no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Petitioner's Exhibits 26 and 27 are received in evidence.

I would suggest that in order to avoid any confusion, an ink line be drawn through the designations which were used in the War Labor Board hearing at the top of those exhibits.

Mr. Nelson: I will do it right now, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

Mr. Karasick: What is that heading?

Mr. Nelson: It is foremen's training subjects. Number 26 begins 1939 to 1944, and number 27 is dated July 3, 1944.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Traen, let me inquire whether some of these meetings which you attended as foreman, as referred to in exhibits 26 and 27, and in your testimony this morning, there were occasions when foremen asked the Company about the policy, and where the policies of the Company originated or the specific policies of the 592 Company originated. Were you present at such meetings?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what kind of replies did the foremen get when they inquired on those questions of policy, and where it was formulated?

Mr. Donovan: Just a moment, please. I will object to this question, owing to the undefined nature of the word "policy" owing to the fact that we have no means of knowing what this witness understands by the word "policy" as it sits in his mind; that unless counsel defines the word "policy" through this witness first, I think the question should be postponed or stricken.

Mr. Nelson: Let me inquire first, before Your Honor rules on that, whether the word "policy" was used in the question.

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: That would not remedy my objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let me get the last three questions and answers read back, before you go any farther.

(The record was read by the Reporter as requested.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think that Mr. Traen can answer the last questions preliminarily.

Mr. Donovan: I would like to amplify my objection to this extent, Your Honor: We do not feel that any-593 thing should be on the record giving rise to an unfavorable or an unnecessarily unfavorable and an unjust inference on the part of a reader of the record of some questions of policy that may not have been taken up with the foremen because of the fact that there are almost an innumerable series of policy questions which, as a matter of common sense, no Management would first take up with the foremen before the Company inaugurated them. They start with the board of directors, they cover such fields as the field that the Company will occupy, the competitive field, the distribution of their stock, whether it is to be widely or closely held, it suggests an innumerable number of things,—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let me interrupt you there. I suggest that the witness for the time being, at least, answer only the last question, whether or not,—in substance, it amounts to this: Whether or not a foreman asks in so many words, "What am I going to do on a policy question?" In other words, all the witness is asked about at the moment is whether a specific question was asked, whatever it means.

Mr. Donovan: Whatever the word "policy" means.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Whatever the word "policy" means. Was that question asked, that is all.

Mr. Donovan: I do not think the question would have any weight, but I think the answer should be so restricted.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am so restricting it, and I 594 so understood Mr. Nelson to ask.

Mr. Nelson: That is correct.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you understand the question?

The Witness: There was a lot of discussion there.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Did any of these foremen say in so many words at these meetings, "What am I going to do about policy?"

The Witness: Yes, they asked the teacher, whoever he happened to be.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean they used the word "policy" in their question?

The Witness: They asked him who formulates the Company policies.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, now, go on from there.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Now, then, what did they get in the way of information or replies when foremen asked such a question of the teacher.

A. The teacher said he didn't know.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Reporter, will you mark that as Petitioner's Exhibit 28?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 28 for identification.)

Mr. Nelson: The Petitioner offers in evidence, because of questions asked in cross-examination by the Com-

595 pany yesterday, Exhibit 28, which is a copy of the resolution of the National War Labor Board setting up the Foremen's Panel and limiting its authority. I offer the resolution as a communication by the National War Labor Board to the Foreman's Association of America. This is our communication, our notice from them. I offer it in evidence and I offer copies to counsel for the Board and counsel for the Company; and I offer the original to the Trial Examiner.

Mr. Donovan: What is the purpose of offering this in evidence?

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Donovan read and was permitted to read many things from the transcript of testimony taken before the National War Labor Board and from the Petitioner's brief in that case. He sought an inference to be drawn from the relief requested as applicable to this case, which was, of course, only applicable as to that case. As I stated at that time, by reason of authority—the limitation of authority as set forth by the resolution of the Panel.

Mr. Donovan: Because it was referred to in yesterday's questioning, is that the only reason you offer it at this time? Am I right about that?

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, in answer to Mr. Donovan's question I offer it because of the cross-examination and 596 your Honor will remember that Mr. Donovan conferred with Mr. Benjamin and Mr. Iserman and others in the court room and accepted transcript of that proceeding and then proceeded to cross-examine Mr. Keys on it. He cross-examined him on the brief and offered my brief in evidence or cross-examined him on it and presumably intends to make a contention based upon such cross-examination. Now, in order to set that cross-examination and the documents referred to in their proper setting we offer the resolution of the National War Labor Board.

Mr. Donovan: I still do not see that it has anything to do with the purpose that counsel has in mind by introducing the offered document. What is your purpose?

Mr. Nelson: The purpose is briefly this, in our brief we asked the only relief permissible under the resolution and probably under the authority of the National War Labor Board. We offer the resolution in support of our claim that that is so and we offer it only because of the cross-examination.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further comments, gentlemen?

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is there any dispute about the fact that this document is what it purports to be, that it is valid?

Mr. Donovan: I do not question Mr. Nelson's
597 document but I would like to see the original and I would like to examine it.

Mr. Nelson: That is our communication from the National War Labor Board and, of course, we were all present when the Chairman read it into the record in the proceedings in that case. I have every reason to believe it is absolutely accurate.

Mr. Donovan: May we go off the record, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record. It is received in evidence.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit 28 for identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, that is all we care to ask this witness. Do you care to recross-examine?

Mr. Dahling: No further questions at this time from this witness.

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) Mr. Traen, if I recall correctly, you testified that prior to the advent of the Foreman's Association there was an organization of foremen at the Packard plant. I think you set the date at some time in 1937, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

598 Q. Do you know anything about that organization?

A. No, I don't know too much about it. I knew it was in existence.

Q. Was it a labor organization?

A. It was a foremen's organization, strictly foremen.

Q. Do you know whether it is still in existence or not?

A. It is not, it is disbanded.

Q. Do you know when it began to organize foremen at the Packard plant?

A. It was in 1937.

Q. Do you know when it disbanded?

A. I think it was in 1938.

Q. Do you know the name of it?

A. No, I don't.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Did it have a name?

The Witness: It may have had a name but I don't recall the name.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): Was it limited to foremen in the Packard plant or was it an organization that took in foremen of other plants as well?

A. At that time it was limited to the Packard plant.

Q. Did it later expand?

A. No, it disbanded there also.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you know whether or not it was a labor organization?

599 A. Yes, it was.

Mr. Donovan: Were you asked to join?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: Did you join?

The Witness: No, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you know whether or not it had any officers?

The Witness: Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you know any of them? Do you know what their names were or who they are?

The Witness: I understand at one time there was a president by the name of Hunt, I think it was.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): Was it an active organization?

A. To my best knowledge it was, yes.

Q. By that I mean did it meet with the Company at all and negotiate a contract or attempt to negotiate a contract?

A. I couldn't answer that.

Q. You don't know that?

A. I don't know that, no.

Q. I believe you said that during the time you were a straw boss at the Packard Motor Car Company you had at one time 240 employees under your supervision?

A. Yes.

Q. And now you have only seventy employees under your supervision and you are a general foreman?

600 A. Yes.

Q. How does it happen that you are now a general foreman and have only seventy employees when at the time you were a straw boss you had as much as 240? Was that a peculiar situation or was it common or has there been a change since then?

A. It was a common situation at that time for a foreman to have a great amount of people under his supervision.

Q. It was more common for a foreman to have more people under his supervision than he would have today?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many leaders do you have in your department?

A. At the present time?

Q. Yes.

A. Two.

Q. Is that the average number of leaders in your department?

A. Yes.

Q. What do leaders do?

A. They instruct the employees as to how to do their job, as to quality.

Q. Do they work?

A. Yes, they work at times.

Q. How much of their time is spent at working as distinguished from telling other employees what to do?

601 A. That differs somewhat, depending on the department.

Q. What would be the rough average, would you say?

A. I would say probably they put one-third of their time actually working on a job or they are instructing the people.

Q. How many people does each leader instruct? Do they divide the department equally between them?

A. No, it depends where the department is located and what kind of department it is.

Q. I am talking about your department.

A. In my department I have one leader on the third floor who instructs all the polishers and he of course has fifty-four people that he must instruct and work with. On the other hand, I have a leader in the plating room who only has fourteen.

Q. Your department is on more than one floor?

A. Yes, part is on the third and part on the first.

Q. I don't know whether or not you stated how much a leader gets by the way of wages?

A. He receives five cents an hour more than the rank and file employees.

Q. What does he receive, exactly, per hour?

A. $1.40.

Q. $1.40?

A. Yes.

602 Q. And you said with respect to Company's Exhibits 3, 6, 12, 14, 8 and 7—those numbers are a little out of order but that is the way you were asked about them, that they were copies of originals and that the originals had the signature of the assistant manager or assistant division manager in each instance?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what would that mean? That the originals had the signature of the Assistant manager or assistant division manager—would that mean something with respect to the action taken?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you mean by that that the signature of the assistant manager or assistant division manager indicated that his approval was necessary in each instance?

A. Very much so.

Q. Do you have an office?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it an office of your own?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it an enclosed office?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does anyone else share it with you?

603 A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who does?

A. I have the Stock Department clerks that share it with me.

Q. How much of an office is it?

A. I would say about 12 by 12.

Q. Do you have a desk in there?

A. Yes.

Q. Does anyone else use the desk besides yourself?

A. The assistant foreman.

Q. Anyone besides him?

A. That is all.

Q. Who are the people that share this office with you?

A. The Stock Department employees.

Q. How many are those?

A. There are two in there at the present time.

Q. Are they in there all the time?

A. No, in and out, they are, but they do file their material in there.

Q. And they use the desk, also?

A. They use the desk, yes.

Q. And you say this is an enclosed office?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have a secretary or stenographer?

A. No, I have a clerk. She doesn't fit into the 604 category of secretary or stenographer.

Q. A clerk?

A. Yes.

Q. What are his duties—is it a male or female?

A. A female.

Q. What does this woman do?

A. She makes out the time exception reports, checks the numbers in the clock alley, makes out these various forms exhibited here, subject to my signature, of course.

Q. Does she work for anyone else besides yourself?

A. That is all, just me.

Q. And she takes care of the work which relates to the seventy employees in the department, is that right.

A. Yes.

Q. When you have any typing to do, does she do it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Who does it?

A. The divisional secretary or clerk or whatever they call her down there, she is the one that does the typing for us.

Q. Who is her immediate superior?

A. The assistant division manager.

Q. So, if you have any typing to be done she does it?

A. Yes.

Q. That is this clerk that works for you is the one 605 that takes care of the recording and clerical job of filing and that sort of thing?

A. In the office, yes.

Q. And she does the work in your office?

A. Yes.

Q. And the divisional secretary works in another office?

A. Yes, in the division office.

Q. Who are the immediate superiors of leaders in your department?

A. The assistant foremen.

Q. In your absence can queries be made out by your clerk?

A. She can make them, yes, but not my clerk, the division clerk makes them.

Q. If you were not there and there was a necessity to make a query with respect to an employee would the division clerk make them out?

Mr. Donovan: Just a minute, Mr. Examiner, this is not exactly an objection, but there has been an indiscriminate use of the words "query," "request" and "recommendation." It seems to me, I would like to know at this point which one of those counsel has in mind. I am assuming it is "recommendation," I am not sure.

Mr. Karasick: I am speaking so that the witness may understand and counsel may, of the form that I 606 thought you said was a query. The form used to recommend certain actions with respect to employees.

Mr. Donovan: You are making no distinction—

Mr. Karasick (Interposing): It may be discipline—

Mr. Donovan (Interposing): You are making no distinction between a query, a request and a recommendation?

Mr. Karasick: I took it from the witness' testimony. A query was a form the foremen had to make out, a query is something the foreman makes out which initiates certain action with respect to an employee.

Mr. Donovan: Then it might or might not be a recommendation.

Mr. Karasick: I am talking about the form itself, what it may contain, I suppose it may contain a number of things.

Mr. Donovan: You are talking about the actual paper that is used?

Mr. Karasick: The actual paper, yes—the contents of the paper might be a great number of things.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): Witness, do you understand what I mean by a query?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it your understanding that by "query" I mean a form which initiates some action generally taken by a foreman with respect to a particular employee?

607 A. Yes, sir.

Q. What I would like to know is, if you are absent from the department and some disciplinary or other action is necessary with respect to a particular employee in the department, would the division clerk make out the query?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. She would make it out, even in your absence?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It would—

A. (Interposing): It would need the approval of the assistant division manager before becoming effective.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Would it need that approval, even if you were present and you made it out?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): In that instance though the query form would not contain your signature but would contain the signature of the assistant division manager, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And then it would go through the formal procedure?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say that you did not attend all of the classes of the foremen's school and that you missed some of them?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it compulsory for you to make up the classes
608 or attend all of them?

A. The division manager makes it emphatically understood that he intends for you to be there.

Q. They want you to be there?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you miss a class, for example, does he follow up to see that you go there or do you feel it is necessary for you to go and make up the class?

A. If you miss the class generally he will ask you why you missed that particular class and then he will tell us not to miss the next one.

Q. If you initiate a query which recommends the discharge of an employee in your department and no appeal is taken and the emloyee is removed from your roll in the department, what happens to him then, does he go back to the employment division, the Labor Relations Division, or what division does he go to?

A. If he is removed as per the query, the employment department takes care of him. From there on I don't know what happens to him, although I have seen in some cases, where employees might have been removed from my department, but later placed in other departments.

Q. You mean that you would recommend discharge as to an employee from your department, and he would be taken out of your department and would be placed 609 by the employment department, you say?

A. By the employment department.

Q. By the employment department, in another department of the plant?

A. Yes.

Q. Had you anything to say about that?

A. No, I have no jurisdiction as far as the employment department goes. They do as they wish.

Q. You are the acting head of your department, is that it?

A. Yes.

Q. Who is the acting head during your absence?

A. The assistant foreman.

Q. The assistant foreman?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Which one?

The Witness: I only have one at this time, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just one.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): Now, I am not sure that I understood this part of your testimony, and I wish you would straighten me out on it, if you will. My impression was that you testified that when the plant guards reported violation of rules, it is necessary for you to discipline an employee or to take action according to 610 the rules and regulations; is that correct or incorrect?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, when discipline is necessary, you follow the rules and regulations which have been introduced in evidence as Petitioner's Exhibit 24, is that right?

A. Yes, if the violation is on there, that is the one we follow.

Mr. Donovan: I submit that the witness' testimony was that only in the cases where there was a set, fixed penalty for some common infraction, such as gambling. That does not appear to be the case, by any means, with all infractions of the rules, some of which were serious or would call for discharge or some other disciplinary action.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): Is that right, Mr. Witness, or not?

A. No, that is not right.

Q. Would you straighten us out, then, because we are all interested in just finding out what the facts are?

A. In the case of a discharge for any other reason, then if the discharge is asked for or recommended, it is never settled until it gets into the Labor Relations office, and they settle the situation for us and they decide whether the recommendation is right or wrong.

611 Q. I think you are getting just a little away from the thing that I am trying to get clear in my mind here, and that is this: Is there any distinction between your discretion in disciplining an employee when a violation occurs that you find out about yourself, or when a violation occurs which is reported to you by a plant guard, say?

A. If a violation occurs that I find out myself, I use the same penalty that is recommended on the form.

Q. That is assuming it is one of these violations which is on the form?

A. It is one of those, yes.

Q. That is Petitioner's Exhibit 24. Who issued this Petitioner's Exhibit 24? Was it the Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Did the foremen help in setting up these particular violations as being the most common in the form of penalties to be set up under them? That is, were you consulted as a foreman in this?

A. Oh, no.

Q. This was given to you by the Company, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And by "this" I mean Petitioner's Exhibit 24.

I have no further questions.

Redirect Examination.

612 Q. (By Mr. Nelson): I have a couple of questions, if I may at this time, Mr. Examiner: Mr. Traen, referring now to some of the questions asked you by Mr. Karasick, let me ask you whether the number of persons supervised by a foreman necessarily determines his rank or pay or his importance, or whether it is rather the importance of the operation, the difficulty of the operation, which fixes his rank and pay?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Or a combination of both?

Q. Or a combination of the two?

A. That is it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Which?

The Witness: It is the importance of the job, and not so much the amount of people, because I know that the amount of people a foreman supervises, varies quite a bit.

Q. It is important from the human side, according to the number of people that he supervises, but so far as the plant is concerned and his rank and pay, do you have also to take into consideration the importance and difficulty of the operation he supervises?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, about Mr. William Hunt: Do you mind if I correct your testimony and suggest that he was secretary-treasurer of the previous organization, and not president?

A. Well, I knew that he was one of the officers, but—

Mr. Nelson: We are asking a subpoena for Mr.
613 Hunt, Mr. Examiner, because he is available and none of the other officers are.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What do you mean when you say you are asking?

Mr. Nelson: I understand that we have to ask you for a subpoena.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The rules also provide for making an application.

Mr. Nelson: May I make it in this form? I desire to subpoena Mr. William Hunt.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I suggest that you look at the rules and regulations, and follow the form indicated.

Mr. Nelson: Very well. That is all.

Recross-Examination.

By Mr. Donovan:

Q. You do not remember the name of this 1937 group that you say were organizing or attempting to organize the foremen of the Packard plant, Mr. Traen?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Did you ever hear it?

A. No. If I did, if I had heard it, I would surely remember it. I don't remember it.

Q. Did you ever see one of their application cards?

A. No, I didn't see the application card.

Q. Did any of the other foremen, within your 614 knowledge, see any of the application cards, or join?

A. Yes.

Q. How many?

A. Well, it was my understanding—

Q. That you know of?

A. It was my understanding when I was approached to join, that there was somewhere in the neighborhood of 200 already in.

Q. Well, that is what someone told you. You don't know how many actually had applied for and became members of this group, do you?

A. That is what you asked me. You asked me, do I know.

Q. That is right, of your own knowledge, I am asking you now; you don't know how many members they had, do you?

A. Of my own knowledge, no.

Q. You don't know what percentage of the total number of Packard foremen was involved, then, do you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was this a CIO Union?

A. I believe it was.

Q. A CIO Union?

A. I think it was, yes.

Mr. Donovan: All right, that is all.

Recross-Examination.

615 Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Traen, I believe you testified that you followed the rules and regulations in connection with disciplinary matters. Those rules and regulations I believe you referred to as being Exhibit 24, which was issued, a reissue of December 19, 1944, is that correct?

A. We follow the rules as near as we can on those sheets.

Q. Now, when did you first receive rules of that character, if you remember?

A. Rules of this character were received some time before this issue.

Q. And can you say how long?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Before this what?

The Witness: Before this issue.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Before this issue? Oh, before that particular exhibit?

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Do you recall how long before the issuance of Exhibit 24 you first received rules of that character in printed form?

A. I think it was about three months, two or three months, that we received something similar to this, but with the exception that it was not signed by the Labor Relations Committee and Union Plant Committee.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: When you say two or three months, you mean two or three months before the 616 date on that particular paper?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. Prior to that did you have any written rules that you followed, such as appear on Exhibit 24?

A. The ones that I just spoke about.

Q. Prior to those, did you have any printed rules that you followed?

A. No, we didn't have any printed rules.

Q. What did you do, then, prior to three months before December 14, 1944, in case of disciplines?

A. In case of any discipline prior to those rules, it was always discussed with our assistant division manager as to what we had put on his particular query.

Q. And then you would make a recommendation, would you, to him?

A. He would make the recommendation to us.

Q. Now, what about offenses, insubordination or offenses that are not covered by these rules? What do you do in that case?

A. At the present time?

Q. Yes.

A. We still discuss them with our assistant division manager.

Q. Now, I believe this morning you testified with respect to Company's Exhibit 3, and I will show you 617 that exhibit. Now, as I recall your testimony, you said that if you issued this query, this Exhibit 3, and it was approved by the steward and no hearing was requested by the Union, that it automatically went through as a discharge. Do you recall that testimony this morning?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that still your testimony?

A. It still goes in effect, the same as before—

Q. Automatically?

A. (Continuing): —if the steward agrees, the clearance goes through.

Q. And your action in writing that query in which you state that the man is discharged, means that the man is discharged unless the steward objects or he goes higher up into the Union line of appeal, is that not correct?

A. Yes, the request for the man to be cleared from the roll is carried on through the employment department.

Mr. Dahling: That is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions?

Mr. Karasick: No further questions.

Mr. Nelson: Nothing further.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Traen, have you any discretion as general foreman beyond your authority as general foreman?

618 A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any knowledge of this earlier organization of foremen, other than what somebody told you about it?

A. The only knowledge I have is being approached by an individual to enter into the organization.

Q. Is it or is it not true that such knowledge or information as you have is based upon what this individual told you?

A. Yes.

Q. And is it or is it not true that that is all you know about it?

A. That is all I know about it.

Q. Do you or do you not consider that your membership in the Foreman's Association of America, in your opinion, would permit you to disobey a lawful order of management, given by management to you as general foreman, within the scope of your authority as general foreman?

A. They would not permit it.

Q. Would you or would you not feel that you should obey such an order?

A. I should obey it, yes.

Q. What authority do you have as general foreman which your assistant foreman does not have, if any?

A. The first step in the grievance machinery is generally handled, in my case anyway, by myself. Very 619 few minor grievances are handled by the assistant foreman; the steward or the representative of the rank and file as a general rule, comes to me. That is one of the authorities that is vested in me, in my case.

Q. Does the assistant foreman participate in any way in any query that you send on, or any recommendation you make, concerning an employee in your department?

A. He discusses the contents, or the proposed query, before I recommend it.

Q. And does he upon occasion make recommendations to you before you in turn pass on your recommendations?

A. He never recommends. He just discusses the case in question.

Q. Well, what I mean is, I do not mean a formal recommendation, but does he ever say to you in substance, "I think we ought to do thus and so"?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And you then make up your own mind from your knowledge or information, and pass on your recommendation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you give, if I assume correctly, you give such weight to what the assistant foreman says as you think his statement is entitled to?

A. That is right, yes, sir.

620 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of this witness?

Mr. Donovan: I have one.

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): You said a moment ago, in answer to a question from the Trial Examiner, that you would obey management's order in a situation that he put to you?

A. Within my scope of authority, yes.

Q. And you went out on strike with the other foremen in May, 1944, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Did management order that? Was that a management order?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did management want you to go out on a strike?

Mr. Nelson: I will object to that. I do not know how he would know.

Mr. Donovan: Don't you want him to answer that question?

Mr. Nelson: No, I don't think he has any way of knowing. Sometimes management precipitates strikes.

Mr. Donovan: Well, let's find out.

Mr. Nelson: And I suspect they did,—

Mr. Donovan: Let's find out.

Mr. Nelson: I am sure they did in this case.

621 Q. (By Mr. Donovan): As a matter of fact, management definitely did not want you to strike in May, 1944, isn't that true?

Mr. Nelson: Object to that, he doesn't know.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the form of the question is objectionable.

Mr. Donovan: Am I not entitled to find out whether this man will or will not admit that it was management's wish that he go out on strike, and that he went out in obedience to that, after his testimony a minute ago?

Mr. Nelson: I object to that question. They cannot treat men the way that they treat these men, and expect them to take it.

Mr. Donovan: I move to strike that from the record.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, it is stricken, but I suggest that your question is conclusionary.

Mr. Donovan: I will ask another one:

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Did management ask you to strike?

Mr. Nelson: I object to that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You may answer.

A. No, they didn't ask me to strike.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Did they order you to strike?

Mr. Nelson: I object to that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

A. They didn't order me to.

622 Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Do you know any foremen that they instructed or ordered to strike in May of 1944?

A. I don't know what they may have told other foremen.

Q. Well, do you know of any one foreman that they gave such an order or instruction to, Mr. Traen? You know what I mean when I ask you that question, don't you? Do you know of a single foreman that they gave such an order or instruction to?

A. I don't know of any.

Q. No, of course, you don't.

Mr. Donovan: That is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of the witness?

Mr. Nelson: No further questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness is excused.

Mr. Nelson: Oh, by the way, you did not disapprove of the objects of the strike, did you?

A. No, sir.

Q. It was a question of policy with you, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): The objects of the strike included the closing of one or more plants if it was possible to close them by that strike, didn't they? Isn't that true?

623 A. Did you say the closing of one or more?

Q. That is right.

A. I was only interested in one.

Q. That is the only one you tried to close?
A. Definitely.
Q. And you did close it, didn't you?
A. Yes.
Q. And that was a union objective, wasn't it?
A. The Union objective was to gain some of the things which were rightfully ours.
Mr. Donovan: All right, that is all.

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): It was the Company that closed the plant, wasn't it?
A. Yes.
Mr. Donovan: I submit that is argumentative. If Mr. Nelson wants to try to argue that and get some judge or tribunal to decide it at the proper time,—
Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let us not get into a metaphysical discussion.
Q. (By Mr. Nelson): When you left the plant it was wide open, and operating, wasn't it?
A. Yes, it was.
Q. And it did not shut down until the Company sought to shut it down, did it?
624 A. That is right.
Mr. Nelson: That is all.
Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness is excused.

(Witness excused.)

Off the record.
(Discussion off the record.)
Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record. We will adjourn at this time until 9:30 A. M. tomorrow morning.

(Whereupon at 4:30 o'clock P. M., Thursday, December 21, 1944, the hearing was adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, December 22, 1944, at 9:30 o'clock A. M.)

625 Room 737 Federal Building,
Detroit, Michigan,
Friday, December 22, 1944.

Pursuant to adjournment, the above-entitled matter came on for hearing at 9:30 A. M.

Before:

Samuel H. Jaffee, Trial Examiner.

627 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Gentlemen, will you come to order, please? Are you ready with the next witness?

Mr. Nelson: I call Mr. Thomas Dwyer.

THOMAS DWYER,

a witness called by and on behalf of the Petitioner, being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Your name?

A. Thomas Dwyer.

Q. Your residence?

A. Detroit.

Q. The street?

A. 18501 San Juan Drive.

Q. Where are you employed?

A. Packard Motor Car Company.

Q. How long have you been employed there?

A. I have been with the Company thirty-eight years.

Q. What did you do when you first went to Packard?

A. Electrical work, and I am still on it.

Q. Were you a journeyman at that time or an apprentice?

A. Well, I would say an electrician.

Q. Were you at that time a member of any labor organization?

628 A. No.

Q. Just what was your work as an electrician, was it with respect to building or cars?

A. That had to do with car wiring and at the present time it is Marine motors.

Q. How many years did you work as a maintenance or production worker?

A. Oh, I would say approximately twelve years.

Q. Then what happened?

A. Then I was made a foreman.

Q. A foreman over what line of work?

A. Well, it was electrical, all the assemblies, the making up of the panels and so forth, shooting trouble, batteries and repairing and so on.

Q. It had to do with the electrical wiring and service of cars?

A. It is tied in with all of that.

Q. As a foreman what grade of foreman were you at first?

A. I was an assistant foreman.

Q. And that is the foreman who is next to the workmen?

A. Yes.

Q. It is the lowest rank of foreman?

A. At that time, yes.

Q. How many men did you have under your direction?

629 A. I would say at one time I had approximately 500 men.

Q. Did you serve as a foreman for some period of time and then have a raise in rank or did you remain at what we call an assistant foreman all the time?

A. No, I was an assistant foreman and then raised to foreman.

Q. How long were you an assistant foreman, approximately?

A. I would say approximately six years.

Q. And then you became what we call a foreman now, a grade above that?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you finally attain a rank of general foreman?

A. At no time was I given that recognition.

Q. Did you perform the duties of general foreman?

A. If I had more than one department or two departments that should be recognized as a general foreman.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Examiner, I will object to the last question and ask that it be stricken because a question involving the use of the word "duties" was undefined, and I think if counsel wishes to develop any particular things that the witness did, either as assistant foreman or foreman or general foreman, that would be proper, but I certainly do not think an answer embracing 630 the breadth of that question should be permissible. That is one of the issues of the case.

Mr. Nelson: I would like the answer to remain until I have had an opportunity to inquire further of the witness. I frankly did not anticipate the answer I received.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think a further basis should be shown before the answer be permitted to remain.

Mr. Nelson: I ask that it not be stricken for the time being, as I intend to inquire further and properly qualify the answer.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Mr. Dwyer, what was the characteristics of a general foreman's position and responsibilities?

A. Well,—

Mr. Donovan: Just a minute, I will object to that question, as to what was the characteristics—it does not convey anything and it allows the witness a rather broad scope in answering. It should be more direct and specific.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): All right. Did a general foreman have responsibilities for and jurisdiction over more than one division?

A. May I correct you, Mr. Nelson?

631 Q. Yes, that is exactly what I want you to do, I want the facts.

A. Well, the general foreman has to do with departments, not divisions.

Q. And departments are what?

A. Departments are or can be anything that has ten or twelve men, machine operations or what-not.

Q. And the general foreman's authorities and duties had to do with more than one department, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. When a foreman had to do with more than one department was he generally classified as a general foreman?

A. In some cases I understand, yes.

Q. In your case what?

A. No.

Q. What departments did you have jurisdiction over?

A. I had the F. E.

Q. What is that?

A. The F. E. was the electrical assembly. It had to do with all the electrical parts of the car and it had to do with batteries, radios and what-not, that came along in that particular cycle.

Q. Any other departments?

A. N. A. Department.

Mr. Dahling: May we have the dates, please?

632 Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Will you fix the dates, if you can? He did it in a way.

A. I cannot fix the dates.

Q. The years, perhaps? What are the years?

A. I just cannot do that but it is in the Packard Motor records. In other words, the only thing I can say is that the cycle I have been I would say was from 1905 up to the present time.

Q. Now, where in that cycle does the period of foremanship begin?

A. I would say approximately six years—well, now, just let me think this thing over.

Q. You refresh your recollection and tell us to your best recollection when your foremanship began at Packards.

A. I would say approximately twelve years after.

Q. Well, that would be about 1917, if you started in 1905?

A. I started in 1905.

Q. That is approximately correct?

A. That is approximately correct.

Q. And that is your recollection?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you became a foreman of the lowest rank?

A. Yes.

633 Q. And about how many years after that were you promoted to the foremanship of the next higher rank?

A. I would say approximately fifteen years after I started, that I became a foreman.

Q. I do not quite understand that answer in view of the other answers. Was it twelve or fifteen years you worked as a workman before you became a foreman?

A. Will you give me that again?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That question confuses it still further. As I understand the testimony so far, he started approximately in 1905, he was an assistant foreman for twelve years.

Mr. Nelson: No, he was a worker.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I mean, assistant foreman after twelve years, and I understood he had the job of assistant foreman for approximately six years, then became a foreman. Now, his last testimony changes the latter period in effect, from six to three years, because he says he became a foreman fifteen years after he started.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Well, will you tell us now. You started to work in 1905, you worked as a worker for how many years?

A. I would say approximately six years.

Q. All right, that would be 1911?

634 A. Yes.

Q. Then what happened?

A. Then I was made an assistant foreman.

Q. For how long did you remain an assistant foreman?

A. I would say approximately six and one-half years.

Q. That would be 1917 or 1918?

A. In through there, yes.

Q. And then you passed to what grade of foreman?

A. To a foreman.

Q. Still in the electrical line?

A. That's correct. I may have had two or three departments, but I was still in the electrical set-up.

Q. Two or three departments within the electrical set-up?

A. Yes, some of the departments had nothing to do with the electrical, but nevertheless, they were departments assigned to me.

Q. Then was there a change in your rank, or did you continue as foreman?

A. I continued as a foreman.

Q. Notwithstanding that you had a number of departments?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Donovan: Well, he said two or three?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, two or three departments.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): That was more than one department, was it not?

635 A. That's correct.

Q. Did you continue as a foreman up until a recent date?

A. Up until 1939.

Q. Could you remember the month?

A. Well, I would say November or December of 1939.

Q. Prior to November or December of 1939, did you become interested in and become a member of a foreman's organization?

A. That is correct.

Q. Do you recall the name of the organization?

A. Yes, I have my receipt right here. The United Foreman's and Supervisor's Unio.. No. 918.

Q. Does it indicate an affilfation?

A. It indicates an affiliation with the CIO.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I object to this line of testimony on the ground that it apparently relates to something that transpired back in 1939. It is incompetent and irrelevant as far as this particular petition is concerned. We are here dealing with a petition that was filed in 1944 in connection with a representation case. I do not see how this testimony has any bearing on the situation.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you not think the early attempts of the foremen to organize are relevant here?

636 Mr. Dahling: I do not, even though Exhibit No. 3 contained that information.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, I agree with that, but the objection is overruled.

Mr. Dahling: May I have a continuing objection to this line of testimony?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

Mr. Nelson: I will ask the reporter to mark this receipt as an exhibit.

(The document above referred to was marked as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 29 for identification.)

Mr. Nelson: I offer the exhibit now for examination, and I offer it in evidence also.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, the admission into evidence of this exhibit is objected to for the reason stated in the objection to this line of testimony.

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, I have no objection to the exhibit, as such, beyond the fact that I do not quite see what it adds to the record. It merely, perhaps, establishes the name of the Union, which has already been testified to by the witness.

Mr. Nelson: I desire this in evidence because I have another document to follow it and I expect to make a complete showing that does affect this case and does fix the attitude of the Packard Company towards 637 foremen organizing. I expect to show the lengths to which they would go in opposing it.

Mr. Dahling: May we have the last statement of counsel again, please?

Mr. Nelson: I expect to show the lengths to which the Packard Company would go in opposing the foremen organizing.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I believe it has been stated in the record that the Company has very definitely taken the position that it would be contrary to the best interests of the Company, and, furthermore, contrary to public policy and public interest to have these supervisors and representatives of management be considered as a unit for collective bargaining under the law. Now, when we say we are opposed to it, why, of course, we are opposed to it. I do not see that this testimony is necessary, in view of that position of the employer.

Mr. Nelson: Well, it involves another public interest, too.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: At any rate, the only thing before me now is the objection to Petitioner's Exhibit No. 29. It is received in evidence.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 29 for identification was received in evidence.)

638 Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Did you attend the meetings of Local 918?

A. No, I was working at nights.

Q. And you could not get away?

A. That's right.

Q. You continued your membership, however, for some time?

A. Until it disbanded.

Q. How long after you became a member did it disband?

A. Well, I have forgotten the record, that is, I don't know where that is now, that is, from the time I joined until it disbanded.

Q. Was it any great length of time?

A. No, it wasn't.

Q. Was it a number of months or a number of years?

A. Well, I would say approximately a few years.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: A few years after he joined it or a few years after it started, or what?

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): I take it, you mean a few years after you joined it, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Was this Local 918 limited to Packard foremen?

A. I don't know whether that was limited to foremen or not, but nevertheless, I joined it as a foreman.

639 Q. The actual working of the Local, you were not very familiar with because you did not attend the meetings?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Was it limited to Packard employees or whatever class of employees were eligible?

The Witness: That I don't know.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Until it disbanded you remained a member?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you were at that time a foreman?

A. That is right.

Q. Of the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, shortly after you joined this organization was there a change in your status?.

A. Well, after I joined this organization—I would say approximately one month—I was called in the office and they told me that I would have to take a cut. I was working nights. I told them well, I didn't care to take a cut and would they send me to the Employment Department.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, I have an objection to the question and the answer which was given. The obvious purpose is to put on the record material which will give rise or hope for a rise as to an unfavorable inference against the Packard Motor Car Company 640 in this case for doing something, to-wit, not agreeing or encouraging a foreman's organization and not agreeing to bargain collectively with the Foreman's Association of America, when it is well known that it is not wrong in any concern and that it is a law as pronounced by the National Labor Relations Board—because of that fact I think the question is improper and there is danger of an unfavorable inference in the minds of one or more tribunals that may read the record. I do not think the question is proper and this line of questioning is improper. I object to it and ask the question and answer be stricken.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The mere fact that an unfavorable inference is or is not created for a certain question and answer is not important. I do not care whether the inference is favorable or unfavorable, I want to know whether the inference is proper or not. You speak of what the law was. As I understood it, the gentleman was speaking about a situation apparently which occurred a month after he joined in November or December, 1939, and, therefore, a month after that time, which would be about the first of 1940 or somewhere in there. At that time the Maryland Drydock decision had not come down and the law as of that time was, therefore, a law presumably of earlier cases. One of the early cases 641 was the Union Collier case, which, although it was still after the time when the witness was apparently called into the Packard office, it was still before the Maryland Drydock case. I am rather troubled about another aspect of the question. I would like to inquire of Mr. Nelson how these immediate details are pertinent to the issues here.

Mr. Nelson: I would like to briefly show the history of this organization as being the only predecessor we know of of the Foreman's Association of America, in a factory plant of supervisors forces, being as these things go, immediately preceding. I would like to show the experience of this particular person who is also a member of the Foreman's Association of America and who was one of the men who helped organize it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I know it is a question of degree, it seems to me, that you have to begin with. Mr. Dahling indicated a concession of the Company, that it was opposed to it to a certain degree. How much more than that do you think you need?

Mr. Nelson: I think I need a good deal more. There has been a lot said about strikes around here and why these men struck and one thing and another, and presumably there is a knowledge of what occurred, and what they might expect if they joined an organization of their 642 own. You see, these men apparently cannot be expected to be ignorant.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: At any rate, I think the answer should be excluded on the further ground, which nobody has raised, that the witness speaks about being called into an office and somebody telling him something. I do not know who that somebody is. Foundation should be laid and what that something was.

Mr. Dahling: Whether the man was called into the office and objected to taking a cut or not, is again immaterial. If the purpose of it is to show that this man had a grievance, and the testimony that has been put in to date would indicate that that is a part of the purpose, why, of course, it is totally irrelevant. We are not dealing with whether or not these foremen had grievances in this proceeding. It does not make any difference whether they have any present grievances or not.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I know, I am assuming, and I may be wrong, that Mr. Nelson is going to get from the witness something to the effect that he was told why the cut was going to be put into effect.

Mr. Nelson: No, I do not expect to show that. I want to show what happened to this man immediately following his membership in a foreman's organization.

643 Trial Examiner Jaffee: From which I assume you are asking the finders of the fact to draw certain inferences?

Mr. Nelson: That is right, as connected with the issues in this case.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Examiner, my objection was also based in part upon the frankly pronounced reason and basis of counsel who is examining the witness for this line of questions, which was as follows, and I think this is an exact quotation, he said, "I want this testimony in to show the lengths to which the Company will go in opposing the organization of foremen." Related to my prior objections is the fact that that has no semblance of wrong of any kind by the employer. I said that whether it is wrong or not wrong and represents any improper conduct by the employer is tested by the state of the law as it is today and not as of any prior period, either before or after the Union Collier case or any other case. That is not a wrong and cannot be considered such in this case because of the direct holding of the governmental bureau, the National Labor Relations Board in charge of matters of this kind, that foremen are inappropriate for collective bargaining. So long as that holding is a law I do not think any unfavorable inferences should be piled in the record against the employer, for declining to encourage collective bargaining for supervision. That is the 644 basis of the whole line of questioning announced by Mr. Nelson himself and that is what I am objecting to.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: There is a broader basis for admission connected with what Mr. Nelson said. The past history and attempts to organize a foreman's organization is relevant here and if those attempts were made in the face of opposition by the Company, I think that is part of the picture itself. Of course, there is the question of degree. It is hard to determine that in advance. He may answer.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): You say that they told you something—where were you when you had this talk about the cut?

A. In Mr. Miller's office.

Q. Who was Mr. Miller?

A. Mr. Miller was my boss, now his title—

Q. I beg your pardon?

A. I don't know his title.

Q. How long had he been what you call your boss or the person giving you directions?

A. Oh, I would say approximately a year and a half.

Q. And you had been taking your directions from Mr. Miller for a year and a half?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you remain a foreman?

645 A. After I told Mr. Miller that I would take a chance in the employment department and gamble with another job I was no foreman.

Mr. Dahling: I did not get the answer.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I got it but I did not understand it. Will you read the answer, please.

(Answer read.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Have you ever been a foreman in the Packard plant from that time to this?

A. No.

Q. Can you fix the date and year of that occurrence?

A. Well, no I cannot.

Q. I mean the month and year?

A. I would not be sure.

Q. Have you continued to be employed at the Packard Company?

A. That is correct.

Q. In what capacity?

A. I am still doing electrical work.

Q. You say you are still doing it, are you doing it in a supervisory capacity?

A. No, as a working man.

Q. And you remained there as a working man ever since?

A. That is right.

Q. An hourly-rated employee?

646 Mr. Karasick: Mr. Nelson, I wonder if I could interrupt to suggest clarifying the witness' answer as to what he told Mr. Miller when he was told something in his office. I did not understand it and I am not sure the record will be clear.

Mr. Nelson: You mean you want that in greater detail? I am not concerned with that. If it ought to be more full I will be glad to do it.

Mr. Karasick: It was a mere suggestion.

Mr. Nelson: Thank you.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Mr. Dwyer, you worked yesterday, did you not?

A. That is right.

Q. What did you do yesterday?

A. I was working on panels, these panels which have to do with the different instruments, some are electrical and some are pressure instruments, but it all ties in with an electrical panel.

Q. What was your rate of pay?

A. $1.26 per hour.

Q. Are you a member of the UAW-CIO?

A. That is right.

Q. The Packard Local?

A. That is right.

Q. And have been since what time?

647 A. Oh, I would say from 1940.

Q. Mr. Dwyer, at the time you went into Mr. Miller's office, was there any complaint of your work or efficiency or ability or conduct whatsoever?

A. Never.

Q. Had you ever had any complaint against you as a foreman?

A. I never had any complaint against me as a foreman.

Q. You were a foreman how many years?

A. Approximately twenty-five years.

Q. And what is your present age?

A. Fifty-six.

Q. And you are apparently in very good health?

A. Well, I am up here.

Q. Now,—coming—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not know whether that is non-sequitur or not.

The Witness: Well, I made it.

Mr. Karasick: Apparently it takes a strong individual to take the witness stand

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It takes an individual with fortitude to stay on it.

Mr. Nelson: I suppose the Examiner means physical fortitude.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Coming back to the conversa-
648 tion in Mr. Miller's office, had you had any previous conversation with Mr. Miller about the matter?

A. No, there was only a few words spoken. He told me—

Q. You tell us the best you can what those words were.

A. He told me, "We will have to put you down to $200.00 a month."

649 Q. What was your pay?

A. Approximately 260.

Q. Then what did you say?

A. I said, "Well, I don't know why I should take that, I have been with the Company approximately 35 years, been doing night jobs for, I would say, five years," and I says, "and there certainly must be more than that in this whole setup with only a few words I have to take a cut." So I says, "No, I won't but I'll take a gamble on the employment department," which means I could go over there and possibly get an executive job, but I didn't get that. I had to spend approximately 45 days running, running in and running back, to see the employment manager, who was Mr. Weiss at the time, and then I joined the Forty-Plus Club. That Club, I don't know whether you are acquainted with it or not.

Q. No, I am not.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, just what has the Forty Club got to do with this proceeding?

Mr. Nelson: That is the way he got his job.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Is that right, Mr. Dwyer?

A. Yes, I am going to lead up to that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I know, but please do not pull the strings so far back.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Dwyer, are these the meas-
650 ures you took to get a job?

A. That's right; there was absolutely no jobs at Packard for me.

Q. So you took steps to get one and that included this Forty Plus Club?

A. Yes, and they contacted Packard for me.

Mr. Karasick: May I interrupt? If we are going to have it in the record, and I confess I do not know whether it is pertinent or not, I think we ought to have what happened to this man from the time he walked into Mr. Miller's Office. I think we ought to get that with clarity.

Mr. Nelson: I am consciously adopting the policy of letting this witness tell his story in his own way, as far as the Examiner will permit. I will bring him back to that, and I promise Mr. Karasick I will not overlook it.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Well, you finally got a job, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, come back to Mr. Miller's office. Have you told us all that was said at that time?

A. There was only a few words said.

Q. Yes, and you have told us that. Was anything else at all spoken?

A. Not a thing referring to me.

651 Q. All right, you went out and went to the employment office, apparently?

A. That's right.

Q. Then after some 45 days of efforts, including clubs, persons and personages, one thing and another, you got a job as a worker?

A. That's right.

Q. Do you remember how much pay you got, how much you got an hour when you went back?

A. No, I don't know offhand.

Q. You have never been a foreman at the Packard Company since?

A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Dwyer, do you happen to know what happened to the several hundred other foremen similarly situated to you at that time?

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, we have one foreman testifying here now. If we are going to bring in a hundred more—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) Maybe two or three hundred.

Mr. Dahling: If this is considered competent, then, of course, we would have to ask permission for time to investigate each one of these cases and to bring in testimony on behalf of the Company covering each one of these instances. I do not know whether it is your intention, Mr. Examiner, to develop the hearing along that line, but if this type of testimony goes in, we have no other recourse.

652

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The question is, do you know. Do you?

The Witness: May I have that question again, please?

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Do you know whether—

Mr. Dahling: (Interposing) Might I interrupt? If he says he does know of a hundred others, then we will be forced to ask him the names of the parties and the circumstances, so that the record will not contain statements which can be refuted. We had the same experience when we were before the War Labor Board and it took several weeks or months to chase down all of these so-called grievances, so that the Company could prove to the Board that they were non-existent. We have the same situation here.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you read the question, please?

(Question read.)

The Witness: I haven't any idea.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: May I observe, that is why I am generally inclined to permit an answer in such cases, because a question which asks, "Do you know" usually ends up with much to do about nothing about half the time.

Mr. Dahling: But the other half of the time something might be thrown into the answer that would have to be refuted after great length.

653

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The mere answer stopping with "Yes" does no harm.

Mr. Dahling: Perhaps my objection came a little premature, but you understand my point?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Nelson: There are several hundred witnesses that we can bring in to testify on the same point. Or, you can bring in the Company records and we will have them testify to the records.

Mr. Dahling: I move that that statement of counsel be stricken from the record.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is stricken.

Mr. Nelson: Will you mark this Petitioner's Exhibit No. 30?

(Thereupon, the document above referred to was marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 30.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Dwyer, I show you Petitioner's Exhibit No. 30, and ask you whether when this Local 918 disbanded you received a demit, just like this (indicating)?

A. That's right.

Q. It does not bear your name, but you received a form just like it?

A. That's right.

Mr. Nelson: I offer the demit in evidence and I offer
654 it to counsel for examination.

Mr. Donovan: Are copies of this available for counsel?

Mr. Nelson: We will make it available and we will include the membership card with it.

Mr. Donovan: I take it that this exhibit, or these exhibits that come in on this line of questioning that Mr. Nelson is pursuing are under the continuing objection that counsel earlier registered?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: I do not like to keep doing that, but if this is received, then let the record show at this point that this is, on its face a transfer or clearance certificate from the CIO Union in question, or Mr. William Vallance, who sits behind counsel in the courtroom now, as the first vice-president of the Foreman's Association of America.

Mr. Nelson: Of the National organization.

Mr. Donovan: Who is the Petitioner in this case.

Mr. Nelson: That is correct.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: If you gentlemen will hand me that paper, I will be able to rule.

Mr. Nelson: I have been passing it around, Mr. Examiner, I assumed they wanted to state their objections before you examined it.

655 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Nelson, what did you call this paper?

Mr. Nelson: It is a demit. D-e-m-i-t. On disbanding the Local, they were given this slip of paper to indicate that they had been paid up in full and that they were eligible for membership in another Local.

Mr. Donovan: Well, it is a clearance.

Mr. Nelson: Yes, it is a clearance from Local 918. We used to call them a demit in the coal mines.

Mr. Karasick: Well, what is it entitled on the face of it? It is a transfer of clearance certificate, is it not?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, a transfer of clearance certificate, but in short parlance among Union men, it is a demit.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Dwyer, I show you Petitioner's Exhibit Number 30, for identification, and call your attention to the fact that on it it says that the individual named on the paper is paid in full, I assume for dues, and that the particular Union is involved in disbanding and then on a line above, the word "date" appears, then follows the word or initials "eff.", which I assume means effective February 1, 1940. Do you see that?

The Witness: Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: As I understood your earlier testimony, did you say that you had joined that earlier 656 Foreman's Association sometime around November or December of 1939?

The Witness: 1939.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Did you also testimy thereafter that it disbanded a few years after you joined it?

The Witness: That's as far as I know. Now, I don't know when I receievd my demit. I don't know whether they had to do with all individuals or not.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Does this paper refresh your recollection as to when it disbanded?

The Witness: No, it does not.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, it is received in evidence.

(The document heretofore marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 30, was received in evidence.)

Mr. Nelson: You may cross examine the witness. I ought to say to counsel and to the Examiner that I expect to offer a witness who has more knowledge of the organization itself than this witness, and I did not offer Mr. Dwyer on the history of the organization. I do not believe he knows much about it, but I have a witness whom I will offer on the history briefly.

Cross-Examination,

657 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Dwyer, you testified that you became an assistant foreman and you fixed the date as 1911?

A. I fixed the date approximately.

Q. Yes, approximately 1911. You had under your supervision 500 men?

A. No, I didn't say that. I said during my cycle as a foreman.

Q. I do not quite understand your answer then. When you were assistant foreman, how many men did you have under your supervision?

A. Oh, I would say approximately 20.

Q. Approximately 20?

A. In that group.

Q. And did you have a superior over you in that particular department?

A. Yes.

Q. What would be the title of that superior?

A. Foreman.

Q. And did the foreman also have a superior in that particular department?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. There was no general foreman in that department?

A. Not in that department.

Q. You remained an assistant foreman up until 1917, approximately?

658 A. Approximately.

Q. And you say you had at that time two or three departments over which you were the supervisor or foreman?

A. Not while I was assistant foreman.

Q. No, I am sorry, you must have misunderstood my question. I will restate it. You were made a foreman in approximately 1917?

A. Thereabouts.

Q. You testified then, that as a foreman you had two or three departments under your supervision?

A. That's correct.

Q. What departments were those?

A. They were the N. A. Department.

Q. What does that mean?

A. That meant the body department.

Q. The entire body department was under your supervision?

A. No, that particular setup that had to do with the N. A. Department. It was body assembling.

Q. And what was your particular function or the particular function of the men supervised by you in that department?

A. What do you mean?

Q. Well, what did they do? As foreman, you supervised someone, did you not?

A. That's right.

659 Q. You supervised some workers, did you not?

A. That's right.

Q. And what did those workers do in the N. A. Department?

A. The N. A. Department had to do with putting electrical panels into the body, and other small assemblies.

Q. When you say electrical panels, are those the panels that are in front of a car, in the dashboard?

A. It has to do with the lighting switches.

Q. And also, you say small assemblies?

A. Small assemblies.

Q. What did they do, was that further assemblies for lights?

A. Oil lines.

Q. Well, that has nothing to do with the N. A. Department?

A. That has to do with the N. A. Department.

Q. All right, but did you have anything to do with the supervision over that?

A. Yes.

Q. Then your entire work was not electrical?

A. Then let us get out of the N. A. Department.

Q. No, let us stay in the N. A. Department. Did you say you had something to do with oil lines?

A. They are a part of the dash or instrument board assembly.

Q. Your work was limited to that part of the oil
660 line? Board assembly?

A. That's right.

Q. Then, what other work did the workmen under your supervision do in the N. A. Department?

A. Well, attaching panels, attaching the oil lines, these different insulations that used to have to go in at that particular place, brackets, and so forth.

Q. Was that limited to the panel?

A. It was limited to the N. A. Department.

Q. I am asking you to limit your testimony, Witness, to the work done by the workers under your supervision in the N. A. Department. It is my understanding, of course, that there were more functions carried on by the N. A. Department than were performed by the workers under you. That is correct, is it not?

A. There was work performed there, different assemblies.

Q. And you only had supervision of the men working on one particular type of assembly, is that right?

A. On that particular body that came through that department. Now, there are several other little items that go in this thing. In order to complete this thing like I would have to, I would have to have an operation sheet with all those particular piece number on them.

Q. You performed your duties by supervising the carrying into effect of the steps set forth on this processing sheet?

661 A. That is correct; operation sheet.

Q. Operation sheet. And the men under your supervision, the workers under your superv' 'on, did a part of those operations set forth on that operation sheet?

A. What the department operations called for, that was what had to be done on the job.

Q. Yes, and other foremen and other workers performed other functions in accordance with this operation sheet?

A. That particular operation sheet had to do with me only.

Q. But there were other operation sheets for other workers and foremen in the N. A. Division, were there not?

A. Not in the N. A. Division.

Q. Not in the N. A. Division?

A. No.

Q. How many men did you have under your supervision in the N. A. Division?

A. I would say at one time 102 people.

Q. When you say they were under your division, you were then a foreman, you had no general foreman at that time over you?

A. Well, I don't know anything about what the titles were. I know there was an assistant foreman. Correction, please. There was an assistant superintendent and a superintendent.

662 Q. In this particular department?

A. No, over me.

Q. Over you?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have any assistant foremen under you?

A. Yes.

Q. How many assistant foremen did you have under you?

A. I would say—he had no recognition, we called him a jobsetter or a leader or something like that.

Q. I am not asking you that. I am asking you whether you had any persons designated as assistant foremen under your supervision?

A. Not in the N. A. Department.

Q. Not in the N. A. Department?

A. No.

Q. The workers in the N. A. Department, doing this assembly job, did each one of them have a particular job to do and it would then pass on to another workman?

A. The body would pass along, is that right?

Q. And these workmen had a repetitive job to do? They did the same operation on each car as it came through?

A. Several operations, as the time allowed.

Q. But they were supposed to do the same operations on each car as it went by and the same operation?

A. If the time allowed them to do it on each body
663 as it went along.

Q. If the time did not allow them to do it, of course, that clogged the line?

A. If they had no time to do it there would be somebody else to help them out.

Q. The point I am making is that those were repetitive jobs, the same process was carried through on each car as it came through, by your workers?

A. Well, I wouldn't say that. It all depends on the time. If there were seven bodies that came through in one hour and then possibly two bodies came through the next hour all of those people could not work on the two bodies.

Q. But each one of your workers had a set job to do as these bodies came through and repeated that job as the bodies went down the line. If he had time he got through with it, if he didn't, somebody further down the line had to pick up that job?

A. After they were told what to do.

Q. And you were the one who instructed them what to do?

A. That is right.

Q. You say there were about 100 men in that department?

A. At one time.

Q. What other department did you have?
664 A. K. B. Department.

Q. K. B. Department?

A. Yes. The K. B. Department was the department that had to do with receiving outside bodies, that is not the Receiving Department. These bodies simply came into this department for stripping, which I would say was things that had to be taken off the body to prepare it for the production line, or any particular operation there that could be done that would avoid delays or something like that along the line.

Q. When you say the bodies came in from outside sources, you mean that they were not manufactured in the Packard Motor Car Company plant?

A. That is right.

Q. And that they might be purchased from a body company on the outside?

A. Yes.

Q. And they came into this division, you say, and you stripped them? What did you do?

A. They had to be made—there were different covers taken off of them and things like that.

Q. You mean paper covers and packing that was around them to protect them?

A. It could be.

Q. How many men did you have in that department?

665 A. I would say about one time maybe twelve.

Q. You had twelve men?

A. Approximately.

Q. And these twelve men just removed the outside packing and covering from these bodies that came in from the outside?

A. Yes, and there were other operations. Many of them, but I do not recall them now.

Q. What were the other operations?

A. One was when the body came in it had a celluloid—it happened to be a rubberized cover on the body in those days and not all steel covers at that time. It had a celluloid all around it to protect it when they were working on that particular part of the body to keep the top from getting damaged. They would have to cut that celluloid all the way around.

Q. Essentially, however, this department merely prepared the bodies that came in from the outside, by removing the celluloid covering so that it could be placed on the assembly line?

A. That is right.

Q. Of what other department did you have charge?

A. Of the F. E. Department.

Q. What is the F. E. Department?

A. It had all to do with the electrical assembling
666 installation, repairing, and so forth.

Q. How many workers did you have under your jurisdiction there?

A. I would say approximately at that time we had in the peak production that I am talking about—I would say around about 100 people.

Q. When you speak of peak production, will you fix the time when you had peak production?

A. No, I couldn't.

Q. Would you have peak production each year?

A. You would have peak production because if you establish a high record that is peak.

Q. Now, how long would that period of peak production last?

A. Well, that all depends on sales.

Q. Well, the more production the more men you needed in your department, I assume?

A. That is right.

Q. Will you give us an average? You say you had 100 men at the peak production. How many would you have at—well, let's call it low production?

A. Well, you can call low production one job. Now you can call it five or ten or fifteen or twenty or twenty-five and go up. I cannot give you any information like that. I wouldn't be in a position to estimate the approxi-
667 mate number of men I might need.

Q. You would not be in a position to estimate the approximate number of men you need?

A. I don't think I could because you plan your production according to the amount of jobs that you are going to have through that department and your help goes accordingly.

Q. I am not asking you to answer it if you cannot, Mr. Dwyer. The number of men would run from one to 100, depending on production?

A. Well, that's common sense.

Q. And that is your answer?

A. That is your answer.

Q. What is your answer?

A. My answer is that I do not know. We don't know at that time and we didn't know from one month to another what our production really was.

Q. You say "at that time." What time is that?

A. I don't know. It is in the Packard record, if you want to go back that way.

Q. This was during the time when Packard was making automobiles?

A. That is correct.

Q. And that would cover what period of time? Will you give us a general period of time?

668 A. Between 1905, if you want the period of time, and 1939.

Q. And you weren't a foreman in 1905?

A. No.

Q. And you weren't in charge of the F. E. Department in 1905?

A. No.

Q. Well, my questions concern the F. E. Department, Mr. Dwyer, and you became a foreman there in, you say, 1917?

A. We have already gone over that.

Q. I am asking you if that is right?

A. Approximately.

Q. So for the period of time you are referring to—1917 until what date in 1939?

A. A foreman?

Q. Yes.

A. In through that set-up.

Q. Did you have any assistant foremen in the F. E. Department?

A. In the F. E. Department we had one assistant.

Q. Was there a general foreman in that department?

A. No.

Q. Now, you didn't like the fact that you, Mr. Dwyer, that you remained a foreman for this period of time?

A. What do you mean I didn't like it?

669 Q. Well, didn't you resent the fact that you were not made a general foreman?

A. No, no; I didn't.

Q. And you were perfectly satisfied to remain on your job?

A. I wasn't satisfied but I didn't resent it.

Q. From the tenor of your testimony and the tone of your voice on direct examination you indicated to me that you held quite a bit of resentment because of the fact that you had not been promoted.

A. Well, if I was an employee of a company thirty-five years and I was called in that I was going to be given a cut—

Q. You didn't like that?

A. Just a minute. And then all this boss of mine said was, "There it is"—

Q. And that is—

A. Now, just a minute—

Q. Just a moment, you haven't answered my question—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the witness is entitled to finish, in view of the way you asked the question.

Mr. Dahling: I am sorry if the question is confusing. I would like to restate it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the witness is entitled to complete his answer.

670 The Witness: I was called in after thirty-five years of continuous service and during that time, of course, you have got the record and the record is still at Packard. It was only a few words that were said and I had to take that cut or gamble with something else. My idea is that if I had something back of me, some security or something like that, why, that wouldn't happen. A man with a thirty-five year record is something to look forward to.

Mr. Dahling: I move, Mr. Examiner, that this witness' answer, if it is such, be stricken. It certainly is not responsive to any question that was asked.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The answer may remain.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): You felt that you had sufficient ability to be promoted to a general foremanship, didn't you?

A. I have still got that ability.

Q. So, when you were told that the Packard Company could not use you as a foreman any longer, you had an opportunity to go out and demonstrate that ability elsewhere?

A. They didn't tell me.

Q. But you did have the opportunity to go out, if you had the ability, and get a like job somewhere else, didn't you?

A. I can do that tomorrow.

671 Q. If you felt you were so unfairly dealt with, then why did you take a job at Packard's after you were told that they could not keep you as a foreman any longer?

A. Because if I got back to Packard I would have seniority, which I did not have when I was a foreman.

Q. And that was in the CIO?

A. That was in the CIO, and that I have today.

Q. You feel, I suppose, that if you had—if the foremen had collective bargaining and you were there thirty-five years, you would be automatically promoted?

A. No, I would have something to say, though.

Q. What would you have to say?

A. I would have my particular record.

Q. Well, you have that now, haven't you?

A. As a foreman, as is.

Q. But your idea would be that if you had collective bargaining and you were there thirty-five years, through the force of the collective bargaining, you could make them make you a general foreman?

A. I couldn't make them do anything.

Q. Then what is your purpose in believing in unionism and collective bargaining? Didn't that go that far?

A. My meaning of unionism, as you put it, is security, is job protection, and you cannot get away from it in my case.

672 Q. Well, you are talking about job protection, how do you get that job protection?

A. Well, you would at least have a hearing about your case, wouldn't you? I didn't have a hearing.

Q. But you had an opportunity to present your arguments to management, didn't you?

A. No, I did not have.

Q. You mean Mr. Miller just said, "This is it, out you go"?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did you attempt to state your case to him?

A. I did.

Q. Then you did state your case to him, didn't you?

A. No, I just told him, "Well, there is only one thing for me to do and that is gamble with the Employment Department."

Q. Getting back to this security business, you feel if you had collective bargaining you could use the force of this Union to make the Company retain you in your job because you had been there thirty-five years?

A. No, if we had security your seniority would take care of that. As a foreman I did not have no seniority, although I was with the Company thirty-five years.

Q. You believe that a foreman should have seniority?

A. In my case, yes.

Q. And, therefore, if you had collective bargaining
673 that would be one of the things you would have?

A. I would have seniority.

Q. And the Company could not have demoted you because of your seniority?

A. I wouldn't say that, they can do anything.

Q. I don't quite understand this security proposition you are bringing up.

A. Your seniority years are the years you put there and they are secure, is that correct?

Q. Well, I am asking you.

A. Well, I am asking you, too. You are putting the question that way. After thirty-five years you should have something. In other words, you shouldn't just be tripped over and shoved around, you at least ought to have a hearing.

Q. The point is that you feel that if you had this Union you could, we'll say, force the Company to give you a hearing?

A. That would automatically take care of itself in seniority.

Q. In other words, you would insist upon a seniority provision in your contract?

A. You are putting that in.

Q. I am asking you, on this collective bargaining business, you feel that there should be a seniority 674 provision in the contract?

A. If you had collective bargaining both sides have an argument and in my case there was only one argument and that was the Company's argument.

Q. If you had collective bargaining you would have the group behind you to argue for you, isn't that so?

A. I would at least have a chance to say yes or no.

Q. Didn't you have a chance to say yes or no to Mr. Miller?

A. I said yes and no to him a lot of times.

Q. Do you know Mr. Miller?

A. Yes.

Q. You are not unfriendly with him?

A. No.

Q. And he is not unfriendly with you?

A. No.

Q. And you get along all right today?

A. Yes, I certainly like the gentleman. We may have had differences of opinion.

Q. And there was that difference of opinion at the time you went in as to your capacity and ability?

A. That could be about anything.

Q. He may have disagreed with you as to your classification?

A. He didn't say so.

675 Q. There is a possibility that he might not say so, isn't that true?

A. There is an executive for you. Why don't they say those things?

Q. Probably not to hurt your feelings.

A. When we build ourselves up into a few years, as I am, we can take anything they give us, and we do.

Q. You do take it but you don't like it?

A. We don't say we don't like it, we fight back.

Q. And that is why you want this organization?

A. I want the organization? I got an organization. I am in the CIO.

Q. And that organization fights for you?

A. Correct.

Q. And you feel that if the foremen should have an organization—so that if one of the foremen only had ten years' seniority and another had eight, you would fight to see that the man who had ten years' seniority got the job?

A. Possibility.

Q. Who decides the matter of ability?

A. Your own self has a lot to do with it by what you can show.

Q. And that is decided by the Union or the Company?

A. That is a question.

676 Q. That is quite a big question, isn't it?

A. You bet, that is why we are here today.

Mr. Dahling: No further questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of this witness?

Mr. Nelson: No questions.

Mr. Karasick: No questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I have one or two questions that I want to clear up.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee): Mr. Dwyer, when did you join the UAW-CIO?

A. I would say some time in 1940.

Q. That is to say, at the time you became a working man again?

A. Shortly after.

Q. Did you testify that a general foreman has to do with more than one department?

A. Well, a general foreman—I think a general foreman is a man who is given that rank when he has several departments.

Q. Do you then mean to testify as well that every general foreman has more than one department?

A. No, I wouldn't say that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of this witness?

677 Mr. Nelson: No further questions.

Mr. Dahling: No questions.

Mr. Karasick: No questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well, the witness is excused.

(Witness excused.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will take a five-minute recess at this time.

(Recess.)

After Recess.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let us proceed, gentlemen.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. James Byerley.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What is his name?

Mr. Nelson: Mr. James Byerley, B-y-e-r-l-e-y.

JAMES BYERLEY,

a witness called by and on behalf of the Petitioning Union, being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Your address is what, Mr. Byerley?

A. 12 West Canfield.

Q. Is that in the City of Detroit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you lived here, about?

A. About nineteen years.

678 Q. You are a married man with a family?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you presently employed by the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been employed there?

A. Nine years and ten months.

Q. When you started there, what work were you doing?

A. I started as an arc welder.

Q. Had you had some training for that work.

A. Previously, over at the Chrysler Corporation.

Q. As maintenance and production workers?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is that right?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) I am sorry for the delay, Mr. Examiner. We had some records we wished to look at here. Witness, would you say that you were originally employed by the Packard Motor Company in February 22, 1935?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were made a foreman in the XLE Department about July 28, 1939?

A. Approximately there, yes.

Q. Then when did you go back to the production, approximately?

698 A. Eighteen months later.

Q. That was approximately May 9, 1941?

A. Yes.

Q. And you are now working in the aircraft division?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: That is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, it is the best information I can get as to the connection of the Packard supervisory force with Local 918 to the effect that it began in October, 1939 and concluded sometime in January of 1940. It is also my information that the Local had a longer life than that because the Packard men were not the first supervisory force in the Local. I am not able to fix the time with sufficient certainty to hazard a statement on that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Witness, have you heard the statement of counsel just made?

The Witness: Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What do you say about it?

The Witness: It is correct as far as my knowledge is concerned.

Mr. Dahling: As far as your knowledge as to the Packard Motor Company or to the other company?

699 The Witness: As to the Packard Motor Company.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you know whether or not it existed for a longer period in other companies?

The Witness: I wouldn't be able to say for sure, it would be hearsay if I did.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Then with that exception you adopt counsel's statement as your own?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: To the best of your knowledge, and speaking generally and without pinning you down to any particular date, the disbanding of that old Packard supervisory Local was around January, 1940, was it not?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: That is all.

Mr. Nelson: If they are through with this witness, I will excuse him.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: They apparently are. The witness is excused.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Nelson: I call Mr. W. T. Grant.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Before Mr. Grant testifies, I would like to ask you, Mr. Nelson, for the record, assume for the time being—which assumption is not a finding of fact and of course, if I may add parenthetically, I do not make findings of fact in this case anyway—assuming 700 for the time being that Packard was opposed to the organization of foremen—to that extent, there seems to be no disagreement. Assuming further that it was violently opposed to it, to the extent that it demoted certain foremen because of it—and that is the only assumption for the time being—what does it add to this particular hearing?

Mr. Nelson: The knowledge of it adds reasons for the action taken by these foremen that is criticized here by counsel.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What reasons?

Mr. Nelson: They criticize the strike and strikes, and they criticize what they characterize as extreme measures.

Q. You had previous training and experience?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were employed at the Chrysler Corporation how long?

A. Seven years.

Q. As an arc welder?

A. Arc welder and torch solderer.

Q. That was a production job you had to start with at Packard's?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Afterwards, were you promoted to supervision at Packard's?

A. Yes, sir.

679 Q. How long after you started there?

A. I will say five years, five and a half years.

Q. To what position were you promoted?

A. Assistant foreman.

Q. In what line of work?

A. Body assembly.

Q. Did that involve this welding and soldering that you have referred to?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many men did you have under your supervision?

A. 85.

Q. Were they all skilled men in that line?

A. We wasn't all welding; we were arc welding and gas welding, too.

Q. It was an arc welding and soldering job?

A. No, not all of it; some of it was, yes.

Q. But it involved men with skill, did it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who had some training and experience?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the year that you were promoted to assistant foreman?

A. 1940.

Q. Did you advance beyond that in rank?

A. No, sir.

680 Q. You remained as assistant foreman until when?

A. 1941.

Q. Did you become a member of Local 981, the Supervisors local of the CIO?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have a receipt or your card?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Do you remember when you became a member of that local?

A. I would say it was just when we started the new model in 1940.

Q. And you were at that time an assistant foreman at Packard's?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And thereby qualified as a member?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what your wage or salary was?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?

A. $1.25.

Q. An hour?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were an hourly-rated assistant foreman?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It averaged about what, weekly or monthly?

681 A. I would say—well, forty hours a week we run.

Q. How did you happen to become a member of Local 918?

Mr. Dahling: I object, Mr. Examiner, as being incompetent and irrelevant, the reasons why he became a member of that organization.

Mr. Nelson: I did not mean to ask him that. I meant, did he hunt up that local or did somebody solicit him.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

The Witness: Well, it looked like a pretty good organization, so I joined it. I needed protection the same as everybody else.

Mr. Dahling: May the last part of the answer be stricken, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It may be stricken, because it was not responsive to counsel's question.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): At that time, did you belong to any other labor organization, at the time you joined Local 918?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What local were you a member of?

A. UAW-CIO, Local 190.

Q. Is that the Packard Local?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had become a member of that when you
682 were a production worker?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you take your demit from that Local 190 to Local 918, or did you continue in both?

A. No, sir, I got a demit from Local 190.

Q. To Local 918?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you attend the meetings of Local 918?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you an officer?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether Local 918 was limited to supervisors at Packard's?

A. No, sir, it wasn't.

Q. What other employers' supervisors were members of that Local?

A. Well, we had a branch, you can call it, of our own at Packard.

Q. You had a branch, a Packard branch of it?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, may I suggest the records and Constitution of this particular organization would be the best evidence as to its membership, functions, and so forth, and eligibility? This witness is testifying as to the 683 qualifications of members, and so forth. If that is not available, of course, that is another thing.

Mr. Nelson: I must say to the Examiner that I personally have made a search for the officers and the records of this local. I am informed that Mr. Bolds, who was president, has been in Europe and North Africa for a year or two. The vice-president, likewise, is in the armed services. I located the secretary-treasurer who was without records and who was unable to give me the location of the records. I am continuing the search for the records of this Local, so far, without any success at all. I have offered this oral testimony because I was unable to obtain anything more than the two exhibits, Nos. 29 and 30, the card and the demit I have offered. I, obviously, would have produced the records if I could. I am continuing the effort, but I would like, in the meantime, to offer this witness briefly on the organization.

Mr. Dahling: Well, Mr. Examiner, if this witness can qualify, I am not taking any exception to counsel's statement that he has made an investigation. If counsel states he has, that is accepted by me. I am not questioning that at all. But unless this witness has read the Constitution or read the by-laws, and can qualify for this secondary evidence, as to the contents, then I must, of course, object to the questions.

Mr. Nelson: I am not offering that; I am offering 684 the functions that he observed himself, and I will limit myself to that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Do you know whether in addition to this Packard Chapter there was in this Local other employer supervision?

A. Yes, sir, there was.

Q. Which ones?

A. Murray's was in it, Chrysler Corporation, Kelsey-Hayes, those are the ones I know of personally. There was others in it, but I can't recall the names of them.

Q. Can you say whether Briggs was?

A. I wouldn't say for sure.

Mr. Donovan: What companies did you mention besides Chrysler's?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The Murray Corporation, Chrysler Corporation and Kelsey-Hayes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Those are the ones you know of?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But there may have been others that you are not aware of, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: But it was limited to supervisors?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

685 Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Were you a member when the Local 918 disbanded?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know what reasons for the disbandment were given? Just answer yes or no.

A. Yes.

Q. What were they?

A. They took the charter away when the Dodge Company had their strike. The Charter was taken away from us at that time.

Q. And you disbanded?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You continued as a foreman, did you, at Packard's?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. For how long?

A. About six months.

Q. Then what happened to you?

A. In the change of models, they give me this job on production.

Q. As an hourly-rated production worker?

Mr. Dahling: Six months after what date?

Mr. Nelson: Six months after the disbandment of Local 918.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Is that correct, witness?

A. Yes, sir.

686 Q. What was the work that you were then given?

A. I was torch welding then.

Q. That was as a production worker?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you had supervision, at any time since you undertook this work last mentioned?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have never since been a foreman?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you a member of any labor organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And of which one?

A. UAW-CIO, Local 190.

Q. When did you become a member of it again?

A. Right after I went off from supervision.

Q. Now, let me ask you, Mr. Byerley, if you know of any other foremen at the Packard Company plant who were foremen prior to the organization and the disbandment—prior to the disbandment of Local 918, and who have never since been foremen in the plant and have continued in the plant as employees?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were they?

Mr. Dahling: I object, Mr. Examiner—

Trial Examiner Jaffee (Interposing): Just a minute.

687 May I have the last two questions and answer read? (Questions and answer read.)

Mr. Karasick: I object, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just a minute, I am trying to understand the question.

Mr. Karasick: That is why I am objecting, Mr. Examiner.

Mr. Nelson: May I withdraw it? I will withdraw both of those last questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Mr. Byerley, do you know any men who, prior to the disbandment of Local 918, were employed by the Packard Motor Company as foremen or supervisors who have remained in the employment of the Packard Motor Company from the time of the disbandment through the present time and who have never since the disbandment acted as supervisors at Packard's?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?

Mr. Dahling: The objection we have made, Mr. Examiner, of course, still stands. If counsel for the petitioner is seeking through this testimony to leave the inference that these people were demoted because of thir activities in this particular organization, we will be forced 688 to go in and find out their names and check every case and produce testimony.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

The Witness: I couldn't say offhand. I know of at least ten of them in the shop today.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): What do you say on this question as to whether they were demoted because of their membership in Local 918, since it has been raised by counsel?

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, if this witness knows.

Mr. Nelson: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): If you know.

A. I couldn't say whether it was on account of belonging to the Local or because of organization or not, I couldn't say.

Q. In either case, you could not say?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were there any complaints against your work as a supervisor?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. None that was ever brought to your attention?

A. No, sir, it wasn't on my card when they transferred me back on production.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You say you were changed after the model was changed?

The Witness: Just before they finished the model I was changed back. They brought another man down from another department.

689

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): And put him in charge of your job?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what do you say as to whether knowledge of what happened to these ten foremen you have mentioned, and yourself, has spread throughout the plant?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean, spread at that time?

Mr. Nelson: At that time, yes.

A. Spread all over. Everybody recognized it.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): By "everybody" you mean what?

A. Well, both production and the men that didn't get back on supervision jobs when the jobs opened up.

Mr. Donovan: I object to the question and answer and ask that they be stricken. It is a conclusion that the witness is given. Obviously, it could not be within his knowledge what is in the minds of the Packard Motor Company employees, which he has taken in one sweep in answering the question, which was equally objectionable as the answer.

Mr. Nelson: I would like to ask one more question.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Have you discussed this with the men in the plant?

A. Yes, sir.

690 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, it is broad, but I think everybody understands how much weight to give to that type of answer.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): You are still working there, are you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have now accumulated some seniority as a production worker?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the CIO?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: That is all. I offer the witness for cross-examination.

Mr. Dahling: No questions, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness is excused.

Mr. Karasick: Just one moment, please.

Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): Mr. Witness, you said the Charter of Local 918 was taken away at the time of the Dodge strike?

A. Yes.

Q. Who took it away?

A. John L. Lewis.

Q. And that caused the Local to disband?

A. Yes, sir.

691 Q. Following that, was there any organization embracing foremen at the Packard Motor Car Company up to the time the Foreman's Association was organized?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Karasick: That is all.

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Mr. Byerley, do you know how many men have been made foremen in your line of work since you were demoted at the Packard Motor Company?

A. Since war production?

Q. Yes.

A. Since war production my line of work is not like it was, as far as that is concerned. There have been a lot of promotions that have been made.

Q. But you have not had any of them?

A. No, not yet.

Q. Promotions of other men from daily workers or hourly-rated workers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To other positions?

A. Assistant foremen, yes, sir.

Q. But you have not had any of those promotions?

A. No, sir.

Q. And none of these ten men you know have had any promotions?

692 A. No, sir.

Q. You say "a lot of men have been promoted." What do you mean by that? I don't know what the word "lot" would mean.

A. Well, I would say twelve or fifteen that I know of personally.

Q. You had never been a foreman before?

A. That's right.

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I would like to ask a few questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Can you give us the names of the ten men you mentioned?

A. I couldn't do it offhand.

Q. Can you give us the names of any of them?

A. I can give you the nickname of a few of them; that's all I know.

Q. Do you know them quite well?

A. I know them quite well, yes; some of them worked for me.

Q. Work for you now?

A. No, when I was assistant foreman, I mean.

Q. Were they assistant foremen, also?

693 A. Not then, no.

Q. When were they made assistant foremen?

A. After the war started.

Q. That was after Local 918 was disbanded?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So your testimony as to these people having been demoted refers to a period of time after the disbandment of Local 918?

A. You said demoted?

Q. Yes.

A. I was demoted after 918 disbanded.

Q. Well, these other foremen, were they demoted after that period, also?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you secure their names?

A. I imagine a person could get them easy enough.

Q. Will you secure their names and furnish them to counsel for the petitioner?

Mr. Nelson: I will join in asking him to do that.

The Witness: I will see if we can get them.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Could you fix the date when Local 918 was finally disbanded, approximately, to the best of your knowledge?

A. No, sir, I couldn't say that. At the time it disbanded, I know was about two weeks after Dodge 694 had that big strike of theirs.

Q. You do not recall the year?

A. In 1940, wasn't it?

Q. In 1940?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it would be about two weeks after the beginning of that strike?

A. No, sir, it was after the strike was ended.

Q. Oh, after the strike was ended?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Dahling: No further questions.

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): While you are on that, is it a fact that the disbandment grew out of some difficulty in settling that strike?

A. Yes.

Q. And bringing it to a close?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because I want—

Mr. Donovan (Interposing): Just a minute, I will ask if the witness knows the reasons.

Mr. Nelson: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Tell us what you know about that.

Mr. Donovan: From his personal knowledge. And I still insist upon our continuing objection.

695 Mr. Nelson: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Tell us what you know as an active member in Local 918, the Packard Division, of the reasons for the disbandment of that Local.

Mr. Dahling: Just a minute, Mr. Examiner.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Particularly with reference to the Chrysler strike.

Mr. Dahling: If he was present at any meetings where the strike was being discussed, that is one thing. But if this is hearsay, that is, he was told by someone, that is another thing. I do not think from the form of the question we can determine whether or not this is hearsay.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Were you present at meetings where the reasons were discussed?

A. Only in our own local, yes.

Q. What were the reasons given your local?

A. Given our local?

Q. Yes.

A. The foremen at the Dodge Truck plant wanted to rehire some foremen that had been discharged out there, and Dodge refused to do it, and John L. Lewis was having trouble settling that strike at Dodge's. He just took our charter away from us.

696 Q. Didn't insist on the re-employment of foremen?

A. No, sir.

Q. Just disbanded you and left you?

A. Yes, left us out in the cold.

Q. And took care of the maintenance and production workers?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: I think that is all.

Mr. Karasick: No questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am still a little bit unclear, Mr. Byerley, about these ten men.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee): As I understand it, when Local 918 disbanded, they were not assistant foremen?

A. They were at that time, yes, the first ones were, yes, the last question asked merely about the men that had been advanced. They wasn't members of it.

Q. You referred to ten men.

A. Yes.

Q. Were they assistant foremen at the time Local 918 disbanded?

A. Yes.

Q. There came a time therefore, after—if I understand your testimony—when they no longer were assistant foremen?

A. Yes.

697 Q. And were instead production or maintenance workers, is that right?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Any further questions of this witness?

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) And in addition have continued there to the present time?

A. Yes.

I think these men were entitled to act within the scope of knowledge of not only what the Company pronounced as a policy, but what it demonstrated it was ready to do.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: As I understand it, the real issue and the main issue here is a question of the appropriateness or inappropriateness of its claim as a unit.

Mr. Nelson: It bears on that also.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: How?

Mr. Nelson: It bears on that illustrated by an experience with a chapter not limited to the plant and a chapter not limited to supervision.

Mr. Donovan: The evidence does not show that it
701 was not limited to supervision, does it?

Mr. Nelson: Well, the CIO, the Local was limited to supervision but the conflict between the interests of supervision and the hourly rated employees, appears very clearly in the testimony. It was summarily disbanded as a necessary measure in settling what appears here as a serious strike.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: To use an illustration, are you referring to the testimony of the last witness where he spoke of the intervention of Mr. Lewis and what the witness referred to as "the foremen having been left out in the cold", so to speak.

Mr. Nelson: He says that certain foremen members of this Local were seeking reinstatement after that strike at Dodge and Chrysler and that Mr. Lewis left them out in the settlements and went to extreme measures of even disbanding rather than to jeopardize a settlement of the rights and claims of the maintenance and production workers.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I gather then this, in that settlement there was in effect a conflict as to whether or not production and maintenance workers would benefit as opposed to foremen.

Mr. Nelson: There was either a conflict or a trade. One thing was given for something else and that would, of itself, imply some conflict—

702 Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) And that in turn would indicate that production and maintenance workers should not be in the same unit as foremen?

Mr. Nelson: That is our position. This is an illuminating example of exactly what happens.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: When I say it might indicate, I am talking about your contentions.

Mr. Nelson: Those are our contentions. We claim this illustrates our contentions by experiences and is presumed to be within the knowledge, at least, of the active members of the Packard Motor Car Company. In any event, those are our contentions.

Mr. Dahling: If that is the case, then testimony that John L. Lewis changed his Mine Workers Constitution after the Collier case to admit supervisory employees is also pertinent testimony in this case and has about the same weight. Of course, it is a fact, as it appears in the Congressional Record, that as soon as the Collier case came into effect, Mr. John L. Lewis changed his Constitution to take in supervisory employees of the mines.

Mr. Nelson: When I was in the coal mines we took in all the bosses.

Mr. Dahling: I refer you to the Congressional Record, that I assume you are familiar with. You were present at the hearing and heard testimony to that effect.

703 Mr. Nelson: I do not need the Congressional Record on the Mine Workers Union. I was a member of it.

Mr. Dahling: Then you are not up to date on that?

Mr. Nelson: Oh, yes, I am.

Mr. Karasick: You are not ruling on this particular question?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: No.

Mr. Karasick: It is just an observation?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is a request for enlightenment.

Mr. Karasick: Very well.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Perhaps I should say further enlightenment.

Mr. Nelson: May I proceed?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Nelson: I call Mr. W. T. Grant.

WILFRED T. GRANT,

a witness being called by and on behalf of the Petitioner, being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Your first name, please?

A. Wilfred.

Q. Mr. Grant, your residence, if you please?

A. 15080 Strathmoor, Detroit.

704 Q. And your present occupation?

A. President of Local 600 UAW-CIO.

Q. Did you come here at my request?

A. That is true, if you are Mr. Nelson.

Q. I am Walter M. Nelson. You have never met me and I have never met you?

A. That is right.

Q. And Mr. Nelson called you and you came?

Mr. Donovan: What was the name of the Local?

The Witness: Local 600, UAW-CIO.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) The Ford Motor Company Local of Maintenance and Production workers?

A. Yes, that is the Local that represents the maintenance and production workers at the Rouge Plant, Ford Motor Company.

Q. Were you employed by the Ford Motor Company prior to becoming president of the Local?

A. I was.

Q. In what capacity?

A. Tool and die room.

Q. For how many years were you employed by the Ford Motor Company?

A. Well, I started with the Ford Motor Company in 1922.

Q. And continued until when?

A. Until I became financial secretary of Local 600.

705 Q. When was that?

A. That was in 1942.

Q. And since that time you have been active in the affairs of Local 600, have you not?

A. That is true.

Q. Now, without assuming any detailed knowledge of it, Mr. Grant, do you know of the efforts of the supervisory employees of Ford Motor Company to organize an association?

A. Yes.

Q. Beginning sometime in 1941?

A. I do not know when it began.

Q. You knew it was in process?

A. We had manifestations of it at the Rouge Plant, yes.

Q. And you have knowledge, do you, that after various proceedings and negotiations a contract was signed between the Ford Motor Company and the Foreman's Association of America, Ford Chapter Number 1?

A. I have knowledge of that, yes.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I want to repeat again to be sure that we have a continuing objection to all this testimony that relates to any of the testimony relating to the Ford organization or any union in the Ford organization or associations in the Ford organization, my objection being that it is incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial. We are dealing here with the Packard situation.

706 Trial Examiner Jaffee: In order to remove any possible question and doubt as to whether or not your rights have been protected, Mr. Dahling, I will say for the record I have regarded and do regard that the matter you have mentioned has been riveted and bolted and I do not know what else—you have it in so tight that the nails are coming out the other end of the plank.

Mr. Dahling: Thank you, sir.

Mr. Nelson: It is even welded.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Now, Mr. Grant, my question is this, as an active officer of Local 600, have you observed any harmful effects on the rights of maintenance and production workers or on their protection that could be said to grow out of the organization by the supervisory force at the Ford Plant?

A. No. I have not noticed any harmful effects, neither can I say I noticed any beneficial effects. We have had grievances before and we have grievances now.

Q. And the organization of the foremen does not affect in any way your handling of those grievances?

A. No, none whatsoever.

Q. Neither to hurt nor to help?

A. That is correct.

Q. What can you say as to whether the organization of the foremen has affected the growth or numbers of 707 your Local or organization in the Ford plant?

A. Well, that has not hurt any because we have to have at the Rouge Plant—what I presume a lot of people do not like—a closed shop. So, every man that is on those jobs, that is covered by the contract, is covered by the Union.

Q. So your answer is that it has not helped or hurt in that regard, is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, if you did not have a closed shop, but suppose you had recognition, have you observed anything that would tend to hurt or help your organization? I am asking you to assume that it was not a closed shop. Would the organization of the foremen have affected their rights or their grievances or the operation of your organization in any way?

Mr. Donovan: That is pure speculation.

Mr. Nelson: In your opinion, Witness?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just a minute.

Mr. Donovan: It is a hypothetical question, and pure speculation.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think that further foundation ought to be indicated on the record first, to show that the witness is capable of answering the question.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Grant, do you feel that you could express an opinion on the subject?

708 A. I could because it so happens that the Ford Motor Company—even though I had been employed there for 22 years—is not the only place I worked. I worked in other places both in America and in England where there have been unions and I have been able to observe from experience.

Q. The effect of the organization of supervisors?

A. That is right.

Mr. Donovan: Well, then—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) May I ask just one question?

Mr. Donovan: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Then you are willing to give your opinion? And your opinion as expressed here should stand?

A. I think so.

Mr. Donovan: This question, if answered, would obviously not be binding upon Management because the witness does not purport to give Management's views, whatever they may be and whether he may or may not be in a position to speak about Management's view, which I doubt he is. I do not think that the witness should be allowed to speculate upon a state of facts upon which he never had any actual basis in his experience at the Ford Motor Company; because they have from the first, as I believe, had a closed shop contract. What the conditions would have been if they did not have that type of contract I think both Mr. Grant and myself or any other 709 person could only let their mind roam around and speculate about. Mr. Nelson expects that that speculation might result in something on the record giving an unfavorable inference to the Employer. It is a danger that I would like to avoid and is one of the reasons I object to the question.

Mr. Nelson: The witness has now stated his experience and reason for his opinion and has stated his opinion for whatever weight it may bear. I think it should remain.

Mr. Donovan: If the Examiner feels that in making a complete record, he would like to hear the testimony, and give it such weight as he considers proper, I will withdraw the objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not like testimony that is speculative. The difficulty is that you cannot define that term in the language of mathematics. Where speculation ends and fact begins is often questionable. Very often, if a person is sufficiently qualified to be what we might term an expert and answers to a hypothetical question, it is of some value. The fact that it is hypothetical and the fact that it may be said to a certain degree to be speculative, of course, affects the weight. I am inclined to think, on the whole, it should be received; but frankly, I am not too clear on it, as I have indicated. The matter of 710 weight enters into the picture.

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, may I make this suggestion? If that is so, that the witness' qualifications with respect to his length of employment and place of employment and general experience with the Union picture be gone into with a little more detail to show whether or not or what weight should be accorded to it, if any.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Proceed.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Grant, have you been a member of other labor organizations than the UAW?

A. Yes.

Q. What other ones?

A. The A. S. E. That is an English trade name. It is the Amalgamated Society of Engineers and later on, it was the Amalgamated Engineering Union.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is in England?

The Witness: That was in England. I was also a member of that when I came out to America for a matter of ten years in the Canadian branch, the Canadian and American branch I should say, because at that time I worked in what was a notoriously open city but I still retained my affiliations with the Union. I believe if you care to see that, that I have documentary proof here.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Your statement will suffice for the time being. Any other labor organizations that you 711 can remember?

A. The UAW-CIO and the Engineers, that is all.

Q. Covering a period of how many years?

A. I first joined the Union in—let me see—it is a long way back, 1916 or 1917.

Q. Have you been a member of some labor organization practically ever since that time?

A. Practically, yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: By the way, how old were you when you first joined the Union?

The Witness: Well, I will have to go back now.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Approximately?

The Witness: Around '16 or '17. I joined as an apprentice. The A. E. U. is a trade union of skilled workers and you joined as an apprentice member and then you became a full member when you became a journeyman.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That takes a period of training?

The Witness: That is right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Under union auspices or supervision?

A. Well, in some cases, under supervision and in some cases under both.

Q. Were you an officer of the Engineers Union?

A. No.

Q. But a member?

712 A. I was a member.

Q. Were you active?

A. Yes, I was active. I was a member of the Trades and Labor Council as a delegate from the Union. That was in England.

Q. Have you been active since the inception of the organization, the UAW in the Ford Plant?

A. Yes.

Q. Its approximate inception?

A. Yes.

Q. I want to come back. I have asked you about the organization of foremen and I want to ask you if your answers would be in any way changed as to the effect on the grievances, rights or procedures of the maintenance and production workers and their organization,—if the answers would be the same with respect to the contract that the Foreman's Association has: In other words, has the fact of making a contract in any wise affected the rights and prospects of the Maintenance and Production workers?

Mr. Donovan: Just a minute, please.

Mr. Nelson: I mean the foremen's contract, that is what I referred to.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: At Ford Motor Company.

Mr. Nelson: At the Ford Motor Company.

The Witness: I can only answer—

713 Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) Just a minute. I submit that this question is so put that it is asking possibly one of the issues in the case. It is a broad question involving a conclusion and covering an unlimited amount of territory and ground. I think on so important a matter and one that might loom as such; that counsel should ask more specific questions and break the questions down so that the witness may give factual knowledge of facts that bear upon such a statement, which is a general conclusion.

Mr. Nelson: I assume—

Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) The word "affected" might mean so many different things—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) Very well, I will withdraw the question and ask it over.

Mr. Donovan: It is a question of law and fact mixed together. We do not want that sort of thing piled against the Employer in the record.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Has the making of a contract by the Foreman's Association in any wise harmed or helped the maintenance workers at the Ford Plant?

A. As I stated before, it hasn't harmed the production workers; neither has it helped them. We had grievances, as I stated before, and the Foreman's Association was formed and we have grievances now.

Q. Do you handle them in much the same way?

714 A. Pretty well the same way.

Q. Now, taking a little narrower question, Mr. Grant, so far, has there been any friction or difficulty growing out of the question whether a man should be a UAW member or a member of the Foreman's Association?

A. No, we have none, and there has been no dispute on that. The UAW, of course, has had some dispute as to who should be members of the Union or who should be considered as excluded, but that is apart from the foremen.

Q. But there has been no dispute growing out of the organization of the foremen?

A. No, none whatsoever.

Q. Let us assume that there could be such a thing. Is there anything in the nature of it, Mr. Grant, that would not yield to ordinary negotiations?

Mr. Donovan: I object to a question like that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Objection sustained.

Mr. Nelson: You may cross-examine.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Donovan: May I ask the witness a couple of questions?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Go ahead.

Cross-Examination.

715 Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Mr. Grant, the Union of which you are president is a union of the production and maintenance workers at the Rouge Plant of the Ford Motor Company, is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. And your members have frequent and daily contact with foremen, do they not?

A. That is correct.

Q. Would you give us your statement or opinion on whether or not, in your opinion, if foremen were organized into a regular national union, such as the Foreman's Association of America, that the CIO would feel that they could handle them better than if they were not so unionized in their contacts?

A. I would like you to repeat that question again, please.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you read the question, please?

(Question read.)

Mr. Nelson: I will object to that form of a question.

The Witness: I would like to answer it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just a minute.

Mr. Nelson: I am going to try to keep you from answering that question. I am appealing to the Examiner to exclude the question.

716 Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the words "handle them" should be defined first.

Mr. Nelson: I will object to it even then.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will cross such bridge when we come to it.

Mr. Nelson: I don't think he can define it.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Mr. Grant, your members are concerned almost daily, are they not, with certain matters concerning production and maintenance people?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that requires dealing, does it not, with the officers of the CIO and their representatives?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And sometimes the foremen do things that are not liked by the CIO?

A. Naturally, and sometimes the men do things that do not please the Management.

Q. Now, I am only going to ask you this in a very general way. Do you feel in such a case if the foremen were organized into a regular national union, such as the Foreman's Association of America, being so unionized and being union men themselves, would you feel you could make a little more progress in the CIO in your contacts with the foremen on your various disputes that arise between them?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Than otherwise?

717 Mr. Donovan: Than otherwise.

Mr. Nelson: I think that is still objectionable.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Why?

Mr. Nelson: It calls for an opinion of this witness.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I thought Mr. Donovan was asking for his opinion.

Mr. Nelson: But it is his weighing of an advantage that is supposed to exist, if the Examiner please, and I do not see where any interest is involved here.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He was an expert witness before, and you cannot now claim he is not.

He may answer.

The Witness: May I answer it in my own way?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I certainly do not want you to answer it in any other way.

The Witness: I would answer that by saying I don't think it would have any more effect than the organization of manufacturers has.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) You do not feel, Mr. Grant, then, that there would not be a certain amount of cooperation growing out of one union dealing with another union in a situation such as I have described?

A. I haven't noticed—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) Just a minute. Of course, you are assuming something the witness has 718 not testified to.

Mr. Donovan: His answer was he did not think there is anything to Union cooperation or Union sympathy in the question put to him.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The first question was about the Union dealing with the foremen and you are now talking about one union dealing with another union.

Mr. Donovan: You overruled that question?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

The Witness: I would like to answer it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The question has been overruled.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Would the members of your union run a picket line of the Foreman's Association of America during a strike of theirs at Ford's?

A. During wartime, yes.

Q. In peacetime?

A. I don't know.

Q. State, if you know, whether or not, if you had a strike and a picket line, regardless of whether it was war or peacetime, would you or would you not approve of the FAA members running your picket line?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean, from the standpoint of the UAW?

Mr. Donovan: Yes, would he like it or not?

719 Mr. Nelson: I think the only thing you could ask is what would he do.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Well, would you permit it?

A. We probably wouldn't like it and—we probably wouldn't let them. We didn't when we shut the plant down in 1941.

Q. Sure, you would not let them?

A. No.

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) It would make no difference whether they were organized wholly, partly organized or not organized?

A. No, when we shut a plant down, we shut it down.

Q. There might be circumstances where you would permit the foremen to go through?

A. We did in April, 1941, when we shut the plant down. We recognized the necessity of certain vital things being carried on, and we permitted both the workers and supervision to go in the plant to see that no harm was brought to the plant, other than stopping production.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Any further questions of this witness?

Mr. Karasick: I have some questions.

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) Mr. Witness, I believe you said your organization had grievances to handle before 720 the contract entered into between the Foreman's Association of America and the Ford Motor Company, and has had grievances since, is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Has there been any greater difficulty in handling grievances since the Foreman's Association contract at the Ford plant, or has there been no material change?

A. There has been a change, yes.

Q. What sort of a change?

A. But that was not due to the formation of the Foreman's Union.

Q. No, you have already given testimony as to your opinion as to whether or not there has been any difference in the situation because the foremen have organized and gotten a contract at Ford's.

A. You asked me the question, has there been any differences in the grievance procedure, and I said yes, there has been.

Q. By difference, I meant, has there been any difficulty caused in the handling of grievances that could be attributable to the contract between the Ford Motor Company and the Foreman's Association of America?

Mr. Dahling: Well, if this witness knows.

Mr. Karasick: I certainly do not want him to tell me if he does not know.

721 A. No.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) You are acquainted with handling grievances there and that is part of your duties?

A. Naturally.

Q. The ASE is a labor organization which comprises supervisory employees in England, is that right?

A. Will you read the question?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you please read the question?

(Question read.)

A. If a man of the ASE—he could still retain his membership in the ASE. He could not be an active member.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) Do you know whether or not there are any unions in England which cover supervisory employees only?

A. (No response.)

Q. Are you acquainted with the present English picture in that regard?

A. Not too well acquainted, no. I know there was, as I said, when I was in England, which was quite a few years back. If you ask me the name of it, I couldn't tell you.

Q. I do not understand what you are talking about now.

A. An organization of supervisors.

Q. Do you know whether one still exists today?

A. I couldn't say.

722 Q. In other words, you do not know what the British experience has been in that regard?

A. Only what I knew prior to coming out here.

Q. I see.

Mr. Karasick: Very well, I have no further questions.

Mr. Nelson: Will you mark these Petitioner's Exhibits Numbers 31 and 32?

(The documents referred to were marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibits Nos. 31 and 32.)

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I am showing you Petitioner's Exhibits 31 and 32, Mr. Grant—

Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) Pardon me, would you suspend for just a moment, Mr. Nelson? Mr. Dahling and I are conferring regarding cross examination.

Mr. Nelson: Oh, I am sorry. I did not mean to trespass.

Mr. Donovan: All right, Mr. Nelson, you may go ahead.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Grant, I am showing you Exhibit 31 and Exhibit 32, which are bound pamphlets, and ask if you recognize them as the publications of the supervisory organization in England you referred to, saying, in effect, I think, that you could not recall the name of it?

A. I couldn't, but I am quite sure—I am not quite sure this was the name, I knew of the existence of it, and 723 this may be the name of it, I believe it is.

Q. Of the supervisory organization in England?

A. That's right, but I still couldn't be sure this was the particular one.

Q. This is A. S. S. E. T., as you will notice.

A. Yes, but when I was in England I knew about it and the only thing I could assume now is that they are still in existence.

Q. Whether these are their publications, you would not know, only that they appear to be?

A. That is right.

Mr. Nelson: I offer them in evidence as bearing on the experience in England in the same matters, supervisory organization.

Mr. Dahling: Of course, Mr. Examiner, the testimony is purely hearsay.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, the short answer is that I see a pamphlet, or a couple of pamphlets in Mr. Donovan's hand; it consists of several pieces of paper on which there appears to be some printing. In other words, they have not been qualified, obviously. That is all we can say about it.

Mr. Donovan: I would be unable to register, other than a general objection, an objection to the receipt of evidence of this kind without examining the documents.
724 One of them is rather a lengthy one. The other contains a balance sheet, in very fine printing, and having 34 pages. It is headed, "Supervisory staffs and engineering technicians, 25th annual report." It is a balance sheet for a calendar year. And the other is entitled, whatever it may be inside, "Rates of pay of railway supervisory staff."

How much relevancy they might have on examination to the mass production industry in the metropolitan area of Detroit, I would be unable to say without examining it. I would, likewise, be unable to say what relevancy, in particular, the other exhibit marked for identification, 32, would have, as it purports to cover engineering technicians, and whether it would have any application to our present situation of the consideration of the appropriateness of a collective bargaining unit of foremen in Packard's Plant, I would not know. But I do think, in the main, Mr. Trial Examiner, as a matter of fairness, that either of Petitioner's exhibits marked for identification numbers 31 and 32, may obviously contain general statements which might give rise to unfavorable inferences to the Employer involved here that I would be unable to measure without an examination of the pamphlets for some time. I think counsel has established through the witness' testimony that there was some sort of an organization that had to do with some kind of supervision 725 in England. If he wants to go further than that, I would certainly want, if the Examiner allows these pamphlets in evidence, then to go through each one and reserve our right to make any additional, appropriate objection.

Mr. Nelson: If my brother will undertake to diligently use his spare time, I will certainly lend him the pamphlets. I am sure they would be very informative.

I will not press the admission now, if he wants to examine them, but I do offer them.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I must decline to accept them on the present state of the record. You may reoffer them later.

I point out to you that at the very least, you lack the basic testimony that these documents are genuine.

Mr. Nelson: I do not believe that is the issue raised. My brother is fair enough to admit that on their face, they impute genuineness, as being publications of the Association that they purport to be published by.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not think he went quite that far.

Mr. Nelson: But he raises the issue of their relevancy and I obviously am unable to produce authenticating testimony as to the documents themselves. That is not in our power under war conditions.

Mr. Karasick: These documents refer, apparently, to 726 some of the supervisory experiences in that country.

It was a type of inquiry that I made of this witness, because I thought the Board would want to have information of that type.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I understand, but I cannot take a pamphlet just because it purports to be genuine. I have already ruled I am not going to take them on the present state of the record.

Mr. Nelson: I have offered the witness for cross examination.

Mr. Donovan: We have no further questions.

Mr. Nelson: Then this witness will be excused?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is right, the witness is excused.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Nelson: May we have the noon recess at this time?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: No, let us go on for awhile. We have some time to make up.

ROBERT F. TURNBULL,

a witness called by and on behalf of the Petitioning Union, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) What is your full name?

A. Robert F. Turnbull.

727 Q. What is your address?

A. 21209 Sunset Avenue, VanDyke, Michigan.

Q. Were you born in this country?

A. I was born in London, England.

Q. Did you go to work over there, work in shops?

A. Yes.

Q. How early did you go to work?

A. At the age of fourteen and one-half years.

Q. In what kind of work?

A. I was apprentice to a watchmaker.

Q. And following that apprenticeship, first, how far and how long did you follow that apprenticeship?

A. I followed that for 18 months, then I ran away from it.

Q. So you did not finish that apprenticeship?

A. No.

Q. What did you do next?

A. I went to scientific instrument making.

Q. In a factory?

A. In a factory.

Q. In London?

A. In London.

Q. How long did you follow that?

A. Up until the age of 19.

Q. Did you enter an apprenticeship there?

A. Pardon me. Nineteen and one-half. I was with 728 that company. Then I left there and went to another firm as a journeyman.

Q. Had you completed your apprenticeship?

A. Yes.

Q. You were a journeyman what?

A. Journeyman scientific instrument maker.

Mr. Donovan: I did not get that.

The Witness: Journeyman scientific instrument maker.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) At what age?

A. At the age of nineteen years and six months. That was five years I have had in delicate work of that kind.

Q. And from then on you worked as a journeyman?

A. Yes.

Q. Instrument maker?

A. Yes.

Q. For how many years?

A. I stayed for two and a half years making range finders, and from that I went to tool and gauge work on aircraft parts during the last war.

Q. For whom were you working in making these aircraft parts?

A. William Beardmore and Company, in Clydebank, Scotland.

Q. How long did you follow that work?

A. Up until 1922.

Q. Then what did you do?

729 A. I joined into the police force as a mechanic and I was a mechanic with the police force for six and a half years.

Q. Which police force?

A. The Royal Ulster Constabulary in Belfast.

Q. What were your duties there, what mechanical work did you do there?

A. Well, we had cars, both types of police cars for the whole of the north of Ireland and we had about forty mechanics there. Out of that forty, six of us were what we called first-class mechanics and the rest were second-class mechanics. I happened to pass the test as a first-class mechanic and I had to work on the building and repairing of automobiles in all phases of the mechanics and—not the body parts so much,—but engines, transmissions, differentials, rear ends, anything in that line of repair work from tearing the job down to rebuilding the job completely.

Q. You say you worked six years at that?

A. Six and a half years, about.

Q. And what did you next do?

A. I came to Canada from the City of Belfast.

Q. In what year?

A. 1926.

Q. And the month?

730 A. February.

Q. Did you stay in Canada?

A. Yes.

Q. For how long?

A. Roughly, two and a half years.

Q. Then what did you do?

Testimony of Robert F. Turnbull

A. I worked for the Ford Motor Company, in the transmission department as a machinist.

Q. And at the end of that two and a half years, what did you do?

A. I came over to the United States.

Q. In what year and what month?

A. November, 1928.

Q. What did you do when you arrived here?

A. Well, I went through, first to New York, and I worked at the American Machine Company in New York for about four or five months.

Q. That is New York City, I presume?

A. Yes.

Q. Doing what?

A. I was a milling hand. I was running a milling machine there and making parts, I think, if I remember right, they were cigarette machines and we made the parts.

Q. After those few months in New York, what did you do?

A. I came back to Detroit.

731 Q. That would bring you back to Detroit in what month and yea , if you can recall?

A. Around about February, 1925.

Q. Did you secure employment here?

A. Yes.

Q. Where?

A. I went to the Hudson Motor Car Company.

Q. How long did you work for the Hudson Company?

A. Until the Fall in that year, I think around September, 1929.

Q. In the mechanical line?

A. Yes.

Q. Where did you go then?

A. To the Packard Motor Company.

Q. In what month and what year?

A. As near as I can remember, it was around September, 1929.

Q. That was your first employment by Packard?

A. Yes.

Q. In what line did you hire out to Packard?

A. As a lathe operator on a P. and J. operator, to be exact; that's a semi-automatic lathe.

Q. And making what part?

A. If I remember right, they were hubs for the rear wheels.

732 Q. Did you stay at Packard's for some time?

A. Not very long. I got laid off.

Q. Where did you go from there?

A. Well, I didn't work for quite awhile. I just had to do what I could for a living, it was difficult because I didn't have citizenship papers and it was difficult to get a job and I didn't feel justified in going around when I wasn't a citizen and getting a job in the factories, so I just had to get along until 1935 when I was made a citizen.

Q. Now, did you go back to Packard from time to time?

A. No, I went back to Hudson's, though, two or three times and got some work and I got some work at the Federal Screw and worked there on automatic machines for awhile.

Q. That is mechanical work?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you finally come back to Packard?

A. Yes.

Q. In what month and year?

A. It was around December, 1934 or January, 1935, just around that time.

Q. What line of work?

A. I came back exactly as I had been before, as a P. and J. operator.

Q. That is a machine?

733 A. Potter and Johnson machine.

Q. Have you been there ever since?

A. Yes.

Q. Approximately since January, 1935?

A. Yes, I have ten years seniority, as far as seniority is concerned, with the plant now.

Q. Did you follow that line of work on the P. and J. machine for some time at Packard's?

A. Yes.

Q. For how long?

A. Oh, about, I suppose, about nine months.

Q. Then what did you do?

A. Then I changed to a different named machine, but practically the same type.

Q. And following that, how long?

A. Oh, way through to, let me see, around until about 1939.

Q. A period of approximately four years on that machine?

A. Yes.

Q. And in 1939, what change, if any, took place?

A. Then I got a job on the repair squad tearing down and rebuilding transmissions that had been out in the field.

Q. And were brought back into the factory?

A. Yes.

Q. How long did you follow that work?

734 A. Until May, 1940, about, oh, I suppose a year or so.

Q. What took place then?

A. Then I got transferred to the aircraft division.

Q. What part of the aircraft work?

A. To the engine assembly department.

Q. And you were still an hourly rated production worker?

A. Yes.

Q. How long did you follow that?

A. Well—

Q. (Interposing) This is on Packard's work, of course?

A. Yes. I started there with the first engine, practically, and then we transferred from the small department to the big department, F. F., and I went over to that department and worked on what was known as the super charger and the wheel case jobs and gear case, and at that time there were only a few men there. Of course, we were just getting ready for the production job, and as the men came in, what little I knew, I showed them and we trained them and I became a leader. Later on—

Q. (Interposing) When did you become a leader?

A. Somewhere—I'm not quite sure when I became a leader, Mr. Nelson, it was somewhere about July, 1941.

Q. All right, and that is engine assembly, is that right?

A. Yes, engine assembly.

Q. How long did you continue as a leader?

735 A. Oh, about a year.

Q. Then what took place?

A. Then I became an assistant foreman.

Q. In the same department or division?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you give us the month and year when you became an assistant foreman, approximately?

A. May, 1942.

Q. Have you continued as a foreman of some rank at the Packard Plant ever since?

A. Yes.

Q. How many men did you have under you to start with?

A. When I first took an assistant foreman's job I had, oh, I suppose about 40 men. I had two different assembly lines to look out for. One was the cam shop assembly and the other was the super charger.

Q. That is still engine assembly?

A. Yes.

Q. How long did you continue as an assistant foreman?

A. For about nine months.

Q. And until what time?

A. Until March, 1943.

Q. Then what?

A. Then I was promoted to a foreman.

Q. In the same line, same assembly?

736 A. Yes.

Q. How many men have you under you—how many men had you under you then?

A. About 200, I suppose.

Q. And how many assistant foremen?

A. Just one assistant foreman at that time.

Q. Has that number increased since that time?

A. I got another promotion after that.

Q. Oh, into what?

A. In March, 1944, I was promoted to general foreman.

Q. How many departments do you have supervision of as general foreman?

A. I have one large department called F. F. A., and one small department. There is 32 men in that department.

Q. In the large one, how many men?

A. Somewhere in the neighborhood of 335 people. It was as high as 575 until a wee while ago.

Q. You have had as many as 575 men under your supervision?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the small department?

A. The small department makes up all the lines and spray paints the connections on the end and one or two other small parts that are added to the engine.

Q. Are all of the 575 people in the larger department, in the engine assembly?

737 A. Yes.

Q. That is still your work?

A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been a general foreman?

A. Since March, of this year, the 18th of March, 1944.

Q. You are acting in that capacity when you are in the factory at the present time?

A. Yes.

Q. When you were a production worker, were you a member of any labor organization?

A. Yes.

Q. What?

A. Do you want it from the start?

Q. Yes, go right back and tell us what unions you have been a member of.

A. A member of the scientific instrument makers union —that's Scientific Union Maker's Society.

Mr. Karasick: Just a moment, Mr. Examiner, I would like to object at this time to going into the details as to the unions this man has belonged to since he was first employed. If Mr. Nelson wants to know what unions he has been a member of since he went to Packard's, that is all right.

Mr. Donovan: Well, I think counsel is entitled to go into the witness' background.

738 Trial Examiner Jaffee: He can probably give one or two names a lot faster than we can listen to objections. There are other things I am rather concerned about, but this does not happen to be one of them.

Mr. Karasick: Very well, I have made my objection; it was overruled.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Go ahead.

The Witness: As I said, I was a member of the Scientific Instrument Maker's Society. Later they amalgamated with the Amalgamated Engineering Union.

Mr. Donovan: Can you give us the approximate dates?

The Witness: That would be somewhere, as near as I can remember, around 1917, when that amalgamation took place and it became the Amalgamated Engineering Union, and they took over various branches of that line of work.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Will you tell us whether that union of workers included their supervision?

A. I don't remember an awful lot about it. My father went on supervision and I know he has a pension from that same union at the present date. They had kind of an annuity attached to it and when they leave and get on supervision they carry on their annuity.

Q. But whether he was a member, you do not know?

A. Oh, yes, he has an annuity from it at present.

Q. As a supervisor, he remained a member of it as a

739 worker?

A. Yes.

Q. That is an English experience?

A. Yes.

Q. All right, go ahead.

A. When I was in Hudson's and the UAW first formed, I joined that back in around 1929, I think that would be, that was before it became the UAW-CIO. I think that was the UAW-AFL in those days.

Mr. Donovan: You say in 1929?

Mr. Nelson: That is right, it was the UAW-AFL.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Go ahead, Mr. Turnbull.

A. Then when I came to Packard's and the organization started for the UAW, I joined that and I remained a member of that until I requested, or was given a withdrawal card upon becoming an assistant foreman.

Q. Are you presently a member of the Foreman's Association?

A. Oh, yes, I am secretary-treasurer of Packard Chapter Number 5, and a National Board Member of the Executive Board as well.

Q. And you became a member of the Foreman's Association when?

A. In 1942, October.

Q. And you have continued to be a member ever since?

A. Yes.

740. Q. Were you one of the early members?

A. Yes, I was not at the first meeting, but I was at the second and I joined before I was at the second meeting.

Q. And you have continued as a member ever since?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Mr. Turnbull, at the Packard Plant as a foreman of any rank that you have had experience with, do you have the power to hire a workman under you?

A. No.

Q. At any time since you have been there?

A. No.

Q. Do you have the power to fire one?

A. No.

Q. Do you have the power to make a recommendation as to the hiring or firing?

A. No.

Q. You do not?

A. Oh, I misunderstood you. Yes, I do.

Q. All right, and to whom do you make that?

A. Well, on the hiring, not any special individual. It would be a case if more help was needed, then I would write a requisition and hand it to the superintendent, of course, and discuss it with him beforehand as to the advisability of it. I would put in a requisition and sign it and the superintendent would also sign it and then we 741 would leave it for the division manager to sign as well.

Q. And who would determine whether you would hire the employee specified?

A. A certain person, you mean?

Q. No, not any certain person, but a certain person to do a certain job?

A. Yes, well, the superintendent, I would have to have him okay it before I would write the requisition.

Q. Is that true also of hiring or discharging?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, about the matter of discipline, do you have any authority in the matter of discipline over the men under you, speaking of production workers?

A. Well, yes, I have a certain amount of authority.

Q. How far does it extend?

A. I can settle a grievance if it is just an ordinary small grievance. Many come up that we are able to settle very easily. But if it becomes of any size, it goes to Labor Relations.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Before we recess, I want to say that yesterday when Mr. Traen was on the stand, near the close of his testimony, I asked him two or three questions. I wanted to preface my questions with a few remarks.

On page 572 of the record there appears this ques-
742 tion asked by Mr. Dahling:

"Q. Which is the greater, Mr. Traen, your loyalty to the Union or the Company?"

Mr. Nelson objected to the question and the objection was sustained. I intended to say yesterday, and I say now, that ruling was based on two grounds, the less important of the two being the fact that the question assumes a fact which the witness had not previously adopted. More important of the two, however, is the fact that the question is so broad in and of itself, that I do not see how any fact finder could treat any question or, rather, any answer given thereto other than in a vacuum. That was the basis for the ruling when the ruling was made.

If my present observation suggests to counsel any questions that they wish to ask Mr. Traen, Mr. Traen can be recalled for that purpose. I assume that Mr. Traen will be here at the opening of the afternoon session, is that right?

Mr. Nelson: We will see that he is, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well, we will recess at this time until two o'clock this afternoon.

(Whereupon, at 1:00 o'clock p. m., the hearing in the above entitled matter was recessed until 2:00 o'clock P. M.)

743 After Recess.

(Whereupon the hearing was resumed, pursuant to the recess, at 2 o'clock p. m.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Gentlemen, are we ready to proceed?

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Dahling was delayed a little but he requested that we not delay the hearing.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Before we start with further questioning, however, I should like to make one or two preliminary observations.

I think I indicated at pages 462-3 of the record that I had some concern at the pace with which this hearing was moving. We have obviously going rather slowly. I suggested that the place in the records I have referred to one possible method of shortening the hearing, mainly stipulations as to facts, particularly facts concerning which I anticipate there probably is not much dispute. I want to supplement that by suggesting further possibilities. I am sure there have been received in evidence certain matters concerning which the Board could well have taken official notice. The principle of official notice, like the principle of judicial notice, in the law, is one I have always felt could be used more than it is used. I think you gentlemen may safely assume that the Board is possessed of a reasonable amount of intelligence and once you have indicated

744 that the figures to be added are two and two you need not go further and put in evidence that the answer is four. We can do that just as well and do it without the necessity of having some witness spell it out. I suggest further that you bear in mind, at least in some instances that it probably is just as well to leave certain matters to develop either in oral argument or in briefs. There is one principle that is applicable in these hearings which is also applicable at law and it is this: Certain matters may be relevant and are, of course, relevancy is the main point. But, we also have to bear in mind that there is a limit to the length of human life and there is an area wherein courts have said that although evidence is relevant, the degree of that relevancy—if a particular situation may be such that when the amount of time is necessary to receive it is considered—it just is not worth spending that time.

Now, if you gentlemen will apply the things I have said if, in other words, you stipulate to such extent as you can stipulate, if you will operate on the principle that certain matters may be considered on facts on the theory of official notice, you will assume further that the Board can add two and two and leave certain matters for briefs or oral argument and if you will take all these things into consideration, I am sure some of the things we have been 745 spending time on, we will not have to spend any time on at all or we can spend less time upon them. I do not make these remarks by way of criticism of any party at all. I realize the case is an important one and I realize further the tendency of counsel, whose primary duty is, of course, to their respective clients, to do the best they personally know how and as they themselves see their own case. I ask you gentlemen to bear the considerations I have referred to in mind and endeavor, so far as you can, to shorten the hearing as much as possible. I do not like it, as Trial Examiner, to interfere with your own presentation of your cases. I assume that I can, within my function as Trial Examiner, to a degree, be a bit more strict than I have been. I am inclined to think at the moment. I have not been as strict as I should be. I hope that I can continue to be fairly liberal but unless the pace does speed up, I will either have to lengthen the hearing somewhat or cut down a bit at some point where I think we are going into matters which, if not speculative, are at least quite remote. You may proceed.

ROBERT F. TURNBULL

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination (Continued).

746 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Turnbull, I asked you just before the recess about the matter of discipline and I would like to know just how far you can go as a general foreman.

A. When there are small matters that can be settled in the plant, small grievances where a man is perhaps dissatisfied with his position under a certain operation, or where a man figures perhaps his health does not permit him to do that operation and small matters like that we can change the man around and accommodate them and satisfy them.

Q. That refers to transfers?

A. From one part to another part and small grievances of that type.

Q. Can you transfer from one department to another?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Does that apply both to general foremen, foremen, and assistant foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. It applies to all three ranks?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you fix the pay of either the supervisory or hourly rated employees under your supervision?

A. No.

Q. What can you do in that connection, if anything?

A. Nothing.

747 Q. Can you recommend?

A. You can recommend a change of classification; if a man is working on a job out of a classification you must put him on his correct classification for the job.

Q. The pay itself you cannot even recommend?

A. No.

Q. As to promotion. What is the extent of your power? Can you promote a man, either in a supervisory capacity or hourly rated capacity under your supervision?

A. You can promote a man to a utility man or a leader provided it is agreed to by your superintendent.

Q. It has to be agreed to by him?

A. Yes.

Q. In writing?

A. Yes.

Q. You have to get permission to put those people on.

Mr. Donovan: Just a minute. Your question coupled with the previous similar questions are a little ambiguous. In one place you say, "Can you promote" and then "Can you recommend." Which was the witness answering to when asked about promotions? Whether he can make the promotions or originate a recommendation?

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Can you promote? Have you the power or the assistant foreman or the general foreman or the foreman?

748 A. No.

Q. Can you recommend promotions?

A. Yes.

Q. To whom do you recommend?

A. The superintendent.

Q. And that applies to all of these ranks of foremen?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, the allowance of days off? First, is that covered by a rule if the days are few?

A. A company rule.

Q. And how many days without some formal action?

A. There is a Company rule that they can have three days absent without any permission or anything.

Q. Now, after that, has the general foreman any power to allow more time?

A. He can grant up to fourteen days leave of absence.

Q. Can the foreman or the assistant foreman grant the same thing?

A. Yes. The general rule is to ask from the superior whether the man can be spared off the job. You use your judgment, in other words.

Q. There is some discretion in that?

A. Yes.

Q. Getting beyond fourteen days, is there any discretion?

A. No.

749 Q. Who has that power?

A. The personnel office.

Q. As to the matter of fixing vacations? That is, the time of vacations and the length of the vacations, who has any power in that respect?

A. Your division manager is the man in our place.

Q. Have you any power as general foreman, foreman, or assistant foreman?

A. No.

Mr. Donovan: Do I understand, Mr. Nelson, that the Petitioner contends that the foremen should have the power to fix vacations?

Mr. Nelson: We are not contending anything. We are showing the facts and not claiming one thing or another.

Mr. Donovan: Is it your theory that foremen should have that power?

Mr. Nelson: Foremen should be consulted certainly as to his own.

Mr. Donovan: You didn't prove that he was not consulted. You show that he does not have the power to fix vacations only.

The Witness: It is mutual, you might say, Mr. Nelson. The superintendent has told us that we have two weeks vacation and we try to work it out amongst the foremen themselves as to which is suitable. When they 750 want to go and so on. We will not go six at one time. We will go two at a time or two in one week and two in another week and work it out between ourselves. That is acceptable to Management on that basis and we do have that much say in it.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) As to sick leave, is that fixed by rule?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have no power as a foreman, assistant foreman, or general foreman, to change that?

A. No.

Q. This personnel office, have you any direct connection with that? Is that an office that you can go to?

A. Yes, we have just lately inaugurated a new system with the personnel office whereby there is an industrial relations man or personnel man put into each division and on any case that we have where there is an infringement of the rules, or some difficulty arises in the shop that man is there to discuss the situation with.

Q. Now, does that apply to both the hourly rated employees and the supervision?

A. Well, he is there.

Q. Does he have jurisdiction in both cases?

A. Yes.

Q. He does?

751 A. Yes.

Q. So you have access to the same man for supervision and hourly rated employees?

A. I don't quite understand that question.

Q. Does that divisional representative of the personnel office have jurisdiction of, we will say, a complaint or grievance of a foreman as well as an hourly rated employee?

A. Not the foremen, only the hourly rated employees.

Q. And that applies to foremen of all rank?

A. Yes, we have no place to go with a grievance, there are no provisions for foremen.

Mr. Donovan: You have no what?

The Witness: We have no place to go with a grievance for a foreman, Mr. Donovan.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Coming to the matter of grievances of the rank and file, this statement that you just made now covers that in its initial stages, is that correct, is that how you take it?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you take the rank and file men, the hourly rated employees with whom—with whom does he first take up any troubles?

A. First with the steward.

Q. His steward?

A. Yes.

752 Q. And then it comes to whom?

A. The steward and the foreman.

Q. Does that mean the assistant foreman, the foreman, or the general foreman?

A. With the foreman.

Q. The foreman directly over him, the foreman nearest the man complaining?

A. Yes.

Q. From there, where does it go?

A. To the personnel man in the division, and the district steward for that district.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am not sure what the witness means by the word "foreman" as he last used it.

Mr. Nelson: I took it to mean foremen of all grades.

The Witness: Yes, where there is a foreman, you have a foreman and when there is an assistant foreman, with men working under him, the steward will deal with the assistant foreman if there is just the assistant foreman instead of a foreman. That is, the steward will discuss the case with the assistant foreman.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) The assistant foreman?

A. Yes.

753 Q. Now, what power has that assistant foreman or foreman in that case? Can he dispose of the grievance?

A. If it is a very minor grievance, yes.

Q. And if not?

A. Well, if it is one of a Company policy where a certain penalty is to be imposed upon a person for doing a wrong, we have to impose the penalty and it has to be agreed upon by the steward. If the steward doesn't agree upon it, it comes to the personnel man.

Q. In case of a grievance by a foreman, is there any procedure recognized?

A. No.

Q. I would like to ask you, Mr. Turnbull, whether in your experience with the Packard Motor Company, you or any foreman of any rank participated in any way in the making of the policy of the Company with respect to its expenditures?

A. No.

Q. Or its purchases?

A. No.

Q. Of materials, machinery or equipment?

A. No.

Q. Or the financing of the Company?

A. No.

Q. Or the scheduling of the work?

754 A. No.

Q. Or the relations of the Company to the business?

A. No.

Q. Or its relations with the Government, of any kind, local, state or federal?

A. No.

Q. I will ask you whether any foreman of any rank that you know of at the Packard Motor Company has any power to make a contract or agreement binding upon the Company?

A. No.

Q. Whether any foreman of any rank that you know of has taken any part in the bargaining with the maintenance or production or hourly rated workers?

A. No.

Q. Do you include in that the matter of inquiry and advice; that is, whether they have ever been asked about it? Do you know of any foreman that was ever asked about such a matter?

A. No.

Q. Were you ever asked about such a matter?

A. No.

Q. Is there ever any occasion in the experience you have had there when the foremen met with Management?

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, I do not see the relevancy of this, because there is no secret about 755 the fact that we have declined to collectively bargain with the foremen.

Mr. Nelson: That is not what I have in mind.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: No, I do not believe that is what he has in mind.

Mr. Nelson: I mean, do you make suggestions in the plant or out of the plant with representatives of Management of the Packard Motor Company as foremen?

The Witness: Well, yes.

Mr. Donovan: I object to that, because the word "representatives" is not defined, and that is an issue here.

Mr. Nelson: I withdraw that question then.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the witness has not finished his last question. I believe he had said Yes but intended to say more. I will strike that answer for the time being.

Mr. Nelson: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Do you know of any representatives of Management at the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. I know them, yes.

Q. Who would you suggest, as, in your own mind, being a representative of Management?

A. Well, Mr. Weiss, sitting over there, and Mr. Denison.

Q. What offices do they hold?

756 A. I am not quite sure what offices they hold. Mr. Denison, I think, is in Mr. Ferry's office, the treasurer.

Q. And they are representatives of Management, as you understand them?

Mr. Donovan: Did he include the president?

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Well, do you know the president?

A. Yes, I have met Mr. Christopher.

Q. As a foreman and on Company business?

Mr. Donovan: You are asking him as to socially now?

Mr. Nelson: I will ask him either way. Let him tell it.

A. Yes, I have met him as a foreman.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Did that involve policies of the Company?

A. No.

Q. What was it?

A. The last time I met Mr. Christopher was when we built the fifty thousandth aircraft engine and we had a small ceremony in the department when that engine was completed, and we had certain Navy and Army officials there and a little speech from some of them and I met Mr. Christopher at that time. In fact, I stood and spoke to him for a minute or two in company with the chief steward on my shift and the general foreman and chief steward on the opposite shift. We had our photo-

757 graphs taken with that engine.

Q. Was there anything in the nature of consultation or seeking advice of you, or anything of that nature?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Or any other foreman, that you know of?

A. No.

Q. There are foremen's meetings, are there not?

A. Yes.

Q. Let me inquire whether in those meetings for instruction or talks by representatives of Management, whether all grades of foremen are at those meetings?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean, altogether?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, at the same time.

A. Yes, at the class I meet with there is assistant foremen, general foremen and superintendents.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) All at the same time?

A. All mixed together.

Q. We have here a long list of subjects that have been talked about. Did you attend some of those meetings?

A. Yes.

Q. And you heard Mr. Dahling inquire of Mr. Traen about them?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you present at any of those meetings since 758 you became a foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it true that all grades of supervision were present at those meetings at the same time?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, does the general foreman on the present plan of operation at the Packard Company do any work, I mean manual work himself?

A. No.

Q. Does the foreman do any manual work?

A. No.

Q. Do the assistant foremen do any manual work?

A. No.

Q. Is there any foreman of any grade who does any manual work as a general proposition at Packard?

A. No.

Q. The highest man who does that is the leader, is he: that is, the highest in rank, speaking generally, of course?

A. Yes.

Q. Of course, I am leaving out the matter of some crisis or accident, or something of that kind.

A. Yes.

Q. Does the foreman have any power in the matter of a layoff, that is, a temporary layoff?

A. No.

759 Q. Where does that go?

A. It comes to you from the—well, we get it through from the division manager.

Q. Does the division manager tell you what hourly rated employees to let go?

A. Yes.

Q. Does he also tell you what subordinate supervision to let go?

A. Yes.

Q. For how long, does he give you the period of time?

A. Well, if they go, they go, that's all.

Q. I see. Mr. Turnbull, as I understand it, your members of Chapter 5 of the Foreman's Association of America want a Packard Motor plantwide supervisory representation, is that right?

A. Yes, please.

Mr. Donovan: Might I have that last question and answer read?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you read the question, please?

(Question and answer read.)

Mr. Donovan: I did not understand the question. May I have it repeated?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In other words, they want a single unit at Packard's for supervisory employees.

760 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) As I understand it, you want to cover the general foremen, foremen and assistant foremen. Here is the word "assignment men", what does that mean?

A. Special assignment men.

Q. Special assignment men who are supervisors?

A. Yes.

Q. You have already indicated the general powers and limitations on the work of the general foreman in an affirmative way. What would you say were the duties and responsibilities of a general foreman at Packard's?

A. In my own instance, it is my duty to see that the amount of motors are built each day, according to the schedule set up by the Management.

Q. How many foremen do you have under you?

A. Six.

Q. What is their rank?

A. Foremen.

Q. What is your pay?

A. $304.05 per month on a forty hour weekly basis.

Q. In fact, do you have some overtime?

A. Yes, at present we work ten hours a day and for those two hours we get time and a half pay.

Q. It averages currently, about how much a month?

A. I would say about $500.00. I never did add it up.

Q. But somewhere around $500.00 a month?

761 A. Yes.

Q. Now, the foremen?

A. The foremen have $278.00 per month on a forty hour per week basis.

Q. And he has some overtime that brings that up to about what, currently?

A. Oh, I suppose it would run about 450 or 460.

Q. And what are his duties?

A. A foreman, as a rule, has a group of men in the department, this one group which may be a matter of anything from 25 men; some have as little as 25, some have as high as 100 men.

Q. Under his supervision?

A. Yes. It would be a part of the complete assembly; a feeder line of the assembly department.

Q. From whom does he take directions?

A. That's my job.

Q. From the general foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. To whom does he pass the instruction or direction on?

A. Well, to his leaders, or if he has an assistant foreman, he, of course, would notify his assistant foreman. At present, we have no assistant foreman.

Q. On your particular job?

A. That's right.

762 Q. Take these assistant foremen; what is their rate of pay, currently?

A. I think it runs to $242.00 a month, I think. Just around about 242 or 247 a month.

Q. With some overtime?

A. That's on a 40 hour basis and of course, he gets time and a half for those two hours overtime.

Q. And that brings him up to about what, per month?

A. I never did add it up. He would have about $40.00 a month less than what the foreman would have.

Q. Now, the special assignment men, they are supervisory, are they not?

A. Yes.

Q. And they may be of any one of these ranks?

A. They are general foremen or generally foremen in that classification. I don't know of any assistant foremen on that classification.

Q. And they average just about as you described in these other classifications?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Their duties, however, are supervisory, are they?

A. Yes.

Q. And there is a considerable number of them?

A. I don't know how many, I don't know how many there are in the plant, Mr. Nelson, offhand.

763 Q. Do you have in mind how many general foremen there are in the plant at present, approximately?

A. No.

Q. Or foremen?

A. Well, foremen, well, I would only be guessing.

Q. Or assistant foremen?

A. No, I couldn't tell you.

Q. Do you have in mind, approximately, how many persons in these four classifications performing supervisory duties there are in the whole plant? In other words, if you had them all, what is your possible total?

A. We had 868 on our books as of the date of our petition and I don't think there is any more than two or three that don't belong to the Foreman's Association.

Q. But, now, by "your books" you mean that they are members?

A. Yes.

Q. And of the possible number that would be eligible to membership, you think there are only two or three?

A. Yes, very few in any event.

Q. Are all four grades of foremen described by you in your testimony just given salaries?

A. No, there are some hourly paid assistant foremen and I believe there are one or two hourly rated foremen, but the majority are salaried people?

764 Q. Within the figures that you have given, approximately?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there lately any arrangement for vacations for supervisors at Packard; that is, vacations with pay?

A. Yes.

Q. What is that arrangement?

A. Up to one year's service, they get two weeks vacation. I think there is a new schedule came out lately, I'm not quite sure whether they give more to anyone with any greater length of time, but it seems to me if they have only six months' service, they get one week's vacation. I may be wrong on that, though.

Q. Would that come out in writing, or did that come out in writing so that you had access to something in writing?

A. Yes, we got a query to that effect.

Q. Were the foremen consulted about it in any way?

A. No.

Q. Is there an arrangement as to sick leaves for the supervisory force in effect at present?

A. Yes, that came out at the same time.

Q. What is the nature of that?

A. One year's service, I think, you get 12 days; for two years, it is a little longer, and it goes up, I think, to about 31 days, it's according to the length of service. I'm not sure of the amounts.

765 Q. Is there any reliable arrangement with respect to the seniority of supervisors?

A. Oh, no.

Mr. Donovan: Just a minute, I will ask that that be stricken out on account of the use of the word "reliable."

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The previous question may be stricken.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Is there any arrangement as to seniority for supervisors at Packard?

A. No.

Q. Is that one of the things you want?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there any arrangement with respect to promotions?

A. No.

Q. Or transfers?

A. No.

Q. Or discharge of supervisors?

A. No.

Q. What does a supervisor do, currently, at Packard's if he feels he is entitled to a raise in pay?

A. He will see his next superior.

Q. Is that all he can do?

A. Well, he can go to the one after that, the next one, if he doesn't get satisfaction there.

766 Q. That is, he can pass from one superior to another?

A. Yes, as an individual.

Q. As an individual?

A. Yes.

Q. Has any foreman representation or any assistance in that effort as it stands now?

A. No.

Q. If he has a grievance, what can he do about it other than pay?

A. Exactly the same thing. He has to go to his next superior and follow through from there.

Q. Has he any representation or assistance in that?

A. No.

Q. He stands on his own feet?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, do I understand correctly, when you have these supervisors' meetings or schools, that the Company provides a speaker?

A. Yes.

Q. Who talks on a topic?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there any opportunity given the foremen to take part in the discussions or to raise any questions that might be on their mind?

A. Oh, yes.

767 Q. There is some?

A. Yes.

Q. To what extent?

A. Well, you can ask a question on whatever the discussion has been and the teacher, if possible, at all, will endeavor to answer.

Q. On the subject set?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you get outside of that and introduce subjects of interest to foremen?

A. No.

Q. Is there any place or person to whom the foreman may go other than what you told us on the specific items and in the manner you have described?

A. No.

Q. Mr. Turnbull, is there an insurance coverage of the hourly rated workers at Packard?

A. Yes.

Q. In addition, we will say, to the Workmen's Compensation?

A. Yes.

Q. Does the supervisory force benefit by that coverage?

A. Yes, exactly the same.

Q. It is shared with the maintenance and production workers just the same as though they were workers?

A. Yes.

768 Q. Are there bonuses or just overtime?

A. Just overtime.

Mr. Nelson: We offer the witness for cross-examination. While we are waiting for you, Mr. Dahling, I will ask the witness one more question.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Did you take part in the strike?

A. Yes.

Q. I suppose you had in mind the objectives and purposes of it?

A. Yes.

Q. By the way, have you anybody close to you in the Armed Services?

A. Yes, I have two sons.

Mr. Donovan: I will ask that be excluded. Who hasn't anyone close to him in the Armed Services? Why should it be in the record here.

Mr. Nelson: He struck and he has two boys in the Service.

Mr. Donovan: Are you still proud you struck in spite of that?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: You are proud of it?

The Witness: Yes, my boys told me to do that and to stand by—

Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) And you would do it
769 again tomorrow?

The Witness: Yes, my boys told me to fight for principles. That is what we are fighting for and it is nothing to be ashamed of.

Mr. Donovan: It is nothing to be ashamed of?

The Witness: No, it is nothing to be ashamed of and I am proud to fight for the things that my boys are fighting for and they told me to go on strike too.

Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Turnbull, I believe you testified that you were one of the first to start in the aircraft division at Packard?

A. Yes.

Q. About when was that division started?

A. That is in the aircraft assembly end, of course. The machine shop end went on a few months before that, I dare say, six months or more before that in the assembly end. I started in there in May, 1940, I think it was, to be exact.

Q. How many departments do you supervise?

A. Two.

Q. Two departments?

A. Yes.

Q. Does that include a department that has to do with the main assembly line?

770 A. Yes.

Q. And also a feeder line?

A. Yes.

Q. How do these engines—and I assume they are Rolls Royce engines—come down the line? Are they attached to an overhead trolley?

A. There is a conveyor that comes along on the floor.

Q. Does that conveyor come along and your workers do something with that engine?

A. Yes.

Q. What do they do? What is their operation?

A. The engine will start at one end of the line with a crank case and have various operations and parts that are put on that crank case as it comes down the line, until it is completed and sent over to the test cells.

Q. It starts out just as a motor block, would you call it?

A. As a crank case.

Q. And then that crank case is completed as it goes down this line until it goes out as the completed crank case?

A. It will start as a crank case and as it feeds along, the crank shaft will be put in and then it comes down a bit further and the reduction gear is put on and then the cylinder blocks are put on and then it comes down further again and what we call the lower crank case pan or the lower pan is put on and then it will go a little 771 further and the wheel case is put on and then the super charger is put on and the crank shaft assemblies is put on a little further down the line and then the magnetos and oil pumps and the various adjustments are made and the after-cooler and the various parts until it comes around and is primed with oil and weighed for weight and inspected at that point again and then it is ready to be shipped to the test cells.

Q. It comes off the line as a completed unit, as a Rolls Royce aircraft engine?

A. Yes.

Q. You said that one department of yours has something to do with the main assembly line. What parts do your workers place on this engine? What are their operations there?

A. I have the whole department, Mr. Dahling.

Q. You have that whole department?

A. Yes.

Q. Then the workers under you put into this engine or attach to this crank case these various things that you have just described?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, the operation is broken down into great details, isn't it?

A. Yes.

772 Q. And the workers would only have to do or know one or two of those details to accomplish their purpose on the line?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is the reason it is broken down into great detail, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. So that you can take people who have had no particular experience in that sort of work and break them in in a hurry and they can do a good job?

A. Yes.

Q. Those men, in doing that job, are under your supervision?

A. Yes.

Q. And there are a number of men that you have on your line that have never done that type of work before?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. And none of the men you have on the line could step up and take your job at the present time, could they?

A. Well, they did away with the King of England and they got another one pretty quick. No man is indispensable.

Q. That is a very pat answer, Mr. Turnbull, but it is not an answer to my question. Do you really think any of these workers working on the line on one or two of these operations could take your job?

A. Well, they would have to be trained for it, that 773 is the answer.

Q. They would have to be the right type of person also?

A. Yes.

Q. To be a foreman, you have to have more than just mechanical training, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. You have to have a certain amount of leadership?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have to be able to get along with your men?

A. Yes.

Q. That is true, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have to have a lot of sound judgment?

A. Yes.

Q. And good common sense?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Whereas, to be a king you just have to be born right.

Mr. Dahling: I think that is true.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Of course you have to be able to demonstrate to the people working on the line the work they have to do.

A. Yes.

Q. And you have to interpret and follow out the directions of your next rank of management, do you not?

774 A. Yes.

Q. By the way, who is your next immediate superior?

A. Mr. Al Kline, superintendent.

Q. What are his duties there, Mr. Turnbull?

A. Well, he has to watch that everything runs in order, that we get the parts, and he has to watch the stock division end of it that the parts are flowing in right. He has to be consulted on many a case where there is perhaps difficulty in assembling parts, such as if a part may come in does not quite fit. We have to find out why and he will contact another division or discuss it with the inspection department and, of course, on various things I have to discuss with him as to the operating of the division.

Q. And he supervises—he is your supervisor, would you say?

A. Yes.

Q. And, generally, he supervises the department that you operate?

A. He has FF Department, FMA Department and the FSB Department. He has three departments that he supervises, that is the stock division end, and the assembly department and the FME Department, three departments.

Q. And he would have a right, would he not, to recommend your advancement?

A. Yes, he would recommend it to the division manager.

775 Q. And he could also have a right, if he felt you were not doing the job properly, to recommend your replacement, wouldn't he?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you, as general foreman, would have a right to recommend the promotion of a foreman under you, wouldn't you?

A. Well, I could talk to the superintendent about it, yes.

Q. You have a right to tell the superintendent that so-and-so, you feel, should be given a better job.

A. Yes.

Q. And if you felt that you would make that recommendation, wouldn't you?

A. A verbal recommendation to him, yes.

Q. And you might recommend that an assistant foreman be made a foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if it came to you—if you had a part that came to you that was not a proper part, who would report that to your department? If the part that came in was not a proper part, how would you hear about that?

A. Well, the foreman on the line, whatever group he was in charge of, if he got a part like that, he would either call the inspection end of it or he might tell me and I would see the inspection department about it.

776 Q. And if you could not work it out, you might go up to the superintendent and take it up with him, I presume?

A. I would keep him informed at all times about any difficulties like that in the department.

Q. And, in turn, the superintendent is supervised by whom?

A. The division manager.

Q. And the division manager would be supervisor of a number of departments?

A. Yes.

Q. And I suppose he would function with the superintendent about the same way you do, only on a broader scope, isn't that true?

A. Yes, I imagine so.

Q. And he might have more than one superintendent reporting directly to him, I suppose?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And those superintendents would just carry their reports up to him which would include your report to your superintendent?

A. Yes.

Q. And he would have general supervisory powers over the superintendents and over his whole division?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, when you get back to your superintendent, he goes to his division manager to get cer-

777 tain approvals, doesn't he?

A. Yes.

Q. Just the same as you go to, as you say, to the superintendent, for approvals?

A. Yes.

Q. And as your foremen come to you for approvals?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if your superintendent wanted to recommend a raise in pay to you, who would he recommend that to?

A. I didn't quite understand that. If he wants to recommend a raise in pay to me?

Q. For you.

A. Oh, for me.

Q. Yes.

A. He would have to see the division manager.

Q. Just the same as if you wanted to recommend the raise in pay of a foreman or of one of your foremen, you would take it up with the superintendent, isn't that true?

A. I suppose I would, but it would be useless under the setup we have now. There is so little difference between the pay now that if I raised the foreman, he would have as much as me right away.

Q. Let's assume that you were raised and you thought the foreman should be raised under you, you would make that recommendation to your superintendent, wouldn't you?

778 A. I don't know that I would even try to, now, Mr. Dahling. What's the use of trying to get a raise?

Q. Let's not waste time on that. Let's put it more generally than that. On things that you have the just power to recommend, you recommend and make your recommendation to your superintendent?

A. Yes, I think my superintendent would think I was stupid if I made such a recommendation. I wouldn't make one.

Q. We are getting away from the one point now. You have certain powers under which you can make certain recommendations?

A. I never heard of anyone going up to the superintendent to raise any foreman up. He would give it to me fine for it.

Q. I thought we passed by the question of raising foremen. Let's say that you decided that the line could operate more efficiently if certain changes were made. What would you do after you had arrived at that conclusion?

A. Well, I would discuss that with the superintendent.

Q. And if the superintendent on the other hand, decided that it would be more efficient in the manufacture to cut out one of the feeder lines, who would he discuss that with?

A. Well, he would have to discuss that with the Division manager and the processing department end of that.

779 Q. If a foreman had some recommendation to make with respect to the operation of the line, would he discuss that with you?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, just to get a more or less complete picture, let's take a usual ordinary shift. What shift do you work, by the way?

A. On the afternoon shift.

Q. That shift is between what hours?

A. Seven-thirty at night until six in the morning.

Q. You go on the shift, we will say, at seven-thirty; after you arrive at your particular designation, what do you do?

A. I report to the superintendent first.

Q. Why do you report to the superintendent?

A. Because as a general rule, the division manager leaves a note on any part or anything that is of interest that we should know, such as a need for service parts or certain items and he leaves word for the superintendent to see those parts are gotten. I have to report there to get my orders.

Q. You report to the superintendent and get your orders. What do you do next?

A. Then I go and I check to see whether the day shift general foreman has left a note. We leave notes for one another when we quit work, telling each other of any 780 difficulties we have encountered, and advising each other what to overcome and what changes to make. The two shifts try to work hand in glove as much as possible. We try to stop a shortage of stock and if a part has given us trouble; we try to leave notes to each other if we have any trouble with stock or parts or anything of that nature so we know how to start out.

Q. Do you change clothes when you go to work?

A. No.

Q. You wear ordinary street clothes?

A. Yes.

Q. You go to an office?

A. Yes.

Q. You have an office?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have anyone in the office with you?

A. Well, there is a timekeeper end of it there. They have a girl in there. She takes care of looking after the time and she types any queries that I might need typed up or anything like that and the foremen also use that office if they have any queries to write up. Any of us use that one office.

Q. That is considered the office of the general foreman?

A. There is no designation as such on it. That is the one we have used. I don't know that it has a 781 special office that I can call my own.

Q. Well, we will say you arrived at your office after reporting to your superintendent and you have received your orders and seen the note from the general foreman on the shift preceding you. After that, what do you do?

A. Well, the first thing I do is to walk out on the floor and check each sub-assembly line to know how they stand for manpower and attendance. Absenteeism, as you all know, is quite a problem. We have to find out how we are placed for men. We have so many absent on one sub-assembly and we may have to find people from one end or another to balance up the labor-load so that we will be able to get out production at all points.

Q. You have to see if you have sufficient manpower to run the assembly lines?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you haven't sufficient manpower, what do you do?

A. We have still got to get production out. We have to scrape from here and there to get whatever we can and manipulate our manpower accordingly. We may leave the man on one job for half a night and move him or transfer him to another to maintain our production off that line. We struggle to get production, in other words.

Q. At this time it is very important to get out the production?

782 A. Yes.

Q. And you use your best judgment in distributing your men around your department to produce the engines that should be produced?

A. Yes.

Q. I presume you have in mind also the capabilities of these men and select them with that in mind?

A. You do not have much choice nowadays.

Q. You select the best you can although he would not be as good as you would like him to be?

A. You cannot move them around the shop as you want. You have to move the men by seniority on that basis. You have a steward to contend with.

Q. You mean that if you move a man temporarily for one hour or two you have to get the consent of the Union for that?

A. Yes, you have to speak to the steward, because the man can refuse to go.

Q. You mean you cannot move him for only one hour?

A. You must consult with the steward before you make a move for any extent.

Q. Don't you mean you cannot reclassify the man without consulting the Union?

A. No.

Q. You cannot move him from one job to another
783 job without consulting the steward?

A. You discuss that with him.

Q. And if you cannot move him and do not have sufficient manpower to get the production, the production will fall down, will it not?

A. We do not have that trouble usually. The steward I have is a level-headed fellow and we get quite a bit of cooperation from the steward. In other words, they cooperate with us and they are level-headed about things like that.

Q. That is another attribute for a foreman, a foreman must have the ability to get along with people.

A. Yes.

Q. And he must be even-tempered and not lose his temper.

A. Yes.

Q. You have now gotten to the point where you have checked up to find out if you have sufficient men and you arrange them in your department to produce the engines that the schedule says you should produce. What do you do next?

A. The next thing, I will inquire from the foreman as to any shortages on the floor. Maybe one sub-assembly is rather tight on a certain part. I check on that and see that everything is in order for the flow of materials to that sub-assembly line and then I have to check with the stock division again to see that those parts are 784 coming in and I make sure the parts are coming right and do not tie up the feeder line.

Q. And if you find they are not coming through properly, —and if you find that they are coming in properly and you have made your arrangements, then what do you do next?

A. Any difficulties that have been encountered by the day shift,—well, I will take that note and check the operation and notify the foremen there that they have had trouble with that on the day shift and that he is to watch out for it on the night and let me know if there is any difficulty there.

Q. And if he does run into difficulty and notifies you?

A. Well then, I will call a special assignment man and perhaps by this time the inspection is on the job and if possible, I will get the special assignment man to check up on the various parts with the different divisions where the parts are made and get the mistakes rectified and as quickly as possible. I might even call on the phone the foreman in the department where the part is made and tell him about it so he does not get any more scrap parts or anything like that coming through and I might let him know what the difficulty is that we are having.

Q. It is quite important that the parts as they come through be exact as to specifications?

A. Yes.

785 Q. And it is very important that the engine be properly assembled?

A. Yes.

Q. If they are not properly assembled it may result in serious air crashes?

A. Yes.

Q. When you complete that job, what do you go to next?

A. By this time you have an hour pretty well over and you check the hour's production which comes through. There are certain amounts that have to come through every hour and a report is taken every hour from the main line as to the number of engines that have been finished in the first hour and all the operations in that line and the number of parts assembled in each hour as it comes down through the night.

Q. And you check that once each hour, you say, to see you are keeping up with production?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you find your production is lagging, what do you do?

A. Then you go and find out why immediately.

Q. And that is a matter that is up to you to correct as foreman?

A. Yes, and not only correct it, but report the reason why to my superintendent immediately.

786 Q. And what if there is a breakdown on the line? What do you do?

A. All you can do if there is a breakdown on the line is to call the maintenance department and have them come and fix it and you also report that to the superintendent immediately.

Q. Well, we will say that you have checked production and you find the production going through properly. What other duties then do you have?

A. Well, you have various things that come up. You may have to discuss a situation that a steward brings to you with regard to some point or other.

Q. You mean, some grievance that might come up?

A. It may be a grievance or it may be a matter of transferring a man from the day shift to the night shift, or some discussion along that line, and you discuss that with him, and things like that.

Q. You discuss it with him and if you decide it is all right to transfer the man, what do you do then?

A. If a man has seniority to change from one shift to another, you have no alternative but to agree to that, and the steward tells you to make up a query and you just leave that for the day shift to arrange that transfer, after making up that query.

787 Q. So you pass on this question of seniority check-up, and see if it is all right and if it is in accordance with the contract you okay it and if you feel it is not, you will not okay it?

A. You can't okay it unless the seniority is okayed for it.

Q. Yes. What other matters might come up between you and the steward on the shift?

A. Well, you may have, for instance, he might think that some man is entitled to be moved from one job to another and he will come and ask you about it. Well, you see, if this man is to be moved from one classification to another, or anything along that line, you can discuss that with him and come to an agreement on it. If he isn't in line with his seniority, you can't go ahead with it.

Q. And that is the end of it, then?

A. Yes.

Q. I suppose at times you and the steward might not agree?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. After discussing it with him, he might be able to convince you he was right, I suppose?

A. Yes.

Q. And you exercise your judgment in that matter and if you think what he asks is in accordance with the Union contract, you go along?

788 A. That's right.

Q. Are there any other matters the steward might raise during a shift?

A. Well, it just depends. For instance, last night I had one discussion about the fact that I hadn't enough men to do a certain job—it was just a small job. We have solvent in tanks for parts to be washed in, and I didn't have enough janitors or parts washers and I ran into a little difficulty with the steward and we had to get together on that. He complained about the men complaining about emptying these tanks themselves.

Q. But you came to an agreement with him?

A. Yes.

Q. How did you solve that difficulty?

A. He said I should get more janitors in that department and I said that I had requisitioned four more janitors for over a week ago and they sent me women and women can't do that job. I said that in the meantime I thought the men should cooperate with me and keep the job running.

Q. And you finally convinced him that they should work along with you to keep those engines going along the line?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you any other examples in mind?

A. Well, there is various ones come up right along. Sometimes you will get a man that complains about 789 his job, complains that the job is too heavy for him, that he has some difficulty. Maybe a man has a rupture and he is on a job that is a little too heavy for him and the steward will get us together and between us we will probably try to put the man on a job that is agreeable to him, more agreeable to him.

Q. I presume you might also decide that the man might have to be sent to the hospital?

A. Well, if it was a case where he was complaining of a pain, I would certainly advise him to get it attended to.

Q. You would have to, of course, decide in certain cases whether the man was just malingering or whether he would need hospital attention?

A. Well, I wouldn't have anything to do with that.

Q. If you thought a man was complaining simply because he was lazy or was nursing a hangover, what would you do about that?

A. Well, there's not much you can do about that now-a-days.

Q. There is no answer to that now-a-days, Mr. Turnbull?

A. No.

Q. Well, in ordinary times, what would you do in a case like that?

A. Well, in ordinary days if a man has to work for a living, he works. Now it is different.

790 Q. That, today, though, causes you quite a bit of trouble, keeping your line going because the situation is a little different today?

A. Yes.

Q. You would say these times are quite unusual?

A. Yes.

Q. It requires a foreman to have a lot of common sense and a very broad viewpoint, does it not?

A. Well, a lot of patience.

Q. A lot of patience, that is right. A foreman these days would have to have a great deal of that in order to do his job, would he not?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you any other discussion on the stewards on the shifts we are talking about?

A. On grievances, I am able to settle or those I am not able to settle?

Q. What happens on those grievances you are able to settle?

A. If I am not able to settle a grievance by a little discussion with him, he writes up that grievance on a special form and he submits that to his district steward. His district steward, in turn, will tell the personnel or industrial relations in the division and then I would get called in front of them for an explanation as to why I couldn't settle it and the case would be discussed.

791 Q. And you would be called in and appear and give your views of the matter and the facts and there would be a discussion and some settlement would be arrived at?

A. Yes, they would settle it some way.

Q. I suppose also, that if you found that some of the foremen or some of the men in your department were not doing their work properly, you would attempt to instruct them or see that they were instructed?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And if the foreman should report to you that he did not think one of the men on the line was capable of doing the job, you would investigate the matter and discuss it, would you?

A. I would investigate it and discuss it with the chief steward.

Q. If you arrived at the conclusion that this man should be given a little more time to see if he could not snap into the job, why, you would keep him on the line, would you not?

A. As I said, you have got to be patient.

Q. Yes, and in that way you might be in the position, say, of overruling a foreman reporting this man?

A. No, I never overrule a foreman. No, a foreman runs his own line.

Q. Yes, but you might talk with him and say, "Why 792 don't you not give this man another chance?"

A. Yes, if he is agreeable.

Q. But if the foreman wanted him removed from the line and so reported to you, that would be the end of it, would it?

A. No, the foreman would write a query on that and submit it to the personnel department. Before he would submit it to the personnel department he would write a query and ask the steward to okay and sign it, and if the steward okayed and signed it, it would go to the personnel department.

Q. I did not get the first part of your answer.

A. I say, the foreman would write up the query and send a copy to the general foreman, myself, and one to the superintendent and one to the personnel department. Now, if the steward did sign that query and okayed that move, then we would go ahead and make the move. But if the steward refuses to sign the query, then we would send it through to the personnel department, who would conduct a hearing on the case and make disposition of that case.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will take a five-minute recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will resume, gentlemen.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) I believe when we adjourned for the recess we were discussing these grievances that 793 you took up with the steward or, rather, the steward would take up with you and you gave us some examples. Have you any other examples of grievances that come to your attention as general foreman, other than those you gave us?

A. Only plant violations that are reported to us by the guards that we have to dispose of and take care of.

Q. We will say a violation is reported to you by one of the guards, what do you do?

A. You make out a query and state what that violation was and then the number of the violation ticket is stated right on there and what the penalty is under your setup that the Company put out, such as three days for the first time caught gambling. We make up that query and impose that penalty on the grievance. Then we have to discuss that with the steward again and if he will okay it, then the penalty would be imposed; if not, it has to go through the personnel department.

Q. Do you consider the charge, the facts of the charge at all?

A. Oh, no, we have nothing to do with it. We have no part in it except to write up, impose the penalty set by the Company. There is nothing else we can do.

Q. That would be in the case where a guard reports a violation to you. We will say you observed a violation of some character yourself. What would you do about it?

794 A. I would go through the same procedure. Write up a query, hand a copy to the steward, with a notification, the 24-hour notice that a certain penalty would be imposed, and then he would either sign it, which is very seldom—it generally comes to a hearing with the personnel department.

Q. That is at the insistence of the Union?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you, however, at times, merely reprimand a man rather than impose a penalty on him?

A. You might in some things tell him not to do it again, something like that.

Q. You would use your judgment and take into consideration the man's record and that sort of thing, would you not?

A. The usual thing, usually, is to get ahold of the steward and tell the steward this man has done a certain thing and that you want to reprimand him. If he agrees, you bring the man in, usually in company with the steward—no, not usually; I should have said you must have the steward there at all times.

Q. And you do that in order to comply with the contract? We are now referring to the CIO or workers' contract?

A. Oh, yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Might you simply reprimand a man for such a violation as gambling?

795 The Witness: Well, you would risk the chance of getting fired yourself if the Company knew you did it. You would have to impose a penalty in a case like that.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Let us take that situation. What sort of gambling goes on? We have heard a lot about gambling. Is it shooting dice?

A. I have seen all sorts, shooting dice, playing cards.

Q. When they shoot dice, there are usually quite a number of men in the game, are there not?

A. Yes.

Q. Would it not be rather difficult if you came upon a dice game to be certain as to what men were actually in the game and what men might be just looking on?

A. Yes.

Q. You would exercise your judgment in connection with that matter, would you not?

A. Well, I have never caught them playing dice. The guards usually are the ones that catch them on that.

Q. But if you should run into a game of that character, you would use your judgment to determine whether they were all in the game or whether some were just passing by?

A. I would have to get more than that. If I was by myself, there would be eight or nine witnesses against me.

Q. Unless you had some very direct evidence, you could not penalize every one you saw there?

796 A. I couldn't.

Q. And you would have to use your judgment if the Union demanded a trial?

A. That's the only way I could do it.

Q. Or in the case of absenteeism, you sometimes ask that the man be removed from the rolls, do you not?

A. Yes.

Q. You make out regular query forms?

A. Yes.

Q. How do you do that?

A. A man's record is checked back for perhaps a couple of months.

Q. Who does that?

A. The clerk, at our request. If a foreman comes to me and tells me he has had a chronic absentee, I say that the best thing is to get the girl to check his record. If that record is so bad, we write out a query stating it is a 24-hour notice of dismissal. We do that to maybe scare the man a little bit, and those cases, as a rule, go to Personnel, and the man will get a lecture and a warning that should it continue he will be dismissed. If it does continue, the second one is written up, perhaps the steward and Personnel will agree and the man will be dismissed.

Q. In checking over his record, you come to a decision on whether you will prepare this query?

797 A. Yes.

Q. And after looking over the record, you may decide that under the circumstances you will wait and see what develops, is that right?

A. You may watch it a week or two. If it doesn't improve, then the foreman, or whoever the man belongs to, in the group, writes up his own query.

Q. So you use your own judgment in that kind of matter, as to when you are going to send this query through as to the absentee?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, say the query is made out and the steward agrees to it, what happens to it then?

A. Our usual procedure is to ask for him to be removed from the roll of that department because when he goes to the front office it is quite likely they will put him to work in some other department, even if you try to fire him, so what's the use of firing him?

798 Q. (By Mr. Dahling): In other words, they may need them so badly that they will have to take him and give him another chance somewhere?

A. Yes.

Q. You have no objection to that?

A. I don't like to unload a bad man from myself to some other man. I have no say in that at all. He will probably be of no use to me or anybody else and I do not have any say on that.

Q. And you would feel the man in this case should be discharged and not put in on another department?

A. I would feel that way, yes.

Q. And that would be so even though there is a great shortage of labor and it might be necessary for the Company to use every type of man they can get ahold of?

A. It might be so.

Q. If some of your men should happen to get into a fight, what procedure do you follow?

A. There is a standard procedure about men getting into a fight. They are sent home immediately and a hearing is held the next day. We have just that certain procedure and we have to follow that.

Q. And you appear at that hearing the next day?

A. I have not had to so far but I do not know whether they would even request that I did. I did have one 799 fight, come to think of it, in my department, but I did not have to appear on that, that was taken care of in the Personnel Department.

Q. But if you were actually a witness you might be called to give your report on it?

A. I suppose so, yes.

Q. Mr. Turnbull, we have been using the term "query." When I first heard it I thought it was an unusual word. What do you mean by "query"?

A. It is a typewritten notice. If I write a note to my superintendent about a leave or something else a record should be kept of it or if they should want to keep a record of any sort, they will give it to the girl and have the girl type it up because it is easier to read it when it is typewritten than when it is in longhand. It is of a certain size of paper that we have and we write a note and that is a query.

Q. And that is the term that Packard uses for that form of communication?

A. Yes.

Q. And you use that in cases where you ask that a man be removed from the roll? In other words, your communication is that so-called query?

A. Yes.

Q. Where you discipline a man, in a case of gam-
800 bling, that report is called a query?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, your department, or let us say the main assembly department, is laid out in a certain manner, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is done by some other department of the Company?

A. Yes.

Q. What is that called?

A. That is called the process and engineering department on that, who do that.

Q. And that is laid out with the idea of having the operations run smoothly, isn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. And if you find that after it has been once laid out that it does not operate smoothly and you think you know the reason, would you attempt to get a correction made?

A. I would point that out to the superintendent and he in turn would point it out to the division manager.

Q. When this aircraft assembly was first laid out it was first a small operation, is that right?

A. Well, when we built it first it was built for one or two. We did the whole job completely in a small department big enough to build two or three engines.

801 Q. And you knew quite a bit about the operation of such an assembly line from your previous experience, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was the reason for giving you a bigger job on the bigger line?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you discuss with your division manager or superintendent ideas for laying that out?

A. No, that was all set and laid out already. I did not have anything to do with that.

Q. That was set out by the Engineering Department?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I suppose that in addition to your getting out your production and the right quantity, you have to be sure that the quality is okay also?

A. We have the Inspection Department that checks that for us pretty closely.

Q. And if some of these men who do these operations fail to do them properly, these engines come back to you, do they?

A. They just do not go on any further. If they do a job wrong the inspector puts a tag on it and it has to be fixed before going any further.

Q. What do you do to see that quality is maintained
802 and not to get the rejections?

A. The only thing you can do on that is that you have trouble on that job—they will take it off the line and send it to another department for repair. We have a special department for any repairs. You cannot do repairs on the line. The engine is taken off the line away from us entirely and it is sent to a repair department until that job is okay. That job has to be okayed then by the Inspection Department and the Army and Navy Inspection. It is not put back on the assembly line at all. Once a tag is on I am finished until it is repaired and put back.

Q. And that would be in the case where a certain part that you attached is imperfect?

A. It may be that a thread is stripped when they put a part on a job.

Q. Well, let us say that the quality was not up to standard because of the defective workmanship on the part of the men on your assembly line, what do you do to prevent that sort of thing?

A. You mean, if a man is doing a job and not doing it correctly what do I do?

Q. What do you do if it is not being done correctly?

A. What I do is that if it came to my attention—the foreman, of course, takes care of it. Supposing it was chronic, then I would find out and see if the man 803 was instructed right. If he wasn't then that is up to the foreman or leader to see that he is. If he is careless on the job then I would get the steward and discuss removing the man from that to an easier one where he could do the job.

Q. Might you discuss the matter with the man himself and see if you could point out methods for correcting it?

A. You let the man in charge of that line do that. I do not talk to the men myself.

Q. Would the foreman in charge possibly discuss with the man and the steward the work he was doing, with the idea of showing him how to do the proper type of work?

A. It is up to him to instruct his men correctly.

Q. Until you have exhausted your efforts in that connection or your foreman had, you wouldn't be moving him off the line, I suppose?

A. No, you couldn't.

Q. What responsibility do you have in connection with the checking of material coming into your department?

A. Well, I do not have any responsibility on that. If it does not come in the only thing I can do is report that it is not there.

Q. But you do see that it is checked when it comes in to determine whether you are getting the proper amount or not and whether there is a shortage, do you not?

804 A. If there is a shortage in parts the foreman reports that to me, that there is a shortage. I get a report.

Q. How many unions have you been a member of?

A. Let's see, one—two. The first one I belonged to, as I told you this morning, was the Scientific Instrument Makers and that one later merged with several others, of various classifications, into one big union. In other words, there was a toolmakers union, a blacksmith union, an instrument makers union and a lathe operators union and they were all amalgamated together into the Amalgamated Society of Engineers, and then the Amalgamated Engineering Union came of that. That was one union in the old country, in England.

Q. Were you active in union affairs in England?

A. Well, I was much younger then and I wasn't so very active there. I was on one committee in the City of Glasgow. It was a good committee but that was the only committee I was on.

Q. When you came to this country you joined what union?

A. The CIO.

Q. You were active in the CIO?

A. Yes, very active.

Q. When you say "very active," will you explain just what your activities were?

A. I joined it at the very start and when they 805 elected stewards in the department I became a deputy steward. Later the men in the department recalled the man that was steward and I was elected in his place. I then became a steward. Just a short time after that when the contract was signed and set up, they set up a new setup and put it into the contract for a district steward, one for each district. I was elected a district steward. I was at that time district steward over the old main division plant and that comprised about forty-four departments at that time.

Q. And that was at Packard?

A. Yes, at Packard.

Q. Were you working for Packard when you joined the CIO?

A. Yes.

Q. You spoke about the "contract" when you joined the CIO—or perhaps I should say UAW, was that prior to the time of their first contract?

A. Yes—well, the first contract was made out but I did not have anything to do with that, that was made up more by the International officers, I do believe. We had a National Labor Relations Board vote. I didn't have anything to do with that second contract. The first I had to do with that was when they put the district steward's set up in the contract.

806 Q. As a district steward what were your duties?

A. If a steward couldn't settle a grievance with the foreman in his department then he wrote that up as a grievance and handed it over to me as the district steward. Then accompanied by the personnel man I would go to that department and try to iron out that difficulty for them and if I were not successful with the personnel man then I had to refer it to the last committee to dispose of it.

Q. You were quite busy, I presume, during those years?

A. Yes, I would be quite busy with forty-four departments.

Q. Were you working during that time?

A. I did work some.

Q. But most of the time you were engaged in duties as district steward?

A. I was pretty well occupied with that.

Q. Forty-four departments cover quite a bit of territory?

A. Yes, from the Boulevard up to the new department on Concord and five stories to work on.

807 Q. And about how many men would be in those departments, if you know, approximately?

A. Oh, I don't know that I could tell you that. Maybe we had five thousand men in that division—no, I may be too high; maybe about four thousand men in that whole division.

Q. And you were, during that period of time—and when I say that period of time, I refer to the period when you were district steward—by the way, when would that be?

A. From about 1937 to the early part of 1939, around about February of 1939.

Q. Were you still a district steward when you were promoted to assistant foreman?

A. Oh, no. I got defeated at the election that year and I was just a rank and file worker when I was transferred.

Q. But I believe you said you were busy with Union activities in addition to being district steward. Did that mean you would attend meetings regularly?

A. I always do attend Union meetings, yes, I always made a practice of that.

Q. Would you say you attended practically all of the Union meetings?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did you serve in any other capacity in the CIO Union?

A. No, I never was a member of their executive 808 board, or anything, never took any other office.

Q. I presume, then, that being so active in these unions, Mr. Turnbull, you believe as Mr. Keys, that a Union member has certain obligations to his Union.

A. Yes.

Q. And those obligations included the payment of dues?

A. Yes.

Q. And the attendance of meetings and living up to the Constitution of your Union?

A. Yes.

Q. And he also should believe in the principles of unionism and fight for those principles?

A. If necessary, yes.

Q. Now, on this question of principles of Unionism, what are some of them, so far as you are concerned?

A. My idea of a union is to see that a fair standard of wages is provided.

Q. One is that there should be fair wages? That is a Union principle?

A. That's right, fair wages, fair conditions.

Q. That is fair working conditions?

A. That's correct.

Q. Are those the two main principles of Unionism?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it also a principle of Unionism to have sen-
809 iority? Would you say that is a principle of Unionism?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. So you would add that on as a third principle?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, you might say that what you have given me are more or less objectives rather than principles of Unionism, is that not correct?

A. No, those are principles.

Q. What would your principles of Unionism be as between members of the Union?

A. A condition of cooperation. Help the other man along the road wherever possible to make him a better worker and if possible, better his conditions. In other words, in Unionism you may have one man qualified and another man not quite so good. If you can help that man, then you should do all you can to help.

Q. In other words, the old slogan, "All for one and one for all," applies particularly to Unionism, does it not?

810 A. All for one and one for all?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean as against members of the Union?

Mr. Dahling: As against members of the Union. In other words, you are in there to fight for the interests of the members of that Union?

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Dr. Dahling): And you would fight for the interests of one member of that Union?

A. Absolutely.

Q. And for the interests of all the members of that Union?

A. Yes.

Q. So that would be the Union principle, really, "All for one and one for all," is that right?

A. I don't like that way of putting it, somehow.

Q. You do not like to have it put that way?

A. Yes.

Q. I do not want to mislead you now, but if you do not like that statement it is quite all right.

A. I will agree with the other way you asked it 100 per cent.

Q. Now, of course, these Union principles are universal, aren't they? They apply to all unions, don't they?

A. I would imagine so, yes.

811 Q. And they apply to the UAW?

A. Yes.

Q. And they also apply to the Foreman's Association of America?

A. Yes, and the Manufacturers Association.

Q. Is that a union, Mr. Turnbull?

A. Yes, surely, it is a union of the Manufacturers Association.

Q. Did you ever hear of the Manufacturers Association putting out a picket line?

A. Well, you were banded against us during the last strike.

Q. Did you ever see a Manufacturers Association picket line, did you or did you not?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of the Manufacturers Association call a strike in the middle of wartime in Detroit and close the plant?

Mr. Nelson: In 1933 you called it.

The Witness: You didn't have a strike in '43 but in '44 during wartime it was called by the Manufacturers Association, who closed our plants but the Manufacturers?

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Did the Manufacturers Association call the strike?

A. You are all associated together.

812 Q. I am asking you whether the Manufacturers Association called the strike?

A. It is the same thing, it was a stoppage of war work.

Q. Did the Manufacturers Association ever, to your knowledge, call a strike?

Mr. Nelson: Yes.

The Witness: To my knowledge they shut the plant.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I am not asking counsel questions nor for answers, and I ask that it be stricken in the event that the reporter took it down.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is stricken.

Mr. Nelson: Ask the man where he was in 1933 and 1934 and he'll tell you.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): My question, Mr. Witness, is limited to the war period and I am asking you if the Manufacturers Association ever called a strike in wartime, to your knowledge?

A. I would say that they closed the Packard plant back in May.

Q. May of this year?

A. Absolutely.

Q. They ordered the Foreman's Association of America to stop working?

A. No, they didn't ask us to stop work but they didn't consult us at all. We wanted to work.

813 Q. Well, during the period of the strike in May, the gates of the plant were open, were they not?

A. Yes.

Q. And no one was prevented from going in?

A. No.

Q. Now you believe and I believe that another principle of unionism would be loyalty of the members to the Union?

A. Yes.

Q. And your emblem, I believe, has on it the word "Fidelity"?

A. Yes.

Q. And is it your understanding that fidelity means loyalty and faithfulness and that that in turn would mean that Union members should be loyal and faithful to the other members of the Union?

A. Yes.

Q. And that they should live up to the dictates of the Union?

A. Yes.

Q. And even though they thought—or might not believe in them or believe in a certain action?

A. Yes.

Q. In the Foreman's Association of America does the majority rule?

A. Yes.

814 Q. And if the majority ruled to go out on strike, even though you did not agree with that, you would feel that you would be bound by that?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you should oppose it too violently it might result, if you were an officer, in your being removed?

A. Yes, in a recall.

Q. The officers of the Foreman's Association of America can be removed at any time by the membership, can they?

A. Yes.

Q. They do not serve for any particular time?

A. They serve for a period of one year, but if they don't want you as an officer they will darn soon put you out.

Q. And if you had a leader elected who disagreed with what the majority wanted to do, the first thing that would happen to him would be that he would be thrown out of office?

A. Yes, that could happen.

Q. And then there would be elected an officer who agreed with the majority?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Turnbull, how are the rights of the minority of the Union protected in cases of that sort?

A. Well, there would just be a minority group. You
815 take a vote and whatever the vote stands for or whatever the result of that vote is, you are all expected to abide by the majority. The majority rules.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just as in a national election.

The Witness: Absolutely the same as in a national election.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): When you were appointed or promoted to assistant foreman, did you resign from the CIO?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you feel that you should resign from the CIO?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would it have been quite all right for you to have remained a member of the CIO, even though you are a foreman?

A. No, their contract covers that.

Q. If there was no contract what would your position be there?

A. I would belong to a union as long as I could.

Q. And if there was nothing in the contract—in other words, if the CIO had no objection to it you would 816 have remained with the CIO as a member of the Union?

A. Yes.

Q. And your position would be the same at the present time, as a general foreman; if there was no rule against you belonging to the CIO you would still maintain your membership in it?

A. I would have no reason if it were allowable—but it is not allowable.

Q. If it was allowable you would continue your membership?

A. I don't know about that, Mr. Dahling. I would have to figure that one out. I do not know what would happen under those circumstances. Those circumstances have never arisen and I do not know what I would do under those circumstances.

Q. You said that you had belonged to a union and that you would be a member of a union as long as you could?

A. Yes, but there is a Foreman's Association now.

Q. If there wasn't a Foreman's Association and there was no objection from the CIO would you then remain a member of the CIO?

A. Well, I would like to belong to some union all my time there, whichever union it was that was able to give me job protection and the protection a man should have.

I certainly would belong to a union as long as pos-
817 sible—as long as it was possible for me to belong to one in the category of the job I was in.

Q. And it would not make any difference whether that Union was composed entirely of workers, or not?

A. That again would depend as to the benefits I could derive. If I would get no benefits and if it would do me no good to belong to the Union what would be the purpose of belonging?

Mr. Nelson: I suppose I should object to this, it is a situation that cannot exist under all the proof in this case.

Mr. Dahling: Do you mean that the Foreman's Association of America may never be taken over by the CIO?

Mr. Nelson: I think that is the fact, and so does he.

Mr. Dahling: Do you mean that history will not repeat itself?

Mr. Nelson: Do you mean the taking over of an independent union by the CIO? Not in this case.

Mr. Dahling: As a matter of fact, if the CIO attempted to take over your Union you would fight it, I suppose?

The Witness: I would fight it. No, I do not think that would be the thing to do at all. There are a 818 difference in the two.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): If the CIO organizers got together and got some of your members to petition for a union that would be affiliated with the CIO, you would fight that movement?

A. Absolutely, I see no need for it and I would fight it.

Q. And if you lost your fight and the CIO Union was established what would you do?

A. I don't say that I would join because of that but if I thought that particular thing wasn't right I wouldn't belong to it.

Q. Do you think it is right?

A. Well, there is no need for CIO to come in our picture. We are doing them no harm and we do not need them.

Q. I am putting up a situation to you. Suppose the CIO sends in organizers into the Packard plant and gets enough foremen at the Packard plant to ask for an election for representation and the election is held and it is voted that the CIO is going to represent the foremen at Packard, would you then join this CIO unit?

A. I might and I might quit.

Q. Well, you don't know, is that it?

A. That is it, I don't know.

819 Q. You are uncertain as to what you would do?

A. If I didn't think it was satisfactory I would quit. Nobody can make me do what I don't want to.

Q. I don't think they could make you. You are exactly right in making that statement. What are your reasons now, if any, why you would not join that unit?

A. I have nothing against the CIO as a CIO but that is their own outfit and I do not see where we come into the picture with the CIO, and that is why.

Q. Do you think it would be improper for foremen to belong to the CIO Union of workers?

Mr. Nelson: It obviously would now, because it is forbidden.

The Witness: It is the law now and what can you do?

Mr. Dahling: I move, Mr. Examiner, that the last statement of counsel be stricken from the record.

Mr. Nelson: I think I ought to object to it. Obviously we have a contract with the CIO and that forbids it and we have the Constitution of the Foreman's Association of America and that forbids it. It is a supposition which is violently contrary to the state of facts. It is not a fair question of the witness, as to what he might do, if the world was entirely different. It seems beyond the scope of this inquiry.

Mr. Dahling: What happened to the provisions of 820 the CIO contract with respect to plant protection men? Did the CIO live up to that contract?

Mr. Nelson: Whether they took it in or didn't, if they afterwards adjusted their operations to facts and got agreements on it I see no objection to it.

Mr. Dahling: As a matter of fact, they agreed not to take plant protection men and then they did take them. That is a matter of record with the National Labor Board, isn't it? The position was taken by management that it was a violation of their contract.

Mr. Nelson: And the Company agreed to it. All three parties were in agreement; so what?

Mr. Dahling: So the Union breached their contract.

Mr. Nelson: I do not take that as a breach of contract, that agreement, in my law, I do not know about yours.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That will be all, gentlemen. The next question, please.

Mr. Dahling: It has been so long since I have asked the question that I have forgotten it and I do not know whether it has been answered or not. I will state it under another question.

(Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Do you think it would be proper—

Mr. Nelson: We have not had an answer to the last question because I objected to it.

821 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you ask another question, please?

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Turnbull, do you think it would be proper for a foreman to become a member of a CIO Union in which the other members were workers over whom he had the power to recommend discharge, reclassification and discipline?

A. I would say no.

Q. You do not agree with Mr. Keys, then?

Mr. Nelson: I don't know about that. You have asked him a question and he ought not be asked to characterize other witness' testimony.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I believe that is so, unless you point out the specific testimony to which you have reference.

Mr. Dahling: All right, I will withdraw the question.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Why, in your opinion, shouldn't foremen be members of such a union?

A. Because it is possible for them to have a union of their own and I do not see, when it is possible to have a union of your own, why we should go into something that might cause a conflict. There is no need for it now, and we should have a union of our own and they should 822 have their union and that is all we want.

Q. What conflict might arise?

A. Well, you people have been putting out the objection that there might be a conflict. We do not believe that there will be any conflicts.

Mr. Dahling: I ask that the last answer be stricken as not responsive.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think it is. You are going by the conflict that the Company alleges?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: As I understand your ruling then, the answer may stay?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): And that is the only conflict you think that might arise?

Mr. Nelson: He did not say that he thought a conflict might arise. He said that the Company suggested a conflict might arise under the circumstances that you stated.

Mr. Dahling: I thought the witness said because of possible conflict—

Trial Examiner Jaffee (Interposing): He added to that.

Mr. Dahling: He said the only possible conflict about which the Company might do something—I don't 823 know what he said—I am asking him now whether that is the only conflict which might arise, if the supervisors were members of the same union as workers whom they supervised. And if he doesn't think that there are any he can answer so.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, go ahead.

The Witness: Well, that is the $64.00 one.

Mr. Dahling: May I have the answer read, please?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Read the answer.

(The answer was read.)

Mr. Nelson: The question briefly is, is there a possibility of other conflicts?

The Witness: It has worked, evidently, with other unions and if it is handled right I don't see why it couldn't work in any case. If they had to, though, I wouldn't advise it. I would sooner see us independent.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Then you do not have in mind any other conflicts which might arise?

A. I feel this way, on any conflict, if you sit down around a table and try to iron it out, it doesn't become a conflict. It can be done in this case as well as any other case. The round table is the place for that and it does not make any difference about the nature of the conflict, Mr. Dahling.

Q. Were you an officer at Packards at the time of 824 the strike in April of this year?

A. Yes.

Q. What was your office at that time?

A. Secretary-treasurer.

Q. And it is the same office you held for a number of years, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you attend the strike meeting that was called?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you favor the strike?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you picket the gates at the time of the strike?

A. I was too busy to picket the gate. I did drive around once or twice in a car.

Q. You weren't busy working on your job at Packards?

A. I was working to see the thing over as quickly as possible.

Q. Trying to stop the strike?

A. Trying to get us back to work and get a settlement as quickly as possible.

Q. Were you trying to influence the members of the Union not to continue the strike?

A. No. I was trying to get the Company to give in to us to get back to work, so that we could work in harmony.

Q. And you were unsuccessful?

825 A. I don't say so. We got certain results. The War Labor Board Panel was one result that came from that strike.

Q. The War Labor Board Panel was a result, one of the things you wanted to get at the time of the strike, wasn't it?

A. We had to have some place to go to get redress. We asked the Company what they offered and they said, "Nothing."

Q. So you struck for the purpose of getting the War Labor Board to issue some sort of order or directive?

A. No, we struck for recognition.

Q. And that is what you wanted, that your Union be recognized?

A. Absolutely.

Q. And that was the purpose of the strike?

A. Yes.

Q. And you say you only drove around a couple of times?

A. Something like that, once or twice more.

Q. When you drove around were there pickets at the gates of the Packard plant?

A. No, we didn't need pickets there.

Q. What do you mean when you say "you didn't need pickets there"?

A. Our men rolled out and we didn't need a picket line.

826 Q. In other words, you were all out?

A. Yes.

Q. Didn't you have men standing around the gates?

A. Yes.

Q. Why were they standing there?

A. Well, you had other men there that were liable to take over our foremen's jobs. We didn't want them to do that and if it were possible, we didn't want somebody else taking our jobs.

Q. How would you prevent them from taking your jobs?

A. We talked to them and some of them—even the superintendents were in sympathy with us and came out with us.

Q. When you talked with them, what did you say?

A. As long as they handled their jobs it was all right, but the moment they did the foremen's jobs, they were in the wrong and that there might be trouble, and they gave us their assurance that they would not do it.

Q. Didn't you tell them that if they did that job it would be too bad for them?

A. We didn't have need to do that, they knew that.

Q. Did you phone the wives of—

A. (Interposing): No, Mr. Dahling. You made reference to that previously and I will object to it now. We never did anything like that—

827 Q. Don't answer the question before I ask it. Is that an indication that you knew that the question referred to telephone calls?

The Witness: I heard Mr. Donovan accuse Mr. Keys of the same thing and I resented it then and I do now.

Q. I am asking you whether you called any of the superintendents' wives and told them that they better keep their husbands home?

A. Are you asking me did "we" or did I do that?

Q. Do you know about it being done?

A. No, I do not.

Mr. Nelson: I think your question is misleading and I think he is entitled to answer that as to himself.

Mr. Dahling: I do not want to be unfair in my questioning and about this. If he doesn't know about it he can answer "no."

The Witness: I didn't know and I didn't do any such thing as that to anybody.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Did you go down to Washington at the time Mr. Keys was called before the War Labor Board?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were present at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. And you heard the statements that were made by the members of the Army and Navy down there?

828 A. Yes.

Q. I believe that the record of that proceeding appears in one of your magazines, doesn't it?

A. I don't know about that but I imagine there is right now.

Mr. Nelson: While you are at it, Mr. Dahling, we would like the whole statement, the whole proceeding instead of the portion, the one portion Mr. Donovan read,—we would like to have the whole portion read in this proceeding.

Mr. Dahling: It is quite agreeable to me to put the entire record in. I think it might be quite illuminating to the Board.

Mr. Nelson: All of it or none.

Mr. Dahling: It might be enlightening to the Board. What I have in mind, Mr. Examiner, is the conversation that took place between Mr. Davis and the War Labor Board and Mr. Keys and his representatives at the time of the strikes in May of this year. The Union officials were ordered to Washington to show cause why they did not terminate the strikes. If counsel has no objection, I would like to have that report—I believe it is in a copy of your magazine which I have not here right now with me.

Mr. Nelson: You can produce it. I am dissatisfied
829 with a portion of it being read. I want it perfectly clear that the Company was not asked to do anything and that no relief was granted the foremen.

Mr. Dahling: I am quite sure that Mr. Donovan did not intend to mislead anyone by reading part of it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, gentlemen, let's go on.

Mr. Dahling: All right, let us have all of it in then.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let's go on.

Mr. Dahling: I wonder, Mr. Examiner, if, before starting in on another line of questioning it would be possible to adjourn at this time. I am making that request because it is necessary for me to see several persons this afternoon and the purpose of the meeting is to determine—the meeting may have something to do with the length of this particular proceeding. I cannot promise anything but it might arrive at a certain result and the hearing may be shortened. I cannot reach these people or be with them long enough unless we adjourn this proceeding now.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, I may, for the benefit of Mr. Dahling and the Examiner and the attorney for the Board, say that we plan to call just one more witness. I would say shorter than any other. There were two or three 830 questions that I would like to ask Mr. Keys. I wanted to give counsel notice, in view of the holiday recess, so that he might prepare himself and not be taken by surprise and cause some further delay.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is particularly gratifying to me to see that counsel are trying to shorten this hearing. I might say that I had two things in mind for next week, one of which was to lengthen the hearing day slightly in order to at least begin to comply with the usual practice of trial examiners, which is, to sit six hours per day, three in the morning and three in the afternoon. The second point is the fact that I think we have all been rather negligent in the starting of the hearing. We have been negligent in starting the hearings on time and observing the announced periods of recess. I do not want to blame counsel for that because I have been just as guilty, myself. I will take part of the blame but not all of it. I think next week, if and when I say 9:30 in the morning, we come in at 9:30 and start at 9:30 and if I say a five- or ten-minute recess, we see to it that we come back on time and we will get along a little faster. We will not sit tomorrow, as I have indicated to you informally off the record, and next Monday is Christmas, so we will not, obviously, sit on that day. Unless counsel care to add something 831 further it is my intention to say Merry Christmas to you and recess until next Tuesday.

Mr. Dahling: I would like to say this, Mr. Examiner, I am not committing myself at this time, but frankly, I may be forced to ask for some little time next week. However, I do not want Mr. Nelson, by his statement, to leave that uncovered. Further, you spoke of increasing the time of the hearing. Frankly, it is difficult, even with the time we now have, to be prepared on these things. I do not want to go back and restate the situation we find ourselves in in this case, but I hardly think it is fair to the Respondent, not to give the Respondent ample time and opportunity.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the Respondent has had ample time—I do not like the word Respondent—I think the Company has had ample time and what the Board considers legal time and what I think is sufficient time.

Mr. Dahling: I am sorry to be in complete disagreement with the Board.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: A six-hour day is the normal length of time in which we hold hearings. I have had dozens of cases in which I sat substantially longer—for substantially longer periods of time, and in most of them counsel have cooperated and were quite anxious to sit those long periods. I indicated in an earlier statement that I thought I was being lax and liberal in per-832 mitting some of the testimony that has gone in, which I personally considered rather remote. I am still of that opinion. I appreciate that counsel cannot commit themselves in advance as to what they will or will not do or formally cannot do, the same, of course, applies to the Examiner. I am not committing myself now as to what I will or will not do next week, that depends in part on what the developments are.

Mr. Nelson: I want counsel to be informed that following the conclusion of cross-examination of Mr. Turnbull, the present witness, I would think that the Petitioner's case could be put in in approximately one hour. I cannot, of course, estimate anything in connection with cross-examination of our witnesses. I think perhaps that should afford the Examiner, counsel for the Board and for the Company, some information as to what they should be prepared to do.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, I would say on the basis of your statement, that I would expect the Company to be ready to go ahead at the conclusion of the testimony of the Petitioner, unless there is some particular surprise in the rest of your testimony.

Mr. Karasick: I would like to state only this: I have spoken to counsel for the respective parties prior to this time with the idea in mind of seeing whether a 833 certain amount of material, which I thought, at least, would not be in dispute or in disagreement, and about which there could be some stipulation, but the parties have felt that they were unwilling to do that with respect to the matters discussed. As we go along other matters may arise which they will endeavor to agree upon, and save hearing time if they possibly can.

Mr. Dahling: Well, Mr. Examiner, before we adjourn may I on behalf of the Company wish to you and to the members of the Petitioner and the court reporter, a very Merry Christmas.

Mr. Nelson: The Petitioner reciprocates the desire for a Merry Season.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And I trust the same spirit will prevail when we convene next Tuesday morning at 9:30 A. M. The hearing is adjourned.

(Whereupon, at 5:00 o'clock P. M., Friday, December 22, 1944, the hearing was adjourned until Tuesday, December 26, 1944, at 9:30 o'clock A. M.)

834 Room 737, Federal Building,
Detroit, Michigan,
Tuesday, December 26, 1944.

Pursuant to adjournment, the above-entitled matter came on for hearing at 9:30 A. M.

Before:

Samuel H. Jaffee, Trial Examiner.

836 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are we ready to proceed, gentlemen? The cross-examination of Mr. Turnbull was evidently not completed on Friday, last.

Mr. Dahling: It had not, Mr. Examiner. I presume we may proceed now?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, please.

ROBERT F. TURNBULL

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Cross-Examination (Continued).

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Turnbull, in the event that you have workers in your department that you feel are competent and you desire to improve their condition, what do you do? Can you recommend their change in classification?

A. We take any change of classification on a seniority basis, on any change like that.

Q. Well, that is not quite answering my question. May I put it this way: Do you mean that you cannot upgrade a man on ability and that it depends entirely upon his length of service?

A. Yes. Except we have what we call a utility man. That is a man that, we will say, is an all-around man in a group. Now, if we need a man such as that, the general rule is that he has to be taken on seniority unless 837 you have got a case, for instance, where a man is exceptionally slow, or something like that, or has some bad habit. Then you may manage to get the steward to agree with you along that line.

Q. I take it then that it is very difficult for you to upgrade these men on other than a seniority basis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is opposed by the UAW Union?

A. That is correct.

Q. Take the case of the demotion of a man, if you desire to demote a man do you have the same difficulty there?

A. We run into the same difficulty and we have to put out a special query. That query is signed by the man himself, by the steward and by the foreman of the line.

Q. Does the matter of seniority enter into that, too?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, you are supposed to demote the man who has the least seniority?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if you attempt to demote a man who has greater seniority than a man who is to remain on a like job, will you run into difficulty with the Union?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. What difficulty have you had, we will say, in demoting a man who has had greater seniority than others 838 who will remain on the same job?

A. I do not remember having ever run into that difficulty at all. I don't ever remember having ever run into that difficulty at all. I don't ever remember having demoted a man.

Q. You don't remember demoting a man?

A. No.

Q. Do you know what the general experience of your brother foremen has been in that connection?

A. We would run into quite a difficulty, Mr. Dahling, I would say, however, that it is very, very seldom that you see that happen, except if it came to such a thing as a cutback or a layoff, then you may manage, if there is a difference of opinion on the ability of a person. You may manage then, to get the steward to agree, but it is not a usual thing at all to cut back.

Q. It is difficult to cut a man back except on a strict seniority basis?

A. Yes.

Q. And how does that arrangement work out in connection with transfers?

A. A transfer from one department to another?

Q. Yes.

A. That would be done on the same basis, on a seniority basis, the youngest man would be the one transferred.

839 Q. I believe you stated that in connection with discharges, you also ran into the same difficulty with the CIO Union?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, of course, in connection with your work you have other departments and divisions of the Company which give you assistance, do you not?

A. Yes, all parts come from other divisions to us.

Q. The parts do, but I mean in connection with injuries, you would not attempt to administer first aid, for instance, you have a hospital for that?

A. That's right.

Q. And the employment office takes care of the hiring of employees?

A. Yes.

Q. The plant layout men take care of laying out the work and the processing in the various departments of the plant, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. You also have a master mechanic who assists you with troubles that arise in your department?

A. Yes.

Q. And also, as you have testified, the Industrial Relations Department, in connection with some of your labor problems and problems of your workers?

A. Yes.

840 Q. You can, of course, call upon any of those departments for assistance?

A. Yes.

Q. I do not recall whether you testified that you do or do not have a clerk to assist you in your work?

A. We have a clerk in there; she doesn't do any typing for me, but she comes under the time office people. There is one chief clerk in the division and he has charge of all the girls, but one of the girls is in the same office I am and she makes up any queries, and such things as that.

Q. That is supposed to be a part of her job?

A. Yes.

Q. And to that extent she is, of course, under your control?

A. Yes.

Q. You give her directions as to these reports and bookkeeping matters?

A. I don't have anything to do with that. I sign the time report every night; that's all I have to do with the time.

Q. You would make out your requisitions—or who would make out your requisitions for additional help if you needed additional help?

A. I make those out and submit them to the superintendent, who in turn submits them to the foreman.

841 Q. Who types those out for you?

A. It is a special form, Mr. Dahling, that we use for that, and we just write it in in pencil.

Q. From what source are the assistant foremen recruited, Mr. Turnbull?

A. Generally from the rank and file.

Q. It is practically without exception in Packard's that they come from the rank and file, is that not true?

A. A great number of them, I will say that. There are exceptional cases sometimes, but most of them are from the rank and file.

Q. But to your experience, that is a general thing?

A. Yes.

Q. Where are the foremen recruited from?

A. Pretty much the same thing.

Q. You would answer that question same as you did the previous question, you recruit them from the rank and file?

A. Yes.

Q. Is the same thing true with respect to the general foremen?

A. As far as I know.

Q. Yes, I am only asking for your knowledge, Mr. Turnbull.

A. I would say they are.

Q. It would be only the exceptional cases where they would not be recruited from the ranks of the foremen?

842 A. Yes.

Q. Who recommends the advancement of these men, we will say from assistant foreman to a foreman?

A. Well, the only ones I ever had anything to do with in the way of recommending was one time when we were arguing about the rates of pay and they and the manager told me to put it in the change of classification to him and he would see what he could do. So I wrote them up and submitted them to the superintendent and he signed that form and sent it on to the division manager and he made the change.

Q. Promoted from assistant foreman to a foreman, is that it?

A. Yes, I couldn't promote one myself.

Q. But you would have to ask for approval, and you could recommend, however?

A. Oh, yes. Of course, we have a certain set number of foremen and assistant foremen. If they decide they want to put on extra ones, then they would tell me to put this man's name in, and I would put it in.

Q. You do not think there is anything inconsistent or wrong with the division manager passing on these questions of promotions, do you?

A. No, that's his job.

843 Q. That is, he has an entire division?

A. Yes.

Q. And he has to consider all parts of the division, as well as your department?

A. Yes.

Q. And it would be very logical that he should pass on these questions of promotions?

A. Yes, the same as on demotions. We demoted three just a month ago and that was decided—the superintendent and division manager, they sat in on that conference and I was told to tell these men they would have to be dropped to leaders. I had nothing to say in that other than that.

Q. Who decided that they should be demoted?

A. It was decided between the superintendent and the division manager.

Q. Was the matter discussed with you at all?

A. No.

Q. You knew nothing about it until the time of the demotion?

A. That's correct.

Q. What were the names of the men demoted?

A. George Cikity and Charles Forsythe.

844 Q. And when did this occur, did you say?

A. Just about the beginning of December that they went on the hourly rate, the beginning of December.

Q. They were assistant foremen?

A. Yes, there were three altogether, there was a man, Herman Neuman.

Q. What was the reason for these demotions?

A. We cut back on the production from a certain number of engines and we cut back in the help about 200 and I think we cut back 200 people all told. The consequence was, I suppose, that the Company felt that they did not need so many of supervision and they cut them back.

Q. What do you think about it? Do you think that the Company needed that much supervision after cutting off 200 people?

A. The men were doing the same job. They were cut to leaders but still had the same job as before, with the exception of one man whom we are going to transfer. He is going to move to another department. The other two were on the same job.

Q. Is it your position, Mr. Turnbull, that if you cut 200 workers out of a department that you should still keep the same number of foremen?

A. No, it doesn't seem feasible to me. We did not argue on it, because it was the logical thing to do.

845 Q. Wouldn't you, as a matter of fact, in a situation of that character, recommend to the Company that they cut back the number of assistant foremen?

A. I? No, no. I wouldn't recommend anybody to be cut back at any time. It is not my job to do it.

Q. You don't think that is your job?

A. No.

Q. If you have too many men for the work in your department you would not consider suggesting to your superiors that the work could be done with less men?

A. Yes, yes, on that basis.

Q. Don't you think the same thing applies to the number of foremen?

A. Not with the foremen the way they are at the present time. They are still in charge of the same group. It is a little smaller but the point is that when we cut the foremen back like that he is cut back to a leader and if he gives orders then the Union gets on him right away. He mustn't give orders and we have to take another foreman over him if an order is needed.

Q. If you cut down the number of people you have working for you, you do not need as many foremen to supervise, do you?

A. Well, you still have to feed the line the same way. It is difficult if you cut down the number of pro-
846 duction and the number of workers. Every opera still comes through the same but maybe on a shorter basis. The job is still there for supervision.

Q. Do you need supervisors for that job?

A. They are doing that job but not getting paid for it.

Q. Do you mean that they have been demoted to leaders and are not getting paid as assistant foremen?

A. That is right.

Q. Were there leaders there before the men were demoted?

A. Yes.

Q. What happened to the leaders?

A. They are still on the line.

Q. So that when you cut back the assistant foremen to leaders you have more leaders than you had before?

A. Yes, one more leader.

Q. Is the work being done as efficiently as before?

A. Yes.

Q. There is no change in the efficiency?

A. Yes.

Q. Then in your opinion, if you cut down the department fifty per cent, you will still need the same number of supervisors?

A. No.

Q. In case they did that would you make any recommendations?

847 A. Well, I wouldn't. It doesn't come as far as me, Mr. Dahling. When we come in there is a list of layoffs there with the number of people to lay off and the workers that are cut back, and also there is a list of supervision. That is decided by the superintendent and the division manager.

Q. You have mentioned this one case; does your superintendent ever discuss with you the matter of your supervisors?

A. Well, not to any extent, no.

Q. When you say "not to any extent," does he ever discuss it with you?

A. Well, I have the one man named Herman Neuman.

Q. Does he ever discuss these matters with you?

A. No, only this one man, he did discuss this with me. He wanted to take him off and claimed he wasn't capable and that he was getting old and felt he should be taken off supervision. So, he took him off and that is all there was to it.

Q. But he discussed that with you?

A. Yes, as a matter of fact, I discussed it with him. He wanted me to take him off and I told him that the man had been there for a number of years and I knew that he would like to go off, as far as he was concerned. I didn't like to hurt the man's feelings. I told him that if he left 848 him on for a week or two maybe we could manage to get him transferred to the job where he came from in the Experimental Department and where he wanted to go back to. I wasn't successful and the man was taken off the job and is off the job at the present time.

Q. You say you never discussed that before with the superintendent, that is, this man's capabilities and that sort of thing?

A. No.

Q. Where does the superintendent get his information?

A. He told me that Mr. Bird was at him to get him off, and that is all I knew about it. As far as I was concerned, I had no complaints from the foreman on the line about this man.

Q. Who is Mr. Bird?

A. Mr. Bird is in charge of the Aircraft Division on days, he is the head man on days.

Q. Now, Mr. Turnbull, I believe you stated that one of the principles of Unionism was this matter of seniority, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us just how that works, or better still, how it would work in case the foremen were given collective bargaining?

A. Well, we have studied it quite a bit at our Executive Board meetings and tried to work out what we figured would be something on a fair basis to work from. There are many points that come into the picture. Ability has got to enter into it, ability to do a job and the merits of the man would have to be considered, and the length of service as a foreman would be considered, and perhaps the length of service with the Company as a worker should be considered. We have tried to decide it along those lines and so far we have not come to anything that really is what we would say exactly satisfactory. I think the main thing on it is to take them on their seniority as a foreman, if it is possible at all. We have managed in most of these cutbacks—the superintendent or manager have managed to work along that line and we have not had many complaints, though we have lost quite a few foremen just lately. They seemed to work along that line and it worked fairly good.

849

Q. When you say seniority, that means length of service, doesn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is something that is easily determined?

A. Yes.

Q. Whether a man had a job five or ten years?

A. Yes.

Q. And when you come to the question of ability,
850 who is going to determine that?

A. Well, the only way that it can be determined, in my opinion, Mr. Dahling, to get something agreeable, is to sit around a table and discuss that. It may be, for instance, that the Association thinks that one man should have it and maybe the Company will think the other man. If we had a grievance committee there and we sat down on an unbiased basis and talked about it in fairness, I think it would work out satisfactory. I have been consulted by quite a few foremen on cases like that and when I have analyzed the case right out and perhaps talked it over with one of our supervisors or superiors, we always managed to come to an agreement, so far.

Q. Of course, there is a possibility that the Union might not agree with management, is there not?

A. Yes.

Q. Then what would be your idea of what should be done?

A. Well, I suppose we would have to go fifty-fifty with them if we expect them to go fifty-fifty with us.

Q. And say that you came to an empasse and the Union took the position that "X" was the man who should be promoted or demoted and the Company said, "No, we cannot agree with it, 'Y' is the fellow we want"—

A. Yes.

Q. —where do we go from there?

851 A. Well, now, you could do it on the basis, the same exact basis as what the CIO does. They have managed it. We have had those cases come up and we have always managed to come to an agreement on it.

Q. Supposing you do not come to an agreement, what is the next step?

A. Well, sometimes you have to lose. If it was a very bad case, then it might develop into something more serious.

Q. When you say it might develop into something more serious, do you mean a strike?

A. If such a thing occurred, there might be a danger there. Then, we have to consider it this way, Mr. Dahling, we don't in Packard's make a flagrant example of it.

Q. Mr. Turnbull, I am asking you as to what would happen in a specific case where you cannot agree.

Mr. Nelson: You are assuming the flagrant case?

Mr. Dahling: I do not know what a flagrant case would be. It would possibly be flagrant in the viewpoint of the Union if they did not agree with management in any way.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): I am assuming top management does not agree with the Union. Top management says "Y" is a man of leading ability, leadership and all those other things that go to make up a good foreman. That is the man that we intend to put in this job. The Union 852 says no, "X" is the man, he has been here four years longer than "Y" and in our opinion he has this ability, and so you are in disagreement. What is the solution of that disagreement?

A. Well, you can generally come to some compromise, you can sit down to a table and talk it out.

Q. But you have gotten beyond the point of compromise when you come to the situation I am giving you now. It is a flat disagreement between the Union and the Company?

A. Well, there could be the danger of a strike there.

Q. Yes, and strikes have been caused because of that, have they not?

A. I suppose so, yes.

Q. You do not know of any?

A. Not now.

Q. On the part of the CIO, do you know of any strikes because of that?

A. No.

Q. You mean not in Packard's?

A. No.

Q. Do you know of any other cases?

A. Well, just as the case of Paper Storage, not in any others, no.

Q. The fact that you disagreed with top management as to who could be promoted, could lead to a strike?

A. It is less likely with collective bargaining.

853 Q. I am not asking you that question, Mr. Turnbull. There would be a possibility of a strike, you would get to an impasse and the Company would insist upon promoting "Y" while the Union insisted that "X" should be promoted, and it might develop in a strike?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He has already answered that. Why go over it again?

Mr. Dahling: I just wanted to be sure that he has answered it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Of course, he has.

Mr. Dahling: Then I am satisfied.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): In short, then, Mr. Turnbull, as I get your testimony, you would figure that it was what the Union wanted and not what top management wanted that would control cases of that sort?

Mr. Nelson: I do not think he so answered it. I think he said the most they can do is reduce the number of possible disagreements, which I think is a perfectly honest answer.

Mr. Dahling: I would like an answer to that question, unless the Examiner rules it should not be answered.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is there an objection to it?

Mr. Nelson: I think he has already answered the question. I object accordingly, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not think he has answered that question. However, I will exclude it because I think it is objectionable on other grounds.

854

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Now, we have been dealing with the question of promotions. The same situation would exist in cases of demotions, also, I take it?

A. Yes, only in the reverse order.

Q. And also in cases of transfers or discharges?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Turnbull, as a matter of fact, there are many different types of work in an automobile company, are there not?

A. Yes.

Q. And the foreman who may be in charge of one department could not supervise the work in another department?

A. That is correct.

Q. Some of the foremen are highly skilled mechanics, are they not?

A. Yes.

Q. Some of your foremen, such as the foreman of the sweepers, have no mechanical ability at all, is that not correct?

A. I do not think they have a foreman sweeper, even in the plant.

Q. Well, we will say foremen in charge of non-production departments, such as supplies, and that sort of thing?

855 A. Oh, yes, yes, there is a difference.

Q. You happen to be a skilled mechanic, Mr. Turnbull, do you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And consequently, you would be in a position to be a foreman over a department which had workers in it who do that type of work, you are capable of doing it?

A. That is right.

Q. And there are foremen whom you know who would not be capable of supervising that work, because of their lack of knowledge of that work?

A. Yes.

Q. So it is not a question of transferring men indiscriminately in departments?

A. Oh, no, no, you couldn't do that.

Mr. Dahling: May we have about sixty seconds for a little conference here?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, you may.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Turnbull, we were discussing at the last session this matter of Union principles, and your loyalty to your Union as a Union man. You believe in those principles, do you not?

A. Yes.

856 Q. Were you ever a member of the UAW?

A. Yes.

Q. You were loyal to the UAW at that time, at the time you were a member, were you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you still feel any loyalty to that Union at the present time?

A. No, just a respect for their Union. I have no loyalty to it because I have a withdrawal card.

Q. Because you are not a member of that Union any more?

A. That is correct.

Q. You are in sympathy in the aims of the UAW, that is, the Union aims?

A. With its principles, yes.

Q. Do you, as a foreman, have any loyalty to the Company?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Do you feel as a foreman that you really should be loyal to the Company?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Where, as between the Company and the Union, does your greatest loyalty lie?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am going to exclude that question unless you make it specific. I think the question is so broad that any answer would be simply a vacuum without some specificity.

857 Q. (By Mr. Dahling): If the Foreman's Association of America decided to have a strike and you felt that the strike was unjustified, what would you do?

A. I would tell them so very quickly.

Q. Regardless of your telling them that, if the majority voted to strike, what would you do?

A. I would go with the majority.

Q. You would feel there that your loyalty to the Union would be greater than your loyalty to the Company?

Mr. Nelson: I do not think that is a proper question.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Nor do I.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Turnbull, if the UAW decided to come in and organize the foremen at Packard's and secured a certain number of members from the ranks of foremen at that Company, you would remain loyal to the FAA, I take it?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you fight the organization of a rival union among the foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. When you say you would fight it, what would you do?

A. I would do exactly the same as what was done during the factional fight of the CIO. I stayed with one side and I battled it out on the floor at the meetings.

Q. I suppose in cases of that sort a great deal of 858 discussion goes on in the plant itself when you have a fight of that sort?

A. Well, there was in the days of the CIO, but we don't run into that sort of thing now.

Q. You do not run into it with the CIO?

A. I mean, with the Foreman's Association.

Q. Do you take the position, however, that it is impossible for some other organization to attempt to organize the foremen?

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, I would like to note an objection on the record at this point. I have refrained from objecting prior to this time because I hesitate in any way to interfere with the latitude of counsel's examination. But you will note the questions have been leading up to this point, all dealing with the sheerest forms of speculation. I do not think it is helpful to the Board and I think the Board has a realistic knowledge of labor relations and it would not help them to be told what a particular witness would do in a particular situation. Anything might happen. The sun may not rise tomorrow, but we are not interested in that here. We are interested in a specific question at the Packard Company. The question of possibilities and probabilities when they reach the realm of speculation, are of no help nor aid to the Board in this proceeding.

859 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Of course, it is very easy to apply the adjective speculation to something, and I suppose the short answer to your remarks, Mr. Karasick, is the fact that we are interested in the future as well as the past and present. I assume, among other things, we are interested in industrial peace from now on. I agree there is an area somewhere that when a matter becomes so speculative it is unwise to receive it for several reasons. It is hard to draw the line. If I am in doubt, I usually let it come in, and this is one of those cases.

Mr. Karasick: I would like to call your attention to the fact that this last question asks if there is a possibility for the Foreman's Association of America to have factionalism in its midst. Everyone knows the answer to that, it is obvious.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The short answer is that sometimes you have to ask an obvious question, or a more or less obvious question, as the basis for the next question. He may answer.

Mr. Dahling: May we have the last answer read?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you read the answer, please?

(Question read.)

860 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) We may have an answer to that question, then?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

The Witness: Would you repeat the question for me, please?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Read the question.

(Question read.)

Mr. Nelson: May I make an observation? I have not entered or made an objection. I am well aware of the speculative nature of the question. How can the witness be expected to answer his question of factionalism and dual unionism unless he had the specific issues—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Nelson, do you or do you not object? I do not wish to get into any discussion.

Mr. Nelson: I do.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Objection is overruled. The witness may answer. Let's get ahead here. Suppose you ask the question again.

Mr. Dahling: The question was along this line: Whether in your opinion it would be impossible for some other outside Union organization or some of the members of the present Union to decide that they were going to form another union among the foremen.

The Witness: It wouldn't be impossible, but as long as we have a membership as we have, they have a 861 very poor chance of going far with the case.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Your answer is, then, that it would not be impossible, I take it?

A. Yes.

Q. And that has happened in connection with other so-called independent unions, hasn't it?

A. I don't know of any specific ones.

Q. Do you recall what happened to the Technical Employees Union at the Packard?

A. No, I don't know what happened there, Mr. Dahling.

Q. Well, we will say then, that an effort was made on behalf of the other foremen by the other foremen to set up a rival union to the FAA and one of your foremen, who was a member of the FAA, got into a discussion or argument and tried to influence one of the other foremen from joining the new union. What would you do about it?

A. Well, he would be called in one of the executive board meetings and charges preferred against him for practicing dual unionism and he would have to be dealt with according to the mandate of the executive board.

Q. I do not think you understood my question, Mr. Turnbull. I said that if a member of your Union, the Foreman's Association of America, tried to persuade one of his brother foremen from going into the rival union, what would you as a foreman, do if you knew about 862 it, or if it was called to your attention?

A. I would try to dissuade him myself.

Q. In other words, if there was a rival union started up among the foremen at Packard's, you would attempt to dissuade any of these foremen who are now members of the Foreman's Association of America from going into the rival union?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: No further questions at this time.

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) You have in Packard at the present time four grades of foremen which you desire to have included as the appropriate bargaining unit under the Order of the Board in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. General foremen, foremen, assistant foremen, and special assignment men?

A. Yes.

Q. You have referred to special assignment men. You referred to one that came into your department on some event the other day. What is a special assignment man?

A. A special assignment man—most of them have to do with the inspection end of the job. If we run into a difficulty with any part not coming right, the special assignment man will check on that job and trace it 863 through to the original operations where the trouble is involved. Then, he will check with the persons involved, the foreman or superintendent of the division and see that the job is rectified and the material starts to flow through correct for us to work with.

Q. As I understand your answer then, the man is specially qualified?

A. Yes.

Q. Either by experience or training or both, he is specially qualified?

A. Yes.

Q. Is he specially qualified in only one department or is he an over-all man, equipped to go into any department or any number of departments in the factory?

A. Most of them do go to any number of departments and follow the job. It may involve a part that is manufactured in three or four departments in the course of manufacture. He would go right to the source of the trouble.

Q. Wherever it led him he would follow?

A. Yes.

Q. Into however many departments?

A. Yes.

Q. And therefore, he would appear to be a more broadly specialized man than we will say the average foreman?

A. Yes.

864 Q. Or even the average general foreman?

A. Yes. He gets a picture of the over-all manufacture of the job.

Q. He would have, then, something beyond the general foreman's training and ability?

A. Yes, along a different line, however.

Q. Presumably, he is a man who is waiting somewhere to be drawn on—that is, he is in reserve waiting on trouble?

A. Yes.

Q. Unless he is actually engaged at it?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have in mind how many of these men there are at the Packard factory—special assignment men?

A. I could not say that offhand.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I would like to know before the hearing is over, how many employees are involved in the categories the Union desires and how many are in each.

Mr. Karasick: May I call the Examiner's attention to the fact that Board's Exhibit 21, report of the investigation, is a breakdown of each classification by numbers and gives the final total.

Mr. Nelson: This witness has fixed the number desired at something over 800, I believe. There is a statement in the record by this witness to the effect that there are 868 men.

865 Mr. Donovan: Special assignment men?

The Witness: No, over-all.

Mr. Nelson: The Examiner's question was not confined to special assignment men.

Mr. Donovan: I thought the Examiner asked him how many special assignment men were involved.

Mr. Nelson: The Examiner wanted to know how many men all told were included—

Mr. Karasick: Board's Exhibit 21 comes from the Company's payroll submitted for the check. That is the ultimate result of this report.

Mr. Donovan: Will you indulge me for a moment while I ask the Board's counsel a question off the record?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Pursuing the inquiry about special-assignment men a little further, Mr. Turnbull, you have actually had experience with these men coming into your department?

A. Yes.

Q. In your department where you have been acting as a foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Through whose office do you enlist the aid of 866 special assignment men? Who do you apply to when you want one?

A. There is generally one assigned to a department and you just go and get him right away if he is handy at all.

Q. Suppose he would be busy at that time?

A. Well, then, you would just check with the various foremen or people around and search for him to get him.

Q. In other words, you would exhaust the possibilities of getting a special assignment man for your department?

A. Yes.

Q. Assume that you could not get him, that he was ill, away or busy and could not be deflected from that work?

A. Then you would report—I would report it to the superintendent and let him take care of it from there on. He might assign some other man to take care of it or call one from another department.

Q. Or call somebody out of that department similarly qualified for the time being?

A. Yes.

Q. The superintendent could do that?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you do that?

A. No, I couldn't do that exactly. I might call—if I knew the division where the part was manufactured or coming from that was giving trouble—I might call 867 over to that department and ask them to send a man over to check on it for their own safety and they would send a special assignment man.

Q. Are these special assignment men recruited from the ranks of foremen, generally speaking?

A. Yes, they have the same rating of pay as foremen or general foremen.

Q. Now, which is it, the foremen or general foremen?

A. They have the two ratings. Some are general foremen and have that rating and others are foremen and have that rating, that is, I understand it is so.

Q. Who raises or selects them, whichever you want to call them, from the ranks of foremen to the special assignment designation? Who does that?

A. As far as I know, it is being done by the division manager. I may be wrong on that because I certainly do not have anything to do with it. It is certainly above me and I imagine the division manager has the say in that.

Q. Who determines whether the special assignment man is to get a general foreman's pay and rank or a foreman's pay and rank?

A. I could not tell you that.

Q. But you do know that some rank as general foremen and some as foremen and that they are paid accordingly?

A. Yes.

868 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do all general foremen get the same base pay?

The Witness: There are a few exceptions, such as the tool room. Of course, that is a high rate and I believe I know of two other exceptions, but that is about all. I know throughout the place—

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) But this general foreman—general foremen have the same rate of pay?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that true of foremen generally speaking?

A. Yes.

Q. And of assistant foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. And there are, I suppose, exceptions—a few exceptions to each of these statements?

A. Yes, a few isolated cases.

Q. Where there are some special circumstances or reasons?

A. Yes.

Q. As for instance the tool room?

A. Yes.

Q. What about the tool room? Is that a highly specialized type of knowledge and is there a highly specialized type of supervision required there?

A. It is not only that, but the skilled workers there have a higher rate of pay themselves. The production or 869 regular rank and file workers have a higher rate of pay than the ordinary production man on the line.

Q. In other words, tool makers are highly skilled people?

A. Yes.

Q. And supervision of them requires a proportionately higher skill?

A. Yes.

Q. The special assignment man, does he have any supervisory powers? That is, does he bring a crew with him that he supervises, or does he come to your department with power to supervise the men already there?

A. As a rule, he comes in by himself.

Q. Without a crew?

A. That is right.

Q. That is generally speaking?

A. Yes. Now, it may be that we have occasion to have a foreman absent for some reason, such as a vacation period, and one of those special assignment men will assume the foreman's duties over a certain line. Then again, on such a thing as a job not being run correctly, he may, as I say, go to another division and supervise that job or watch it until that job is running correct. If such a thing were to happen, the foreman wouldn't change that job. He would immediately report that he is in a position to a certain extent where his word is law—that is, 870 where it comes to a job being rectified.

Q. It is similar to a doctor's orders in cases of illness or difficulties?

A. Yes.

Q. Then he would have, to some extent, supervisory powers wherever he steps in to remedy a situation?

A. Yes.

Q. He could direct the workmen present to help him?

A. Yes, he would most likely go and get the foreman and direct the foreman.

Q. Give orders to the foreman in charge?

A. Yes, and discuss it with him.

Q. In sort of a coordinate or authority with the foreman, as you describe it?

A. Well, we call them more trouble shooters.

Q. But he can and does give directions?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Then when the matter is remedied, is it true that he generally withdraws?

A. Yes.

Q. And returns to wherever he came from, or some other job?

A. That's correct.

Q. You have indicated that he not only comes in cases of difficulties of some kind, but he is sort of a supply 871 man if a foreman is sick or on vacation, or something of that kind?

A. Yes, he fills in.

Q. And according to your description, apparently he is a man so qualified that he can do that over a fairly wide range of duties and responsibilities?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that a correct description of it, Mr. Turnbull?

A. Yes.

Q. I do not want to put anything in your mind if I am wrong.

A. No, in any case, that is just about a correct picture of it.

Q. Suppose you give us a couple of the names of those men, so the Company can check your testimony.

A. Mr. Tom Pawlowski was taken off and put on special assignment work for awhile and now he is being put back as foreman, I think, in a shipping department, Department ND just recently. And we have another man, Al Poyser. Al fills in any place like that. I have seen him come in even on nights when my superintendent was away. He would come in and help me on anything like that when he is on special assignment. If we run into difficulty, he is one of the first men we call.

Q. Did he, on this occasion you have in mind, as-872 sume duties of the superintendent in the absence of the superintendent?

A. Yes.

Q. He did?

A. I would say he did.

Q. As I understand it, he not only can come on down the line and act as assistant foreman, foreman or general foreman, but he can sometimes perform the duties of the superintendent?

A. Yes.

Q. And he has done so, to your knowledge?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Do you have in mind the length of service of either of these men at Packard?

A. Yes, Tom Pawlowski has got ten years and I think Al Poyser came here in 1941. He came over right from the Rolls Royce plant at the start of the job and has worked with us ever since.

Q. Then he has a long service in the plant of the Rolls Royce but not so long at Packard?

A. That's right, but he is a specialist in that line of work. In fact, I am not quite sure, but there was some situation when he come over here, but he is one man even on strike, when we were on strike, we did not ask Poyser out because he had something to do with the British Air Corps.

873 Q. Among special assignment men themselves, do they have certain ranks and powers other than the two you have indicated, the ones that take the position of lower foremen and the ones taking the position of general foremen? Do they all rank alike, as far as you know?

A. As far as I know, there are just the two ranks.

Q. Of special assignment men?

A. Yes.

Q. I think you have said here that on occasions your recommendations with respect to other foremen have been overruled or disregarded, is that correct? Or was it with respect to maintenance and production workers in recent months?

A. It must have been production workers.

Q. Do you have in mind a couple of previous instances of that where your recommendation as general foreman has been disregarded?

A. In rank and file men, you mean where I have tried to recommend them for a change of job?

Q. A change of job or something that you recommended, as you thought, for the good of the production and of the Company where it has been disregarded?

A. Yes, we had a man, I remember, on the cam shaft line we wanted to put one man in charge of that line that we thought was more capable than the other man, but we weren't able to do it because of the steward. I can't 874 remember that man's name offhand. I just can't remember his name. It was Al something; he has quit now.

Q. How long ago was it?

A. Oh, three or four months ago.

Q. You say "We wanted" to do so-and-so. Whom do you mean?

A. Well, Mr. Nelson, I can't make those moves until I discuss it with the superintendent. In fact, I always make it a point of letting the superintendent know about those things.

Q. But you say "we", you meant yourself and the superintendent?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I would like to have you tell us, Mr. Turnbull, something about the relations among the levels of foremen there. Let us take the assistant foreman who come in on your job, we will say. What are his contacts with the man immediately above the foreman? He comes on the job that day and what is the first thing he does?

A. The usual way, before we start out we will read the report that is left from the other shift.

Q. By "we" you mean the assistant foreman reads it too?

A. I first—the superintendent will read it and then I will and I will point out the various places where the men should read. There may be a note about one line 875 here and another note about another line down here.

Q. That is to say, it may refer to different particular foremen's jobs?

A. Yes.

Q. Not all of the report is interesting to all foremen?

A. No, not all of them.

Q. You mean just part of it for particular foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. If the superintendent reads it, then the general foreman reads it?

A. Yes.

Q. Then, do you go over the head of the foreman or assistant foreman or—

A. (Interposing) No, I show that to the foreman, then he takes it out and he tells his assistant foreman and his leaders, whoever he needs to for that correction to be made, or whatever the job is.

Q. Whatever in that assistant foreman's section is needed, he gets off of that report?

A. That's right.

Q. What is the next thing the assistant foreman does?

A. He contacts his foreman, as a rule.

Q. Then he goes on the job?

A. Yes.

Q. And is he next to the men, the workers?

876 A. No, there is a leader.

Q. As far as supervisors are concerned, he is the nearest man to the men who work?

A. Yes.

Q. What does he do during the day? Is he in the office or on the shop?

A. No, he is very, very seldom in the office, unless there is some little report he has to make up, perhaps, but he is never in the office for any writing, or anything like that. He stays out on the floor and supervises the job.

Q. In the normal course of the day, does he see the superintendent or the division manager?

A. No.

Q. He has no occasion ordinarily to go to their offices?

A. No.

Q. Does the superintendent or the division manager ordinarily have any occasion to go, or do they go, to the assistant foreman's place in the shop?

A. No, unless he asks—unless he walks around the department and speaks to him.

Q. That would be occasional or would it be habitual?

A. No, just occasionally.

Q. During the course of the day, does the assistant foreman have any further contacts with his foreman, ordinarily?

877 A. Well, with his foreman, yes.

Q. And this foreman has, on the average, about how many assistant foremen under him?

A. Generally, just one.

Q. What would be the contacts in the course of the day between the assistant foreman and the foreman?

A. Well, just on the progress of the job. For instance, there may be one job where they have to move a person, or get so many parts made here, or if some part is not fitting like it should and they will have trouble in the inspection department to get it through, or if there is a shortage of stock, or perhaps if a man wants a leave of absence and ask his assistant foreman, he, in turn, will contact his foreman.

Q. Does the assistant foreman make any written report in the course or at the conclusion of the day?

A. Except perhaps he will make a written report of the number of people that are absent, or something like that. Each group has a form that we use in our department and they write down the names of those absent so we can make a check on that absenteeism.

Q. To whom does he hand that?

A. To his assistant foreman.

Q. Is this about what the assistant foreman does during the day?

878 A. Yes.

Q. Spends his time there with the men and has these contacts you described?

A. Yes.

Q. Let us take the foreman now. He comes in and he has this man and so many machines and men under him. What are his contacts?

A. Of course, he has his contacts with his assistant foreman and he is generally around in the group and if he runs into a difficulty, something that he can't handle himself or thinks it is perhaps a little serious, he will report that to the general foreman.

Q. Is he out in the shop among the men most of the day or in the office?

A. Yes.

Q. Which one?

A. He is out in the shop all the while. They have a little metal desk at each sub-assembly station and he does his little bit of writing there.

Q. You indicate some little desk about two feet wide, or something like that?

A. That's right.

Q. Is there any great amount of difference between what the assistant foreman and the foreman does in the course of the day?

879 A. Not a great deal.

Q. Then, apparently, it is mainly a difference in the authority that they possess?

A. Yes.

Q. One is just the superior of the other?

A. That's correct.

Q. They are doing about the same thing all day, apparently?

A. Yes, only this, the foreman has to assume a little more responsibility on giving advice.

Q. The foreman has more than one assistant foreman, let us say, then, in actual physical territory, his authority would extend further than that of the assistant foreman in some cases?

A. That's correct.

Q. But in some cases the physical area, the authority is exactly the same as the assistant foreman's authority, that is, between the foreman and the assistant foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, let us take the general foreman. You have indicated he gets this report from the superintendent of the previous shift. What does he do next? He gets that and passes it down the line?

A. Yes.

Q. What does he do next?

880 A. The usual rule is to contact each foreman out on his sub-assembly line and see how he stands for help or for absenteeism, rather, and very often he has to go to one foreman and ask him to give him two or three men.

Q. He uses his authority to equalize the equipment?

A. To equalize the labor-load.

Q. Does his authority go any further as to machines and materials?

A. When you have your labor-load, then you check with each foreman and ask him if there is any shortage of parts. The foreman will know that. The general foreman will tell him to let him know when the pieces come in. Perhaps you will get in enough to last for one or two hours and you have to wait for more to come in. In other words, I will say to a foreman, "How many pieces of this do you have?" And he will say, "Twenty." That's enough to last him, we will say, for two hours. At the end of two hours I will tell him to let me know if those parts come in.

Q. Does the general foreman make any written reports during the day?

A. No, outside of leaving a note for the next shift, not to any extent.

Q. Does he see the superintendent during the course of the day?

A. Yes.

881 Q. When and on what occasions?

A. Well, say I had gotten into a difficulty, a shortage of parts, I would confer with the foreman of the stock division and find out how long those parts would be—how long it would be before they would come in, and if it was a case where we were going to be tied up for a half hour, I would report that immediately to the superintendent.

Q. Does the general foreman spend his time in the shop among the men or mainly in his office?

A. Most of his time is spent on the floor.

Q. Of course, a man's duties might control that, to some extent?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. If he can make better progress on the floor, he goes on the floor, is that it?

A. If his labor-load is good and the parts are good, it is a little easier on the general foreman. If his labor-load is not good and the parts are not coming in, you have to watch all the while. If our parts don't come down—well, we have to see that these parts must come off the sub-assembly lines to meet our main line coming down, so we have to watch pretty close.

Q. Do you make a written or oral report on the hour?

A. We have a girl that comes around and takes a count of the number of parts done at each station, then 882 she calls that up to the head man on the night shift, I think it is, and it is run on a teletype and put on a big blackboard, so we can all watch it all the while.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Turnbull, you have indicated that the information concerning the day's operations, the suggestions originating with the foremen, comes through the foreman, through the general foreman up to the superintendent?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, let's take another subject matter, not the operation of the plant, but the relation of these foremen to each other. You have indicated that they have authority in the order named there as vested by the Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, let's assume a wholly supervisory situation where the only thing involved are the relations of these four classes of men to each other. Can an assistant foreman by-pass his foreman and general foreman and go directly to his superintendent?

Mr. Donovan: May I have that question, please? I tried to get it and I couldn't.

Mr. Nelson: I said, can the assistant foreman in matters relating only to foremen and not relating to the day's operation—relating to the relations among the foremen, can an assistant foreman by-pass his foreman and 883 general foreman and go directly to the superintendent? Let's assume a case where he wants a raise or something or a case where he wants to complain of either the foreman or general foreman.

Mr. Dahling: I wonder if this witness is qualified to answer for the Packard Company generally. He can only answer as to his own experience.

Mr. Nelson: If you don't know, tell us so. If you do know, I want your answer.

The Witness: It can be done, yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Let's assume a case where an assistant foreman desires to complain of the general foreman.

A. If he wanted to complain of the general foreman?

Q. Let's assume that, whether right or wrong.

A. He could go to the division manager, yes.

Q. And go right by the foreman?

A. Well, he would likely tell his foreman.

Q. Now, if the general foreman was the object of the complaint, must he also tell the general foreman, or can he by-pass him and go to the superintendent?

A. Well, there is no set rule, Mr. Nelson.

Mr. Donovan: He said he could go to the division manager.

Mr. Nelson: That is right, division manager.

The Witness: Yes.

884 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) He can by-pass a man above him in supervision as to whom he has a complaint?

A. As far as I know, there is no set rule. I have never really had an occasion like that.

Q. You do not know of any incident like that?

A. No. I have always tried to tell these fellows that the place has to operate like an army and that he should go to his superior in every case. The department goes more smoothly. In running the department, those things do happen. In one division, they have what is called a nickname among us, a "Gestapo" to look after what the foremen do. It is the D Division. The foremen complain that the manager in that division has a real Gestapo force.

Q. They report directly to him?

A. Yes, like a lot of little stooges.

Q. What is the D Division.

A. The machine division.

Q. Who is head of that?

A. A man named Crawford.

Q. You mean to indicate by that answer at least, in the D Division that the assistant foremen may and do by-pass the foreman and general foreman and go directly to the division manager, namely Crawford?

A. Yes.

Q. Has that been a matter of some time, or is it just 885 a short incident?

A. We claim that 90 percent of our discharges are with that manager alone—of foremen—he fires them on a minute's notice and we never know what is happening over there.

Q. You mean to indicate by that that the foremen likewise would disregard the general foreman and go straight to the division manager?

A. That is the way they seem to operate over there.

Mr. Donovan: What was the answer?

Mr. Dahling: Over there is the D Division?

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) How big is Division D?

A. It is a fairly large division. I don't know just how many are in it now but it is a big division.

Q. It is one of the largest divisions in the plant?

A. Yes.

Q. And you say that you have troubles and complaints that originated in that division? Is it of the supervisory force or the maintenance and production workers?

A. In the supervisory there are also complaints there.

Q. That is where you have trouble?

A. Yes.

Mr. Donovan: Just a moment. I will ask that that last question and answer be excluded and I object to it.
886 I think it is too general. The word "trouble" has a connotation on the record which is not justifiable against the Employer. If he wants to get specific incidents and explain what he means by that—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) All right, I will.

Mr. Donovan: The witness said that there was no set rule to his knowledge. And it is confined to one department. If he is telling us about generalities, he said that there was no set rule.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He is telling us about Department D and that is not a generality.

Mr. Donovan: What does the word "trouble" mean? That has not been defined and I cannot relate it to the original question.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I can relate it to the previous answer and I do not see how else you can relate it.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Counsel has suggested that I have you illustrate what you mean by "trouble". I know you cannot take too many of them, but will you pick out one incident and illustrate what you mean by the word "trouble"?

A. Yes. We had a foreman fired there three weeks ago and another man brought out of the previous department or division where this manager was in, to take his job. He was given notice, to my understanding, at five o'clock on Friday night and he was out—

887 Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) I will ask that the answer be stricken. He says "To my understanding". We do not know—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) He is an officer—

Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) I would like to register an objection against the question.

Mr. Nelson: Do you have to do with the handling of these incidents?

The Witness: We hear the case and we investigate every case that comes up.

Mr. Donovan: On this question that I objected to concerning the word "trouble" the trouble apparently is—I am at some loss to define it myself—is that it is a complaint by this witness, a grievance, if you like, or something of that kind, that the foremen were having trouble with or complaining about now. Or rather, that this witness is from the witness stand. Apparently it is a complaint that some of the supervisors do not go to their immediate supervision or superiors but by-pass them. Their grievance, in that respect before the War Labor Board Panel was that they did not have any access to higher supervision. That is an additional reason. I want to know what he means by the word "trouble". I think he means a complaint of some kind. If it is a complaint, it is one hundred percent different from the complaint before 888 the War Labor Board Panel where they claimed that no foreman could get to higher supervision.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness was asked what he means by the word "trouble". The answer may remain.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Using the word "discipline" in its very broadest sense, Mr. Turnbull, may a foreman of the lower rank outrightly discipline a foreman of a higher rank?

A. No.

Q. May he initiate such discipline by complaint or complaining himself or giving information to somebody higher than the higher supervisor? For instance, can assistant foreman go to the superintendent or division manager?

A. No, not on that way, I wouldn't say.

Q. He must go through the regular routine?

A. There is really no set rule on it at all but it is generally practiced that way.

Q The practice is to do it—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) The practice is to do what?

The Witness: The practice is for the assistant foreman to take his complaint to the foreman.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Suppose it is a complaint about the foreman.

The Witness: He may go to the next in line, the general foreman.

889 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Now, when the assistant foreman, we will say, brings in some matter, a complaint, we will say, to his foreman and then to the general foreman, may the general foreman stop that complaint right there, or must he pass on unless it is resolved?

A. Well, he would pass it on.

Q. He would pass it on?

A. Yes.

Q. If it is not resolved?

A. Yes.

Q. However, it may be one of the kind that he can solve?

A. If it is one that he can solve—a small thing, he would solve it.

Q. If it is more than that, he must pass it on?

A. Yes, such as a change of rate.

Q. Or the hiring or firing or demotion or a layoff?

A. He would have to pass that on.

Q. Or a permanent transfer?

A. Yes.

Q. He would have to pass that on to higher supervision?

A. Yes.

Q. You are referring now to a general foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I wonder if you have given us in the examples you have just related of a day's work of each of 890 these levels of foremen, the extent of the consultations there are among them? In other words, how frequently during the day does the assistant foreman consult with the foreman and the foreman with the general foreman?

A. Well, the assistant—

Mr. Donovan: Are you asking him with reference to his own department?

Mr. Nelson: I am asking him with reference to his own knowledge and that would necessarily be somewhat limited to his department.

The Witness: The assistant foreman, of course, confers with his foreman quite frequently because as I say, every hour a record is kept of the production. It is not necessarily every hour that the foreman would come to the general foreman because the report comes in on the teletype. If production were down on his station, then the general foreman would be contacted immediately as to the reason why. If his stuff is running good he might not talk to that foreman all night or all day.

Q. In other words, the smoother it runs the less consultation and the tougher it is the more consultation, apparently?

A. Yes.

Q. Outside of that which you have mentioned in this testimony here, the foremen's meetings at which a
891 representative of the Company—

A. (Interposing) Yes.

Q. (Continuing) —talks on a stated subject selected by the Company to the foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. Do I understand again that the foremen of all four grades attend that school together?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It has been at least four times.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there any other consultation among the foremen in the plant than the consultation among them that you have just now mentioned—I mean outside of the Association?

A. Yes, sometimes the division manager might call the foremen—a meeting of the foremen in his division to discuss some new idea that is going to be put into effect, or some problem along that line.

Q. You say "sometimes." Will you give us that in a little more concrete material?

A. The last one I was at was a matter of when that maintenance strike was on—six weeks ago, I think—at that time we were all called to the division manager's office and we discussed the War Bond Drive that we had on for one thing. And then we discussed ways and 892 means of handling grievances and we also discussed the new penalties being put into effect by the Company and the revised edition and things like that that are usually discussed. Some divisions have those meetings more frequently than others.

Q. You indicated you were to one six weeks ago. Can you remember how long before that you had been to one?

A. I have only been to two that I can remember since last March.

Q. Two in some nine months?

A. Yes.

Q. Some nine or ten months?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that about an average in your experience?

Mr. Donovan: He has already testified that they vary by departments. That has all been over and covered.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Is that your average experience or is that more frequent or less frequent than they have been in your experience in the factory?

A. That is about all we have. They are not more than once every three months anyway.

Q. What would you say as to other parts of the factory, so far as your information goes?

A. Some have as many as every two weeks and some even more. I understand that it is a division manager's problem and he runs it whatever way he wants to handle it.

893 Q. Then there is nothing to stop him from having frequent conferences with supervision in his division if he wants to that you know of?

A. Yes.

Q. What about the D Division? What is your information with respect to conferences in that division?

A. The men complain that he has them in there very, very frequently.

Q. You mean supervision?

A. Yes.

Q. Supervision meetings in the division manager's office in the D Division?

A. Yes.

Q. By "very frequently" what do you mean specifically?

A. Once a week or so.

Q. A moment ago you said something about discussing a grievance with your division manager on one of these meetings—I think it was the one you said six weeks ago.

A. Yes.

Q. Were you at that time an officer of the Association?

A. Yes.

Q. Was any officer of the Association present other than yourself?

A. Yes.

Q. Who?

894 A. No, wait a minute. I am wrong about that. He is an inspector—

Q. (Interposing) Then you would be the only officer?

A. Yes.

Q. Practically all the people at the meeting with the division manager were supervisors?

A. Yes.

Q. And members of the Association?

A. Yes.

Q. Was reference to the Association made at that conference?

A. No.

Q. Did you, in fact, go into any specific grievances or was it just grievances in general that were discussed?

A. No, it was a discussion of the grievances involved in a department. The discipline to be put into effect in the department to run the department correctly.

Q. As among foremen or between foremen and their workers?

A. No. As between workers and foremen.

Q. Mr. Turnbull, prior to this election, were you present at any meetings with representatives of the Packard Company?

A. No, not prior to the election.

Q. After the election, were you present at any meetings with officers of the Packard Company?

A. Yes, some well after.

895 Q. Did you at those meetings discuss grievances or methods of handling grievances of foremen?

A. No.

Q. Have any grievances been handled, to your knowledge, as to foremen since the election with the officers of the Company? That is, in fact, have you met with the officers and discussed grievances and arrived at solutions?

Mr. Donovan: Just a minute. I think the witness just answered that there were no discussions in meetings that he said he knew of.

Mr. Nelson: Yes, in that particular one. I am asking about any particular others. In other words, has the Company actually sat in fact with officers of the Association and either discussed grievances or provided means for solving grievances since the election?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean as officers of the Association?

Mr. Nelson: No, I don't mean that, not yet. Just the point of fact as to whether the Company sat with the representatives of the Association and solved grievances.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let's say with men who were representatives of the Association.

Mr. Nelson: Yes.

The Witness: A grievance committee together with myself—

896 Mr. Donovan: Just a minute, I object to this question because I think it is irrelevant. The Trial Examiner will recall the testimony as to the Foremen's Training School. As the Trial Examiner said, undoubtedly, there were members of the Foreman's Association present at those meetings. There were, no doubt, representatives of the Foreman's Association there and they were representatives of the Foreman's Association in the sense that they were officers. I don't understand what the relevancy of this is.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

The Witness: The grievance committee, together with myself, were called back in to the plant just after the strike took place and we met with Mr. Floyd Bird in his office.

Mr. Donovan: I think the date should be fixed.

Mr. Nelson: There has only been one strike there.

Mr. Donovan: There has been more than one.

The Witness: He asked us what our demands were.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Donovan insists that you fix the time.

Mr. Donovan: I want to know whether you are talking about the strike in January of the foremen or the strike of April and May?

The Witness: The strike took place in May; May 5th, I think it is, was the first day of the strike.

897 Mr. Donovan: 1944?

Mr. Nelson: The Packard supervisor's strike in 1944, May, 1944.

The Witness: In May, 1944, at 9:30 P. M. was when we went into a meeting with Mr. Floyd Bird.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) And it was immediately following that that the strike was called off?

A. No, it was immediately following the strike that the meeting took place.

Q. Tell us what was said.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I repeat my previous objection, that all of these matters took place prior to the filing of this particular petition and that this testimony or any testimony along this line is therefore incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and has nothing to do with the issue now before the Trial Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

The Witness: We met with Mr. Floyd Bird and he asked us what he could do, if anything, to get the men back to work and he told us that he was very sorry we had gone out. Te told us that he would like to be the man to take the information forward to Mr. Christopher, the president of the Company, as to what our demands were before we would resume work. We told Mr. Bird that complete recognition was what the men demanded and at the 898 same time Mr. Walter Smith was in the office. By the way, we told him that recognition was that what the men demanded and he said, of course, he wasn't in a position to give it to us but that he would talk to Mr. Christopher and see if an arrangement could be made for a meeting with Mr. Christopher. We left the office with that understanding and we went back in the next morning and met with Mr. Christopher and Mr. Bird. I think we met on two occasions—anyhow, on this occasion we met with Mr. Christopher and told him what we wanted and we had quite a discussion with him but we didn't get any place.

Q. Now, following that, did you, as officers of the Association, or representatives of the Association, meet with officers of the Company to discuss grievances?

A. No.

Q. To your knowledge, has there been any such meeting?

A. No.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Have you much more, Mr. Nelson?

Mr. Nelson: Well, not so much, but I have some more questions, a dozen, perhaps.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Go ahead.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) You have indicated in your testimony here, Mr. Turnbull, that foremen of the grades settle the trivial grievances and the more important ones
899 they are not able to settle they simply send them on up the line. Now, in number of grievances, how does that stack up? Are the trivial much the greater in number; are the serious grievances the lesser? And to what extent?

A. The trivial ones are the greater.

Q. In number?

A. Yes.

Q. How would you classify them? Suppose you just took grievances and counted them, what percentage would be trivial, what percentage are serious enough to go on up, in your experience?

A. We don't have very many serious ones. Most of them are trivial.

Q. Well, would you be willing to hazard a guess as to the percentage on that or guess how many serious ones you have had, say in the last six months?

A. Oh, I suppose if you have—you may have as many as four or five in a week, ones that have to go further, but that's about all.

Q. Four or five a week would be the most?

A. That would be the most, if you have that many even.

Q. Do you recall the report of the Packard Motor Company dated December 7, 1944?

Mr. Donovan: What kind of a report, Mr. Nelson?

Mr. Nelson: Packard Motor Company Labor Rela-

900 tions Department.

The Witness: I think I remember that one, yes.

Mr. Nelson: I ask the Reporter to mark this as an exhibit.

(The document above referred to was marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 33.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Now, here in subdivision B, Section 2, I notice on this report the Company estimates the great majority—

Mr. Donovon: (Interposing) Just a minute. Mr. Trial Examiner, I think at this point the Employer's counsel is unable to measure the propriety of this evidence because he is totally uninformed about what counsel is showing to the witness. He started to question him about a document called a report. I think, without further elaboration on the record, we ought to be able to find out what he is talking about.

Mr. Nelson: I offer it in evidence and I offer it to counsel for examination. We got it from the Company.

Mr. Donovan: Well, right at the start, the document does not appear to be a report at all. It is headed, "Plant Committee Bulletin" and I have not examined the rest of it. Is this it, Mr. Nelson? (Indicating).

Mr. Nelson: Yes, that is it; we got that from the Company under that date.

901 Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, we object to the exhibit on the basis that it is irrelevant. We do not deny that it is an authentic report. That is, we are not objecting to it because it is not signed by the various parties and that sort of thing; merely the relevancy of it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: May I see it, please?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I assume that the Union referred to in Petitioner's Exhibit 33, for identification, is the UAW-CIO, is that correct?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, sir, it is correct, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Petitioner's Exhibit 33 is received.

(The document heretofore marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 33, was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Turnbull, the question really was what would you say was the percentage of grievances that are trivial and the percentage that are serious?

Mr. Donovan: You asked him that before and he said that practically all of them are trivial.

Mr. Nelson: All right, if you are willing it should stay that way, I am.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Is that about so, practically all of them are trivial?

A. There is a certain number, certain ones we have 902 no option with.

Q. With respect to the day's work, they are insignificant in themselves?

A. That is correct, yes.

Q. You agree, do you, Mr. Turnbull, that you yourself resolve these grievances, or some foreman under you, and you regard them all as trivial?

A. Practically all of them, yes.

Q. Is it also a fact that most of them never reach the grievance stage? By that I mean, formal papers?

Mr. Donovan: Just a minute. Is this again addressed to grievances in this man's own department?

Mr. Nelson: It includes every kind of grievances he has to do with.

Mr. Donovan: But you are talking about grievances in his one department?

Mr. Nelson: We are talking about his experience.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Examiner, counsel is evasive and we want to know whether this is a question based on plant-wide grievances or is confined to this witness' own department.

Mr. Nelson: He will tell us about that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The objection is sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I will ask you whether these ever reached the formal grievance stage, that is, these petty trivial grievances?

903 A. It is surprising how some of them are trivial and they get that far. Quite a few get that far, they are very trivial grievances in our opinion, though.

Q. Do they reach the grievance stage of putting them in writing?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. So you apparently are including many that are not written up, that come to you as general foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what do you mean by trivial or petty grievances?

A. Well, you may have a case where a man, perhaps, his stock is not running right, maybe he is complaining that a nut is too tight to go under the thread. It is just little things like that, and you have to soothe a man down. Perhaps he will grumble about the amount of parts he has to make, or some tools he has to make on the job. Perhaps he can't get a rag out of the tool crib, or they haven't any clean ones, and he will complain about that. They are only minor things and are bound to arise in any plant.

Q. Reference has been made to the time study. Does the assistant foreman, foreman or general foreman have any authority over the time study?

A. No.

Q. Can the assistant foreman, foreman or general foreman request a restudy from the time study depart-
904 ment, assuming that the time study has some impact on his work, may the foreman of any rank request a re-study?

A. I haven't had occasions like that lately. They used to have them; but not lately. There is a new setup and I think the foreman is left entirely out of that; it is between the Union and the Company.

Q. So that is a trouble between the maintenance and production workers, and representatives of the Company?

A. Yes.

Q. And the foreman does not come into it at all?

A. No, not now. I think that is stated right in the book.

Q. Let us assume, just for illustration, the situation where you request ten additional men, recommended, and five are furnished. Is there anything you can do about it?

A. No.

Q. Nothing at all?

A. No.

Q. And does that apply to every rank of supervision including assistant foremen, foremen and general foremen?

A. Yes.

Mr. Donovan: I will ask that the question and answer be excluded. I think the record should reflect this man is giving information from his own department only, unless counsel makes the question differently.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It seems to me that particu-
905 lar question specifically asked about the witness' personal experience in his own department.

Mr. Donovan: I am objecting to it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It may stay.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) About the application in other departments, then, do you or do you not have information on the subject?

A. Every job is run by the process sheets and there is a stipulated time on that job set by the time study department, and that's what the foreman has to work to. Every job is processed and time allowance is put right down on that route sheet, we call it.

Q. So that answer, with respect to the ten men asked for and the five men supplied applies throughout the plant?

A. Yes.

Mr. Donovan: Same objection, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It may stay in, in view of the witness' further testimony.

Q. (By Mr. Neison) I think there is some testimony here about transfers, Mr. Turnbull, and I think you have indicated, or have you, that there is some power of transfer within the foreman's own department or section, but he has no power outside of that, is that correct?

A. In has own department he can transfer a man from one operation to another, in his own department, 906 provided it is agreeable to the steward.

Q. If it is the same classification of work?

A. Yes.

Q. Can foremen step across the line of classification and classify a man differently by assignment, to a different class of work?

A. Only to this extent, you can put a man from a higher rated job onto a lower rated job.

Q. Can you put him to a higher one than the one he held?

A. No.

Q. Can the foreman above the rank of assistant foreman transfer a foreman?

A. No.

Q. Either up or down?

A. No.

Q. Is it a fact that the foreman appears only at the first step of the grievance procedure, or does he follow it through in the various stages?

A. He may be called as a witness.

Q. Now, if he is not called as a witness, that is, to tell what he knows about an incident, does he normally go with the grievance procedure?

A. No.

Q. He normally does not?

A. It goes to the second stage; the steward and the 907 foremen get together first.

Q. Yes, and the foreman is present at that, of course?

A. Yes, then it becomes a written grievance.

Q. Yes?

A. Now, the grievance procedure, as a rule, is to go from there with the district steward from the Union and the division personnel man for the Company. At that time, the district steward will call in the steward of the department and the personnel man will call in the foreman of the department.

Q. But the foreman comes in only if he is called?

A. Yes.

Q. By the other authority in the Company?

A. That is correct.

Q. I think this has been testified to, but I want to make sure it is in the record, according to your understanding and experience in the Company: A worker may not be discharged from the employ of the Company by a foreman, is that right, without some other authority intervening and confirming?

Mr. Donovan: Just a minute. I will object to the question again, Mr. Trial Examiner, first, because it has been covered several times, and the way the record is left is that a foreman can recommend an action, whether or not that is eventually the action taken depends upon the 908 particular case. Why go over all that four or five times? There is no question that he recommends these things and it has also been shown the reasons why in cases his recommendation is not followed through. The testimony shows that in the majority of cases those recommendations are followed. They originate the recommendations.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Donovan, I might have been inclined to sustain your objection if you had not gone on and stated some things which I think are not in evidence. He may answer the question. Will you read the question?

(Question read.)

The Witness: That is correct.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Does the foreman of any rank, assistant foreman or general foreman, have the power to change machines in their position, in relation to each other, to change partitions in the factory? In other words, make major changes in his department?

A. No.

Q. Where does that power lie?

A. The foreman would perhaps recommend that or consult the division manager or the superintendent, perhaps, and then they in turn would get the planning department and if the planning department won't move it until there is an appropriation of money to cover the cost of it, it isn't done.

Q. Does the foreman have any power to choose the 909 type, manufacture or make of a machine at all?

A. No.

Q. He takes the machine furnished by the Company?

A. Yes.

Q. And as furnished by the Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Who determines whether a worker shall be promoted to the rank of foreman of any grade?

A. I don't know that one.

Q. Well, does the foreman determine that question?

A. No.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you determine it?

The Witness: No.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Can an assistant foreman originate a query?

A. In certain circumstances, Mr. Nelson, where he is actually, you may say, doing a foreman's job. In other words, where he has a group and no foreman is over him. He is assuming the responsibility of that group or department, then he could write out a query.

Q. Is this a correct statement of your testimony: If an assistant foreman is in fact performing duties of a foreman, then he may originate a query?

A. Yes.

Q. If he is not, does he or does he not?

910 A. No, he would give it to his foreman.

Q. If it is originated by him, under the circumstances you have related it, he would sign the paper?

A. Yes.

Q. Would he in any other case sign it?

A. No.

Q. So a query would ordinarily be signed by either the foreman or the general foreman?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And only by them?

A. Yes.

Q. Or by some person—by some person of equial authority?

A. Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Where the foreman or assistant foreman signs it, do you also sign it?

The Witness: Yes, I also sign it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Where the assistant foreman signs it and there is a foreman over him, as distinguished from the general foreman, does that foreman also sign it?

The Witness: He wouldn't in that circumstance. If there is a foreman over him, the foreman would originally write it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In other words, by the time it gets to you, there is one other signature?

A. Yes, one other signature.

911 Mr. Nelson: I believe that is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I assume there is going to be some recross examination?

Mr. Dahling: Yes, Mr. Trial Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well, we will have a ten minute recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

912 Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Turnbull, you testified about a foreman who was demoted three weeks ago. Will you give us his name?

A. There was George Cikity, was one, Charles Forsythe was another and Herman Neuman was another.

Q. As I recall the testimony that I have in mind, it was that this one foreman was given notice about three weeks. You mentioned one foreman, I believe, and you stated that you discussed the matter with someone, do you recall that testimony?

A. Yes, I can give you perhaps a little more specific details. There were three of them slated for demotion. Two of them were demoted on the first of the month and the other one was a man that had been with the Company for about twenty-nine years, I understand.

Q. What was his name?

A. That is Herman Neuman.

Q. Yes.

A. And Herman Neuman had been trying to get off of the supervisory job, as a matter of fact, for quite a while, to get back into the Experimental Department where he had previously worked. When it was discussed about taking him off and putting on as a leader—

Q. Who discussed that?

913 A. The superintendent instructed me to take him off as a leader.

Q. Who did he discuss it with?

A. With me.

Q. Yes.

A. He had previously discussed it with the division manager.

Q. Did he tell you that?

A. Yes. They had a meeting of the division manager and the superintendent of the F. K. Division where it was all decided.

Q. Were you present at that meeting?

A. No.

Q. Then you do not know what occurred at that meeting?

A. No.

Q. And then you do not know what occurred at that meeting?

A. No, except from what he told me himself.

Q. He told you that this was discussed?

A. He told me that we would have to reduce the three men down. There were two that I mentioned, Cikity and Forsythe, and then there was Herman.

Q. What was the superintendent's name?

A. Mr. Al Kline.

Q. And the time was about three weeks ago?

914 A. Yes, at the beginning of December. The two that were demoted were the two latest ones put on and they had only been on a matter of two or three months as assistant foremen and they, of course, had no argument about going down. But the other man had been an assistant foreman over two years. I spoke to Al Kline and in fact we were pretty well in agreement, the two of us, that we did not like to have to put him down if we could manage to get him transferred back to the Experimental Department and just put a transfer through, and that wouldn't hurt the man's feelings as much as if we had to tell him he would be demoted. We left a note for the division manager in the daytime—

Q. You say "we," whom do you mean?

A. We discussed it, Mr. Kline and myself and Mr. Kline himself left a note for the Division Manager.

Q. Is Mr. Kline the superintendent?

A. Yes. And we sent Herman Neuman—we instructed him to come in and see Mr. Jackson.

Q. Who is Mr. Jackson?

A. He is the division manager. So he came in and saw him and he was entitled to a week's vacation. So, he was allowed that week and then when he came back there was no vacancy for him in the experimental room and he was reduced down to a leader, with the promise that as soon as there was an opening in that department he would 915 be transferred over to that department. Meanwhile he is working as a leader on his regular job where he was an assistant foreman.

Mr. Donovan: I did not hear the end of the answer.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Read the answer.

(Answer read.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): What was the reason for these demotions three weeks ago, or about the first of December?

A. We cut back in production in the number of employees in the department.

Q. I believe you said the number of employees was reduced by about 200?

A. Yes, to be exact I think we had 575 and we dropped down to 337.

Q. Now, Mr. Turnbull, you testified that if you requisitioned ten men and only five men were sent, there was nothing you could do about it?

A. No, except complain.

Q. You could go back to your superintendent and complain that you could not get the work out with those men?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you taking the position in answering the question in the manner that you did, that the Company was just arbitrarily refusing to give you more men?

A. No, I wouldn't say that, Mr. Dahling, it is sometimes difficult to get them in a department just when you 916 want them.

Q. And the Company itself has trouble these days in getting sufficient men?

A. Yes, that is the main reason.

Q. That is the main reason?

A. Yes.

Q. And, of course, as a foreman, you would do your best to keep up your war work production, even if you could not get these men?

A. Yes.

Q. You also testified that you could not transfer a foreman up or down. If you had an assistant foreman under you who was not producing and was not satisfactory, what would you do?

A. I would report that to the superintendent.

Q. What sort of report would you make? What would you tell the superintendent?

A. I would tell him honest that the man isn't any good.

Q. That you could not get out the production if you had to have a man like that?

A. Sure.

Q. And then the superintendent—what would he do?

A. He would discuss it with the division manager and perhaps come to an arrangement to move him.

Q. Mr. Turnbull, you also testified that you could 917 not discharge a worker without some other person agreeing, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is your present position?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, we will say that you found a man who was unfitted for the job and could not produce and you wanted to have him removed from your department, what would you do?

A. I would write a query giving the man twenty-four hours' notice.

Q. Then what would be your next step?

A. The next step is to give a copy to the man involved and also to the steward.

Q. Well, then, we will say that the steward agrees with you; what happens then?

A. He would sign that query that it was okay to discharge the man.

Q. What is the next step?

A. The next step would be that the man himself—usually on cases like that we refer the man back to the employment office. We give them twenty-four hours' notice to be cleared from the payroll of the department. He is referred back to the employment office and if they can place him somewhere else it is their business.

918 Q. If they cannot place him somewhere else what happens?

A. Well, he is out, unless he can make a complaint to his plant committee of the Union and they take steps over the head of the steward or district steward and perhaps get him put back in the department. That has happened.

Q. And if he does not complain what happens?

A. If the man is satisfied to go then everybody is satisfied and that is all.

Q. That would be the end of it?

A. He would be out, yes.

Q. And cleared from the rolls?

A. Yes.

Q. You testified that you could not change any partitions or machines?

A. Yes.

Q. That is, you mean that you could not call in the millwrights and tell them to switch that machine over to this or some other spot, is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. If you found a machine, however, which you did not think properly placed, what would you do about it?

A. I would discuss it with the superintendent or the division manager and they would in turn call the Planning or Process Department. The Process Department in turn would make the request for it through their proper 919 channel and I suppose once the money and everything is appropriated for the job then the job would be done.

Q. By the way, you say "money would have to be appropriated for that purpose."

A. Yes.

Q. What does the foreman have to do with the appropriation of that money of that character?

A. He doesn't have anything to do that way. As I understand it, the Process Department makes the estimate as to the cost of that change themselves and then they submit it to their people in authority and they decide whether it will be done. We have nothing to do with that at all.

Q. And if they carry out your recommendation it is done?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I believe you said that the foreman couldn't promote. Did you mean he couldn't promote an assistant foreman?

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. But I believe you have already testified that he could recommend such a promotion?

A. Well, you might tell your superintendent that there is a man doing a real good job but you do not have any say in that, as to the number of foremen or whether they will promote them, really, that is as far as you could 920 go. You could report he was doing a good job but you could not make a written report on it.

Q. And if you needed a foreman in your particular department you could recommend that one of the assistant foremen be given the job?

A. Well, we don't have anything to do with the number of foremen in there, to start with.

Q. Well, say that the number of foremen is fixed at ten and one man quits and leaves his job and you need another foreman, could you recommend that one of the assistant foremen in your department be upgraded to that job?

A. Yes, I might do that or I might discuss it with my superintendent.

Q. As a matter of fact, that is done, isn't it?

A. Well, not with me. I have had to take what I could get any time I got mine.

Q. You don't make any such recommendations?

A. Any time they put in any assistant foremen they tell me they are putting them on and I don't have anything to do with it.

Q. Would that be because you do not care to make such recommendations?

A. No, it is just a matter of everyday occurrence, you might say. It is discussed with the division man-921 ager and the superintendent, as a rule, on anything like that.

Q. Would you say that your situation is the same as all other foremen in the plant?

A. As far as I know, yes.

Q. You stated that an assistant foreman was not permitted to sign a written query and that that is signed by the foreman, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Unless this assistant foreman happens to be in charge of a certain group of men?

A. Yes.

Q. But the query, however, or the contents of the query, the purpose of the query, is originated by the assistant foreman, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. The foreman may or may not agree with him?

A. Perhaps I haven't got that quite right. You mean the assistant foreman in that little group we were talking about?

Q. Take the case where the foreman signs the query?

A. Yes.

Q. Who originates the substance of the query? Who is responsible for starting that query on its way?

A. The foreman. If there is an assistant foreman working with him, the assistant foreman will discuss the 922 situation with him and the usual procedure would be for the foreman to say "I'll write a query," and he writes the query.

Q. That is, the assistant foreman calls some matter to the attention of the foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. And in that sense the assistant foreman does originate the matter?

A. He may from that angle, yes.

Q. The foreman could decide to write a query or he might disagree with his foreman?

A. That is correct.

Q. The same way that the superintendent disagrees with you, Mr. Turnbull?

A. Yes.

Q. And if the foreman was concerned at all about the matter he would discuss it with you?

A. Yes.

Q. And you might disagree with him, also?

A. Yes.

Q. You have, haven't you, disagreed with your foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. On this matter of trivial grievances, you say in your opinion the Union appeals quite a few of these so-called trivial grievances?

923 A. Well, some that seem perhaps trivial to us, yet they are often ones we cannot take care of. The usual everyday occurrences in there they do not appeal. In fact, they just discuss that and get over them. If they have one that to us may seem trivial, they will go ahead with that and write it on a grievance form and submit it to the district steward and he takes it up with the Personnel Department. In that case it just goes over our heads in that manner.

Q. On the matter of grievances, you have no written form of grievances for the first step of the grievance machinery, have you? That is, grievances that come to the foreman and are passed upon in the first instance by the foreman—the chief steward, I mean?

A. No, there is no special form for that.

Q. That is usually done by way of conversation or word of mouth?

A. Yes.

Q. And is settled in that manner?

A. Yes.

Q. However, the appeal that you talk about comes from the action of the foreman and chief steward, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is a written form?

A. Yes.

924 Q. If such an appeal is made who passes upon the problem?

A. The district steward and the division labor relations man.

Q. When you say district steward, that is the district steward of the CIO?

A. Yes.

Q. He is the steward next in rank above the chief steward?

A. Yes.

Q. As a division steward would he be steward in charge of a number of departments?

A. Yes.

Q. And the chief steward, as you call him, would be only in one department?

A. One department, yes.

Q. When you speak of the division Labor Relations representative, you are referring to the Company's representative?

A. That is correct.

Q. And that Company Division Labor Relations man would have the same general authority over several departments as a district steward?

A. Yes.

925 Q. And if the grievances aren't taken care of satisfactorily at this meeting between the district steward and the division Labor Relations representative, what happens?

A. It then goes to the plant committee and the Industrial Relations man, the Labor Relations man in the personnel office at the front.

Q. In other words, it then goes from the district steward to the plant committee for the CIO?

A. Yes.

Q. And it goes from the District Labor Relations representative to the Labor Relations representative next superior to the division man?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you speak of the trivial grievances that are appealed. What do you have in mind when you say trivial grievances?

A. That are appealed?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't get many of them but I will give you an incident of the last one I had. Our main assembly line is on a conveyor line that travels all the while. With the Company in production on nights, there being a smaller production than there is on days, we find it perhaps a little difficult to proportion the work out. For instance, on days you run the line and you build practically six 926 jobs, roughly speaking, an hour and on nights we build, roughly, three an hour. We have been managing, by running that line about every fifteen minutes, and we stop it, and then we would get on so far and start it again and stop it again, and we manage to get our production every night by doing that. The men complained that they wanted the line cut down in speed to thirty-two jobs per night, and that in turn would involve speeding it up again for the day shift and altering that line for either shift. We explained that to the steward when he complained. We knew that the men were managing fine and getting by and to us that was merely a trivial thing to argue over. However, he saw fit to write a complaint and went over my head and took that up with the Personnel Department. That is in my opinion a trivial matter and it had to go further than I could do with it.

Q. You get quite a few complaints from the stewards that you feel are trivial?

A. Not that go past me like that, Mr. Dahling.

Q. Only a few go past you?

A. Yes.

Q. And you say you settle most of the trivial grievances between the steward and yourself?

A. I call them complaints rather than grievances, they are so small.

927 Q. That is a better word, it is a complaint and not really a grievance.

A. Yes.

Q. But the steward who complains about a number of things would complain about the work-load?

A. Yes.

Q. Aren't they usually due to the fact that they want to put as many men on the line as they can?

A. Yes.

Q. And they do complain about the speed of the line?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have to discuss all those matters with them, do you not?

A. We show them the route sheet. There is a time all set there and that is the time and that's all there is to it.

Q. Those route sheets you are talking about, what are they?

A. They are practically speaking, the layout of the job in detailed form of every job. For instance, if you take one part that has got to be built up, one assembly, it starts with the number of that assembly and tells you just all the operations to be done in completing that assembly and the time allowed for doing each operation.

Q. And that is broken down between the men who 928 are supposed to build that part up?

A. Yes, the foreman keeps that on his desk and watches the job as it is being done in rotation. The men do not see that unless a man complains and takes it to the steward. Then you take the steward and let him see the time in the book and you say, "There is the time that is allowed on the job." You explain to him how many men you have and you let him add up the time.

Q. And that comes to you from some other department?

A. That comes through from the processing department.

Q. How is the time of those jobs determined?

A. Generally at the start of a program the Process Department will estimate the time on the job and at a later date when the job is being run fairly successfully they come and time the job.

Q. They make what they call a time study?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is made—we will take your department, the time study would remain in your department for a series of time studies?

A. Yes.

Q. And they would come in and determine in that time study the time it would take for a man to do a certain operation?

A. Yes.

929 Q. And they have a regular department in the Company that is in charge of that?

A. Yes.

Q. In making the time study do they select one of your operators?

A. They generally try out the jobs. I think under the new set-up, there is a new time study set-up which has just lately gone into effect, and under that set-up there is an agreement with the Union that they will try it on so many operations, two or three times at least, and not just on one operation or one operator or one reading of their watches.

Q. Well, who selects the men or man who is going to put through the operation that is being timed?

A. Oh, they select whatever men they want.

Q. You say "they select"?

A. The time study man.

Q. Does the steward have anything to do about that?

A. Nothing, no, not at the start.

Q. Does the time study man just come in and say, "We will pick you for this test"?

A. Yes, he will walk down and tell us he is going to time study a job and generally they tell the steward they are going to time study a job. At the very start of a job like that, I don't know, it is necessary to go to the 930 steward, but they go to re-time study them—they have the steward to re-time study them, I know that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you know whether they do it at random?

The Witness: Yes, just at random. In a case like that, as a rule, they would take two or three jobs and time them.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): And the result of this time study is the time which a particular operation should normally take?

A. Yes.

Q. All of your processing is, then, based upon those time studies?

A. Yes.

Q. They are necessary, are they not?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. In other words, you would have to know the time that any process would take in order to be able to run the assembly line at all, would you not?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And they serve a most useful purpose?

A. Yes.

Q. We will say that a time study was made and you felt that the men were being pushed too fast, that they could not keep up with the work or that they could not get 931 the work done in the time allotted to them, what do you do?

A. The steward would do it for you.

Q. You mean, he would get in on the job before you had a chance to?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. What would the steward do?

A. He would ask that a new time study be made. Under the new set-up, the Union has a time study man trained purposely for that job, and they would call that time study man from the Union to time the job for them and after that is done the Union time study and the Company time study men get together and come to an agreement on the time of the job.

Q. Now, getting back for a moment to these trivial grievances, do you know why they are trivial, why the Union insists upon an appeal if they are trivial?

A. Well, it just depends to a certain extent on the steward in the department. Some stewards are better than others.

Q. The stewards, of course, are elected, are they not?

A. Yes.

Q. And I presume that a steward is then under pressure to satisfy the whims and caprice of the workers who elected him?

A. Yes.

932 Q. And he has to do that in order to be re-elected?

A. Yes.

Q. And he wants to be re-elected?

A. Yes.

Q. As a matter of fact, they do no work then, do they?

A. No.

Q. The more grievances they have, the less they would have to work, is that true?

A. That is correct.

Q. Because they are permitted time out to discuss grievances with you and possibly also are called in on appeal?

A. Yes.

Q. What, in your opinion, was wrong with the demand of the Union that this speed of the line be slowed down rather than stopped and started again?

A. Well, we see no need for it, for the very reason it would be an added expense not necessary. If the job can be done as it is done, we feel they have ample time to do the job and we see no reason at all why we have to go to the expense of changing that line over.

Q. If you had to slow down the line, would it be possible that the day shift might take the position that they should have the line slowed down, as far as they were concerned?

933 A. No, because they have more men and the production schedule is bigger.

Q. But the slowing down of the line would be more costly to the Company than starting it and stopping it, as was your practice?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Turnbull, Mr. Nelson questioned you with respect to your duties and responsibilities as a general foreman. In answer to your questions, did you include all the duties you might be called upon to perform during any one particular day?

A. Well, they do vary a little, I suppose, from day to day. They are never exactly the same.

Q. When you testified as to the duties of foremen in answer to Mr. Nelson's question, did you include all the duties a foreman has to perform?

A. Practically all I can think of, of any consequence.

Q. Now, Mr. Turnbull, I believe you testified that one of your duties and responsibilities was to plan the work according to the schedule, is that true?

A. Well, yes, you don't plan the schedule, of course.

Q. No, but you have to plan the layout and the use of your men to perform the work?

A. Yes, sir.

934 Q. How about the men below you? Do they have to do the same thing, in the orbit of their responsibility?

A. Yes.

Q. It is your duty to see that production is gotten out on schedule, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. It would be the duty of the foreman, as far as his particular part of the department is concerned, to do the same thing?

A. Yes.

Q. But you are ultimately responsible for that, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. It is also your duty as general foreman to see that the operations and processes are performed according to the routing sheets you talked about?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the duty of the foreman in that connection?

A. It is the same thing. He is responsible for his group of men.

Q. What is the duty of the assistant foreman in that connection?

A. Practically the same thing.

Q. Furthermore, it is your duty to see that the proper number of persons are placed on the job, is it not?

A. Yes.

935 Q. When I say "your duty," it is your duty as general foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. What does the foreman have to do about that?

A. If he hasn't gotten what he needs for the job, the number of men, and so forth, he will report it immediately.

Q. It is his duty to report it and endeavor to secure enough men for his particular endeavor of the job?

A. Yes.

Q. And that applies to all foremen, does it not?

A. Yes.

Q. It also applies to assistant foremen within the scope of their job?

A. Yes.

Q. I believe you testified it is your duty to see that material is available at all times?

A. Yes. Of course, the stock division is responsible and they are responsible alone for the material coming in, but it is still my responsibility to know that it is available, or I report it.

Q. What does the foreman do with respect to material or possible shortages of materials?

A. He will report that to the general foreman or he may himself go right to the foreman of the stock division and complain there. In other words, he will watch 936 the flow of his material as well as he can.

Q. What does the assistant foreman do?

A. He would generally report it to his foreman.

Q. After the material has been completely processed, it is supposed to be moved out of the department, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. If it is not moved out, what do you do?

A. Oh, it's got to move out, because it's a moving line and another department is waiting on those engines for inspection.

Q. That is true as far as the assembly line is concerned, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. The assembly line moves right along?

A. Yes.

Q. Other departments, however, would be working on different parts which would not be on the assembly line, is that not correct?

A. Yes.

Q. As to those parts, what would the duty of the general foreman be if they were not removed when completed?

A. He would report back to the stock division. The stock division controls that.

Q. I believe it is also your duty and responsibility to see that the work that is done is up to standard 937 specifications?

A. Yes, we have inspection and the inspection takes care of that, you see.

Q. You do the work up to specifications, because you have inspection?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, if you had no inspection, you would not care whether it was done up to specifications or not?

A. Well, you can't build them unless you build them to specifications.

Q. In other words, it is one of your responsibilities to see they are built that way?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. How about your foreman with respect to quality, what does he have to do about seeing that the quality is proper?

A. Well, it's the same thing, he would have to maintain quality, because the Inspection Department would have to accept the parts.

Q. That same responsibility is placed upon the assistant foreman within his sphere of supervision, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you determine that the process you were using or which you had been told to use in your department was not maintaining proper quality, what would you do?

A. The Inspection Department, of course, would be 938 the first one to notice that and they would reject the parts. Now, if they were just a few, if there were just a few parts that would be sent back through the Salvage Department to that department where they were made. If it was a bad complaint, a big number of parts were coming that way, the Inspection Department would check on it and quite likely a special assignment man would be called in on the job to trace it back to where it originates.

Q. If you determined the cause was in your department, what would you do about it?

A. It is up to the foreman to get it rectified. If a man is making scrap or damaging a part, then it is up to the foreman or even the assistant foreman may do it. He would check and see what's happening on the job, see if a man has been instructed correctly to do the job, whether the tools are right on the job or whether the material was bad when it came to him in the first place.

Q. In that connection, I presume it would be his responsibility if the workman were not properly trained to give him instruction?

A. Yes.

Q. That instruction would be in connection with the operation of the machine, if it was a machine that needed it, or if it was on the assembly line the method of carrying through the particular part of the work?

939 A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Dahling, I believe we are having much too much duplication here.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I am very sorry about that, too, but after this witness so minimized the things he did on redirect examination, I can see no other way out of it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I know, but the fact that he testifies one thing on redirect examination does not mean that I have to disregard what he said on the original cross.

Mr. Dahling: No, Mr. Trial Examiner, but, of course, the effect is there, and it would be pointed out that on such and such a date he said so and so were his duties. I know of no other way to clear the record on that point, except as I am proceeding now. I am asking this witness directly if in reply to questions of Mr. Nelson he stated what his duties were, and he has said yes. Now, of course, he did not, and in order to show he did not and that he has additional responsibilities and duties, I am at a loss to know how I can put them in without—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I commend to you the reading of what I said the other day which was, among other things, that the Board can add two and two together pretty well and generally come out with the correct answers.

940 Mr. Dahling: When are you planning on luncheon, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: At the conclusion of your examination.

Mr. Dahling: I am sorry, sir, I am afraid we will all be late.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Then we will all be late; we were late this morning.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Is it part of your duty and your responsibility to maintain proper working conditions in your department?

Mr. Nelson: I think that is too broad. That would include ventilation, housing, location of machines, safety of machines, and so forth.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think it is, too.

Mr. Dahling: I will withdraw the question.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Is it your duty and responsibility to see that the aisles are not cluttered up with material?

A. The stock division would have to look after that.

Mr. Nelson: That would be the only place, maybe, that they could put them.

Mr. Dahling: I am not asking you, Mr. Nelson, to answer for him.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): We will say the aisles in your department are cluttered up with material; what 941 would you do about it?

A. You would get into trouble from the safety end of it. The guards would write up a violation, which they do, and send that in and you have to give an explanation and dispose of the case by telling them what has been done.

Q. What would you do, then, to avoid being written up?

A. I would hand it over to the foreman of the stock division. They send them to me and I send them to him. That's his job.

Q. But you contact him if those aisles are not kept clear?

A. I do, but that's his own responsibility. I have seen the time when the aisles have been so congested that the Army Inspection would kick about it. But the main responsibility for it is the stock division, for not having the stock in the right place.

Q. Whose responsibility is it in your department for seeing that the proper safety measures are carried out?

A. Well, they have safety inspectors come around, the safety engineer. There's one man, Mr. Taylor, in charge of all safety for the whole place.

Q. If you saw a worker or a foreman following an unsafe process, in your opinion, what would you do?

A. I would stop.

Q. And your foreman would do the same thing?

942 A. Oh, yes.

Q. And your assistant foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. You are familiar with the safety procedures that have been approved for the Packard Company?

A. Yes, everybody is, the workers as well.

Q. Is it your responsibility to see that the tools and fixtures are properly maintained?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am going to exclude that, because it has already been covered.

One of the purposes of direct examination, cross-examination, redirect examination and recross-examination is to narrow the scope of the questions down. The fact that a person answers differently on redirect examination does not mean you can go over the same ground to the same extent you did before. There must be a narrowing down process; otherwise, everybody would insist upon having the last word and we would be here forever.

Mr. Dahling: Is the ruling of the Examiner that I am not to continue along this line of testimony?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: No, I am merely indicating that you are going over this ground to the same extent you did before.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Turnbull, in your redirect examination by Mr. Nelson, you listed your duties 943 and responsibilities as a general foreman. Did you, in your answer to the questions given to you by Mr. Nelson, include all of your duties and responsibilities?

A. As far as I know, I did.

Q. And that was a complete list of all the duties and responsibilities that you have a general foreman; that is, the statements you made in answer to Mr. Nelson's questions?

A. Except in little trivial matters, Mr. Dahling, such as a man coming to get a pass to go out to lunch. I could give you the synopsis of my night's work if that would satisfy you better.

Q. Well, let us get down to this question of trivial matters. The matter of maintaining quality, is that trivial?

A. I believe that question was answered before.

Q. Did you answer that question in connection with Mr. Nelson's examination?

A. Well, I don't know for sure.

Q. If I say there was no answer to that question, to my recollection, would you say that was right?

A. If you say so. I didn't read the transcript over and I don't remember every question asked me.

Q. But you still take the position that you did outline all your duties and responsibilities in response to Mr. Nelson's questions?

944 A. The main ones, yes.

Mr. Dahling: That being the case, Mr. Trial Examiner, I do not see that there is anything for me to do but continue in the way I have been examining.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, and he also said it varies from day to day to some extent.

Mr. Dahling: That is true, but what we are interested in doing is getting a competent picture of what is done from day to day.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I know, but you are not going to get it by going over the same questions.

Mr. Dahling: There has been a steady effort on the part of the witnesses to minimize the responsibilities and duties for the purpose of this particular case, and I think it is very proper cross-examination to show that this witness in response to questions, has been doing that and that he has not testified in full as to his exact duties and responsibilities.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I know, but cross-examination—rather, recross-examination—should be recross-examination and not simply cross.

Mr. Dahling: Well, of course, that brings us to this point, if you care to make a ruling?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: There is nothing to rule on. I am simply making an observation, apparently without effect.

945

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I think it is now practically one o'clock. I am perfectly willing to discuss with my associate here this matter during the recess hour. I do not know what the result will be; it may be that we will not take up as much time. But if you desire us to continue along, I am perfectly willing to continue.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, obviously, the main purpose in this, as in all hearings, is to get all the relevant facts. I cannot disregard them entirely, nor did I mean by anything I may have said, to indicate that the fault, if that it be, is on the Company's part. I think Mr. Nelson had tended to confuse direct examination with redirect examination. So that without attempting to assess the blame as between one side or the other, I think both sides ought to bear in mind some of the things I said earlier. I suggest we leave a little room for matters of which we can take official notice, a little room in which the Board can apply the facts themselves and a little room for such native intelligence, which we are supposed at least to possess.

With that observation, we will come back at 2:15.

(At 1 o'clock P. M., a recess was taken until the hour of 2:15 P. M.)

946

After Recess.

(Whereupon, pursuant to recess, the hearing was resumed at 2:15 P. M.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are we ready to proceed, gentlemen?

Mr. Dahling: May I proceed?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

ROBERT F. TURNBULL

resumed the witness stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Recross-Examination (Continued).

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Turnbull, in addition to the duties and responsibilities that you testified you had, on Mr. Nelson's redirect examination, do you also have all of the duties and responsibilities that you testified to on my direct examination?

A. Yes, as I know, yes.

Q. Now, you stated that the stewards made certain trivial complaints, I think you called them, and you did not characterize as a trivial matter the giving of passes, did you?

A. Yes.

Q. And you consider that trivial? That giving of a pass for a man to get out of your department?

A. A pass to go home, yes; it is a usual occurrence
947 right through any day. You get maybe half a dozen in a day.

Q. And that is a pass to go home?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you decide whether a man should or should not go home?

A. Well, if you didn't, then the steward would come to you just the same, and perhaps the man would go out to lunch at lunch time and not come back after lunch, so you may as well let him go and have it done with.

Q. And the steward would come and what would he do?

A. He would complain to you. The man would complain to the steward that you refused to give him a pass and the steward would come to you and you would give him the reason for it and you would have an argument on your hands with the steward. Then when it came to lunch time the man would go anyway.

Q. You would have an argument on your hands with the steward and to get rid of the argument you just give the pass, is that it?

A. Yes.

Q. Whether you thought the pass should be given or not?

A. Yes, you might as well.

Q. How about a pass to go from one part of the plant to another part of the plant?

948 A. Well, an inter-divisional pass—there are only certain people that can give them. For instance, I can give them but up to just lately I did not have that privilege myself. When a man goes from one division to another, if it is any sort of a restricted area then that man's signature—whoever signs the pass—his signature must be identified. Most of those signatures are from the superintendent when they go to different divisions.

Q. You say you now have the authority to do that?

A. Yes, because I had occasion to send a man over to "D" Division and he went over there and they turned him back. He went over there two or three times and they turned him back. I went and reported that to the superintendent, that this man I was sending over for certain items couldn't get them and I couldn't get the man out of the department, so he said that he would have my name put on the list, and he had my name put on the list so I can do that.

Q. So giving these passes is at least considered by the Company as being a fairly important matter?

A. Sending a man into a different division, yes. A restricted area pass, I can't give that now. The D. S. M. Department, I can't even walk in there.

Q. That is because of army and navy rules, is it not?

A. Regulations, yes.

949 Q. These passes you can give, you have to decide, do you not, as to whether they should be given?

A. Oh, yes, if something is needed in a hurry and we have to send a man, yes.

Q. Mr. Turnbull, were you not recently issued a book or pamphlet on time studies?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you studied that document?

A. It's about three or four months ago now. It doesn't bother us to any extent because the foreman doesn't come in on that; that's between the Company and the Union men.

Q. Did you ever have a time study in your particular department?

A. No, it isn't being done on the night shift, to my knowledge.

Q. You are on the night shift?

A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been on the night shift?

A. Since the 18th of March, 1944.

Q. Has there been a time study in your department?

A. Not on nights.

Q. Has there been on days?

A. It's just going that process now.

Q. Prior to that time, in 1944, did you ever have any time studies during that time?

250 A. Yes, a time study man came around and put an estimated time study on the jobs.

Q. You had to have your department in order, did you not, and prepare for that time study job?

A. No, he comes whenever he is ready.

Q. And he selects the man?

A. Yes.

Q. You have nothing to do with that at all?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Is that the instruction in your time book?

A. Of course, at that time there was no time study book out. This time study book has just come out since then.

Q. Is that matter covered in your present time study book?

A. Yes.

Q. What are you supposed to do as set forth in this time study book?

A. We don't have anything to do with that at all.

Q. Now, you have nothing to do even with the setting, the conditions under which the time study is made?

A. No, that's their job and they attend to it themselves.

Q. When you say "they attend to it" who do you mean?

A. The time study men.

Q. And the time study men are experienced men?

951 A. To the best of my knowledge they are; they are appointed by the Company.

Q. What is the purpose of this time study?

A. Well, I would imagine it is to operate the department or the factory just as near as you can, as cheap as they can and to know what an article is going to cost them to make.

Q. Does it have anything to do with the efficiency of the operation?

A. The efficiency of the department or the efficiency of an operation is based upon that time study.

Q. As a matter of fact, is it not a part of the time study to do away with lost motion?

A. Absolutely, that's their job.

Q. Where a man can do a job using two movements of his hand rather than four, they instruct him in the use of the two-hand movement?

A. Yes.

Q. And the time study does that?

A. He does that and sets up the route sheet accordingly.

Q. As a matter of fact, the purpose also is to make the work easier for the men, is it not, so it is less fatiguing?

A. Yes.

Q. And they are supposed to instruct them how to do the work properly, with the least effort?

952 A. Well, they don't do much instructing to the men. They just put that down in the route sheet, as to what the operation should be, and the foremen have to accept that.

Q. Of course, if they time a job and you find that the worker does not complain, of course, there is no reason for you to complain?

A. No.

Q. If the worker complains, what happens?

A. He would complain to his steward.

Q. One of the purposes is so that there should be no lost motion, is that it?

A. Yes.

Q. Every job has a proper and improper way of accomplishment, is that correct?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And the purpose of the Company is to pick out the proper way to do the job?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I suppose, more accurately one should say there is one accurate way and perhaps innumerable improper ways.

Mr. Dahling: I will accept your statement, Mr. Examiner. I think the Examiner suggested something about sweeping north or south here some time in the hearing previously. It might be proper or it might be improper 953 to sweep north and south, isn't that true?

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): There may be a proper way of sweeping?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, if the floor was grooved you would sweep down the groove instead of across it?

A. Yes.

Q. And there is a proper way of handling the broom in sweeping to prevent dust?

A. Yes.

Q. The Company goes into all these matters and reduces the operations to the simplest and most efficient form, does it not?

A. On the manufacturing end but not on the sweeping end. I don't think they have route sheets and time studies on that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: They do not indicate so many sweeping motions per minute.

The Witness: Not with our help they couldn't.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): As a boy I worked in a store and I was instructed that when I used a broom that I should not throw it up in the air like this (indicating) and throw up a lot of dust, that would be right, wouldn't it?

A. Yes.

954 Q. So that there would be a proper way to use a broom?

A. Maybe so.

Q. If you were sweeping out a pit that was in a road it would be better to sweep lengthwise than across, wouldn't it?

A. I imagine so.

Q. So there is something about proper sweeping?

A. Oh, yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: May I observe, since I originally mentioned the sweeping subject, that while I agree with everything counsel indicates, I used the example in connection with the use, proper or not, of the word "policy."

Mr. Dahling: I think there was some mention made of policy in that connection, Mr. Examiner. I was simply using this as an example of the fact that the Company in all of these operations tries to bring them about with less effort on the part of people and in a most efficient manner.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): You are a member of the UAW-CIO, I believe you so testified?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever go out on strike?

A. No.

955 Q. Has the UAW gone out on strike at Packard's since you have been there?

A. I don't remember an official strike at Packard's.

Q. But there haven been work stoppages?

A. Yes.

Q. And men walked off their jobs?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you call them "wild-cat strikes"?

A. Yes.

Q. By the way, Mr. Turnbull, we have been discussing stewards, union stewards. If the Foreman's Association of America is given collective bargaining rights, would you have stewards?

A. No, we try to at the present time have what we call representatives in each division. It would have a different setup, of course, to what a steward is. A steward in other words, has a—the CIO has a steward in every department.

We have been trying to keep one man in a division. In other words, that one man would look after any little thing that was needed in that division.

Q. Then you would have a division steward and not a chief steward, such as in the UAW?

A. We have less people and we wouldn't need all that.

Q. You feel you would not need a chief steward?

956 A. No.

Q. But this division steward would be the counterpart of the steward you would have. He would be the counterpart of the present division steward in the CIO?

A. We call him a representative and his duties would not be anything like what a steward has.

Q. What would be his duties?

A. I don't expect that we will get a lot of grievances amongst foremen as you do amongst a bunch of men in a shop, and we don't call them grievances like that—

Q. What would be his duties?

A. To take care of any little incident that might come up and contact the manager or division manager in that division if it were found necessary to represent the member involved.

Q. That is about what the division steward of the CIO does at the present time, isn't it?

A. That is part of what he does, yes.

Q. Do you wear your Union emblem in the shop?

A. Yes.

Q. And do the other foremen, also?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you also in your athletic events have special emblems on your costumes, your athletic costumes and shirts?

957 A. Yes, we have a team and a bowling league and we have a shirt with F. A. A. badge right across the back.

Q. And you also wear those shirts at the plant at times?

A. I don't know, come to think of it, I have seen one or two of them, but I don't wear one myself.

Mr. Dahling: That is all, Mr. Examiner.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): Mr. Turnbull, when a special assignment man is needed in a department who calls him?

A. Well, the foreman on the line would call him if he had a difficulty—it wouldn't matter which of us called him. In other words, if we ran into a difficult situation a special assignment man would be around there and either the foreman or the general foreman would contact him or an inspection man might contact him.

Q. Someone from inspection might call him?

A. They would just as we would.

Q. Were special assignment men called from a central headquarters where they were located?

A. We have one for our department, a special.

Q. Where is he located in your department?

A. Well, he is just on the floor, that is all, just like anybody else on the floor. If he needs to write these notes he comes in—as a matter of fact, the one we have types his own—if he couldn't he would get the 958 clerk to type the notes for him or to leave any reports.

Q. Then he does not have an office?

A. No, he doesn't have an office, he works under another special assignment man in "K" Division, who I think has an office over there where two or three work out of. Then again another might work out of the division manager's office. We have two that go around the plant and get the parts if they are not coming right, and they work out of the night work manager's department.

Q. Who is the immediate superior or supervisor of the special assignment men or are there immediate supervision?

A. They come under the division manager, in our division.

Q. In your division?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know if that is true in other sections of the plant, as well?

A. Yes, they work out of the division manager's office, practically speaking.

Q. Does that mean they are under the instructions and subject to the supervision of the district manager?

A. Oh, yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Did you say district manager?

Mr. Karasick: I meant the division manager.

959 Q. (By Mr. Karasick): Now, let me see if I understand clearly what this special assignment is. When he goes into a department to rectify any trouble that has occurred there, to trace it down, is he in charge of that department for that specific purpose?

A. No, he doesn't take charge of the department.

Q. I mean, is he in charge of the department for the purpose of getting this trouble rectified? That is, whatever instructions he gives are to be followed by anyone in that department?

A. Well, yes, I would say it in that way.

Q. Is that correct?

A. If he came and looked at a job and found something wrong, he might say, "Give me a couple of those parts and I will take them to get inspection on them," and he would walk away and we would probably work along with the job and maybe leave out some of those to one side.

Q. If he finds any trouble, would he tell you as general foreman or the assistant foreman or the employees that you should operate this way until we get this trouble fixed?

A. Yes.

Q. And you are of necessity supposed to follow those instructions he gives you, to that extent, is that correct?

960 A. Yes, you would do that.

Q. Does he make any recommendations with respect to the general production or maintenance employees?

A. No.

Q. That is, does he initiate queries in the way a general foreman or assistant foreman would?

A. No, if a certain part is really wrong he may issue a query about that part and send it through the inspection or through the division manager. In other words, a report on what he had found out.

Q. Is there a special assignment man to each department or does the special assignment have a number of departments, or does the practice vary, according to the size and complexity of the particular operations?

A. Most of them work from the division manager's office and they go to any department under that division manager.

Q. You spoke of one special assignment man who formerly had worked at the Rolls Royce plant who acted as substitute for one of the superintendents?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that true only of this particular special assignment man or—strike it. Is that true only with respect to the particular special assignment you referred to or have other special assignment men, on occasions, substi-

961 tuted for superintendents in the plant?

A. That's the only one I know of. The other one, Tom Pawlowski, he has now gone back to take charge of a department, to be a foreman of the Shipping Department, I believe.

Q. To be a foreman?

A. Yes, to be a foreman.

Q. You testified, I believe, that if the aisles were cluttered up in the department, the guards would write a violation slip?

A. Yes.

Q. Against whom would that violation slip be written?

A. They send them there—

Q. (Interposing): Well, who would be charged with the violation?

A. They send it in to the manager of the department, and the only ones I have seen have been on my desk when I come in at night. They come through the plant mailing system in an envelope and I just take them and give them to the stock foreman; it is his job.

Q. What is it a violation of?

A. Plant rules, the aisles are supposed to be cleared at all times.

Q. When a man walks in and asks for a pass for time off, is the amount of time he gets covered in the 962 amount of time he is allotted during the year that he is entitled to?

A. No, we can allow them fourteen days and then they are allowed three days without a pass of any sort. Over three days absent time, automatically their card is pulled, so that three days plus fourteen would make seventeen, but they can come in the next month and get seventeen more.

Q. I understand, but if a man asks for, say, a half a day off, is that time counted as part of the time off he is to have, that is, of the total time?

A. No.

Q. When you clear an employee from the rolls, or recommend that that be done, do you mean that you clear him from the rolls of your particular department or clear him from the payrolls of the entire Company, or recommend that action?

A. That's done through the employment office. We do not have anything to do with that. We can't take him off our payroll until that's been accepted by the time office and they forward it on to the front office.

Q. Can you recommend that an employee be discharged outright, not from your department alone but from the whole Company?

A. Well, yes, we could do that.

963 Q. And the ultimate action depends, as you have explained, upon the employment department?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Have you ever done it?

The Witness: I don't remember doing it. It would be much harder for us to do. To get the thing over with we clear or recommend that they be cleared from our department rolls, but if we would complain about them and ask for a complete discharge, we would have to fight harder to get rid of the man, you see.

Q. Are there any women who are employed in the four classifications that are set forth in the petition?

A. There are a few women. I do not know just how many, but they are assistant forewomen.

Q. Are there any women, foremen, or foreladies?

A. No, not that I know of.

Q. General foreladies?

A. No.

Q. Special assignment women?

A. No.

Q. The only ones you know of are assistant forewoman?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know how many there are?

A. Roughly guessing, I would say about six, and some of those have just been put on a week or two ago.

964 Q. In your discussion you broke up grievances into two classifications which you called trivial on the one hand, and serious on the other?

A. Yes.

Q. It is my understanding of the trivial grievances that practically all of them are settled at the first stage of the grievance procedure, that is, with you as a general foreman?

A. Ninety-nine per cent are.

Q. Of the serious grievances, what percentage of them do you successfully handle in the first stage?

A. Very few; in fact, hardly any of them at all; you can't.

Q. Do you mean those are invariably appealed and they go through the regular form of grievance procedure and are, therefore, out of your hands?

A. Yes.

Mr. Karasick: I have no further questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Any further redirect examination?

Mr. Nelson: I believe not.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Any further recross-examination?

Mr. Dahling: I think I have just a couple of questions.

965 Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Turnbull, we will say you had a worker who was habitually absent, a habitual absentee, what would you do about that?

A. We would write that up as a query, check his time record, or get the girl to do it, for a matter of two or three months, and then we would write a query giving that man twenty-four hours' notice.

Q. Then I believe you testified you would give the man a copy of the query?

A. Yes.

Q. And give the steward a copy of the query?

A. Yes.

Q. Then, we will say the steward agrees to the giving of the twenty-four hours' notice.

A. As a rule he won't.

Q. Well, we will say he does.

A. You don't get him to do it, though.

Q. It never has happened?

A. Never, unless a man hasn't paid his dues and they want to get rid of him.

Q. But you have never had a case of a worker, male or female, where the steward agreed to a twenty-four hours' notice?

A. Oh, I might have had one, I couldn't remember. You get so many absentees. The usual procedure is to write that once and the Personnel Department calls them
966 in and warns them and the steward also warns them and the second time it happens we take that through the same procedure and the Personnel Department and the steward will agree.

Q. You say the Personnel Department and the steward will agree?

A. Yes.

Q. But you start the query in the first place, do you not?

A. Yes.

Q. All right, you issue this query in which you give this person twenty-four hours' notice; what do you do with the copies of the query?

A. We send one copy to the person involved, one to the steward, one to the general foreman of the department now, and one to the Labor Relations man in your division, or the division personnel man, and one to the personnel man of the division, five copies.

967 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) All right, now then, the steward agrees with you that the person should be cleared from the roll and actually signs the query. What happens after that?

A. If the man is satisfied and wants to take that, he is all done, he is out.

Q. He is automatically cleared from the rolls?

A. Yes, but if he wants to appeal, he can still come back to his district steward, and even if the district steward agrees, he can go to the committee and if they agree, he can still go into personnel and perhaps get put back to work.

Q. What is the usual situation there?

A. Well, practically any of the men I got rid of in one place usually turned up someplace else in the plant.

Q. But they were cleared from your rolls?

A. Yes, cleared from our rolls and put to work in some other part.

Q. If the steward agrees to it, unless the man appeals to the division steward or the plant committees—both of those, by the way, are instruments of the CIO Union, are they not?

A. Yes.

Q. And then it goes through automatically?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: That is all.

968 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of this witness?

Mr. Nelson: No further questions.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee) Mr. Turnbull, I suppose it is fair to say, isn't it, that if you did not take care of the little grievances, pretty soon you would have big ones?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And hence to a degree, when you do take care of the little ones, you therefore, to a degree, take care of possible big ones?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. You testified, I think, that if an assistant foreman was not satisfactory to you, you would tell the superintendent that the assistant was no good?

A. Yes.

Q. Suppose the Foreman's Association was recognized by the Company and this particular assistant foreman was a member and you are a member, would you still tell the superintendent the same thing?

A. The first procedure we would do under that, Mr. Examiner, and have done, by the way, if we found a man that is laying down on his job or losing time or not carrying out the job correctly, we call the Executive 969 Board together and call that man out.

Q. You are talking about your Union now?

A. Yes, and he is warned. Often it happens that the man we have designated as representative will call that man to one side and line him up and tell him that if he doesn't do the job that we have no time for him and we cannot stand for a man being irresponsible and we do not intend to respect any member in a position like that at all. If a man is not doing his job correctly, then he is not entitled to be on supervision and we will not back that man up. That is understood by every member of our Association and we have done that throughout and will continue to do it as long as we ever can.

Q. You have used the phrase "If a man is irresponsible." Let me turn that around and ask you to whom he is irresponsible? To whom is he supposed to be responsible?

A. To his Employer, to do his job properly, and if he doesn't, we don't want him at all.

Q. Let me ask you my original question. If this particular assistant foreman was not satisfactory to you, would you or would you not tell your superintendent he was no good even if he was a member of your Union?

A. Absolutely I would tell him that he was no good.

Q. Do you feel that the fact that he is a member of the Union would affect your judgment of the matter or 970 the issue or your action in the matter?

A. No, if a man is no good, he is no good and we do not want him any more than anybody else does. It would hurt us as an Association if we backed him up.

Q. However, you might lose a member?

A. We are better off without that sort of member.

Mr. Nelson: You might get a good man in his place.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee) At the opening of this morning's session you were asked several questions with reference to seniority as applicable to a particular situation, seniority being used in that connection apparently as meaning length of service. Would discharges be based on length of service, that is to say, all kinds of discharges?

A. You mean for infringement of the rules or something like that?

Q. Yes, would that be based on length of service?

A. No, if he is discharged for an infringement of some rule, seniority would not make any difference.

Q. Then, what kind of discharges do you mean when you say discharges would be dependent upon seniority or length of service?

A. Discharges for cutbacks and drops in production and layoffs.

Q. Assistant foremen are generally recruited from the rank and file?

971 A. Yes.

Q. And foremen and general foremen also are recruited from the rank and file?

A. Yes.

Q. I suppose you mean by that that the foremen are recruited from assistant foremen?

A. Yes, they work their way up gradually.

Q. So that it starts at the rank and file in the beginning?

A. Yes, I know I did, that way.

Q. If the Foreman's Association of America was recognized and you had these representatives that you spoke about, have you any idea about how many it would be necessary to have in the plant, approximately?

A. There are seven divisions and we would have one on either division on either shift and that is fourteen all told, seven representatives on the night and seven on the day shift and that would give us fourteen.

Q. There are two shifts, are there?

A. Yes.

Q. To the extent that a special assignment man comes into your department and works on a particular job which he has been called in on, to what extent does he supervise the men in your department? Does he supervise so much of your department as is necessary to carry out that 972 job for that time?

A. He would stand and watch the job proceed until he saw it was working correctly.

Q. Suppose he needed two or three of your rank and file men to help him in connection with what he was doing. What would he do?

A. It would be a matter of cooperation with the foreman on the job. He would be with him and explain what the job was and the foreman would tell him to work. I don't think he might ask him himself as an order, he might ask them but not give them an order to work, in other words.

Q. Have you recommended promotions for assistant foremen?

A. No.

Q. Or demotions?

A. No.

Q. Why not?

A. Well, I haven't had occasion to. It is only just the last cutback that they took these three off in the department at all. That was the only time I ever had any demotions.

Q. Well, do you know whether or not general foremen or foremen recommend promotions or demotions for assistant foremen?

A. I am not definitely sure on it. I have an idea that some of them do. I am not definitely sure of a 973 definite case.

Q. How is that usually handled, if you know?

A. The superintendent or division manager have the choice of who is put on. If they put two on in my department I was not consulted who they were. In fact, they put three on and I was told that they are making these fellows up to assistant foremen and I was told by the superintendent. He and the assistant manager discussed that together.

Q. By the way, is the special assignment man's job considered a promotion from an ordinary job of foreman?

A. No, it is not considered that way at all. You may have a foreman that would be sick or something like that and his job is perhaps a little too much strain for the time being. Then, they will for the time being put him on a special assignment where it is perhaps a little less worry about the number of people he has to supervise. If they have some special place or some special job there they will phone him and tell him he is going to be detailed for this job. It is no promotion and never was considered as one.

Q. I suppose that he has less administrative work than you have?

A. Yes, much less.

Q. On the whole, a special assignment man is more 974 of a technical expert than most other general foremen or foremen?

A. Yes, if he cannot carry that job through, I have seen them let him go for that one reason. In other words, if they do not make a go as a trouble shooter, they are not liable to last very long.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of this witness?

Mr. Dahling: Yes, I have a couple of questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) If you found an assistant foreman laying down on the job and wasn't doing his job—to whom would you first report that?

A. I would go right after the man himself.

Q. After you went after the man himself, would you and this foreman, this assistant foreman—If he was a member of the Foreman's Association of America, what would you do then?

A. Mr. Dahling, the Foreman's Association of America does not enter into the picture. If a man doesn't do his job he doesn't have a job, in my opinion, any place.

Q. What did you say about taking the matter up with the committee?

A. That often would occur. It has often been brought to our attention that a man was losing time or fall-
975 ing down, it has even been called to my attention by the division manager or the superintendent who will call me and tell me about it, tell me that they were going to take the man off if he doesn't improve. Then we take after him.

Q. Suppose you discovered it and instigated the matter?

A. I wouldn't bother with any committee. If I decided he was no good he would be no good.

Q. Suppose a majority of the Union disagreed and said he was.

A. I would still fire him.

Q. Even if the majority of the Union disagreed?

A. If he was no good to me I wouldn't keep him. There is no use having a man there if he cannot do his job. It is only fair to the Company to do that. If he was no good I would fire him.

Mr. Dahling: That is all.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) When you say you would fire him, now, you mean you would make your recommendations in the regular way?

A. I would recommend up to the superintendent and the division manager that the man was not capable of his job.

Q. And you would stand by your recommendation?

A. Absolutely I would stand by it.

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That appears to be all, Mr. Turnbull. The witness is excused.

976

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Nelson: I call Mr. James Wilkins.

JAMES R. WILKINS,

a witness called by and on behalf of the Petitioner, being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Your name?

A. James R. Wilkins.

Q. Your address?

A. 5059 Kensington, Detroit.

Q. You are presently employed at the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Yes.

Q. In what capacity?

A. General foreman.

Q. When did you go to work for the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. September 8, 1909.

Q. In what line of work?

A. As a major part assembler.

Q. Had you had previous mechanical experience or training?

A. No, only as a chauffeur.

Q. How long had you acted as a chauffeur?

A. Five and one-half years.

977 Q. How long did you work as a production worker?

A. In the neighborhood of between four and five months.

Q. Then what happened?

A. I became what they call a straw boss.

Q. That was the foreman of the lowest rank?

A. That is right.

Q. In the department where you had been working or some other department?

A. No, in the department where I was working.

Q. That would be in what year?

A. That would be in 1909 and 1910.

Q. Have you been a foreman at the Packard Plant ever since that time, practically speaking?

A. No, I haven't.

Q. You have not?

A. No, there was a short period in there where I asked for a change from the major assembly I was working on, to the motor assembly and then there was about six months in that time where I was just working as an assembler again.

Mr. Donovan: Will you fix the year, Mr. Nelson?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, I was going to ask that.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) What year did that take place?

A. 1910.

Q. That was shortly after you became a foreman, then?

A. That was out of a straw boss into the motor assembly.

978 Q. Yes. You say there was about six months there that you were a production worker?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you in the motor department at that time?

A. I was.

Q. After you went into the motor department some six months afterwards, you became a straw boss?

A. The same thing happened there after six months, I became a straw boss again.

Q. How many men did you have under you?

A. About 15.

Q. How long did you remain straw boss in the motor division?

A. It was between the Fall of 1913 and 1914.

Q. What happened then?

A. I was taken from the motor repair as straw boss down to the finished car assembly and I was put in as assistant foreman.

Q. How many men did you have under you then?

A. About 60.

Q. What were you doing?

A. They were changing pistons in motors and noisy starters, rear axles, transmissions and rattles in the bodies, squeaks in bodies.

Q. You had 60 men there and you were an assistant foreman?

979 A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Was that something different from a straw boss?

The Witness: Well, it's practically the same duties.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Does one of them rank any higher than the other? That is, when you became an assistant foreman, was there any promotion there, either in rank or pay?

A. No, I worked for the same pay, I will say, pretty close to six months before I was changed to a different rate.

Q. What I am getting at is this, is a straw boss and assistant foreman just about the same thing?

A. There's not very much difference.

Q. Well, which is the higher grade even in that slight difference?

A. Assistant foreman.

Q. Did he get more money?

A. Sometimes he did and sometimes he didn't.

Q. Did he have more authority?

A. There was very little difference.

Q. Did he have more people under him?

A. I would say the job you was handling would answer that.

Q. It would be the importance of the job you were handling that determined which he was?

980 A. That's correct.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Nelson, do you claim there is some difference today?

Mr. Nelson: No, there are no straw bosses today; they are all foremen, assistant foremen, general foremen and special assignment men.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) That is correct, is it not, Mr. Wilkins?

A. That's right.

Q. In other words, the straw boss has been done away with?

A. We don't hear it any more.

Q. How long has it been?

A. Well, as I say, the latter part of 1913.

Q. You continued, then, as an assistant foreman in the motor division for how long?

A. Well, from 1910 to the latter end of 1913.

Q. Then what happened?

A. Then I was put in as a foreman. I went in as assistant foreman, I should say, after.

Q. And from assistant foreman you went to what?

A. As a foreman.

Q. In what year, if you remember?

A. I would say that was in the latter end of 1914 or 1915.

Q. Somewhere in there?

A. Yes.

981 Q. Did you get a raise in pay that reflected the additional designation?

A. Yes, I think I did.

Q. Did you continue in the motor division?

A. Well, it was the entire car, the motor, rear axles, transmission, body, everything in general, trim, paint and so on.

Q. What was it, a trouble division?

A. That's right, defects in the car.

Q. Either discovered in the factory or discovered by the customer?

A. Oh, no, on the road test.

Q. And it came into your division?

A. That's right.

Q. With the designation of trouble?

A. That's right.

Q. And that was your job?

A. That's right.

Q. I mean by that, it was your job to put the car in a saleable shape and useable shape?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you are a foreman. How many men did you have under you as a foreman?

A. Well, it run between 100 and 125.

Q. Did you have the same 60 men or so and then 982 these additional ones besides?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in what department?

A. That's what they call the repair department. I just forgot the letters they used for them at that time and then it was the assembly line that was added to my duties.

Q. From a foreman did you advance in rank?

A. Yes, in 1918, the latter part, I did.

Q. To what rank?

A. To general foreman.

Q. Under you were how many men at that time?

A. Oh, it was around 150.

Q. Did you receive a raise in pay again?

A. Yes, I think I did.

Q. How long did you continue as a general foreman?

A. Well, there was two breaks. There was one in between 1919 and 1920. I was an assistant superintendent about six months.

Q. You mean of the whole plant?

A. No, just on assembly on the complete car and motor.

Mr. Donovan: What did you say, assistant superintendent?

The Witness: That's right.

Q. When you were not acting as assistant superintendent, you were continuing in this trouble division over some 150 men, approximately?

983 A. Yes.

Q. You said there were two breaks. What is the second break?

A. In 1920 or 1921, when we had that depression, they set men back from their classification, from general foreman to foreman and from assistant superintendents to general foremen.

Mr. Donovan: Will you take that a litfle slower, please? I cannot keep track of it.

Mr. Nelson: He said in the depression of 1921 they set men back in their classifications, from general foremen to foremen and from foremen to assistant foremen and from assistant superintendents to general foremen, and so forth.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Everybody took a reclassification downward?

A. That's right, the ones that wasn't laid off entirely.

Q. And that included superintendents?

A. That's right.

Mr. Donovan: He is speaking about 1922?

Mr. Nelson: 1921, during the depression.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) How long were you at that, or rather, how long were you in that classification to accommodate the circumstances due to the depression?

A. It was early in 1922 when I went back. When 984 I went back as a general foreman, it was in 1922 and it was some time—I continued as a general foreman ever since late in 1921 or 1922 up to the present time, outside of another small break.

Q. When did that occur?

A. That occurred, it was either April 11th or 12th in 1944.

Q. Was there some event that took place then?

A. That's right.

Q. What was it?

A. Well, it was one of those cases where the foremen—the rank and file, the production went down and the rank and file was naturally taken off and they took off the general foremen and the foremen and assistant foremen.

Q. Was that at the point of conversion from the manufacture of cars to war manufacture?

A. No, that was the year before that, in April, 1940.

Q. What did you go down to on that occasion, or did you go down and out on that occasion?

A. Well, practically. I was on nights; in other words, before I went on nights, the superintendent or division manager called me in the office in the middle of the summer when I was going to get my vacation, the day before my vacation—

Mr. Donovan (Interposing): May we have his name, please?

985 The Witness: Mr. Finley, he called me in the office and he says, "Jim, when you come back you are going on nights," and I sat there and I never answered him and finally he sat there with me so long he got tired of looking at me and says, "What have you got to say about it?" I said, "What's the use of saying anything, I can't do anything about it anyway." I took my vacation and came back and I think it was a couple of days afterwards I think, and then I took full charge of the car assembly, that is, right up to the body loaded, repairs on the motors.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) How many men did you have under your supervision then?

A. I would say roughly between 350 and 400; I might be 50 or 60 off on that guess.

Q. How long did you continue at that?

A. That lasted between eight and nine months.

Q. Then what happened?

A. Then, as I say, the sales of cars dropped off and that was when they were taking off the night crew and naturally, the Management calls in all the superintendents and managers and their plan was all set and everybody was different, the foremen and the general foremen was going around and saying what their setup was going to be and I didn't hear anything about my setup at all. So I waited until I think it was the second last night and I 986 stopped Finley in the hallway and I says, "Oscar—"

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) Do we need all this in detail, Mr. Nelson?

Mr. Nelson: No, I do not think we need it in this detail.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) In the conversation, Mr. Witness, were you demoted or were you not?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. That was as a result of this conversation with Mr. Finley?

A. He told me—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) Was it the result of this conversation with Mr. Finley?

The Witness: He told me—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) No, was it the result of this conversation with Mr. Finley?

The Witness: Mr. Examiner, might I say, did you say what was the result?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: No, I said, was it the result of this conversation with Mr. Finley?

Mr. Nelson: Your demotion, in other words?

The Witness: No, it wasn't.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Were you demoted?

A. I was.

Q. And when?

987 A. Either April 11 or April 12, 1940.

Q. To what rank or position?

A. Well, he told when I asked him where I was in the organization, he told me I was—

Mr. Donovan: Just a minute. I ask that the witness be required to give responsive answers.

Mr. Nelson: He was going to tell it in the form Mr. Finley told him and I believe that is perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. Donovan: Well, it is not satisfactory to me, and I ask that the witness be required to give responsive answers to the question.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not want to know what Mr. Finley told him unless it is the only way he can answer it.

Mr. Nelson: I believe that is why he was telling the conversation.

The Witness: That is true.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Were you demoted?

The Witness: That's right and I was—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) Were you or were you not demoted?

The Witness: No.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, go ahead.

The Witness: He told me I was going to be Mr. Durr's righthand man, with a substantial cut.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Who was Mr. Durr?

988 A. He was on days in the same position I was on at nights, general foreman.

Q. Did you go to work for Mr. Durrs?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Did Mr. Finley indicate the extent of the cut in the salary?

A. I wouldn't lower myself enough to ask him.

Mr. Donovan: I ask that be stricken out.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It may be stricken.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I take it, he did not indicate it?

A. No, he did not.

Q. Did you continue working for the Packard Motor Company?

A. No, I did not.

Q. What did you do, go to work someplace else?

A. No.

Q. You remained unemployed for how long?

A. I was taken off the payroll the first of May.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: For how long?

The Witness: Until the 20th of June.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Then you went back to work for the Packard Motor Company?

A. That's right.

Q. In what capacity?

A. As motor assembly.

989 Q. As a maintenance and production worker and hourly rated, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. How long did you continue as a production worker?

A. Five months.

Q. Then what happened? Did you go back as a foreman?

A. I did, as a general foreman.

Q. In what department?

A. In the YF Department.

Q. What department is that?

A. That's the marine motor assembly.

Q. The date you went back as a general foreman, if you please?

A. November 18, 1940.

Q. And you continued as a general foreman from that time until this?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your wage or salary?

A. $330.00 a month.

Q. Is there a bonus or overtime?

A. There is.

Q. That makes the average about what?

A. It runs between 475, around 475 now, by working 50 hours a week.

Q. Will you tell us what you do in that department, what the operation is in that department?

990 A. Well, we build the motors, you might say, from A to Z.

Q. The motor department or division again?

A. That's right.

Q. How many men have you under you now?

A. When I left there a week ago last Monday there was 307 men.

Q. How many subordinate foremen?

A. I have got three foremen and four assistants.

Q. Mr. Wilkins, you are a member of the Foreman's Association of America, the Packard Chapter, are you not?

A. Yes.

Q. May I ask you whether you were a member of the old Local 918 of the UAW?

A. No, I was not.

Q. You did not become a member of that?

A. No.

Q. You have now, and for some time past, have been using the power and authority of a general foreman?

A. That's right.

Q. And for a great many years prior to 1934 to 1937 you were of the same rank, a general foreman, in the Packard Motor Car Company plant, were you not?

A. I would say before that, I would say from 1922 or 1918 or 1919 up to the present time.

991. Q. That you were a general foreman?

A. That's right.

Q. Mr. Wilkins, you are what could be called an old time foreman; that is, prior to organization of the production and maintenance workers?

A. That's right.

Q. You have had experience on both sides of the line, have you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As an old time foreman, tell us something about your powers and your authority, what could you do, could you hire a man?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: At what time are you talking about?

Mr. Nelson: Prior to 1933 or 1934.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean, at the time he was a general foreman?

Mr. Nelson: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) When you were a general foreman?

A. There hasn't been very much change since I have been a general foreman, but there was considerable change before that.

Q. When did that change take place?

992 A. Oh, around 1913 or 1914, I would say there was some change took place there and then around about 1915 to 1917; that's in the employment office.

Q. Was there an employment office when you first went to Packard's?

A. No.

Q. Then there was an employment office established, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Do you remember what year that was?

A. No, I do not.

Q. What change came in your powers as a foreman with the establishment of the employment office?

A. Well, when I first—

Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) This is still in 1913 and 1914?

Mr. Karasick: I think he said he did not know the date.

Mr. Donovan: He said the change took place around 1913 and 1914.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, this is very interesting, but I do not see how it is relevant at all to this particular case, going back to 1913, 1921, what took place at that time; that is some 30 years ago.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We all know, of course, that 993 there has been over the years in mass production industries a degree of change, and I think that is what Mr. Nelson is going into.

Mr. Nelson: That is right, I am trying to get this witness to tell us what the differences are in being a foreman then and now as affected by the establishment of the employment office, organization of the production and maintenance workers, and other changes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Was this change back around 1913 and 1914?

The Witness: It was before that some time.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, I object to the testimony now being gone into by Mr. Nelson because unless I am mistaken, and I do not believe I am, the witness testified that from 1933 to 1934 on, there was no particular change in his duties as general foreman. Then Mr. Nelson, still pressing for changes, got the testimony that there was a change in 1913 or 1914 involving the employment office. But the record, as it stands now, shows that there was no particular change since 1933 and 1934 in his duties as general foreman. So what we are going into now was sometime prior to that and having to do with the employment office, for some period between 1913 and 1914 and 1933, 1934.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Sorry, Mr. Donovan, I
994 simply do not get your point.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Nelson has expressed a desire to show there have been great changes and at the same time, I think, I know what he has in mind, the duties of the general foremen—that is another reason for the formation of the Foreman's Association of America. I do not see how he is going to do it through this witness, unless he changes his testimony. In his particular case there was no change in his duties from general foreman from 1933 and 1934 onward. We are now addressing ourselves to some period prior to that. The relevancy of which I do not see, as to what Mr. Nelson wants.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness may answer.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) You tell us, Mr. Wilkins.

A. As far back as when I was a straw boss I used to go out on the street and take a slip out of my book and hand it to a man and he would go in and he would be hired, he would be put on the Packard payroll.

Q. Did you fix his wages?

A. No—yes, I did. In other words, at that time the men used to work for 28 cents and 32 cents an hour and up as high as 40 cents an hour for real good motor builders.

Q. Did you fix the wages within those limits?

A. I set the rate on it.

Q. Then you not only hired him—

995 Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interrupting) Do you mean within the range you were permitted?

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Who was the judge as to whether the man was worth 28 cents, 35 cents or 40 cents?

A. The way we used to hire men at that time was we could go out there and they would be lined up 40 or 50 men. I would walk along and if the man was smart he would see us walking along and notice that we talked to one man and another man would approach us and know what kind of man we wanted.

Mr. Donovan: Will the witness please speak up? I cannot hear him.

The Witness: I said when we walked out in the line, we would ask a man if he was a motor repair man and the next man would hear the conversation between us that went on and he would say that he was a motor repair man. We would look that man over and nine chances out of ten, you wouldn't take him because you didn't like his makeup and the way he answered the question.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He was probably a lawyer.

The Witness: He may be. Anyway, we used to ask him if he could read "mics" and what a bore and stroke of a motor was and what the pistons were placed—by the second question he would fall down. Then he would 996 go along and see a bright-looking fellow who would say, "I don't know anything about a motor but I am willing to work; give me a chance and I will make a good man for you." We used to make a lot of good men such as that, who were with us awhile. They would then be all right.

Q. You picked them yourself as foremen?

A. Absolutely, there was no medical examination at that time either.

Q. Except such as you gave them in the line there?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, could you fire that man?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Could you discipline him if you didn't quite want to fire him?

A. Well—

Q. (Interposing) By that, could you lay him off two or three days and tell him, "You better not do that again, stay home two or three days and think it over." Could you do that at that time as a foreman?

A. No, that is nothing I have done very much of.

Q. Why?

A. I was more inclined to be the other way, and give a man a very good severe talking to.

Q. But you did give him that?

A. It was generally pretty rough, too, I think.

997 Q. You could fire him if you thought it was justifiable?

A. Absolutely.

Q. You said something about these bright young men coming in willing to work. Did you give them a process of training?

A. No.

Q. What did you do?

A. The system we used to have at that time was that we would have a certain amount of men that worked on the job for a reasonable length of time and as a foreman or straw boss you would know your men and you would take and put the new man with the older men. You would check up on him from time to time how the man was coming along and that would be the answer.

Q. You then made up your own mind as to whether he was worth being retained?

A. Yes.

Q. And as a foreman you made up your mind?

A. That is right.

Q. If he wasn't, could you let him go?

A. Absolutely without any argument.

Q. With anybody, is that right?

A. Well—

Q. I mean, did you have to refer to somebody higher in the Company, or did you do it yourself?

998 A. If the Examiner would like to listen to this, in 1914 or early in 1914 when I was put on as a straw boss I fired the employment manager's nephew and I also fired my boss' brother. That is the first day I was put on that job.

Mr. Donovan: And that was before the CIO was in the plant?

Mr. Nelson: That was before there was an employment office and so forth also.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Did you make those firings stick? Or did somebody come around and overrule you?

A. I am afraid that if I went into details it would be too much.

Q. Did the firing stick?

A. Absolutely it stuck.

Q. That is what I wanted to know.

A. Yes.

Q. As a foreman in the oldest days, could you do any purchasing, or did you do any buying or anything?

A. No, sir.

Q. You did no buying?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you fix the schedule of your work? Did somebody above you fix the schedule?

A. No, that was handled—

Q. (Interposing) I am talking about the old time foremen.

999 A. That has all been handled through the same sales of cars, through the sales department.

Q. As a foreman, did you sit in the olden days with Management and talk things over? Did you have conversations with the factory superintendent—

Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) Just a minute. Do you mean did he do that as an individual or did he do it in a group or not?

Mr. Nelson: I mean as foreman. How high up the line did you confer about your work as a foreman?

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Examiner, I still ask the question be reframed. I do not know whether the question means the witness as an individual or not.

Mr. Nelson: It means as foreman. I said and put that in the question.

Mr. Donovan: As an individual foreman?

Mr. Nelson: In his work as a foreman, working for the Company. Not in your personal relations, Mr. Wilkins, or anything like that, but in doing your work as a foreman, did you confer with members or representatives of the Company?

The Witness: With the superintendent, yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) On what subjects?

A. On the amount of men we had in a department at that time. There was no time study and no opera-

1000 tion sheet. It was up to the individual foreman while he ran his department. In other words, what efficiency he made.

Q. Is that true now?

A. Oh, no.

Q. What is the difference now?

Mr. Karasick: I object. We have gone into the difference now several days. We have been several days developing that and I think the record is overburdened with that sort of material.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Can you answer that briefly?

The Witness: Well, in about three or four words.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Go ahead.

The Witness: Operation sheets, time study controls, are the whole thing now, practically.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Reporter, will you mark that as Petitioner's Exhibit 34?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit 34 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Wilkins, this Petitioner's Exhibit 34 offered just now, is offered to refresh your recollection. Was there an incident recently where you as general foreman received a complaint from one of your foremen? Will you answer that Yes or No?

A. Yes.

Q. Did this memorandum refresh your recollection as to that?

1001 A. Yes.

Q. Is that a memorandum made by you of that incident? Answer yes or no, did you make it?

A. Yes.

Q. And illustrating your powers then and now, tell me whether in this incident shown on Exhibit 34, your memorandum of it, you carried that complaint higher up—above you?

A. I did.

Mr. Donovan: May we see it?

Mr. Nelson: I will offer the memorandum so that counsel may have the advantage of knowing the substance of what it is. I offer it to counsel for examination.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: By the way, when was this?

Mr. Nelson: I believe it has a date on it.

The Witness: It has a date on it.

Mr. Nelson: In each of these I think there is a date.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Nelson: Will you please mark these as Petitioner's Exhibits 35, 36, 37, 38 and 39?

(Thereupon the documents above referred to were marked Petitioner's Exhibits Nos. 35, 36, 37, 38 and 39 for identification.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: At this time we will take a
1002 ten-minute recess.

(Recess.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The hearing is in order.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Exhibits 35, 36, 37, 38 and 39 are memoranda made by you of other incidents similar to Petitioner's Exhibit 34, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, as to your memorandum, Petitioner's Exhibit 34, it relates to a man by the name of George Klein in the YF department, who finally was made a foreman August 31, 1943, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Just in a word, what was Mr. Klein's complaint?

A. He was handling too many men on the classification as assistant foremen.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I object to the question and move that the answer be stricken as being immaterial and irrelevant. If this is a case of going into grievances again, why, of course, we will have to put in the testimony that we may think proper to counteract any effect it may have.

Mr. Nelson: I will briefly make—

Mr. Dahling: And also have time in which to investigate these cases.

Mr. Nelson: I might state briefly, Mr. Examiner, the 1003 showing on these exhibits—I would like to undertake briefly to ask three or four questions to get the continuity. I cannot do it by broken up questions and I am not able to make a showing on one or two questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I gathered from what you said prior to the recess, Mr. Nelson, that you were not interested in the validity of the complaint or grievance and rather, in the fact that there were these complaints made, valid or not, following which certain action was taken.

Mr. Nelson: That is right. In other words, we are not offering them here to prove that Mr. Klein had a valid grievance, although obviously we think he did—what we want to show is what happens to the grievance and to the witness in connection with the grievance.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Go ahead.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) He was handling 190 to 220 men as assistant foremen for a period of two or three years, is that right?

Mr. Dahling: During what years?

Mr. Nelson: Prior to 1943, immediately prior to 1943. Isn't that correct, Mr. Wilson?

The Witness: It is in that neighborhood.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Did he bring that complaint to you as his general foreman?

A. Several times.

1004 Q. Did you take that complaint to the person above you in authority?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you take it there more than once?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you at that time get any relief or remedy for Mr. Klein whatsoever on your application?

A. No.

Q. Did Mr. Klein finally by-pass you and go directly to your superior with his own complaint?

A. Mr. Nelson, in order to answer that correctly—there was a night superintendent on at that time and he went to the night superintendent who in turn went to the day superintendent.

Q. He went around that way?

A. Yes.

Q. The night superintendent, if you were on nights, would be your superior as general foreman, if you were on nights?

A. Yes.

Q. But you were on days?

A. Yes.

Q. And he by-passed you and went to the night superintendent who went to the day superintendent?

A. Yes

Q. Did he then get relief?

1005 A. Sometime later he did.

Q. Through his own application?

A. Yes.

Q. Although you recommended repeatedly yourself as a general foreman?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: This memorandum I offer simply as a memorandum, Mr. Examiner.

Mr. Dahling: May I ask, to save time, the name of the night superintendent?

Mr. Nelson: What was the name of the night superintendent at that time?

The Witness: Walter Ewener.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Now, who was the day superintendent at that time?

A. Mr. Benoit.

Q. Mr. Wilkins, to make the testimony as brief as possible, Exhibits 35, 36, 37, 38 and 39 are your memoranda of similar instances where you had complaints by foremen working for you and under your supervision for whom you made approaches and complaints to the next in authority above you and for whom you were unable to get any redress, is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. Did these men in each of these instances, in effect,

1006 by-pass you finally and get relief for themselves?

A. There is one in there particularly that did.

Q. Well, did the others too?

A. No, the others, I kept talking to the superintendent and eventually he came through.

Q. And the memoranda shows the length of time it took you as general foreman to get these men relief where you got it for them?

A. That's right.

Mr. Dahling: May I interrupt, Mr. Nelson? May we have the names of each one of those men, the names of the superintendent and the dates on which these matters happened so that we may investigate these matters and put in such testimony on them as we feel is necessary?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, the main proposition. I desire to put in and then I will go over the details.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Now, Mr. Wilkins, you are a man of experience, an old time foreman, a modern foreman, will you tell us are these Exhibits 34 to 39, both inclusive, such instances as you desire to take up in collective manner through your association with the Company instead of having them for the way they have in these instances? In other words, are they instances which, as an association, you would reasonably be expected to handle promptly without the delay shown here?

1007 Mr. Donovan: Just a minute. I object to that, Mr. Examiner. I think that is a matter of argument, and certainly not a question to be answered by this witness.

Mr. Nelson: All right, I will put it this way.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Are these instances of complaints the kind you would like to take up collectively through the Association with the Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Briefly stated, what was William Wofford, what was his complaint?

A. His was on account of working on the CIO—in other words, he belonged to the CIO Union and acted as assistant foreman.

Q. And he wanted that remedied?

A. That's right.

Q. And you took it up for him?

A. I did.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: When was this?

The Witness: The dates is on the card.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) In May of 1942?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you get remedy on that case?

A. Yes, I think I did, after a certain length of time.

Q. What length of time would you say?

A. I think it is on there.

1008 Q. May, 1942, to July, 1943, is that correct, if you remember?

A. I think that is.

Mr. Dahling: What did he want remedied?

Mr. Nelson: He wanted to be advanced to the rank of assistant foreman when he was assuming those duties but he was still in the CIO rank and file and it took him over a year to get it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is that correct, Mr. Witness?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Is that correct substantially?

A. Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: While we are talking about that particular case, did I understand your last answer to be he did get the advance?

The Witness: He did, after a long time.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Did he remain in the CIO thereafter?

The Witness: No.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) That is 14 months, approximately. Mr. Donovan suggests that you tell us to whom you talked for Mr. Wofford?

A. Mr. Benoit.

Q. What is his position?

A. Superintendent.

1009 Q. Now, Petitioner's Exhibit Number 36, Mr. Roy Habson, briefly what is his complaint?

Mr. Dahling: Will you give us the date?

Mr. Nelson: I can give it to you from the card, but I thought you would prefer to have it from the witness' recollection, if he can.

A. His is the same complaint as Wofford's, accounting to the CIO and acting as assistant foreman, working as an assistant foreman.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) His complaint apparently was originated in July, 1941 and was remedied February 15, 1943. Those dates are approximate, I suppose?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you take up his complaint?

A. I did.

Q. More than once?

A. Yes, I did, several times.

Q. With whom?

A. With Mr. Benoit.

Q. Did you finally get Mr. Hobson's complaint remedied?

A. Yes.

Q. By being raised to the rank of assistant foreman?

A. That's right.

Q. And he got that correct pay for an assistant foreman?

A. That's right.

1010 Q. Exhibit 37 is the instance of Mr. Julius O. Smith. Is Mr. Smith a man you have known for a long time?

A. Mr. Smith has worked for me on and off for pretty near twenty years.

Q. What was his complaint?

A. His was practically the same complaint. It is right on that card there (indicating).

Q. That is, getting an hourly rate pay and working as an assistant foreman?

A. That's right.

Mr. Donovan: Witness, do you not remember anything except what is on those cards about these cases?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, if you want me to turn him loose; that is what I thought you did not want.

Mr. Donovan: Well, those cards are not very large and you only have six of them. I would like to see how those cases stand out in his own mind without these prepared cards.

Mr. Nelson: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Tell us Mr. Smith's story. What happened, why he complained and to whom he went?

A. Mr. Reifel was the general manager and every time I talked to Mr. Reifel, why, he would pull out his black book and make a note in it—now, you are asking for it and I am giving it to you just as you are asking for 1011 it—and we would be up on the floor that Mr. Smith had charge of sometimes and, why, we would be talking about the men and the operations, and I would say, "Mr. Reifel, when are we going to take care of Jules Smith?" He would just reach in his pocket and pull out his black book and make a note.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) But did anything ever happen?

A. Nothing ever happened. Then I would go to Mr. Deislinger.

Q. What happened when you saw Mr. Deislinger?

A. Mr. Deislinger would look at me and that's about all I would get out of him. It went on and went on for the length of time there is on that card and nothing was done.

Q. What would you estimate about the length of time? That is one of the things Mr. Donovan wanted you to fix—that you would be talking about these two men?

A. It would be considerably over a year.

Q. What was Mr. Smith doing at that time, working as a maintenance and production worker?

A. Oh, no, he was handling around 100 men and getting around $1.26 an hour, I think it was.

Q. That is the production rate?

A. That's right.

Q. How was Mr. Smith feeling about it?

Mr. Donovan: Well now, I object to that.

Mr. Nelson: All right, I will withdraw that question.

1012 Q. (By Mr. Donovan) How often did Mr. Smith come to see you and take your time about this matter?

A. I couldn't answer that.

Q. Was it as often as that?

A. Oh, it absolutely was.

Q. I suppose you could tell us how Mr. Smith felt, too?

A. I could answer it in a couple of brief words.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The next question, please.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Well, Mr. Smith finally got a remedy, didn't he?

A. He did.

Q. Petitioner's Exhibit-38, Mr. Robert Nolan. Do you remember that case?

A. I do.

Q. What was he doing?

A. He was handling the opposite shift to Mr. Smith on nights.

Q. And was being paid how?

A. He was being paid that $1.26 an hour.

Q. Was he performing the functions of an assistant foreman?

A. He was.

Q. Did he come to you about it?

A. Many times.

Q. What did you do about it?

1013 A. I went to the superintendent about it.

Q. The name of the superintendent, please?

A. Mrs. Benoit.

Q. Did you finally get Mr. Nolan a remedy?

A. He was eventually taken care of.

Q. Do you remember, of your own recollection, the period of time it took you to get the remedy?

A. No.

Q. The first date here is August, 1940, and he was made an assistant foreman on August 16, 1942, about two years. Is that your recollection of those circumstances?

A. Whatever is on those cards is correct.

Q. It is the correct date, approximately?

A. Yes.

Q. Petitioner's Exhibit Number 39, Mr. William Bradley. Is that, in substance, the same situation as you have told us about these other men?

A. No, that's a different situation, Mr. Nelson.

Q. What is the difference?

A. This man got suspicious of me and finally he asked me so many times about getting put on the right classification, finally he said he wanted to go to the Management itself.

Q. Did he?

A. He did.

Q. To whom did he go, if you know?

1014 A. Mr. Deislinger.

Q. And this went on approximately from June, 1941, until he was made a foreman? That is, in July, 1942, is that about the right period?

A. The dates on there, I think, are correct.

Mr. Dahling: He was made a foreman or an assistant foreman then?

Mr. Nelson: He was made a foreman.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Do you remember how many men he was supervising?

Mr. Donovan: When? Before or after?

Mr. Nelson: Before his recognition as such.

A. When he first went on, in 1940, he had about 88 men on the rolls.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Did that increase or decrease?

A. It went up as high as 200 on the day shift on the second floor and over a hundred on the third floor.

Mr. Nelson: I offer these in evidence and we offer the witness for cross examination.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, Mr. Dahling has some questions of the witness, but I wish to ask the witness, as I indicated a moment ago, a couple of questions about these cards which have been labeled and offered as Petitioner's Exhibits 34 to 39, inclusive.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, and I will withhold 1015 ruling on the introduction until you have completed questioning.

Mr. Nelson: May I ask just one question first?

Mr. Donovan: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Wilkins, are the kind of complaints shown on Exhibits 34 to 39, both inclusive, complaints that the old-time foremen would have remedied on their own authority and incidentally?

Mr. Donovan: I will object to the question as being purely speculative, calling for a conclusion, prejudicial to the Employer on the record and quite an improper question.

Mr. Nelson: All right, I will put it another way.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Could the old-time foreman have remedied these instances promptly with his own authority?

Mr. Donovan: I will object, because "old-time foreman" does not carry any definition to anybody. It is a phrase that might have a meaning as varied as witnesses are. We do not want that sort of thing in the record.

Mr. Nelson: Such as yours at the Packard Motor.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness may answer what he could have done.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Could you have remedied these things?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: Of course, I have raised this, as you know, because the Employers have been talking about that fabulous old man; rather like Rip Van Winkle.

1016 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) How far could you have come in point of time and remedied these situations?

Mr. Donovan: I will object to that, because he has testified they have all been remedied.

Mr. Nelson: No, I mean up to what year during the time he has been a foreman could he have remedied those by himself?

The Witness: I would say between 1915 and 1917.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Somewhere in there?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: That is all, Mr. Donovan. I am sorry, I did not mean to interrupt you that long.

Mr. Donovan: Witness, I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 34, which your counsel has displayed to you and which you have handled and from which you testified after refreshing your recollection. You recall that, do you?

The Witness: I do.

Mr. Donovan: Who made that?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is, the exhibit itself?

Mr. Donovan: That is right. Who made this exhibit, Petitioner's Exhibit 34?

The Witness: I made it.

Mr. Donovan: It constitutes one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, eight typewritten lines, does it not?

1017 The Witness: I never counted the lines.

Mr. Donovan: You do not think I am misrepresenting that to you?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Nelson: We will take your word for it, Mr. Donovan.

Mr. Donovan: Would you like to verify the fact?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Donovan: It does constitute eight typewritten lines, does it not, Mr. Wilkins?

The Witness: I said I never counted them; I don't dispute your word though.

Mr. Donovan: Is there any doubt about it in your mind?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Donovan: It is a card about four inches long and three inches wide, is it not?

The Witness: If you say so, yes.

Mr. Donovan: Well, you can see the card, can you not, Mr. Wilkins.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Donovan: You have handled it?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Donovan: And you say you put the writing on this card?

The Witness: I put the note the typewriting is from,
1018 the typewriting that is put on that card form.

Mr. Donovan: You mean, someone else typed the card?

The Witness: That's right.

Mr. Donovan: Who did?

The Witness: I don't just know who did.

Mr. Donovan: Pardon me?

The Witness: I am not certain who typed that card.

Mr. Donovan: Where was it done?

The Witness: It was done on the outside.

Mr. Donovan: What do you mean, done on the outside?

The Witness: It was done by, I think, one of my nieces.

Mr. Donovan: You mean, in your home?

The Witness: I don't know whether it was done in the place she works or where.

Mr. Donovan: You do not operate a typewriter yourself, of course, do you?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Donovan: When was it done?

The Witness: It was done right around, after that date on there.

Mr. Donovan: This is Mr. George Kline's case. Now, as near as you can remember, when was this prepared?

The Witness: The date is on the card.

Mr. Donovan: No, the only date on the card is con-
1019 tained in the one sentence, "He was made a foreman on August 3rd, 1943." That would not refresh your recollection as to when this card was made, would it?

The Witness: It was made after he was made a foreman, yes.

Mr. Donovan: How long after?

The Witness: I wouldn't know; I don't remember.

Mr. Donovan: And two years and nine months previously this so-called complaint you are talking about had existed and you did not make this memo up until after the expiration of that two years and nine months, is that right?

The Witness: That's right.

Mr. Donovan: When did you do the writing from which the typewritten copy was made?

The Witness: Just after he was made a foreman.

Mr. Donovan: Well, how long before it was typewritten up?

1020 The Witness: I would say in the course of a week.

Mr. Donovan: Why did you do that?

The Witness: I have always had a habit of keeping those notes on certain things that I was interested in.

Mr. Donovan: With reference to this Exhibit 35, 36, 37 and 38, were they all written up at about the same time by your niece who typewrote them for you?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: What use did you have in mind of making of these complaints as you have called them?

Mr. Nelson: He did not call them complaints, he called them memoranda.

Mr. Donovan: You did and he did but I don't know what you call them. They speak for themselves. They were referred to as complaints without remedy.

Mr. Nelson: What are on the paper are complaints, but the papers themselves are not a complaint.

Mr. Donovan: Why did you make all these written complaints and call them what you like, sometimes long after the complaint itself originated, as in the case of the George Kline case on Exhibit 34 and the names on the other Petitioner's Exhibit? Why did you prepare and assemble all those complaints some time after August 31, 1943?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I don't get it? Some time
1021 after August 31, 1943?

Mr. Donovan: That is the date he fixes for the writing of the complaints.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All of them?

Mr. Donovan: No, he says in each case, but Exhibit 35—he says he wrote them all up about the same time. Exhibit 35 is July 26, 1943, which would be about thirty days difference; Exhibit 36 is February 15, 1943; Exhibit 37, March 27, 1944; Exhibit 38, August 15, 1942, is the day on here for the making of the man assistant foreman, and Exhibit 39 I am unable to inform the Trial Examiner about—it is a different sort of paper and I am going to get to that. I would like the witness to answer me why, regardless of the date, he prepared all these memoranda and assembled them and brought them in here.

The Witness: That is on account of Mr. Bradley accusing me of not being loyal and not doing my job.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Bradley of Packard Motor Car Company?

The Witness: He is one of the men on the card there, Mr. William Bradley, he is a foreman under me now.

Mr. Donovan: You made these memoranda as matters of self protection then?

1022 The Witness: I did.

Mr. Donovan: How did you happen to bring them in here? How did you know anyone wanted them in here?

The Witness: Well, I didn't know anybody wanted them here. I had them made out and they were in my pocket. To be right about them, they were in my pocket ever since those cards were made out, ever since Mr. Bradley accused me of not trying to get his classification changed.

Mr. Donovan: And who asked you to bring these memoranda into court?

The Witness: Nobody.

Mr. Donovan: You just brought them?

The Witness: I did.

Mr. Donovan: And you are using them because you feel that management was too slow in these cases in following your original recommendation?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Donovan: And you do not agree with management's disinclination to act in these five cases as fast as you thought they should?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Donovan: As a matter of fact, you do not agree with management's disposition of your own status when you went to foreman, as you testified, to the rank
1023 and file? You don't think that it was right in your opinion, I believe, you said so on the stand, did you not?

A. No, I didn't say that.

Mr. Donovan: You think that management was all right in that action?

The Witness: No, I do not.

Mr. Donovan: I understood that from your testimony, Mr. Wilkins, that you are definitely complaining about that.

The Witness: I wasn't complaining about that at that time, but seeing that you are asking me, I don't think it was.

Mr. Donovan: You did not complain about it at the time but you regarded it as a complaint at that time?

The Witness: I didn't do anything about it because I knew there was no use.

Mr. Donovan: During the months, I believe, in 1940, approximately, when you were separated from the employment at the Packard Motor Car Company, were you out of a job?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: Did you make an attempt—you had been a foreman, hadn't you?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: You had been a worker at the Packard plant for some thirty-five years?

1024 The Witness: Thirty years at that time, about thirty-one years.

Mr. Donovan: Did you make any attempt to obtain employment elsewhere during that period?

The Witness: No, I was busy all the time.

Mr. Donovan: You wanted to go back to Packard's?

The Witness: Sure.

Mr. Donovan: You got back to Packard's?

The Witness: I did.

Mr. Donovan: How old were you when you went to Packard's the first time when you first went there?

The Witness: I am sixty-two now and I was about twenty-eight years old.

Mr. Donovan: How far along in school did you go when you were younger?

The Witness: The eighth grade.

Mr. Donovan: You stopped at the eighth grade?

The Witness: That is right.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Examiner, we will object to the exhibits in question, 34 to 39 inclusive, on the ground they are irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial here.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, I think they ought to come in if only for the reason that without them this transcript, to a certain extent, will be unintelligible.

1025 Mr. Dahling: Then, I move, Mr. Examiner, that the testimony of Mr. Wilkins with respect to all of these exhibits and the testimony in relation to them and his testimony as refreshed, as he said, by these exhibits, be stricken as irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: No, I think they ought to be received and it is not for me to comment about the weight to be given the testimony and what bearing it has on the case, beyond the fact that I think they are admissible and they are accordingly received.

(The documents heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibits 34, 35, 36, 37, 38 and 39 for identification were received in evidence.)

Mr. Dahling: May we proceed with our cross-examination?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): It was my understanding, Mr. Examiner, that Mr. Donovan was merely asking certain questions about the exhibits and relative to their admission and that was not considered part of the main cross examination.

Mr. Nelson: I shall not raise any objection as to the technical matters as to who cross-examines. If I put a witness on the stand he will have to stand for cross-examination that the Company gives him.

1026 Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Wilkins, you stated that in 1940 you were made an assistant foreman in the division in which defects in cars were remedied and that you had 100 to 125 men under your supervision, that is correct, is it?

A. Yes.

Q. Was there any foreman in that department?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any other assistant foreman?

A. No.

Q. You just had a foreman and an assistant foreman and you were the assistant foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. In 1918, if my notes are correct, you were made a general foreman, is that correct?

A. That is the title I carried.

Q. All right. Were you or were you not a general foreman?

A. I was told I was.

Q. Did you carry out the duties of a general foreman?

A. Well, I had two departments.

Q. Does the foreman usually have more than one department?

A. Not as a rule.

Q. Did they in those days?

1027 A. No, I don't think so.

Q. Well, then, what did you mean by your statement "I was told I was a general foreman"? Why did you use "I was told I was a general foreman"?

A. Well, when I had been talking to the manager about it he would say, "You are the general foreman."

Q. You were given a raise in pay, I believe, at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. And you had 150 men under your supervision, is that right?

A. Around 125, I said.

Q. Well, how many other supervisors were there in that department at that time?

A. There were probably a couple of leaders, but I wouldn't even call them straw bosses.

Q. You had no assistant foremen?

A. No.

Q. And you had no foremen under you?

A. No.

Q. You ran the whole department then, didn't you?

A. That is right.

Q. That would be quite a responsibility, as I take it?

A. That is right.

Q. And you did a good job of it?

1028 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you keep your voice up, please, I cannot hear you?

Mr. Dahling: You did a good job of it?

Mr. Nelson: Well, we admit he did answer it?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: You did?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: The Company admitted that by keeping him so long.

Mr. Dahling: I am not questioning that Mr. Wilkins is not a good foreman.

Mr. Nelson: He is and you can go right ahead now.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): You were giving us a little ancient history, Mr. Wilkins, you went back to the year 1913; how many employees did Packard Motor Car Company have at that time?

A. I really don't know.

Q. Can you make any estimate?

A. No, if I did it would not be right.

Q. How many foremen did they have at that time?

A. I really don't know.

Q. How many general foremen did they have?

A. I don't know.

Q. How many cars did they produce?

A. In 1914 I know what they were trying to build.

1029 Q. You don't know how many they actually produced?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Did they have more than one department?

A. I don't just quite understand that, yes.

Q. You were in a department there, were you not, at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. In what department was that?

A. That was the finished car repair and the adjusting of cars.

Q. How many men worked in that department?

A. In the repair end of it there was between forty and fifty.

Q. Considering that as a department, were there other departments at that time?

A. Yes, there was.

Q. But you do not know how many?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Would you say there were eight or ten?

A. I think there would be about that many.

Q. And it might be as high as twenty?

A. I don't know that.

Q. Even if there were just eight or ten there would be a foreman in charge of each one of those departments?

A. I imagine so.

1030 Q. Did each one of those departments do the same type of work?

A. No.

Q. There was only one department doing your type of work?

A. Yes.

Q. And the other departments would do different types of work, is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. So that if you say that the rate you paid in your department was a certain amount, that would be the rate that is paid the people who did the same type of work in your department in the plant, would it not?

A. Yes.

Q. And there might be other departments where they had a higher rate, isn't that right?

A. I imagine there was.

Q. Who fixed these rates?

A. Well, at that time they were fixed more or less through management.

Q. You say more or less through management; where did you get your instructions?

A. Well, you got it through the superintendent.

Q. The superintendent—did he give you a list of it showing the amount that you could pay these men?

1031 A. You had an expense account at that time.

Q. What do you mean "expense account"?

A. Well, your expense account—you had to show so much for labor and so much for tools.

Q. Who prepared that?

A. That was fixed up in the Cost Department.

Q. And you did not figure that up at all?

A. No, there was only one, I might say—if we stood within our expense account on our production or labor load we got five per cent on that and we got five per cent on our scrap and we got five per cent on our tool account.

Q. I don't understand just what you mean by that when you got five per cent?

A. We got five per cent of our wages.

Q. You were paid—

A. If we kept on it.

Q. You were paid in proportion to the expense account?

A. If we went over we would have to go and get our requisition and cost sheet and figure it out all the way through and make out the complete report on it.

Q. Will you explain that again? Were you paid on an hourly basis in those days?

A. No, on a salary.

Q. You would receive so much per month? Where 1032 does this five per cent come in?

A. Five per cent of our salary for certain accounts.

Q. You mean—

A. As a bonus.

Q. As a bonus?

A. Yes.

Q. In addition to your salary?

A. That is right.

Q. And that bonus was only given to you, however, if the cost of your department would not exceed the amount allotted to you by the higher management?

A. That is right.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just a minute. I gathered that it sort of worked the other way, if he cut below par he got the bonus.

The Witness: That is right.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): If you cut below par by what percentage?

A. As a bonus—as long as you were below—there was a certain figure set and if you were below that, why you got your five per cent bonus.

Q. Or if you equalled it?

A. I think yes, if you equalled it.

Q. But if you went above it you would not get your five per cent bonus?

1033 A. No, you wouldn't.

Q. That was five per cent on cost?

Mr. Nelson: Not on the cost of the department but on the figure fixed by management as the amount allowed for that operation.

Mr. Dahling: I will take your statement.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): It was fixed by the Company?

A. That is right.

Q. You testified to that?

A. Yes.

Q. And now the other five per cent was based upon scrap?

A. That is right.

Q. How did you determine that?

A. By the scrap tickets and the cost is put on the scrap ticket, whatever the part cost.

Q. And you were allowed so much in dollar value of scrap?

A. That is right.

Q. And if you exceeded that you did not get your five per cent bonus?

A. That is right.

Q. And what was the other five per cent, you mentioned a third, as I recall it?

A. I did,—on our tooling expense.

1034 Q. And you were allowed a certain tool expense for this particular department?

A. That is right.

Q. And if you did not requisition tools costing the amount you were allowed, you received an additional five per cent?

A. That is right.

Q. An additional five per cent bonus?

A. That is right.

Q. And that was on a monthly basis?

A. That is right.

Q. In addition to your regular monthly salary you could receive as much as fifteen per cent bonus every month?

A. That is right.

Q. By the way, these and other items like the cost of tools and the dollar value of scrap, were also fixed by the Company?

A. Yes. When you made a requisition out for a tool, the cost of that tool was put on that requisition.

Q. And that is true as far as your department is concerned? It was allowed a certain number of dollars in value of tools to be used?

A. That is right.

1035 Q. When you ordered one it was charged against the amount appropriated to your department?

A. That is right.

Q. And if at the end—this was also on a monthly basis?

A. Yes.

Q. And if at the end of the month you had not used up your monthly allotment of tools you received your five per cent bonus?

A. Yes.

Q. What happened if you used more than your monthly allotment of tools?

A. You did not get your bonus.

Q. And the same would result if you had more scrap than you were allowed?

A. That is right.

Q. And if the cost as fixed by the Company was greater than allowed?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, then, let's get to the hourly-rated people and the method of determining their compensation, who did that?

A. Well, that is a kind of hand-me-down. When you took charge of a department there was a certain rate in the department and you would be governed according 1036 ing to the expense account of yours.

Q. Was that a part of the expense account?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was listed in the expense account the amount you could pay for these people?

A. It showed so much for labor.

Q. That was just in a round figure?

A. Yes, if I remember right, it is a long time since I have seen one of those cards.

Q. You would then go out and recruit labor on the streets, as I take it?

A. I did manys the time.

Q. Was there any place around the Company where the people came and asked for work?

A. In the early days I don't think there was, I never seen any place.

Q. When you say "early days," what year would that be?

A. From 1909 up to 1912.

Q. And as foreman, you would go over the cost sheet or whatever you called it at that time, and note that you were allowed so much for labor and then you yourself would fix the amount that these people you had would be paid?

A. On certain jobs, yes.

Q. And the Company—rather, higher management,
1037 had nothing to do with that?

A. Oh, yes, they did.

Q. In other words, you couldn't go out and pay a man $1.00 an hour if you just felt like it, could you?

A. No.

Q. The Company and upper management fixed the amount you could pay per hour to these men?

A. That is right.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean the maximum?

Mr. Dahling: Well, did they fix the amount, is that right?

The Witness: On this expense account, I am telling you about, when you were hiring your men and putting them on a certain classification, you had to be careful and not get too many on the high classifications, the high rate at that time—there was no such thing at that time as classification.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Who fixed the high rate?

A. I don't know who did.

Q. You didn't?

A. No.

Q. Then it must have been fixed by someone up in the line of supervision, I take it?

A. I imagine it was checked through all the manufacturers to see what rate they were paying.

1038 Q. Where did you get the rate from?

A. Well, it came from the time office.

Q. In other words, you were told by the time office how much you could pay to a man who did a certain type of work?

A. The rates, as a rule, were established in the department before you took over.

Q. Who established those rates?

A. I don't know.

Q. You did not establish them?

A. No.

Q. Well, you testified that you got them from the Time Department; did they give them to you?

A. No, I beg to differ, I didn't say that.

Q. I am sorry, I do not wish to misquote you. I just wanted to find out whether the rates were fixed out in the industry or by the Company, which would you say?

A. I would say they were fixed by the cost of the car.

Q. Who would determine the ratio of labor to the cost of the car?

A. The Accounting Department.

Q. And that was not done by you?

A. No.

Q. You hired a man at a rate which was fixed for your department?

1039 A. There was a rate in the department.

Q. The rate for your department?

A. That is right.

Q. Well, if you say you did not fix it was there anybody else in your department who fixed it?

A. You fixed the man's rate, the employee's rate, within the job they was working on.

Q. When you say "within the job they were working on," do you mean there was a range of some sort.

A. Yes.

Q. What was the range for the highest paid employees in your department?

A. I can speak of the time when I was first hired out at Packard's and it was 22 cents to 28 cents an hour.

Q. That would be the range?

A. That was the range at that time.

Q. What was it in 1913; that is the year that you say a change took place, as I have it here in my notes?

A. On that I would say it would run between 34 and 40 cents an hour.

Q. Did you have men in your department who received a higher hourly rate than some of the others?

A. No, it ran between 34 and 40 cents.

Q. They did all the same character of work?

A. No, there was some heavier and some lighter work.

1040 Q. In those days you had, as you stated, no classification and everyone in the department was paid within the same scale?

1041 A. As near as I can remember, yes.

Q. What was your highest figure, was it 48 cents an hour?

A. We used to have what we called the bridge assembly. That's the rear axle and that was very, very heavy work and those men used to get the highest rate.

Q. And you would get the lowest rate?

A. The job I started out on, the steering assembly, they would get 22 cents an hour.

Q. At that time, there was only one department in the plant that assembled the steering sections?

A. That's right.

Q. And only one department on the rear axle, I believe you called it?

A. That's right.

Q. Who, in those days—I am speaking now of just prior to 1931—who, in those days, was your superior, what was his title?

A. Walter Garner.

Q. What was his title?

A. Foreman.

Q. He was the foreman?

A. That's right.

Q. After you became a foreman did he continue supervising you?

A. No, he left and went to Buffalo.

1042 Q. And who was over Mr. Garner at this time?

A. Mr. Locker.

Q. Now, let us fix those dates as closely as we can.

A. That was in the latter end of 1909 and 1910.

Q. Those are the dates you have in mind when you are testifying as to these bonuses?

A. No, no. I don't know what the foremen got those days.

Q. Well, what dates are you using in that connection?

A. I am using, oh, from 1914 on up to 1929.

Q. From 1914 to 1929?

A. That's right.

Q. In 1929, the foremen still went out and hired people on the street?

A. No.

Q. Let us not get this confused. When did you go out and hire people on the street?

A. Between 1909 and 1913.

Q. You were a foreman at that time?

A. I used to go out and hire them when I was a straw boss.

Q. As a straw boss?

A. Yes.

Q. And after 1913 you did not do that?

A. I used to, maybe, take a man in the employment office after that and asked to have him put on the roll.

1043 Q. The company, however, in that period of time, between 1909 and 1913, was relatively small, was it not?

A. No, in 1926, 1927, 1928—

Q. (Interposing) No, I said between 1909 to 1913. I am sorry, I do not think you heard me correctly.

A. Oh, no, they wasn't very large.

Q. You knew most of the other straw bosses in the Company, did you?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Over straw bosses you had a foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Who was over that foreman?

A. Mr. Locker.

Q. Who was over Mr. Locker?

A. I think Mr. Roberts.

Q. Mr. Locker's boss was what?

A. The superintendent.

Q. Was he superintendent of the entire plant, the entire company?

A. I don't know, he never told me.

Q. Do you recall whether there was more than one superintendent?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. You never had any contact with anyone but Mr. Locker as superintendent?

1044 A. I never had contact with him but once.

Q. Had there been any other superintendents you probably would have known of that fact, would you not?

A. No, I would not.

Q. Who was over Mr. Locker?

A. I think Mr. Roberts.

Q. Mr. Roberts' position was what?

A. Well, I really don't know.

Q. Did you have any division manager in those days?

A. I can't recall.

Q. Who was over Mr. Roberts?

A. Well, we had a man by the name of Mr. Virgel.

Q. What was his position?

A. I really don't know.

Q. Who was over Mr. Virgel?

A. There was two men there at the same time, Mr. Virgel and also Mister—I can't recall that name now—Mr. Stambrose was the name.

Q. Did—What did those two men do, Mr. Stambrose and Mr. Virgel?

A. I really don't know.

Q. All you know is that they were up the line of management, is that right?

A. I heard so.

Q. Was there a President of the Company at that time?

1045 A. Yes.

Q. What was his name?

A. Mr. Joy was with Packard for a short time after I was hired.

Q. That would be about what year?

A. 1909.

Q. Then who followed Mr. Joy?

A. Mr. McCauley.

Q. He is presently chairman of the Board, is he not?

A. I think so.

Mr. Dahling: How late did you plan on holding this hearing, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not like the use of that phrase "hold the hearing."

Mr. Dahling: You got a bit rough with us at the last session about being late.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We made up some of the time we lost through being late. I think we will adjourn at about five o'clock. That is in about six minutes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) I believe you testified that in those days there was no medical examination of applicants for jobs?

A. I know I didn't get one.

Q. Do you think it is a good thing to have those examinations?

1046 A. Yes, I do.

Q. They had no employment office?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you think that was advisable—not to have an employment office?

A. Well, at that time the Company was awful small. I don't think they could afford it.

Q. As the Company grew in size, they did have an employment office?

A. They did.

Q. And you think that is quite proper at this time, do you not?

A. I do.

Q. As a matter of fact, the Company could hardly operate at this time without an employment office, could it?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, could you go out on the street today and get help for your departments?

A. I could, as an old foreman, yes.

Q. And you would think that would be the proper thing to do?

A. I don't know.

Q. In other words, you do not know whether the present system, through the employment office, is good or bad?

A. I am just judging by my own department.

1047 Q. The men in your department are sent to you on requisition now, are they not?

A. Yes.

Q. And you feel if you go out on the street you could pick up better men?

A. No, I didn't say that.

Q. Do those men, before they come to you, have to go through certain tests?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you think those tests are advisable?

Mr. Nelson: I do not know what tests he means, Mr. Examiner.

Mr. Dahling: He said they have to go through certain tests.

Mr. Nelson: I do not know what difference it makes as to what he thinks.

Mr. Dahling: I think it has a very distinct bearing.

Mr. Nelson: What difference does it make what this witness thinks?

Mr. Dahling: This witness was put on to show that the situation in the old days was infinitely better because the foremen could do as they saw fit. If they did not like a man, they could fire him and handle their department in any way they desired, and they intend to show that some of these powers have been taken away, and, there-
1048 fore, they should be permitted to organize. There is no question but what that is their purpose.

Mr. Nelson: No, that is not correct.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, may I continue? I think I have a right to state why I am asking these questions.

Mr. Nelson: Okay.

Mr. Dahling: I think we have a perfect right to ask this witness any questions which have any bearing or which may develop at all what that situation was back there, whether it was bad or worse or whether it was indifferent.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I did not think and I do not now think Mr. Nelson's purpose was to indicate that the situation in the "good old days" was better than it is now. Just so there will be no question about it, I will ask Mr. Nelson now.

Mr. Nelson: Certainly not.

Mr. Dahling: They had more power then.

Mr. Nelson: Our position is not one of saying Management is better or worse. Our position is one of saying it is thus-and-so and therefore certain things happen. My brothers are constantly bringing that in on cross-examination of the witness, assuming one thing is better than another. We are attempting to say that we have entered into that in no way, not even indirectly. We just say that certain circumstances were different in the 1049 past than they are now, and whether they are better or worse we are unable to do anything about it. In other words, whenever we state a complaint or a circumstance, we do not necessarily state a complaint against the Company. If my brothers so construe it, they are exceedingly touchy about it. We do not imply anything like what they put on our shoulders.

Mr. Dahling: I can not just let those remarks just go unanswered. Every time they put a complaint in, it is for the express purpose of trying to throw something in the record against the Company.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The next question, please.

Mr. Nelson: We do not stand on that position, Mr. Dahling.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) You believe, do you not, Mr. Wilkins, that it is a good idea to have an employment office at the present time?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I will exclude that in view of counsel's statement.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) You feel, do you not, that it is a good idea to have various other facilities in the Company to assist the foremen in their duties, do you not?

Mr. Nelson: I believe that is objectionable, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer that Yes or 1050 No, if he can.

The Witness: I don't know.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) In other words, you do not know whether it is advisable to have a hospital in the plant?

Mr. Nelson: We raise no issue on that, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer the question.

A. Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) And you think it is advisable also to have a master mechanic available?

Mr. Nelson: I do not see where that is material.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

A. Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) And do you think that there should be a process department?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I will exclude that. If you want to combine several of those things in one general question, you may do so.

Mr. Nelson: Well, I do not know, Mr. Examiner, that our opinion of the details of Management would help the Board or anybody else, except where it impinges upon the obvious moral and legal rights of the foremen.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Next question, please.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Wilkins, what is your department now?

A. It is the marine motors assembly and repairs
1051 and return motors from the field.

Q. In other words, you have three functions in your department; one, the assembly line for marine motors—

A. (Interposing) There is no line.

Q. There is no line?

A. No.

Q. How do they move along?

A. They don't move along.

Q. Then how do you assemble them, one by one?

A. They are assembled on a special stand until the motor is completed.

Q. And they stay on that stand until completed?

A. That's right.

Q. How many work on each one of these engines around this stand?

A. On the preliminary build-up, five.

Q. That is increased later on, is it?

A. No.

Q. They complete the engine?

A. They complete it on the preliminary build-up.

Q. What do you mean on the preliminary build-up?

A. That's the motor when it is first built up, before it goes down to the dynometer run.

Q. It is a complete motor when you get through with that run?

1052 A. Oh, no, it's brought back upstairs and disassembled and checked by Packard inspection and by the Navy.

Q. Then what happens?

A. Then, if it is all right, it is built up there and shipped. If not, and any parts are rejected, a new part is put in.

Q. In other words, before you run your first test, you have a complete motor?

A. We do.

Q. You test that, tear it down and find out if there are any defects and if not, you build it up with the same parts again, do you?

A. That's right.

Q. And that is all done on what you call this stand?

A. That's right.

Q. What are the other two jobs you have in your department?

A. We have motors sent back from the field.

Q. You have to rebuild those?

A. They have to be torn down and inspected by the Navy and the Engineering Department.

Q. Then what happens?

A. That—the parts that is okay will be built up with new parts and make the complete motors.

Q. Then what was the other job you have in your department?

1053 A. Engineering motors.

Q. I did not hear that.

A. Engineering motors.

Q. What do you do?

A. For experimental purposes the motors will be built up and put on the stand and tested and brought back. After they are run, maybe, oh, all the way from fifteen to thirty hours, they are torn down and completely checked by the Engineering Department and see how much wear we get.

Q. You put in whatever changes are needed in the motors and then you test the motors?

A. That's right.

Q. By the way, where are those motors used, do you know?

A. In the PT Boats.

Q. How many men are presently in your department?

A. When I left a week ago yesterday there was 307.

Q. Oh, you are not there now?

A. Well, I have been down here ever since.

Q. That is right. I had forgotten that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will adjourn until tomorrow morning, beginning at nine-thirty.

(Whereupon, at 5 o'clock p. m., the hearing in the above-entitled matter was adjourned to 9:30 a. m., Wednesday, December 27, 1944.)

1054 Room 737, Federal Building,
Detroit, Michigan,
Wednesday, December 27, 1944.

Pursuant to adjournment, the above-entitled matter came on for hearing at 9:30 A. M.

Before:

Samuel H. Jaffee, Trial Examiner.

1056 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are you ready to proceed, gentlemen?

Mr. Dahling: Yes.

JAMES R. WILKINS

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Cross-Examination (Continued).

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Wilkins, where were you born?

A. Canada.

Q. You are a naturalized citizen?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you come to the United States?

A. I came here the 9th day of September, 1909.

Q. Now, you testified with respect to certain men that you asked to be rated as assistant foremen. There were four or five of them. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. How long had those men worked for you before you made these requests?

A. One of them was requested before I took over that department, Mr. Smith.

Q. Mr. Smith? What is his full name?

A. Julius Smith.

Q. Who made the request?

1057 A. The foreman or the general foreman who had the department before I took it over.

Q. Were all the men working in the department when you took it over, the men you asked to be upgraded?

A. Yes, they were.

Q. How long had you known them—For instance, let's take Mr. Wofford. How long had you known him?

A. I never knew him until I took charge of the department.

Q. Just to get that date fixed here again, when did you take charge of the department?

A. November 18.

Q. What year?

A. 1940.

Q. And Roy Habson, how long had you known him?

A. Better than twenty years.

Q. Had he worked with you before?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. How long a period of time did he work with you?

A. Around 20 years.

Q. And Mr. Julius O. Smith, how long had you known him?

A. Fifteen or twenty years.

Q. Had he worked with you during that period of time?

A. On and off.

Q. And they were both good friends of yours, were they not?

1058 A. In a businesslike way, yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Robert Nolan, how long had you known him?

A. Since 1939.

Q. Mr. William Bradley?

A. I have known Mr. Bradley in June 20, 1940.

Q. Mr. Wilkins, how do you fix that date so accurately?

A. That is the day I came back to Packard after I was laid off.

Q. Were all of these men whose names I have mentioned working in the capacity in which they were working when you recommended their upgrading at the time you came to the department?

A. I just don't understand that.

Q. These men were all in the department in 1940 when you became general foreman, is that correct?

A. I think it is.

Q. And what jobs did they have at the time you came to the department?

A. Assembling motors.

Q. And they were just working on the—well, it is not a line, is it?

A. No.

Q. But they were just working on the standards on which you had the motors placed for assembly?

A. And bench work.

1059 Q. And bench work?

A. That's right.

Q. Did you increase their duties and responsibilities after you took over as general foreman?

A. As the department grew, yes.

Q. And the department first started as a very small department?

A. When I took it over we had 88 men.

Q. It increased to how many?

A. We went up to 564.

Q. Who gave these men you just mentioned increased responsibilities and duties?

A. I spoke to the Management and told them I needed more help. They asked me if I had anybody to suggest.

Q. What duties and responsibilities did you give these men?

A. Well, as assistant foremen.

Q. When you say assistant foremen what were their duties?

A. Well, that's to check the job and see it's done right and to see the men are properly placed.

Q. Did they continue to work on the motors?

A. Yes—which, you mean the foremen?

Q. Well, these men.

A. No, no, after they went on that job, no.

Q. And would you say that they became gang lead-

1060 ers at that time?

A. No.

Q. Did they have any right to initiate these queries or reports?

A. Well, I wouldn't say they did.

Q. They were members of the CIO?

A. They were.

Q. And they continued as members of the CIO?

A. They did, until such time as we got them changed.

Q. What is the usual method used in Packard for changing a man's classification? Have they any forms that they use for that purpose?

A. No, I have never seen any.

Q. All you would do would be to ask someone to change them?

A. As a general foreman, I would speak to the superintendent.

Q. You would not, however, prepare any request for a change of status or classification?

A. I never seen any.

Q. You have never seen one in connection with changing a worker from one classification to another?

A. Oh, no.

Q. No?

A. I am wrong, I mean yes.

1061 Q. But you say you have never seen one changing a worker to an assistant foreman?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, you said you spoke to Mr. Reifel, who is Mr. Reifel?

A. At that time he was manager of the Y Division, the marine division.

Q. That is the division in which these marine motors, marine engines were made?

A. That's right.

Q. Who was Mr. Deislinger?

A. He was superintendent at that time.

Mr. Dahling: I will ask the Reporter to mark this document as Company's Exhibit Number 16.

(Thereupon the document referred to was marked for identification as Company's Exhibit Number 16.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Wilkins, I show you a paper marked Company's Exhibit 16, for identification, and ask you if your signature appears thereon?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is that paper?

A. That's a change in classification, form 547 to 114.

Q. You requested that change, did you?

A. I did.

Q. And it was approved?

1062 A. Mr. Deislinger's name is on there too.

Q. I asked you, was it approved and did it go through the change?

A. Yes, Mr. Deislinger was the manager.

Q. You changed this man's rate of pay also, or recommended the change, did you not?

A. No, I don't have anything to do with that at all. The classification takes care of that.

Q. That was ultimately taken care of? I mean, that was automatically taken care of?

A. That's right.

Q. By recommending this change in classification he actually did receive a change in his hourly rate?

A. That's right.

Mr. Nelson: There is no objection if it is material to anything. I do not know what it is offered to show. We admit that it is a record of the Company and it is signed by this witness. No doubt the man's classification was changed. Is that correct, Mr. Wilkins?

The Witness: Yes, that's the Union and the Company's agreement.

Mr. Karasick: Are you offering these at the present time?

Mr. Dahling: I am offering them in evidence, yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received.

1063 (The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit No. 16 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Company's Exhibit 16 is entitled "A request for change in classification." Was that initiated?

A. I just don't quite understand your question.

Q. You asked for this change in classification?

A. No. That is, in other words, if you move a man off a lower classification, why, you got to change his classification to the higher one. That is what that is, 547 classification is a lower rate than the 114 classification.

Q. So you moved this man to a lower—

A. (Interposing) I moved him to a higher classification.

Q. To a higher classification?

A. That is right.

Q. And in so doing—to make that effective, you had to execute this requested change of classification and send it through the regular channels?

A. That is a policy, yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am not clear on this point. Did you make the recommendation to begin with or is it a recommendation?

The Witness: No, it is not. It is a policy.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Who started this thing about that particular change?

1064 The Witness: Well, as you move a man—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) I am talking about this particular one. Whose idea was it to begin with?

The Witness: It might start out from the assistant foreman—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) I am not interested in that. I am talking about this particular case. Whose idea was that?

The Witness: Well, on this particular case I couldn't answer that and be honest about it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Did you initiate that one?

The Witness: Well, I don't remember.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean you do not know?

The Witness: I don't remember. The assistant foreman might come in and say, "I got to have another man on 114."

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Did he in this case?

The Witness: I don't remember.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, proceed.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Wilkins, in an ordinary case, if an assistant foreman came in and said that he had to have a man of a higher classification, as set forth in Company's Exhibit 16, what would you do about it?

A. Why, I would make—in other words, the first thing we do is get the steward in and we would satisfy 1065 both the foreman and the steward so that they would agree on changing this man according to his seniority and his ability.

Q. Who would pick the man in the first instance?

A. As I said, the steward and the foreman get together and they decide the man with the most seniority and then if the foreman says no, that man don't know that job and is not capable of doing that job we will talk it over and sometimes we will try the man on the job and somebody will say all right, give him a try and if he don't make good you can take him off. That is the way we generally operate on that.

Q. Then, if you get together with the steward on the man this form (indicating) requested change in classification, is prepared and signed by you as the general foreman?

A. That is right.

Q. In other words, in the case we have discussed here, you would be following out the recommendation of your assistant foreman?

A. That is right.

Q. And it is possible, of course, that you might disagree with him on that?

A. I just don't understand that question.

Q. The assistant foreman—suppose the assistant foreman asked for an additional man and you felt it was not necessary, what would you do?

A. I would certainly tell him. The first question I
1066 would ask him was, "How many men have you got down there?" He would tell me and right away I would figure out the time study and I would either tell him he needed one or he didn't need it, or that he needed three or whatever it might be.

Q. If you decided that he needed another man, you would sign the requested change for classification?

A. We would make that out, yes.

Q. And if you decided he did not need another man, you would tell him that he would have to get along on what he had?

A. That is right, according to the time.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Reporter, will you mark that as Company's Exhibit 17 for identification?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 17 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Wilkins, I show you Company's Exhibit 17 for identification and ask you if your name appears thereon and whether or not that is your signature?

A. Yes.

Q. What is that paper?

A. That is an order for tools—a request.

Mr. Dahling: I offer Company's Exhibit 17 in evidence.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit No. 17 for identification was received in evidence.)

1067 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Wilkins, for the purpose of the record, will you explain just what Company Exhibit 17 is?

A. That is a T handle wrench.

Q. Well, is it a request that you be supplied a T handle wrench?

A. That's right.

Q. You needed that in connection with the assembly of the engines?

A. That's right.

Q. I see you signed first, apparently, and then there are other names under your signature?

A. Yes, Mr. Benoit.

Q. Mr. Benoit approved your request by signing it that way?

A. And the third name I can't make out. Mr. Deislinger is at the bottom. Mr. Bowen is on the side.

Q. And their signatures would be their approval of your request for those tools?

A. That's right.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: There are three signatures besides yours?

The Witness: There are four signatures besides mine.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Three, besides yours?

The Witness: No, four.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Oh, I see, there is one at the 1068 side. All right.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Did you initiate that request?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You felt that the tools there were necessary for the work in your department?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you use those tools for?

A. Well, for tightening nuts.

Q. Was that to replace tools that had been worn out?

A. It might be and it might be for a new tool.

Q. You might have decided that a new tool would work better in your department and you made a request for it?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, if you felt anything would improve the work in your department, you do not hesitate to make a recommendation that that be carried out?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have made such recommendations?

A. Yes.

Q. And they have been carried out?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What kind of tools were they?

The Witness: Well, for instance, pushers. There are splines in the crank shaft and splines on the hub; in other words, serrations.

1069 Trial Examiner Jaffee: What are serrations?

The Witness: That's to keep the hub from turning.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is that a large tool or a small one?

The Witness: That's quite a large tool.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, go ahead.

The Witness: And special wrenches.

Mr. Dahling: I will ask the Reporter to mark this Company's Exhibit Number 18.

(Thereupon the document referred to was marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 18.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Wilkins, I show you Company Exhibit 18, for identification, and ask you what it is.

A. This is a help requisition for two janitors.

Q. Is that signed by you?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that form, is that the form that would be used by you if you thought you needed more help in your department?

A. If your time study called for it, yes.

Q. And if some of your workers did not show up, would you send through a requisition of this character?

A. If you was down below your labor-load.

Q. I note that that was also approved by Mr. Benoit, and whose signature is that (indicating)?

A. That's Mr. Deislinger's.

1070 Q. Mr. Deislinger's?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And this help requisition was initiated by you in the first instance?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they approved your recommendation?

A. That's right.

Mr. Nelson: I have no objection.

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, in connection with the proffered exhibit, I would like to note that there has already been received in the record Company Exhibit Number 11, which is also a requisition for help, the same type as the document now being offered in evidence. I hardly see the necessity for having in the record a second copy of the same exhibit, particularly in view of the witness' testimony.

Mr. Nelson: That was for a replacement, as I noticed on the face of it, and I assumed that was the reason it was duplicated. I do not recall what the first one was for.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Received.

(The document heretofore marked for identification as Company Exhibit No. 18 was received in evidence.)

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark this Company's Exhibit No. 19?

1071 (Thereupon the document above referred to was marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 19.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Wilkins, I show you a card marked Company Exhibit 19, for identification, and ask you if your signature appears thereon, and what it is?

A. Yes, my signature appears on here and this is a clearance card.

Q. What is the purpose of the use of that card?

A. This card is when a man is leaving a department, either to be transferred or leaving the employment of the Company.

Q. Let us say that a man has been given a twenty-four hour notice and it goes through. Does he receive a card of that character?

A. (No response.)

Q. You do not understand my question?

A. Sorry, I didn't get it.

Q. Well, we will say a man is found incompetent and given a twenty-four hour notice, and the steward of the Union does not object and the man is cleared from the rolls. Is a card of this character prepared in that case?

A. Yes.

Q. Who prepares that card?

A. The foreman.

Q. What does the foreman do with the card after it

1072 is prepared?

A. The foreman either takes it over to the employment office or sends it over.

Q. Does he sometimes give it to the man to take over?

A. No, they stopped that about a month ago in our division.

Q. They previously gave it to the man himself?

A. They used to, yes.

Q. And he uses that card, I presume, to pick up what pay he has coming to him?

A. What the procedure is following that, I don't know.

Q. I notice on this card you gave the man a rating as to his ability and deportment. That is done by you or the foreman who makes out the card?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: I offered the exhibit in evidence.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I have not seen it yet.

Mr. Dahling: I am sorry I did not show you this one.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received in evidence.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit No. 19 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Now, Mr. Wilkins, in addition to these forms, the order request and the requested change in classification and this clearance card, you from time 1073 to time are called upon to execute additional forms and reports, are you not?

A. What would the nature of them be?

Q. Would you be called upon at times to make out an indirect labor time report?

A. That is right.

Q. And also an expense requisition?

A. Yes.

Q. And that would be if you needed articles for your department?

A. File handles, brooms, rags.

Q. You also are sometimes called upon to sign a request for leave of absences?

A. Yes.

Q. And to send through tools and other things you use in your department for repairs?

A. Yes.

Q. And you make out a regular form and sign it in that connection?

A. Yes.

Q. And also in some cases you have to make out a special time allowance?

A. Yes.

Q. And the time exception report that I believe is in evidence here which you have heard about?

1074 A. Yes.

Q. And in addition to that there are perhaps other forms that you also sign?

A. There may be.

Q. Mr. Wilkins, have you, as foreman, also requested changes in your department which would require an appropriation by the Company to make them?

A. Yes.

Q. And after you have made that recommendation, what is done?

A. Well, if Management or the superintendent or the manager thinks the change is all right, why, they will approve it.

Q. And if that change is made, it might cost a considerable sum of money?

A. Yes.

Q. And as I get your testimony, you have made such requests in your department?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Can you recall the cost of some of the improvements you suggested that were put through?

A. No, I do not.

Q. But some of them might have cost the Company a considerable amount of money?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not have any idea of 1075 what "considerable" means in this connection.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Would you say that some of the improvements might cost $2,000 or $3,000?

A. It might have been.

Q. It might be even higher than that?

A. I wouldn't know.

Q. You feel, of course, that it is part of your duties and responsibilities as a general foreman, to make these recommendations where you feel it will be helpful to the manufacturing of the product in your department?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Wilkins, what, if anything, did you have to do with the original laying out of a department that you might be called upon to supervise?

A. Nothing more than to suggest.

Q. When you say you make a suggestion, is that matter taken up with you at all?

A. Sometimes.

Q. And your ideas and opinions are solicited?

A. Yes.

Q. And, of course, when they are solicited, you tell them whether you think it will work or not, that is, their proposed layout?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark that as Company's Exhibit 20?

1076

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 20 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) I do not know whether you can see the extent of this or not, Mr. Wilkins, but I show you a blue print marked Company's Exhibit 20 for identification and ask you if your signature appears thereon and what it is.

A. Yes.

Q. And if you want to get down from the witness stand to examine it, you may.

A. Yes, that is my signature.

Q. What is this blue print?

A. That is the layout of the second floor of the motor assembly.

Q. That is one of your departments?

A. Yes.

Q. This was presented to you after it was prepared by some other department?

A. Well, that is the suggestion of mine, to be honest about it, that I suggested.

Q. That is, you suggested this layout which appears on this Exhibit Number 20 and your suggestion was carried out?

A. It was on that one, yes.

Q. It was on this one?

A. Yes.

1077

Q. And are you still operating substantially on this same layout?

A. Just about the same.

Q. How long ago was that that you made this recommendation?

A. Between four and six months ago.

Q. Between four and six months ago?

A. That's right.

Q. This is a very recent layout?

A. That's right.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, would you care for one of these up on your desk?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

Mr. Dahling: I will offer Exhibit 20 in evidence.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Mr. Nelson: I would like to ask the witness if he got any pay for this?

The Witness: That's the sad part about it.

Mr. Dahling: I did not get the passing remarks.

Mr. Nelson: It was an important one. I asked him if he got any pay for this stroke of genius here, and he said that's the sad part of it.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) What is your average pay, Mr. Wilkins?

A. $338.00 a month for five days.

1078 Q. What has your average been on the fifty-hour basis that Packard is working on now?

A. Around four seventy-five.

Q. Between four seventy-five and five hundred?

A. That's right.

Q. Do you consider it part of your duty and part of your responsibility and something for which you are paid to make these recommendations to Management?

A. You can say that two ways, yes and no. When a man is capable of making improvements like that, why, the Company ought to consider him.

Q. In other words, you think that you should have an increase in salary?

A. Once in awhile, yes.

Q. Do you feel that you should be promoted out of the foreman's rank?

A. No.

Q. But just be recognized by a change in your pay schedule?

A. Once in awhile.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Company Exhibit 20 is received in evidence.

(The document heretofore marked for identification as Company's Exhibit 20 was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Tell me, Mr. Wilkins, would you say that the recommendations you made and which 1079 were incorporated in Exhibit 20 would in any way reduce the manpower that was necessary to be used by your department?

A. Yes, if a general foreman knows his business, naturally, you would place your operations where they belong.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you read that answer, please?

(Answer read.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Let me put it this way, you would feel that you would want to save and conserve manpower?

A. Yes, both ways—to work for your own interest and the Company's interest.

Q. These improvements that you suggested, might they also reduce costs?

A. Yes, they would.

Q. And bring about a greater efficiency?

A. Some.

Q. Now, will you tell us, Mr. Wilkins, and you can use this exhibit, will you point out what suggestions of yours were incorporated? What was your general idea in revamping the setup of your department?

A. Well, it's a long story. It started from the engineering department; they wanted more floor space on the third floor.

Q. So a layout had to be made for the third floor?

A. Part of the third floor had to be brought 1080 down to the second floor.

Q. Then you had a more or less synchronization or correlation of those operations?

A. It meant revamping the second floor.

Q. Now, you say that you assemble those engines on standards—

A. (Interposing) No, on stands.

Q. Stands, yes, I beg your pardon. Do they show on this exhibit?

A. Yes.

Q. Are these those stands? (Indicating.)

A. No, right over here. (Indicating.)

Q. You are now pointing to the top of the exhibit at rectangles marked "Motor Assembly Jack"?

A. That's right.

Q. There are a number of those extending along the top of the exhibit. That would be what direction?

A. That would be east.

Mr. Nelson: There are ten of them there, are there not? They are not all stands down here, are they? Those ten are the only ones there?

The Witness: There are some stands down there, Mr. Nelson.

Q. (By Mr. Dabling) You have marked in these rectangles at the top of the exhibit, which would be 1081 the east side of the building, "Motor Assembly Jack". That is the stand, is it?

A. That's right.

Q. There appears to be one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, sixteen at the top of the exhibit, and there are also others on the west side of the building, assembly jacks?

A. Yes.

Q. How many of these assembly jacks do you have on this floor, as shown by this Exhibit 20?

A. There are 19 now.

Q. 19 now?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the operation in assembling the engine by use of these assembly jacks? How do you build it up?

A. You put the crank case in the jack and bolt it down.

Q. That is the first operation?

A. That's right.

Q. From there on, what happens?

A. You assemble the crank shaft and connecting rods.

Q. Those operations are carried through by the workers in your department?

A. That's right.

Q. Not to carry this out too long, you gradually 1082 build up the engine until you have a completed engine standing on your jack?

A. That's right.

Q. The workers who do this job, are they capable of doing every operation required to build up that particular engine?

A. After they are at it awhile, yes.

Q. And their work, however, is broken down into just a series of operations that they carry on?

A. Not on the jacks.

Q. Your workers gradually get to the point where they can attach all these various parts?

A. Yes.

Q. These parts come in to you from where?

A. The machine shops, inspection.

Q. You have them on racks or trucks near these engines?

A. Yes.

Q. About how long are these engines, would you say?

A. Between six and seven feet.

Q. The engines themselves are between six and seven feet?

A. Yes.

Q. How many men work around an engine?

A. Five.

Q. You have so synchronized their work that they do not trip over each other, Mr. Wilkins?

A. That's right.

1083 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Now, Mr. Wilkins, I am not going to go into great detail on these powers and duties and responsibilities that you may have as general foreman, but I would like to ask you about some of them. In the first instance, of course, you are responsible for the production and maintenance of production in your department?

A. Yes.

Q. You have to see you get the engines out on schedule?

A. That is what you are paid for.

Q. And likewise, you are responsible for the quality?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you found a workman was not doing a proper job, he would probably hear from you, wouldn't he?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have to correlate the work of the workers under your supervision. In other words, you have to see that you have the right number of men around these jacks and that there are no duplication of work that each man knows his job and can do it. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. I presume that you are constantly spending a great deal of your time on the floor here to see that they do the job right?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you should run into a breakdown or 1084 something of that sort, of course, you have to take action to see that that is remedied and get the proper departments in working on it and so forth?

A. Yes.

Q. And if there is any problem arising out of the day's work, you make a report and transmit that through to the next shift and the general foreman on the next shift?

A. We do not have any general foreman on the next shift.

Q. Then you have a foreman on the next shift?

A. Yes.

Q. And you would transmit that through to the foreman on the next shift?

A. Yes.

Q. By the way, what shift are you on, Mr. Wilkins?

A. I am on what they call a day shift.

Q. And that starts when?

A. Seven-thirty in the morning.

Q. Are there as many men on the night shift as there are on the day shift?

A. Not now.

Q. In other words, there has been a curtailment and a cutting down in the production necessarily?

A. Yes.

Q. And you are responsible for the safety and cleanliness of your particular section or department?

1085 A. Yes.

Q. And you see that it is kept clean too, don't you?

A. I always try to do my duties.

Q. Can you or can you not recommend increases in classifications for the workers which would bring about an increase in pay? I believe that you testified that you could do that and that you can make such recommendations, is that right?

A. You can recommend a classification change?

Q. And that classification change might bring about or result in an increase of pay for the particular employees?

A. It just depends on whether it is a lower classification or a higher one.

Q. In other words, you can also demote a man or recommend his demotion?

A. According to the classifications.

Q. If you had more men of high classifications than you needed, but you needed some of a lower classification, would it be possible for you to recommend a demotion? Let me put it this way: We will say you are laying off men, your production has been cut down and you cannot use as many men in the higher classification as you have. Could you recommend that they be retained on at a lower classification?

A. Your operation sheet calls for so many men in each classification.

1086 Q. Well, we will say that your operation sheets are made up on the basis of producing a certain number of engines and then the number of engines to be produced is cut. That would result in your having too many in your department, would it not?

A. You are supposed to keep your labor-load right.

Q. In keeping your labor-load right, if you find you have too many men in your department, what do you do?

A. Naturally, you tell the superintendent that you have some men you have to get rid of.

Q. Then he would be supposed to transfer them out?

A. If he didn't tell him, he would tell you.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Dahling, do you mind asking him where the operation sheet is made and where he gets it?

Mr. Dahling: I will be glad to.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) You are talking about an operation sheet? Do you know where that comes from?

A. That comes from the planning department.

Q. And they are the ones that—that is the department which plans the work?

A. That is right.

Q. And what is this operation sheet?

A. Well, it is a sheet telling you how many parts have to be used on that certain operation or the whole motor.

Q. And it sets up—

1087 A. (Interposing) The tools and everything.

Q. It sets up in detail the various processes to be followed?

A. And the classification, that is right.

Q. And the classification of workers who are to do this work?

A. That is right.

Q. In other words, it is a detailed breakdown of the operations and processes which are necessary to build up this engine?

A. That is right.

Mr. Nelson: Including the tools.

Mr. Dahling: And it includes the tools that would be needed?

Mr. Nelson: And the classification of workers.

Mr. Dahling: I think he so testified.

Mr. Nelson: What has the time study to do with that? Mr. Dahling, if you will ask these questions, I would not need to go back to that.

Mr. Dahling: I would just as soon ask them, yes.

Mr. Nelson: It will help both of us if you ask that.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Are you familiar with the time studies made from time to time?

A. Yes.

Q. Have any of those been made in your department?

1088 A. Yes.

Q. When you hear that a time study is to be made, what do you do?

A. Well, you just as a foreman or a general foreman, are supposed to see the job is working according to your operation sheet.

Q. In other words, that the job is going through according to the routing in the operation sheet?

A. That is right.

Q. What else do you do besides that?

A. That is about all.

Q. Do you discuss the selection of the type of operator?

A. No, you do not.

Q. Who selects the operator?

A. Well, as a rule, the job is set up so that you start at a certain place and the assembly follows it through. What men are on the assembly, those are the men that are timed.

Q. But your place in the picture would be to see that the job was operating in accordance with the routing, and in accordance with the operation sheet?

A. That is right.

Q. And also to see that such materials as might be needed were on hand?

A. Sure.

1089 Q. And that you had just the ordinary situation there and not an unusual or an exceptional situation, is that right?

A. That is what you are paid for.

Q. And you do that?

A. Certainly.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark that as Company's Exhibit 21 for identification?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit 21 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Wilkins, I show you a pamphlet marked Company's Exhibit 21 for identification and ask you if you have received that pamphlet?

A. Yes.

Q. How long ago was that?

A. Oh, between six months and a year.

Mr. Dahling: I offer Company's Exhibit 21 in evidence.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Mr. Nelson: No objection.

Mr. Dahling: Do you wish to see it, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Q. Mr. Wilkins, you received this from the Company?

The Witness: Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The pamphlet entitled "Time study at Packard" which bears the designation at 1090 the bottom of the cover Loral 190 UAW, CIO and Packard Motor Car Company, 1944 is received in evidence.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit No. 21 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Did you read this pamphlet?

A. Yes.

Q. I notice on page 16 this statement: (Reading):

"The man who makes the time study is called an observer. His first step is to report to the department supervisor and advise him what particular operation he wishes to time."

Is that the process that is followed?

A. No.

Q. What actually is done?

A. Well, the superintendent will tell you that the time study is coming up to your department.

Q. And also tells you as to what operations they are going to study?

A. Sometimes.

Q. And if he doesn't then you presume then that the time study people will tell you when they come in?

A. They have to see the steward first.

Q. That is true. They also see you, do they not?

A. Yes.

Q. This continues (reading):

1091 "The supervisor then informs the employee working on the desired operation that the study is to be made."

1092 Mr. Nelson: What page is that?

Mr. Dahling: That is page 17.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Is that the operation you follow?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, of course, a time study has to do with the operations of a worker, does it not?

A. That's right.

Q. By the way, you do no manual work, do you? You do no work on the machines or with the workers?

A. I do not think I have time.

Q. I am just asking that.

A. No.

Q. Do you have an office?

A. A so-called office.

Q. You do not like it?

A. It's all right.

Q. But you think it could be improved?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Do the foremen under you work on the machines?

A. No.

Q. Now, a time study, as I have said before, is really an operation to determine the time that it should take for a particular process, is it not?

A. That's right.

Q. It relates to the work of the worker?

1093 A. That's right.

Q. I presume that the CIO is very active in connection with these time studies, is that right?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And the steward is always present while there is a time study being made?

A. Most of the time.

Q. Their purpose, I presume, is to see that it is fair from the Union standards, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now a time study, once having been made, that has to be approved by the Union, does it not?

A. Yes.

Q. We will say it is approved and put in operation and then the workers claim that they have too much work to do, what do they do then?

A. That's settled before the time study is handed to the foreman.

Q. Yes, but if it should develop later on that a worker complains that they have speeded him up on this particular job and it cannot be produced within the time limited, where would he go, to you, to make his complaint?

A. Probably he would go to the assistant foreman.

Q. And the assistant foreman would take the matter up with you?

1094 A. That's right, his foreman.

Q. And then through that chain, it would get up to you?

A. That's right.

Q. What would you do in that case?

A. I don't know; I never had a case like that.

Q. I presume they would have some method whereby they could make a recheck of that time study?

A. No doubt.

Q. If you find a man who is unsatisfactory and wish him removed from the roll, you can have that done, can you not?

A. No.

Q. What do you do?

A. You can suggest it.

Q. You prepare a document in connection with that matter?

A. A query form.

Q. A query is an inter-office communication at Packard, is it not?

A. That's right.

Q. You have been there a long time, do you know where that term originated?

A. It's been there ever since I have been there.

Q. A query is really a report or communication, when you come right down to it, is it not?

A. It's a form of some kind of information.

Q. You prepare that query, then what do you do

1095 with the query?

A. Well, if I remember right, I don't think I have made out two of them since I have been at Packard.

Q. You do not have very much trouble with the men in your department, do you, Mr. Wilkins?

A. Not very much.

Q. Have you made any out since you have taken over this department in 1940?

A. I think there was one.

Q. Was that a discharge case?

A. Oh, no, a very simple case.

Q. When you say a very simple case, what do you mean?

A. Well, we try to keep the department clean and neat and have the men keep their lunch boxes in their coat room and this man was stubborn and he wouldn't leave his lunch box in the coat room, so we made out a query, but it didn't get any place with it anyway.

Q. Did you demand a hearing?

A. No, they sent the Labor Relations man over on it and he checked it and it just died.

Q. By the way, did you discipline the man or did you ask that he be removed from the roll, in your query?

A. No, I just made the complaint.

Q. And left the matter of penalty to the Labor Relations?

A. That's right.

1096 Q. You made no recommendation in that respect?

A. That's right.

Q. But I do not suppose that if you found a man who was incompetent, that you would hesitate for a moment to recommend his removal?

A. No, I wouldn't.

Q. But you say you have had very little trouble of that sort of thing?

A. Very little trouble.

Q. Consequently, you have had no particular occasion to discipline any workers in your department?

A. Oh, there might have been a few odd cases. The steward and I usually get together on that.

Q. You work that out in your own department?

A. Pretty well.

Q. It does not usually go higher than that?

A. No, for two reasons: It's better to settle a thing in your department, and not have them talking about it, than it is to get a lot of men talking about it and get them sore about it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is that one reason?

The Witness: That's one big reason. That's why I do it, I don't know what other foremen do.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): I thought you said there were two reasons?

1097 A. Well, in other words, if you have a group of men that get disturbed, why, naturally, you are going to lose production and that hurts efficiency in your department. That's the big reason.

Q. And you want to get that matter, whatever it is, settled at once so there will be an end to it?

A. Why, certainly.

Q. So you take it up with the steward with that in mind and you have been quite successful with that in your department, have you not, Mr. Wilkins?

A. I have a very broad-minded steward.

Q. So you can get along very well with him?

A. I can collectively bargain with him.

Q. I suppose you would not hesitate for a minute if a man was not doing his job, you would tell him so in no uncertain terms?

A. I have.

Q. I believe that. And you have been called upon at times to do that?

A. I have.

Q. Mr. Wilkins, I believe you testified that you are a member of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you one of the original members?

A. No, I don't think I was.

1098 Q. Have you belonged to any other labor organizations?

A. No.

Q. You, I suppose, also believe in Union principles?

A. I believe in collective bargaining in good faith.

Q. That is one principle of Unionism, collective bargaining?

A. That's right.

Q. Are there any other principles that you would say should be included?

A. Well, that's the only one I am familiar with.

Q. Through collective bargaining, I suppose you would try to establish some of these other principles of Unionism, would you not?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, now, wait a minute. Which others?

Mr. Dahling: Well, such as seniority.

The Witness: Not altogether on seniority, no.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): What are your ideas on seniority, Mr. Wilkins?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is, answering briefly, if possible.

The Witness: Ability.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Solely?

A. (No response.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is that a question?

1099 Mr. Dahling: I thought he shook his head.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I know, but the reporter does not get it when he shakes his head. Will you read the question?

(Question read.)

The Witness: No.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): What other considerations should be considered, other than ability?

A. Well, his seniority should come in there.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And length of service?

The Witness: Length of service, yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Now, we will say that two people have had the same length of service; if that is true, what should govern, in your opinion?

A. His ability.

Q. Who would be the judge of that ability?

A. That would be handled in bargaining rights.

Q. You say it would be handled in bargaining, you mean the FAA and the Company would sit down across the table and discuss the matter?

A. Sure.

Q. We will say they did that and they could come to no agreement?

A. I don't think that's possible.

Q. Let us just assume they could not come to an 1100 agreement. What should control?

A. I don't know.

Q. Should the Union's idea of this man's ability control?

A. No.

Q. Should the Company's idea or the Company's opinion as to this man's ability control?

A. No.

Q. You would just leave it up in the air, then?

A. No, I would not; I would leave it between the two.

Q. Well, we will say they cannot agree, what would be your next step?

A. I still say that sensible people can bargain.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Wilkins, will you agree to this extent, that somewhere, some time, somebody has to decide something?

The Witness: Yes, I will agree to that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Otherwise, you will keep talking forever, is that right?

The Witness: If you bargain in good faith, no.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Wilkins, are you not familiar with cases in the CIO where there has been no agreement on this question of seniority and strikes have resulted?

Mr. Nelson: Do you mean seniority and ability?

1101 Mr. Dahling: Yes, on the carrying out of their seniority provisions in the CIO contract. If he knows.

The Witness: I don't know.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): You know of no such case?

A. No.

Q. I assume if the parties could not agree after long negotiations, the Union might feel that it had to take drastic action?

A. I don't know.

Q. So, if you got to a situation where the Company had two men "X" and "Y" who had the same length of service and the Company took the position that "X" had the greater ability and the Union, the FAA took the position that "Y" had the greater ability and should be promoted and the parties could not agree after innumerable conferences and discussions, you don't know what would happen?

A. No.

Q. Have you any thought on what might happen?

A. No.

Q. I presume, Mr. Wilkins, you are loyal to the Union or would be loyal to the Union?

A. As far as honesty, yes.

Q. And also loyal to the members of the Union?

A. Yes.

Q. And you believe in the majority rule controlling 1102 in the Union?

A. If they are honest about it, yes.

Q. And if the majority should happen to take action which you felt was improper you would feel you should go along with it?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, we will say that the FAA, your Chapter of the FAA, by a vote, decided to strike because Packard refused to promote "Y" rather than promote "X," in the example I have just given you, and you felt that that was all wrong, would you go out on a strike or would you remain in the plant working?

A. If the majority did, yes.

Q. You would follow the rule of the majority, whether you thought it was right or wrong, is that true?

A. You would have to go with the majority.

Q. And you would go with the majority, even though you felt it was detrimental to the interests of the Company?

Mr. Nelson: Insisting on the better man would not be against the interests of the Company.

The Witness: If the cause what they were striking for was right, yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): What, if in your opinion, what they were striking for was not right?

A. As a Board member why we would do as much
1103 as possible to prevent a strike.

Q. We will say that you cannot prevent the strike and the majority votes that there shall be a strike and you feel that the strike is unjustified and you attempted to prevent it, would you go out on strike?

A. If there wasn't anything left to do, yes.

Q. What else would there be left to do?

A. There wouldn't be anything.

Q. If the Foreman's Association of America went out on strike and had this—I don't believe you call it a picket line—and this group of foremen around the gates, you wouldn't go through that group and go back to work?

A. No.

Q. If you thought that one of your foremen or assistant foremen was incompetent or unwilling to do his work, I believe you testified that you would seek to have him removed?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. If, however, the Foreman's Association of America then fell into the picture and decided that the man was competent or for some reason was against releasing him, would you try to have him removed from the roll?

A. If I was right I would still stick to right.

1104 Q. And even though the majority of the Union might say that you were wrong?

A. It wouldn't make one bit of difference to me, I would stick to what is right.

Q. What is your position in the Union?

A. I am on the Board.

Q. When you say the Board, what Board?

A. That is twelve members.

Q. That is the Executive Board?

A. That is right.

Q. And that would be the Executive Board of the International Union, wouldn't it?

A. No, that is Packard Local No. 5, Chapter 5.

Q. Oh, I see, you are on the Executive Board of the Packard Chapter?

A. That is right.

Q. Not the National Board?

A. No.

Q. I think it was Mr. Traen who testified that if you did not agree with the majority you were very likely to be removed from office?

A. You might be.

Q. He testified that he was opposed to the strike this spring and tried to stop it. Do you recall that?

A. I believe he did.

1105 Q. At the same time he was threatened with removal from office if he insisted too strongly in his efforts?

A. Yes.

Q. And you would, I presume, take the same position that he did and go out with the strikers in a case of that sort?

A. When you are right, yes.

Q. Even though you opposed the reason for the strike?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, I presume—let us get back to the example of the assistant foreman that you say you would fire, regardless of what the majority of the Union felt.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Fire or recommend?

Mr. Dahling: Well, there is some argument about that. I will use the word recommend.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): You stated, did you not, that if you had a brother member in the Foreman's Association who was assistant foreman in your department and you felt that he was incompetent and was not working properly you would recommend his removal from the roll, did you not?

A. The first thing we do is take that up with the Board.

Q. When you say the "Board," what Board?

A. Of the Union.

Q. The Board of the Union?

A. Yes.

1106 Q. That is the Foreman's Association of America?

A. That is right.

Q. What do you do at this Board meeting?

A. We state—

Q. (Interposing): When you take the matter up with the Board?

A. We state our case right in front of all the men on the Board.

Q. You state your case and take the matter up with the Board?

A. My case? In other words, the man's case, what he is able to do, what is wrong with him and let them be the judge.

Q. And then we will say that they vote that you are correct in your analysis of the situation and the man should be removed from the roll, what do you do then?

A. Recommend or suggest to the superintendent.

Q. We will say that they feel that you are wrong about that and that the man should not be removed from the roll, what would you do?

A. I never had any of those cases.

Q. Say you did have such a case?

A. I wouldn't know.

Q. You wouldn't know what you would do?

A. No.

1107 Q. Is that the answer you want to make to that question?

A. Right now, yes.

Q. You want to leave it right there?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, we will say that this situation occurs, the FAA disagrees with you on the release of a man you feel should be released and discharged and they go on a strike because the man is discharged, would you go on the strike with them?

A. I don't quite understand the question.

Q. Well, we will say that the majority of the FAA think that a man is competent but you still think that the man is incompetent and want him discharged and the Company goes ahead and discharges him and then the Foreman's Association strikes because of that, would you go out on that strike?

A. I would have to.

Mr. Dahling: That is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is eleven o'clock, gentlemen, we will take a ten-minute recess.

(Recess.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will resume, gentlemen.

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Mr. Wilkins, with respect to Exhibit 20, this blueprint, how much time did you 1108 spend with your division manager on it?

A. Not over five minutes.

Q. Did he have any blueprints present or anything of that kind?

A. No.

Q. What did your exchange consist of, just an oral exchange, just by word of mouth?

A. That's right.

Q. Who else was there at the time, other than yourself and your division manager?

A. I know Mr. Benoit was there, the superintendent, but who else, I can't recall.

Q. I believe Exhibit 19 carries only your signature, is that correct?

A. That's right, it does.

Q. It is a card for what purpose?

A. For clearance and an employee to be sent to the employment office.

Q. Whether he should go or not has already been decided before this card is made out?

A. That's right.

Q. This is just the paper, evidence that it gets into the right place?

A. That's right.

Q. But the decision is made on a different card and 1109 a different form?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Wilkins, you were asked a series of suppositious questions by Mr. Dahling, just at the close of his cross-examination, just before the recess?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, coming back to the start of the series, which generally started with the situation where you had a foreman under you and you and the foremen were members of the Chapter of the Association and it was your honest opinion that on the man's performance and your observation of him, he did not measure up to a fair discharge of his duties. Do you remember that situation?

A. Yes.

Q. The question generally was whether you would be faithful to your obligation to the Company and report the man and recommend his discharge. Would you?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you stick to it as long as it was reasonably right to do so?

A. Yes.

Q. Both in the Union, with the Company, and elsewhere?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let me ask you, then, suppose after you thought so and after, in a preliminary 1110 fashion, you indicated that and took it up at a meeting with your Union, while they thought so and you did not, would you or would you not still recommend that man's discharge from the Company?

The Witness: I would.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Now, when it comes to the rule of the majority, Mr. Wilkins, I suppose you are aware that some twenty-two million Americans voted for Dewey and are still paying taxes?

A. Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Mr. Wilkins, as I have understood your testimony, you have been a foreman in the Packard plant a long time before the Association organized a chapter there, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were a general foreman, I believe, at the time the Association organized their foremen there?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you say there have been any changes or improvements just by virtue of the fact of organization alone?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: I object to the question as being irrelevant and immaterial. This is not a case in which we are going into matters of that character. This is a case in which these people were to have collective bar-
1111 gaining and representation. Furthermore, the question is entirely too general in character and covers too much territory.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you read the last questions and answers, please?

(The last two questions and answers read.)

Mr. Nelson: My next question would be to indicate what benefits were noted?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It may stay for the time being, subject to a motion to strike.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): What benefits have you noted from the fact of organization of the foremen alone?

A. Better understanding among foremen.

Q. Do you mean by "benefits" that the men themselves got all the benefits or that there are benefits to the Company and the hourly-rated employees as well? In other words, is it an all 'round benefit or is it a benefit located in just one place?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dabling: Mr. Examiner, I submit the question is entirely too general, whether there were benefits or whether there were all 'round benefits—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Nelson, have you finished questioning on that line?

Mr. Nelson: I have finished that question, yes.

1112 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Have you finished along that line?

Mr. Nelson: I can ask him to be specific as to what benefits there were to the Company and to the men?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): What benefits to the Company did you note?

A. If there is any kind of trouble develops we can get to the foreman and work with one another in much better harmony than we used to work before.

Q. Now, is that at the expense of the men that are under you in any way? Does it also benefit the men?

A. Well, I wouldn't say it benefited the men such a whole lot.

Q. Does it harm them in any way?

A. No.

Q. Now, you say you get together and work better together; do you mean by that on matters of the Association only or matters—

Mr. Donovan: Just a minute, Mr. Examiner, I think at this point and issue of this kind the question should not be leading. I think the witness is having a hard enough time giving us the benefits as it is. I do not think that he should be led and coached.

Mr. Nelson: I will ask the question in a different 1113 form on objection to counsel.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): What do you mean when you say the foremen worked better together? What kind of work?

A. Well, in doing their duties.

Q. In the plant?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, would you say in your experience there that an outright recognition of the foremen as the bargaining agent of supervision at Packard plant would continue and increase these benefits?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: I believe that is all.

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling); Mr. Wilkins, the officers of the Union of your Chapter are elected by the members?

A. Yes.

Q. And the Executive Board, of which you are a member, is likewise elected by the members?

A. Yes.

Q. Would these officers and members of the Board also be subject to removal by the members?

A. They could be.

Q. If the FAA was given collective bargaining, would it be your idea that there should be a representative of the foremen similar to the stewards in the CIO Union?

1114 A. Yes.

Q. Would that representative also be elected to that job?

A. Could be.

Q. Would you think that he should be?

A. Yes.

Q. He, likewise, would be subject to removal by the membership if he was elected by the membership?

A. Could be.

Q. How many of these representatives or stewards of the Union of Foremen would you think would be necessary in the Packard plant?

A. Well, I could only speak for my own division and another division. I do not know how large the other divisions are, but speaking for my own division and another division, I think one man could cover it very nicely.

Q. You mean, one can could cover each division?

A. No, one man for the "S" and "Y" Division, both.

Q. Do you know how many divisions there are in the Packard plant?

A. No, not offhand, I don't.

Q. Would you say there are approximately twenty or twenty-two?

A. I wouldn't even say that; I never checked on it.

1115 Q. You do not know?

A. No.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: How many foremen, general foremen and assistant foremen are there in the "S" and "Y" Divisions together, approximately?

The Witness: Roughly saying, I would say there are around fifty or fifty-five. That's a rough guess.

Mr. Dahling: That is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Any further questions of this witness?

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): Mr. Wilkins, I notice that at the right-hand corner of the Company's Exhibit 20, at the bottom, is the word "Approved" and under that word there appears your signature and the signatures of several other persons. In order that the record may be clear on the point, I wonder if you would examine that exhibit, which I now hand you, and tell us who those other persons are, whose signatures appear there at that place?

A. The first one is Mr. Deislinger, the second one is mine.

Q. Mr. Deislinger has been identified in the record, his title has been given?

A. Yes, he is the manager.

Q. All right, who is the next?

A. The next is mine, then Mr. Benoit's.

Q. Mr. Benoit is who?

1116 A. He is the superintendent.

Q. Yes?

A. The last two are not very plain. I can't make them out. It looks like Mr. Deislinger again, even down below Mr. Benoit again.

Q. Is that Mr. Ayers?

A. Oh, yes, that's Mr. Ayers.

Q. Who is Mr. Ayers?

A. Well, Mr. Ayers, I think he is the head of the Planning Department.

Q. You are not sure of the signature immediately above the signature of Mr. Ayers on the document, are you?

A. No, it looks like Mr. Deislinger and I think it is.

Mr. Karasick: No further questions.

Mr. Nelson: I will ask the reporter to mark this document Petitioner's Exhibit No. 40.

(The document above referred to was marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 40.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Wilkins, you testified that there were certain benefits and improvements from the foremen associating together. Will you list them for me?

A. I didn't hear you.

Mr. Dahling: Would you read the question, please?

(Question read.)

The Witness: Well, one outstanding one is to get 1117 results. If you want stock or if you want to get something repaired, why, you can get it done in a hurry.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): In other words, your position is that being a member of the same Union, with the other foremen, the other foremen will get together, will get things out faster for you than if you were not associating with them?

A. There is a feeling in there that we should help one another.

Q. And he should help because of his Union loyalty to you?

A. It brings a more friendly relation.

Q. And that comes from your just having these meetings together, is that right?

A. I wouldn't say that.

Q. Well, I thought you testified that because of this Association these results occurred?

A. I didn't say that it was because of the meetings, though.

Q. It was not because of the meetings, it was just the feeling that you are members of the same Union organization that brings that about?

A. I would say so.

Q. And that comes from this loyalty to the members of the Association?

1118 A. It is to help the other fellow.

Q. In other words, you would feel because of this, the Association, if you asked another Union member of the Association to do something for you he would be more inclined to do that than if you were not members of this Association?

A. I would think so.

Q. And that would go down the line, wouldn't it, anything you might want him to do he would be more inclined to follow out your request?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is much to broad, "anything." That covers anything.

Mr. Dahling: I am just following Mr. Nelson's general question. I will become more specific later.

Mr. Nelson: Neither of us said that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You are following it and embellishing it, I should say embroidering.

Mr. Nelson: I stuck to benefits.

Mr. Dahling: Well, is there an objection?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, there is. "Anything" is too broad, I think.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Objection sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Let's get into these benefits, then, Mr. Wilkins. Do you feel that the mere fact of an Association, regardless of meetings, results in certain 1119 benefits?

A. Yes, to help the other fellow.

Q. I believe the only example you gave was if you needed stock in a hurry the other foremen would be more likely to furnish it to you if you were a member of the Union?

A. Or good advice.

Mr. Nelson: He included repairs, too.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): And also repairs?

A. That is right.

Q. You might expedite the repairs, or rather, he might expedite the repairs for you because you were a member of the Union?

A. Yes.

Q. What would happen if some of the foremen were not members of your Union and they sought to get the repairs done in a hurry?

A. I don't know.

Q. And that is the way you want to answer that question?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what other benefits come from this Association without meetings, you have just listed two?

Mr. Nelson: Three. Repairs, stock and advice.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Are there any others?

A. Well, there might be others but I wouldn't know just what they are right now.

1120 Mr. Dahling: That is all.

Mr. Karasick: Nothing further.

Mr. Nelson: You may step aside.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just a minute.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee): Mr. Wilkins, can you hire anybody yourself?

A. No.

Q. Can you fire anybody?

A. No.

Mr. Nelson: Does the Examiner include both hourly-rated and supervisory employees?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: By "anybody" I mean anybody. Is that the way you understood it?

The Witness: That is right.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee): Do you know whether or not any other general foremen or foremen have participated in the making or suggesting of layouts such as indicated in Company's Exhibit 20, that big blueprint?

A. Mr. Examiner, I might say that an ordinary workman could do the same thing that I done if he wanted to.

Q. Did you also testify—I might be wrong there about this—did you testify that one of the purposes of the plan indicated in the blueprint was to save manpower?

A. That is one of the plans. The big plan was to get floor space for offices for the engineers.

Q. Did you testify one of the purposes was to save 1121 manpower?

A. That is right.

Q. And that in turn means, I assume, a smaller number of men would do the same amount of work?

A. It is to save steps and put the men closer together where one man could hand the work to another man without walking any distance.

Q. Where there are more steps then you would need more workmen to put out the same result?

A. Yes.

Q. And that would mean more men?

A. That is right.

Q. And then that would mean a larger quantity of supervision?

A. That is right.

Q. And if the supervision was a member of your Union is it or is it not true that the plan might result in cutting down supervision and, therefore, the members of your Union?

A. It has already done that.

Q. And this plan, this recommendation you say, in connection with the plan, was made about six months ago?

A. Between four and six months ago.

Q. At that time you were a member of the Foreman's Association of America for how long?

1122 A. For about a little over two years.

Q. And you were asked several questions about what your authority and duties were as general foreman and you gave answers at some length. Is it true or is it not that in connection with your authority and duties and responsibilities as general foreman your acts are either approved in advance or ratified thereafter by people above you?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, I put it in the alternative, is it or is it not true?

A. It is true.

Q. Above you is who?

A. Mr. Benoit.

Q. What is Mr. Benoit's title?

A. Superintendent.

Q. What is Mr. Deislinger's title?

A. Manager.

Q. Division manager?

A. Yes.

Q. Who is above him?

A. Mr. Reifel.

Q. As far as you are concerned, how far do you normally go in your everyday dealings?

A. Once in awhile to Mr. Deislinger.

Q. That is, you preliminarily go to at least Mr.

1123 Benoit, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And he in turn goes to Mr. Deislinger and so on up?

A. Sometimes the both of us.

Q. The both of you what?

A. Both Mr. Benoit and myself.

Q. Go to Mr. Deislinger?

A. Yes, we will say, "Let's go in and see the boss."

Q. Do you feel, Mr. Wilkins, or do you not, that aside from any action your Union might thereafter take by way of a strike vote for instance, that your membership in the FAA should affect your duties and your responsibilities as general foreman to the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Did you say should it affect it?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. If another foreman, another general foreman, called you for some help in connection with his job, and the request involved the work of your department as well and if you thought he was right in his request, do you think your duty to the Company requires you to comply with his request, if you can?

A. Yes.

Q. Should it or should it not make any difference, in your opinion, whether he is or is not a member of the FAA?

1124 A. No.

Q. Why, then, did you testify in response to Mr. Dahling's question that—if I understood his question right—that you did not know whether it would make any difference whether the other man was a member of your Association?

Mr. Nelson: I do not think it was quite his question. It did not include the witness. It was impersonal.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I will make mine impersonal.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee): Do you remember testifying in response to Mr. Dahling's question that you did not know whether it would make any difference and you did not know what would happen if the other foreman involved in the picture was not a member of the FAA, do you remember so testifying?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. What did you mean by that?

A. Well, I really don't know.

Q. Do you know now?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Well, I will ask you my question again.

Mr. Nelson: My objection is that it is an impossible situation because there is 100 per cent organization at Packard's.

1125 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well—

Mr. Nelson: And in the first place, they would have to select very carefully—

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee): Your testimony doesn't quite go that far. You admit that there were two or three that were not members. In addition to that, the fact that all of them may be members today does not mean they will be tomorrow.

Mr. Nelson: My point is that this witness does not know what foreman "X" would do if he was brought in contact with one of these three. He would not know.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is one of the reasons I made my question personal. I spoke of the witness' own opinion.

Mr. Nelson: He might, of course, indicate what he thought should be done.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee): Another foreman, another department calls you up for information or help or wants a tool or something repaired or advice about something, do you think he is entitled to it? Now, let's begin with that.

A. Yes.

Q. You think that your duty to the Company requires you to give it to him if you can?

A. Yes.

1126 Q. Should it or shouldn't it, in your opinion, make any difference whether he is or is not a member of the FAA?

Mr. Dahling: I think he already testified it would.

Mr. Nelson: No, he did not.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Answer the question, would it make any difference, in your opinion?

The Witness: Not from an honest standpoint, no.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee): Well, we are assuming this thing has actually come up, what would you do? Would you grant his request?

A. I would certainly do the best I could for the Company, give him the best advice I could for the Company.

Q. Even if he wasn't a member?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Would you do any less for him or any more or just the same if he was a member?

A. Well, Mr. Examiner, there is a question that comes in there that makes it kind of hard for me to answer in this way, that before we were organized in the years back the men more or less did not have confidence in one another and for that reason you would consider him, whether he was on the up and up or not and just how he performed with you and what he done in helping you out, but 1127 now that seems to be lifted, if you understand what I mean by that.

Q. Well, of course, if another foreman is not a member of the FAA, apparently there is some confidence he lacks in somebody else. Here is this man not a member of the FAA and he makes this request of you and you think he is right about it, but he is not a member of the FAA, you have already testified, at least at one point, that you would grant that request?

A. I would.

Q. Now I am asking you whether or not you would do any more for him or less or the same if he was a member of the FAA?

A. I would do the same.

Q. Did you understand my question?

A. Yes.

Q. And you think you understand your answer?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is the way you want to leave it?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right. I want to point out in another connection, however, to counsel—it probably belongs more appropriately at the end of the hearing—something you might also bear in mind in writing briefs if you intend to file them. The question 1128 of authority, power and responsibility affects, in my opinion, my personal opinion, not only the things over which a supervisor may have authority, that is to say, not only such matters considered horizontally but also the persons involved in the line of authority, that is to say, the power and authority itself considered vertically. I think both the vertical and horizontal enter into it. In other words, in the question of the authority and duty and responsibility and the degree thereof—that such matters in turn affect the entire unit question. Are there any further questions of the witness?

Mr. Nelson: No further questions.

Mr. Dahling: Yes, I have some questions.

1129 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Wilkins, you stated that you had no authority to hire. Did you mean by that that you could not go out on the street and hire a man and bring him in to work in your department?

A. No, you can't even go in the employment office.

Q. In other words, what you do is requisition the help you need on the forms we discussed?

A. That's right.

Q. And you also stated you have no right to discharge a man?

A. That's right.

Q. If you have a man in your department whom you feel is incompetent and should not be working for you, what do you do?

A. You recommend or suggest it.

Q. You can recommend or suggest the discharge of that man or his removal from your roll, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Have you done that?

A. I can't remember when I done anything like that.

Q. You can remember no time when you personally have put through such a recommendation?

A. No.

Q. Possibly you might have in the past, though?

A. Might have.

1130 Q. You would not hesitate to do so if you felt the man should be removed?

A. No, I would not.

Q. Now, in answer to one of the Examiner's questions as to whether or not you had to have various matters approved, I think you stated you did, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But these matters that you have to have approved are originated by you in the first instance, are they not?

A. Some of them.

Q. Well, the matter of discharges of men which might have originated by you as recommendations?

A. Might have.

Q. The matter of getting the necessary tools—that would be originated by you even if it had to be approved by someone else, would it not?

A. Yes.

Q. If you found that the quality of your production was down and not according to specification, you would originate the procedure which would bring about correction of that situation, would you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you were not getting sufficient quantity of materials, you would likewise originate the recommendation or the procedure to correct that situation?

1131 A. Yes.

Q. On the matter of disciplining a worker, that would originate also with the foreman, is that true?

A. Well, it might start down with the assistant foreman.

Q. Yes, but it would start somewhere in the foremen's line, the assistant foreman or the general foreman, would it not?

A. That's right.

Q. Is it not true that generally in connection with these duties you have described and your responsibilities, that you originate these various communications and recommendations, which, in turn, are approved by higher management?

A. That's what you are paid for.

Q. And you think it is your duty to do that?

A. Yes.

Q. At times, your assistant foreman may make recommendations to you, I suppose, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. You consider those recommendations, do you?

A. Sometimes.

Q. Sometimes you just disregard them?

A. That's right.

Q. And sometimes you feel that they are proper and you carry them further up the line?

1132 A. Yes.

Q. Your assistant foreman, however, if he has an idea, or if he has some action he wants taken, he comes to his foreman first, does he not?

A. Sometimes.

Q. Where does he go the other times?

A. Oh, he might be talking to the superintendent or the manager either.

Q. He could recommend directly up to the superintendent without letting you know anything about it?

A. He could recommend that on a Work-To-Win form.

Q. He would make a suggestion in accordance with your Work-To-Win procedure?

A. That's right.

Q. What is that?

A. That's a form that they have for suggestions.

Q. He writes the suggestion on that form, where does he dispose of the suggestion?

A. He puts it in the mailbox.

Q. There is a box prepared for that, is there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, let us say your assistant foreman desires, however, to have a man removed from one of these engines because he is incompetent and cannot do the work, what does he do about that?

1133 A. He generally goes to the foreman.

Q. When you say he generally goes to the foreman, does that cover the situation practically in its entirety?

A. No.

Q. You mean, he could if he wanted to, go to the division manager?

A. He could go to the general foreman.

Q. He could go to the general foreman, but it would be unusual, would it not, for an assistant foreman to take his recommendation up with someone higher up than the general foreman in the first instance, would it not?

A. Yes, I would say it would be.

Q. In other words, you could not run an efficient department if that was done?

A. There's got to be a head over anything in business.

Q. And that head who is over anything has to know what is going on down below, is that true?

A. That's right.

Q. He, in turn, considers the recommendation that comes up and either approves or disapproves it, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And that is your position with your assistant foreman and your foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. If you have recommendations to make, you make 1134 them to your superintendent?

A. Yes.

Q. Your superintendent, in turn, is under the supervision of someone else, is he not?

A. Yes.

Q. He would, in going up the chain of managerial authority, take up these matters with the man next above him, is that true?

A. Yes.

Q. He might, of course, have certain authority that he could exercise without getting approval, I suppose?

A. I don't know.

Q. As you go up the line, these various people report to the managerial authority above them, is that correct?

A. I think so.

Q. You have no particular knowledge as to that?

A. No.

Q. You stated, Mr. Wilkins, that one of the benefits of being a member of this Association that came from the fact of the Association solely was that you could get your repair work done faster?

A. I said you could probably get better results.

Q. I believe you testified also that it would improve the situation in getting your stock and your material when you wanted it?

1135 A. Yes.

Q. That would arise solely because of the fact that you and the other foremen happen to be members of the Foreman's Association?

A. I would say a better understanding.

Q. Well, would that arise because of the better understanding, is that your answer?

A. I would say yes.

Q. But I believe you stated that this did not arise because of meetings; it was solely because of the fact that you were both members of the Association. Was that not your testimony?

A. I think it was.

Q. You have also testified, however, that if a non-member, if I recall your testimony, of the Association, asked you to do something for him, the fact that he was a non-member would make no difference. Did you so testify?

A. I did.

Q. How do you reconcile the two answers?

A. In fairness to the other man.

Q. In fairness to the other man, you would give him the same treatment that you would give a member of the Union?

A. And I might say also the Company.

Q. Let me get that again.

A. In fairness to the other man and also the Company.

1136 Q. You would even though you were a member of the FAA and you had another foreman who was not a member, the fact that he was not a member of the FAA would not in any way change your attitude toward him in connection with speeding up repairs or seeing that he had stock?

A. No

Mr. Dahling: That is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of this witness?

Mr. Karasick: No questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: May I ask you, can you demote a man?

The Witness: No, only by classifications.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What do you mean by that?

The Witness: Well, if a man is on a higher classification, you fill out that form and send it in, provided that the steward and the foreman can agree on it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Under what circumstances might you do that?

The Witness: Well, for instance, if the job is too heavy for the man or he wasn't capable of doing the job, as a foreman or general foreman he should call the steward in first and talk about it and make up his mind before the man knows anything about it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you have to get approval

1137 in a case like that?

The Witness: Oh, yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not mean from the stewards, but I mean your superiors?

The Witness: The superintendent has to sign his clearance on the classification change.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, are there any further questions?

Mr. Nelson: No further questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, the witness is excused.

(Witness excused.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Next witness.

Mr. Nelson: I have had Petitioner's Exhibit 40 marked and I offer it in evidence. It is the Press release of the Army and Navy on May 17, 1944, at the time of the settlement of the strike, and I offer it because Mr. Donovan examined on portions of it. I desire the whole release in evidence instead of the mere portions he offered.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You say press release; what do you mean, Mr. Nelson?

Mr. Nelson: It is a statement by the General and the Admiral who testified at the National War Labor Board hearing.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I mean, whose Press release?

1138 Mr. Nelson: It is the Army and Navy press release.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Nelson, I thought when we discussed this matter before that you had in mind to put in the transcript, the testimony which was taken at that hearing.

Mr. Nelson: Well, we discussed both, as a matter of fact, and I did think the Press release would be much the briefer. I have the transcript here, consisting of 31 pages, the whole proceeding on that case before the National War Labor Board, with the single exception of notifying the Board of the action of the National Executive Board calling off the strike and directing the members to go back to work. It seems to me the gist of the matter, as referred to by Mr. Donovan in his cross-examination is contained in the Army and Navy Press release of May 17, 1944.

Mr. Dahling: What I had in mind was the part of the transcript that was published in the Foreman's Association paper, "The Supervisor." I am looking for my copy of it now.

Mr. Examiner, when we were discussing this matter, I thought that Mr. Nelson was referring to the transcript of the testimony that was taken before the War Labor Board at the time Mr. Keys and his Board were ordered before the Board to show cause why the strike should not be called off. That appears in the pamphlet or magazine called, "The Supervisor" apparently as issued by 1139 the Foreman's Association of America, as an official publication. The volume is Volume 3, Number 5, of July, 1944.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And is Company Exhibit 2, for identification.

Mr. Dahling: It is not my understanding that it was put in in its entirety.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It was not put in at all; it was just marked for identification.

Mr. Dahling: I see. The part I have in mind commences on page 15 and it has a large heading, "Drama in the hearing room."

Mr. Nelson: But it was never submitted for examination. May I see how much of the transcript was included in that? I do not remember.

Mr. Dahling: Yes.

Mr. Nelson: The substance of Petitioner's Exhibit 40 is included in this document; I cannot say how much word for word, but apparently it is an attempted copy in each case.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: From a quick look at Company Exhibit 2 from this distance, I should say that a lot more than that is included.

Mr. Nelson: A great deal is included, and practically all the transcript is included, which is 31 pages.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In that case, it would seem to me the question would be whether to take Petitioner's Exhibit 40 or the original transcript.

1140

Mr. Dahling: My point is that the statement, of course, is associated with what went on before and what went on afterwards and for a proper understanding of it, you would have to have that in.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Which?

Mr. Dahling: That is what went on at the hearing before this statement was made.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The best evidence of that will be the original transcript.

Mr. Dahling: I have no objection to the original transcript. I assumed this was, because it is in question and answer form.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean, Company's Exhibit Number 2?

Mr. Dahling: Yes, I assumed that was the transcript.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, of course, it would not be worth spending the time comparing the whole thing here.

Mr. Nelson: Of course, there is an addendum by Mr. Friedin on page 12 in Company's Exhibit 2 covering the subsequent events which is not in Petitioner's Exhibit 40, nor is it in the transcript. I will have the transcript marked Petitioner's Exhibit 41 and have it available, and I am willing that the Examiner should determine which is the proper exhibit to receive, but I do think 1141 some complete coverage of the subject should be added to the record.

(The document referred to was marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 41.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, I suggest, as there seems to be no question about it, that you put in the entire transcript and that will take care of that part. If you also want to put in Mr. Friedin's addendum, make a separate offer of that.

Mr. Nelson: I would like—if 41 goes in—I would like Mr. Jesse Friedin's addendum on page 19 of Company's Exhibit 2—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) How long is that?

Mr. Nelson: Four short paragraphs about one-third of a column.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In small print?

Mr. Nelson: Fairly readable print.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Nelson: Precisely what took place is set forth in Petitioner's Exhibit 41.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: May I see that?

Mr. Dahling: Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: As a result of the off-the-1142 record discussion, Petitioner's Exhibit 40 will not be offered, and instead, the original transcript of that hearing before the War Labor Board in Washington will be offered as Petitioner's Exhibit 41 and is received.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit 41 for identification was received in evidence.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In addition, Mr. Nelson indicates that he will not offer the so-called addendum consisting of certain remarks of Mr. Friedin. Petitioner's Exhibit 40 is therefore withdrawn and Petitioner's Exhibit 41 is received.

Mr. Nelson: What about Company's Exhibit 2 as a possibility—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) I understand that Company's Exhibit 2 will be withdrawn or is withdrawn.

Mr. Donovan: I do not believe that it was ever offered. I used certain statements therefrom.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Then it is withdrawn.

Mr. Nelson: I have copies of Petitioner's Exhibits 34 through 39 inclusive. I will offer the copy to counsel and the original to the Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Nelson: I am recalling Mr. Keys to the witness stand.

1143 ROBERT H. KEYS,

a witness recalled by and on behalf of the Petitioner, was examined and testified further as follows:

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, you have been previously sworn—

Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) Just a minute, please. Pardon me, Mr. Nelson, we want to ask counsel a question about the exhibits. These exhibits 34 to 39 inclusive were once offered and received, as I understand it?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Nelson: May I continue?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, since you testified in this proceeding the other day, I take it you have examined the transcript?

A. Yes, not all of it.

Q. Did you examine that portion relating to your testimony including your testimony as to the levels of foremen in the bargaining unit at Ford's?

A. Yes, I examined portions of it.

Q. Do you desire to make a correction in your testimony?

1144 A. Yes, I made an error in describing the levels and I would like to make that correction if I may. I would like to read it right from the contract between the Association and the Ford Motor Company so that it is accurately described.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: How long is it?

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, isn't that contract in evidence?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes. Why not merely refer to that portion of the exhibit that is in evidence?

Mr. Nelson: Where is it?

The Witness: On page 9, it is section 5.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) And you would rather have that as a statement of the levels of supervision covered rather than your testimony?

A. I made an error in describing the levels. It is in here (indicating).

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It begins with the phrase "For the purpose" and ends with the words "Job foremen."

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Nelson, you mean his testimony with respect to the levels covered regarding the Ford Motor Car Company Plant?

Mr. Nelson: That is right, covered by the contract.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In other words, what you refer to as Section 5 really is the introductory paragraph 1145 of Section 5 down to but not including sub-paragraph (b)?

The Witness: That is correct.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) On another subject, Mr. Keys, you testified the other day on the attitude of the Association towards including superintendents in the Association.

A. Yes.

Q. Or to put it the other way, whether the policy of the Association excluded superintendents, do you remember testifying on the subject?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Do you desire to make some change in that testimony or do you desire to clarify it?

A. I believe I could state it a little more clearly.

Q. I wish you would do it then as briefly as you can.

A. Well, I stated that we did not include in the membership of the Association bona fide superintendents, that is, superintendents in fact, but we were including assistant superintendents and superintendents who were only classified as such and not actual assistant superintendents or superintendents in fact. I do not want my testimony to be construed by anyone that we are closing the door in any manner whatsoever to assistant superintendents or superintendents in the future. Whether we will or will not take any assistant superintendent or superintendent in the future will depend upon the Employer.

1146 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you admit to membership assistant superintendents at this time?

The Witness: No, we do not, that is, assistant superintendents or superintendents who are actually bona fide assistant superintendents or superintendents. We have excluded them for bargaining unit purposes. The policy of the Association in the past has been to first determine whether a person or an employee classified as an assistant superintendent or superintendent was truly such and if he was, then we have excluded them.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is that from membership as well as from a unit?

The Witness: From membership as well as from a unit.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Keys, you made a statement of the policy of the Association with respect to unfair labor practices in your previous testimony. Do you desire to make an addition to that?

A. I don't believe I made a statement about the policy of the Association. I made a statement that it was my understanding that the Board would take certain actions under certain conditions. Since making that statement I have investigated and checked with legal counsel and I find that the Board holds an Employer responsible for any action of his supervisory employees that interferes with the free choice and right of the rank and file

1147 employees for a union of their own choice. The policy of the Association, of course, is and we will continue to advise our foremen members not to interfere in any manner with the right of employees to self-organization.

Q. I think some questions were asked for the purpose of disclosing the policy and principles of the Association with respect to the responsibility and duties of the foremen towards the Company or Employer, where that is affected or may be affected by membership in the Association. Do you have in mind your testimony in that regard?

A. Yes, I recall Mr. Donovan reading a statement and asking me if I approved of it and I answered no. Then the Examiner asked me another statement and the same question and I still answered no. When the Examiner rephrased it and added "within the scope of his job" I agreed with it. I didn't go into detail. We feel that a foreman's primary responsibility, within the scope of his job, is to his Employer, but when it comes to matters pertaining to his own wages, hours and conditions of employment, his primary responsibility is to himself and to his family.

Q. There has been, in the course of this proceeding, Mr. Keys, the history of the strikes participated in by the Association and there has been some discussion of the policies of the Association with respect to strikes. Do you have anything to add to your statement in that respect?

1148 A. Well, I testified as to the number of strikes, their duration and so forth. I do not believe that I stated what I believe the reason to be for the strike.

Q. If you want to, you may do so.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, do I understand this question to be the reasons for the strikes? Do you wish the witness to testify, Mr. Nelson, as to his opinion for the reason for the strike?

Mr. Nelson: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I can see no relevancy in that sort of testimony in this case and I object to it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Which strikes are you talking about?

Mr. Nelson: The strikes in which the foremen have participated in as an Association as shown by the record in this case and the exhibits in this case.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, there were a great number of those strikes extending over a considerable period of time. As no doubt the Trial Examiner will remember, the question was gone into rather thoroughly once. I think the Trial Examiner will recall that there was no agreement between the answers made by Mr. Keys and certain evidence in the case as to the causes of some of those strikes. The way the matter is left now, it has already been covered. It is largely a matter of 1149 argument from the record as made. What is being elicited now is repetitious and an attempt of some sort to improve the answers previously given by this witness when these matters of strikes were being discussed. I object to the question because of its repetitious nature and because it has been answered. I do not think it should be allowed in its form. The way it is asked, it is in an improper form. There have been a lot of strikes by foremen in different years and different months of the same year and in lots of different plants that were involved. There were a great many different reasons alleged to have been the causes of those strikes and there is great disagreement about that.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Donovan, I disagree with your statement in its entirety. For one thing, everybody has carefully avoided the causes of the strikes. I notice that in his cross examination, Mr. Donovan avoided the causes.

Mr. Donovan: I take exception to that.

Mr. Nelson: The causes of the strikes were not stated. As he stated, if he thought it was repetitious, he would permit it. He is afraid of having something in the record added and that is exactly what I propose to do.—

Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) What I am afraid of—one of the reasons for the strikes as given, was that the purpose was to get publicity and to get concessions from the War Labor Board—

1150 Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) I heard you say that but not any witness.

Mr. Donovan: You heard me read that from Keys' statement in the "Supervisor" under the article "The Truth Will Out." He did get that publicity—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) If the witness wants to add something to what he has previously testified to or subtract therefrom, he may do so. I trust he will not multiply, however.

Mr. Karasick: Before the witness answers that question, that question may lead to a rather prolongation of the record by reason of its form and by reason of the connotation of the word "reason" as being the ultimate or undisputed reason for the strike. In that case, the Employer will then go into the facts to show that that is not the reason and we may prolong this hearing indefinitely.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think I made it clear from my past rulings on similar matters that I permitted it solely to show the claim and allegations and positions and not as evidence of the ultimate facts.

Mr. Karasick: If you will allow me to finish, Mr. Examiner, all I was going to suggest was that the witness could testify as to why the Association went on strike and that would be a statement of the position of the Association, which I think would clarify the question and 1151 not be as objectionable from the standpoint of counsel for the Company.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In any event, I am permitting it only on that basis.

Mr. Karasick: On the basis I suggested?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Karasick: Very well.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Make it as brief as possible.

Mr. Donovan: May I have the question he is now answering read to me again?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Read the question.

Mr. Nelson: I will restate the question.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) What were the reasons for the Association going on strike?

Mr. Donovan: Well, now, this, I take it, refers to any strike any time, any one of numerous strikes the Foreman's Association of America have had.

Mr. Nelson: Witness, confine yourself to the strikes covered by this record and by your testimony in the record.

Mr. Donovan: That is in dispute. He has alleged that some of them were not strikes. He said they were work stoppages and he did not consider the particular event a strike although everyone else did. What does the question mean?

Mr. Nelson: It is because they are in controversy
1152 that I offer the question.

The Witness: To have the record clear, I will confine myself to the large series of strikes that took place in the month of May, which was terminated by the appearance of the officers and the board members of the Association before the War Labor Board.

Mr. Donovan: In May, 1944?

The Witness: Yes. Our Association, we believe, has been under constant attack by the Employers since the Maryland Drydock decision. The members of our chapters have repeatedly called upon the officers to permit them to strike to stop the demotions, discharges, transfers and so forth. Because of the war effort, we did not want our members to participate in a strike and we held it down pretty well for a full year. Following the Maryland Drydock decision, the members took it upon themselves to walk out and protest the attack on their organization.

Mr. Nelson: You may cross-examine.

Mr. Donovan: I think we want to defer the cross-examination until after the recess.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think I made it clear that the last answer stays in merely to indicate a claim or position and not beyond that.

Mr. Nelson: May I make an announcement, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

1153 Mr. Nelson: That is our case. We do not on the main case intend to offer any further testimony or witnesses, unless something is developed on cross-examination which I do not anticipate now. I make this statement so that counsel will know what to do during the recess.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well. We will recess until two o'clock.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until two o'clock P. M.)

1154 After Recess.

(Whereupon, the hearing was resumed, pursuant to recess, at 2 o'clock P. M.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You may proceed.

ROBERT H. KEYS

resumed the witness stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Keys, you testified that your primary responsibility, rather the primary responsibility of the foreman within the scope of his job was to the Company?

A. That is right.

Q. And you believe that?

A. I do.

Q. And you believe also that the primary responsibility as to working conditions, wages and so forth, of the foreman is to himself, the foreman has that responsibility to himself?

A. I do.

Q. Where, Mr. Keys, does the responsibility to the Foreman's Association of America come in, and the loyalty to that Association come in?

A. I think I understood your question, where does 1155 the loyalty to the Association come in?

Q. Where does the responsibility of the foreman to the Foreman's Association of America come in?

A. His responsibility to the Association is to pay his dues, go to meetings and be a good member and—

Q. (Interposing): To believe in Unionism and its principles?

A. Yes, I stated that in my testimony earlier.

Q. And to fight for them?

A. Yes.

Q. Are these responsibilities to the Foreman's Association of America secondary to those other responsibilities that you have testified to?

A. Yes, to the responsibilities within the scope of his job to his employer, they are secondary.

Q. Let's take the case of the incompetent assistant foreman again. The general foreman decides that he is incompetent and cannot do his work and for the good of the Company he should be fired.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just to keep the record clear, I think those questions were originally asked of the last witness. Perhaps you might ask this witness whether he heard that testimony as answered by the last witness.

The Witness: I heard the testimony as to the last 1156 witness, yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dowling): Part of the questions asked him related to the situation that I have just described. That is to say, where an assistant foreman is incompetent and the general foreman decides that he should be taken from the roll or fired. Now, we will say that the Foreman's Association of America does not agree with the general foreman and goes out on a strike because the Company follows the recommendations of the general foreman, should the general foreman join in that strike?

A. Do you have reference to an authorized strike by the Association because of those particular circumstances?

Q. I have reference to any strike in which the members of the Association are engaged.

A. If it was an authorized strike by the Association, yes, he would be expected to participate.

Q. He should go out, regardless of the fact that he is convinced the retention of this incompetent assistant foreman is contrary to the best interests of the Company itself?

A. When you are speaking of hypothetical cases, I can only answer or give you hypothetical answers. I would say he would be expected to join the strike, if such a thing occurred.

1157 Q. And that would apply also to any action which a general foreman might take which would affect a member of the Foreman's Association if the Union disagreed with what that general foreman did and should strike, the general foreman should, as a member of the Union, go out on strike?

A. Well, the words "any action" are very broad, but offhand I would say yes, providing you take into consideration the processes of collective bargaining. In other words, you can't say this might happen without taking into consideration many other things, such as the process of collective bargaining, what the contract provides for in the way of arbitration, and so forth. That all has to be considered before answering those types of questions.

Q. All right, Mr. Keys, say you have a contract providing for collective bargaining, and all that sort of thing, but we will say this assistant foreman is fired because the general foreman has recommended it and believes in it, and the Foreman's Association of America disagreeing with the general foreman, makes an issue of it and calls a strike. Should the general foreman go on strike?

A. I stated in my earlier testimony that he would have no obligation to do so. As a good Union member, he would be expected to do so.

1158 Q. And if he, because he felt the strike was unjustified, should attempt to go by—you do not call it a picket line—by the foreman, the foremen, rather, whom you might have stationed at the gate, what would their duty and obligation be to the Union in their treatment of him?

A. Do you mean whether they would be ordered to stop him or not?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, if a strike, an authorized strike and picket lines are formed, they are for the purpose of stopping production.

Q. And you would stop this general foreman from entering the plant?

A. If it was an authorized strike, yes.

Q. If he insisted and did enter the plant and work, what would be the next thing the Union would do?

A. You are asking me all hypothetical questions now. We haven't had any such cases. I assume we would take it before the Executive Board and determine whether the man should be suspended or not.

Q. And would you not say in a case of that kind, that he would be suspended from membership in your Union?

A. No, I wouldn't say so.

Q. It is not a serious offense then, for a man to insist upon working when the others of the Union are out on strike?

1159 A. Yes, it is in violation of the Union principles.

Q. Are not Union men disciplined for violation of Union principles?

A. We have never disciplined any in our Union yet.

Q. Have you ever had the situation I have just described to you arise?

A. No.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I see that Mr. Donovan is here and he is prepared to ask some questions of Mr. Keys, and if I may, I will suspend at this time and let Mr. Donovan go ahead.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

On the record.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, referring to the question which was asked of Mr. Keys just before the Petitioner closed his case and with reference particularly to the question put to him by Mr. Nelson and objected to by us, as to what were the causes of the foremen's strikes, Mr. Keys being allowed to answer over our objections, that they were due to the demotions, transfers and general bad treatment of foremen; indicating that the reason for the strikes was a lot of grievances of one sort or another of the foremen, we still objected and the Trial Examiner—if I am correct—now is ruling in this way: He said—

1160 and I am trying to be accurate, and if I am not I wish you would correct me—he said he was allowing the answers given by Mr. Keys to that question to stand but only as representing a claim made by the Foreman's Association of America as to what they thought the causes of the strike were. Am I substantially correct in that statement?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is approximately correct.

Mr. Donovan: Well, in view of that and if Mr. Nelson wishes to insist upon his question and I renew my motion to strike the question and the answer—but if the Examiner feels that he cannot do that—I wish to offer on behalf of the Packard Motor Car Company in this case—to represent the claim made by them as to what the reasons for the strike were and the claim that there were no substantial grievances of any kind of the foremen—in a proceeding in which the Foreman's Association of America was a petitioner before the War Labor Board starting in May of this year and extending until its last session in October 31, 1944; by virtue of a special panel appointed by the National War Labor Board in Washington—there was a panel sent to Detroit to hear and examine into the foremen situation. That followed the strikes that Mr. Keys testified to. The subsequent appearance of Mr. Keys 1161 before the War Labor Board in Washington and the calling off of the strikes, among other things, as we claim in that case—resulting for the Foreman's Association of America in the appointment of this rather outstanding panel to make a more thorough investigation into what was wrong with the foremen and what were the causes of the strikes. That case was entitled before the National War Labor Board Region 11 in the Matter of the Murray Corporation of America, Briggs Manufacturing Company, Chrysler Corporation, Republic Steel Corporation, Packard Motor Car Company, Bohn Aluminum & Brass Corporation, the Aeronautical Products Company and the Gar Wood Industries and the Foreman's Association of America, being respectively cases numbered 111-2882-D; 111-4746-D; 111-4747-D; 111-4748-D; 111-5438-D; 111-5798-D. Most of those sessions were held in the courtroom in which we are now sitting and the hearings extended with some interruptions and interim adjournments from, as I said before, May, 1944 to October 31, 1944, which I believe was the last and concluding session. The employers' answer to the evidence given by Mr. Keys in that case—did I mention the Packard Motor Car Company, Mr. Dahling?

Mr. Dahling: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: —including the Packard Motor Car Company, Petitioner here, are reflected in those 1162 proceedings very fully. Every alleged grievance or wrong the foremen claimed they had were gone into and broken down from the testimony of individual foremen who gave such specific incidents as they could recall. In each of those cases a very careful and extended and lengthy investigation was made of each and every single alleged grievance, whether general or whether related to a particular man or employee or foreman. A very thorough exposition of it—I am stating our claim now—that record discloses, together with the exhibits which were numerous and lengthy and which, by the way, not only included matters relevant to the meeting of the claim that Mr. Keys made as causes for the strikes, but covered other matters relevant to this hearing and reflects also the claim of the Packard Motor Car Company, Petitioner here. We desire at this time to have marked and offer in evidence the entire proceedings in the War Labor Board case as to the claim of the Petitioner why the strikes of the foremen occurred. In answer to the testimony admitted as to the claim on the part of the Foremans' Association of America in this case and made as are today at the close of their case by a general statement as to the causes or reasons for the foremen's strike. I would desire also to have marked and received in evidence each of the exhibits of the several companies I have 1163 mentioned, as they were offered and received in that case. If the Examiner feels that this morning's testimony should stand and if he should feel that he could not admit properly—admit the offered exhibits that I have just mentioned, as it properly applies to the kind of evidence that was received from Mr. Keys this morning, we would then have no alternative and would find it necessary with this witness to go through each of the transfers, demotions and so forth, which he has included as reasons for strikes, and expose the truth of the matter and again reflecting the claim of the Petitioner in this case that the reasons given by Mr. Keys were not the reasons for the strike.

Mr. Nelson: Have you completed your statement, Mr. Donovan?

Mr. Donovan: I think so.

Mr. Nelson: Well, I want to object to the introduction of these twenty-two volumes. The Examiner can see what a pile of testimony it is. It is unnecessary and an encumbrance to the record, and on the ground that the purpose of that proceeding was so entirely different from this proceeding and the whole manner of it was so different, that it would be an inappropriate thing to spread on the records of this Board. I am sure the Examiner knows that the purpose of that panel was purely an investi-
1164 gatory one, it was exploratory, and it had no certification of the bargaining agents as its objective. The cases are so different and the rules applicable are so different that this would be an inappropriate showing, even if the transcript were otherwise admissible.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: How many pages are there in that other transcript, roughly?

Mr. Donovan: There were twenty-four volumes of the printed transcript of which this is a sample, either twenty-three or twenty-four volumes. Volume 21, which I have in my hand, ends with page 4040. I might say, and I should like to have it included in the record in connection with my offer of evidence, that Mr. Keys on cross-examination denied that in the Foreman's hearing before the War Labor Board, which we are now discussing, denied that that record contained any denial by the Foreman's Association of the very voluminous evidence on the active cooperation of the CIO with the Foreman's Association of America during their strikes in May. If the Examiner will recall, he denied that in the War Labor Board Panel case he was asked if he did not remember those things, and asked why he did not deny them in the War Labor Board case; and he, and Mr. Nelson also, said it had been denied, although a secondary fact in connection with my offer is that these transcripts will refute that testi-

1165 mony and will show that there was no such denial in that transcript.

The Examiner will remember I asked about their solicitation of superintendents, about the pandemonium caused in the plant, especially in the Briggs plant, during the foremen's strike, by stewards, the rank and file, committeemen, pounding on the desk, hiding the material, all of which, of course, furthered the foremen's strike. This evidence which we offer also on that reason and for that additional reason, would be a refutation of this testimony and would properly be relevant for that reason, also.

Now, Mr. Nelson in his statement to the Trial Examiner—I do not think intentionally—misled the Trial Examiner when he said that Mr. Keys had denied these things or denied knowledge of the things that were put in the War Labor Board hearing. But Mr. Nelson was talking about a State Court suit which had nothing to do with this, in which he filed a pleading testimony only, but which was never denied by anyone in connection with the Foreman's Association of America. In a very qualified sense, you might say there was a denial in a pleading of the State Court case of the allegation, but a State Court bill which had been brought by an individual, not by the Company, an individual by the name of Elwood Benton, who was a superintendent, and, by the way, 1166 he was not a falsely qualified superintendent, either; he was a superintendent who was beat up during the strikes and taken down to the Union Hall and forced to sign an application for membership in the Foreman's Association, with some thirty or forty-four men in the hall at the time.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Donovan, I might shorten this by asking, do you dispute the fact that the Foreman's Association of America and Mr. Keys have made the claim that they are making, aside from the question whether the claim is valid or not?

Mr. Donovan: It would be folly to answer that no, because we all heard the claim, but I do not think the Examiner's treatment of it would take the sting out of that portion of the record insofar as the Board is concerned.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: As I pointed out earlier in the hearing, in connection with an analogous situation, when the presiding official limits the ruling, there is the limitation. I tried to make any ruling as specific as possible and I tried to make the limitation as clear as possible. In order that there may be no possible misunderstanding and for further elaboration on it, let me restate it:

I thought I said then, and I say now, that the evidence came in and was permitted to remain for the 1167 sole purpose of indicating that the Foreman's Association of America struck this past spring with the expressed reason they now give through Mr. Keys. That is the claim they made, the position they took and what they said about it. Now, it is possible, of course, that those reasons are not correct reasons. They may be mistaken reasons, they may be false reasons, they may be reasons which are deliberately false. I am not passing on that question and I have not taken evidence on that point. If you want to show that the reasons that they say they gave were not the reasons they gave, I will permit that. If you want to show what the opposing claims of the companies involved were, I will permit you to do that. But in neither case have I permitted anything as to whether or not the reasons were, in fact, valid or invalid, aside from the question of whether or not they were the reasons given, the claims made and the position taken.

Now, that is one reason why I would deny your present request.

Another reason is this: While I will permit you to take from, cull from, take out of the 4000-plus pages of the transcript of that earlier hearing before the Panel of the War Labor Board or out of the innumerable exhibits which I presume came into evidence, such portions thereof as would affect the matter I have just referred 1168 to or would affect any testimony given by the witnesses, I do not think it would be proper for me to assume the burden, either personally or for the Board or for any court which may possibly hear the case later, to examine all those pages and all those exhibits to find whether or not at some particular spot throughout that transcript and throughout those exhibits there may be something affecting the question, or, to use your own words, Mr. Donovan, "covering other matters in this hearing," without specifying what those things are. So your present request is denied for two reasons: First, because of the limited purpose for which the evidence was received; and, second, because of the fact that it would be improper to ask any fact-finder, or any reviewing court, to examine the mass of material you now suggest offering, without pointing out the particular portions which are applicable to the particular question at issue.

I point out again, if you want to point to any particular portion of that material which would indicate in fact that it was not the claim of the Foreman's Association of America that the strikes were caused for the reason the witnesses have given, or, if you want to point out conversely that the reasons given by the Company were something different, you may do that. Or, you may point 1169 to any other portion of that material to contradict or modify this witness' or any other witness' testimony put forth by the Petitioner.

Mr. Donovan: Well, Mr. Trial Examiner—

Trial Examiner Jaffee (Interposing): I may say in response to one of Mr. Nelson's statements that this type of hearing is also, at least to a degree, investigatory and exploratory.

Mr. Nelson: But the other one was purely so.

Mr. Karasick: May I make a statement, Mr. Examiner?

Mr. Donovan: I want to finish my offer of evidence first.

Mr. Karasick: Wait a minute, will you, Mr. Donovan? I want to make a statement at this point so it does not get mixed up with the other offers you may make. Is it all right, Mr. Donovan?

Mr. Donovan: Yes.

1170 Mr. Karasick: With respect to the second ground stated by the Examiner concerning the evidence offered by the Company and excluded, I would like to state that the elaborate method of procedure suggested by the Company is unnecessary in this case and that a much more simple and feasible method of procedure is possible, namely, that the witness whose testimony in question has given rise to the proferred evidence of the Company which has just been excluded is due presently on the stand and can be questioned by counsel for the Company with respect to any other reasons than those stated by him in his prior testimony as to the foremen's claim relating to the causes of the strike. If after such examination the Company finds that the witness has not given fully the causes which the Company believes have previously been asserted by the Foreman's Association as the reasons for the strike, they can then introduce evidence, either through witnesses of their own as to such additional causes or they can follow the procedure at that point as suggested by the Trial Examiner in elaborating upon the second ground for excluding the evidence so offered, namely, by offering such portions of the transcript of testimony before the War Labor Board as reveal the reason stated by the Foreman's Association of America for the strikes in which it then engaged.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I did not attempt to indicate
1171 the procedure I would follow in the event an attempt were made to impeach this or any other witness. That in turn would give rise to subsidiary procedures which I need not pass upon at the moment. There are various ways of impeaching a witness.

Mr. Karasick: Perhaps. I am not concerned whether the witness is impeached or not, I do not care. All I am saying is that if there is more evidence to come in before the Board on this point, that the Company deems material, there is a simpler way of getting at it than the complicated and elaborate process attempted here.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Your remarks are all right but a wee bit premature.

Mr. Donovan: My offer included—By the way, I am perfectly willing to strike from my offer the descriptive phraseology "other relevant testimony." That would follow as a matter of common sense. I am perfectly willing to exclude that from my offer. I do want to say that I think that Mr. Keys has been allowed to state his claim and I think we should be allowed to state our claim. Our claim is reflected in the offered evidence. We offer it to show the claim of the Packard Motor Car Company in this case that the strikes of the Foreman's Association of America were purely organizational strikes staged and synchronized to compel the attention of govern-1172 mental agencies, which they got, and that the so-called grievances of the foremen, as they were supposedly listed in detail turned out to be, in fact, no grievances at all. I could carry those illustrations on almost indefinitely.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It sums up to what you just said?

Mr. Donovan: In substance, that is putting it mildly.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am willing to take that as a statement of the Company's claim.

Mr. Donovan: I do not believe that that removes from the record the effect of the unanswered statement of Mr. Keys which he put as his claim as the reason for the strike. If the Employer Petitioner be not allowed to put in what is his claim for the reasons of the strike, which he can only do intelligently and completely by the offer I have made.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not think so.

Mr. Donovan: Then it doesn't seem to me that we have had a hearing.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I will permit you to put in evidence a statement sworn or unsworn as to the Company's claim, and only as to its claim, just as I have permitted the FAA to make a statement as to what the FAA claimed. I do not see frankly, why you are so concerned about this.

Mr. Donovan: Well—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) Except the 1173 fact that you seem to think there is some danger that the Board or some court may go beyond the limitations I have expressly stated for the record.

Mr. Donovan: We are unable to measure the effect on the Board or any reviewing agency in Washington upon the examination of the page of this transcript containing Mr. Keys' reasons for the strike of the foremen. We feel they should be answered and we feel they are so fallacious and erroneous for the reasons I have stated that the Trial

Examiner should receive conclusive and definite evidence of fact as claimed by the Petitioner Packard.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I will permit you to put in counter evidence as to what you think is prejudicial to you. I will not permit it in the form you are now attempting to offer it.

Mr. Donovan: Will the Trial Examiner permit a statement in addition to the statement I have made—a prepared statement of the claim of the Petitioner Packard Company in this case, as a claim, such as you received Mr. Keys' form?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I cannot answer that in advance. As a general proposition, yes. It would depend upon the language of the claim. It may be worded in such a way as to go beyond the way it is stated now.

Mr. Donovan: Our claim is that there is nothing
1174 wrong with the foremen as such that were causes for the strikes at all. It wasn't pay for the foremen. They testified that they were making up to seven thousand dollars a year, some of them. Some of them claim they had too much authority and some claimed that they did not have enough authority. Another claimed the discharged employee at Chrysler was the cause of that strike; when that was exposed it was found that the man was not discharged at all and so on ad infinitum. There is no basis for the claim of Mr. Keys. He just wants to get something in the record as to why the foremen are the forgotten men, without being specific, without tying it to anything specific. If we are going to try the issues, we ought to be able to meet them, we ought to be able to meet the claim, Mr. Keys' claim, that the foremen were badly treated. That is the inference from his testimony and that is the position we feel we are in.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: As I understand your position, then, the Company feels that there is no merit to any of the claimed grievances and that the strikes were purely organizational?

Mr. Donovan: That is right.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is that not sufficient for your present purposes?

Mr. Donovan: There again we get into that field
1175 where we feel we are unable to measure the effect the National Labor Relations Board will accord to that testimony.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You asked a moment ago—if I understood you—whether I would permit a statement from the Company as to its claim. Now you think I ought to permit more than that. As far as the claim is concerned, wouldn't that be sufficient?

Mr. Donovan: I thought that I would like to get the Examiner's expression on that. In view of your ruling, I would like with your permission to confer with counsel briefly before we decide whether we have anything to add to this offer of evidence or not. It is an important point and we would like to take a little time.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I want to ask you further, as I indicated before, you have made a statement in your offer, as you first expressed it, that material in the transcript of the War Labor Board—before the War Labor Board Panel covered other matters relevant to this instant hearing. Is that a fact?

Mr. Donovan: Well, it dealt with other matters, other than the causes of the May strikes. You remember you restricted the witness' answer to the May strikes. After some discussion you did not take in all of the strikes of the foremen. His answer was so confined on the record.

There were other strikes covered in the record.

1176 Trial Examiner Jaffee: I didn't understand that you made that offer.

Mr. Donovan: That is why I said I would waive that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Then it does contain other material?

Mr. Donovan: That is right. There is data in there to support our contention as to all the other strikes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That emphasizes one of the two reasons I gave for declining to receive the evidence you proposed to offer, particularly in the form you proposed to offer it.

Mr. Donovan: Before we have a consultation of counsel, Mr. Examiner, let me say our general statement of the real reasons for the foremen's strikes, we would like to support by definite factual detailed matter so that there will not be any doubt about it in any shape of offered evidence Mr. Keys makes. Mr. Keys makes a statement without specific instances. He makes general statements. May we confer at this time?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, you may confer.

Mr. Karasick: May we be in recess while counsel is conferring?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will take a five minute recess at this time.

(Recess).

1177 Trial Examiner Jaffee: I should like to inquire, since the five minute recess has turned into thirty minutes, whether counsel is prepared to proceed?

Mr. Donovan: I think we are, Mr. Trial Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Mr. Keys, before getting back to the matter we were discussing before the recess, I want to read you an article from the Detroit News of May 19, 1944, at or around the time of the conclusion of the May strikes in which you are quoted as having said the following:

Mr. Nelson: I believe that is in the record.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: How long is the article?

Mr. Donovan: It is not an article; it is just two sentences.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) In connection with the tremendous gains made for the Association in the strike, Mr. Keys said today:

> "Before the strike we didn't have a voice anyway, but in the last two weeks we gained for the foremen the right to appear before the National Labor Relations Board, the right to protest against discrimination, the right to certify disputes coming under the War Labor Disputes Act and a contract with the Ford Motor Company."

Were you correctly quoted there?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is it the second question you
1178 are asking now?

Mr. Donovan: I will withdraw the second question.

The Witness: Yes, those are facts.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Then this Reporter was, in general, accurate in this quotation he made of you?

A. I don't recall having made the statement, but the quotation is facts.

Q. You do not dispute anything in the quotation?

A. No.

Q. Now, referring to the portion of your publication, I mean by "your" the Foreman's Association of America, the publication "The Supervisor" and the article commencing on page 15 of "The Supervisor"—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) That is the document marked Company's Exhibit 2 for identification and withdrawn.

Mr. Donovan: I believe it is. Is that the one, Mr. Dahling?

Mr. Dahling: That is right. I believe you can also find the same thing in Petitioner's Exhibit 41. Is that not correct, Mr. Nelson?

Mr. Nelson: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan)— what purports to be as the article under the heading "Drama in the hearing room" and starting on page 15, it is there stated that "The 1179 Supervisor" prints the entire transcript of the hearing. You do recall the printing of the transcript of that hearing, do you not, Mr. Keys in the Department of Labor hearing room on May 17, 1944?

A. Yes, the transcript that has been introduced in evidence was not reproduced. That was a reproduction of several sheets of paper that were clipped together that I picked up in the War Labor Board Clerk's office.

Q. At any rate, this reports the proceedings which you published in The Supervisor, the statements printed were taken from that hearing in Washington?

A. That's right.

Q. It includes statements made by Chairman Davis and statements made by yourself, does it not?

A. It does.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: So long as Petitioner's Exhibit 41 is in evidence and appears to be the official transcript, why not use that?

Mr. Donovan: I only have two or three pages from this particular article and I am assuming that Mr. Keys has not changed the transcript and it would be a matter of a little time to locate them in the transcript.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I know, but Mr. Keys has said that it is not an entire reproduction of that transcript.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) In such portions as you did
1180 copy, Mr. Keys, were they portions of that transcript?

A. Not of the official transcript, no. Following the hearing in Washington, one of the clerks of the War Labor Board office provided me with several sheets of paper that were clipped together and I understood that was part of the hearing. I haven't compared those sheets with the transcript.

Mr. Donovan: Well, Mr. Examiner, more than ever, then, I would like to ask Mr. Keys as to statements in The Supervisor, as to whether or not that report is representative of his views, regardless of the transcript.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Ask your question.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) On page 16 of The Supervisor, of the issue in question, Mr. Keys, containing this article, "Drama in the hearing room" commencing on page 15, I quote as follows:

> "Mr. Keys: Well, Mr. Chairman, how can we resolve this situation when it is a bargaining right fight, you might say, and you say the Board cannot discuss that?"

Do you recall that as being included in your article? I want to be fair with you, Mr. Keys, you may examine the statement which I have read on page 16. See if you agree that that statement does appear there.

1181 Mr. Donovan: Perhaps you want to examine the statement I have underlined on page 16?

Mr. Nelson: It appears on page 9 of Petitioner's Exhibit 41.

The Witness: Now, your question is "Do I recall making the statement"?

Mr. Donovan: My question is, did you say it and is it true?

The Witness: I said it and it is true.

Mr. Nelson: I suggest that you complete the statement.

Mr. Donovan: Is it true?

The Witness: That I said it? Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Is what you said true?

A. That is what I thought was true at the time I made the statement.

Q. Do you still think it is true now as of today?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What troubles me, isn't the statement in the form of a question?

Mr. Donovan: No, it is in what might be called the form of an interrogation but it is not so here. There is a period here. (Reading.)

> "Well, Mr. Chairman, how can we resolve this situation when it is a bargaining right fight, you might say; and you say that the Board cannot discuss that."

1182 The witness should be required to answer whether or not as of today he considers that statement true that he made then.

Mr. Nelson: It is not a complete statement.

Mr. Donovan: That is a matter for cross-examination.

Mr. Nelson: No, it is not. When you ask a man whether a thing is true or not, and you give him an incomplete statement, you are unfair.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the witness is entitled to see the transcript and then if there is anything he wants to add, he may.

Mr. Nelson: I hand the witness Petitioner's Exhibit 41; located on page 9 is the portion referred to by Mr. Donovan.

Mr. Donovan: You can ask him anything else he said at great length, if you like to, on cross-examination.

Mr. Nelson: I am not going to ask him anything. I want you to ask him a fair and full question.

Mr. Donovan: We will let the Examiner decide whether they are fair or not.

The Witness: I never did get to complete my statement. I continued on with what you read, with the following: "Now, do you want the foreman to come before the Board every time there is a discharge or a dismissal or a demotion—?" At that time I was interrupted by Chair-
1183 man Davis.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The official transcript shows that after the word "demotion" there are a couple of dashes and then Chairman Davis interposed to say: "Oh, no," and then Mr. Keys is added following a couple more dashes, "or grievances?"

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Keys, with reference to either transcript that you hold or the excerpts here in the supervisor which now appears to correspond with the transcript, were you engaged in bargaining right fights as of that time, as of that date, May 17, 1944?

The Witness: Our fight has always been for bargaining rights.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Is there anything about the question you do not understand? I would like to have the question answered. I would like to have my question read direct to him, please.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What question.

Mr. Donovan: The question I asked.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Suppose you ask him again.

Mr. Donovan: I am not sure what the question is now. I think we should have the reporter read it back. I would like to have it read.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The trouble is there are several questions and answers. You say "that question."
1184 I do not know what you are referring to.

Mr. Donovan: I think the reporter does and I would like to ask the exact and same question. I fear I might make an error if I do not make the same statement. I should like to ask the question in the exact same words. May I have the question read?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Read back the last ten questions and answers. Mr. Donovan, I cannot see why you do not cooperate with my request. I requested that you restate your question. I think it is a fair request and a reasonable one, too.

Mr. Donovan: I am not unfair. I am pressing an answer to a simple direct question. There is nothing that smacks of unfairness in it that I can attach to it that would enable me to get an answer.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I suggest and rule that you ask the question over again.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): All right. Mr. Keys, without reference now particularly to the transcript of this hearing which you hold in your hand, or to the excerpts therefrom, from The Supervisor your FAA magazine on page 16— thereon which excerpt now appears to correspond with the transcript, will you state whether or not as of May 17, 1944, you were, as you say in this statement, engaged in a bargaining right fight?

1185 A. I didn't say that we were engaged in a bargaining rights fight. That is where I cannot get together with your question. I was asking a question of the Chairman as to how we can resolve the situation when it is a bargaining right to fight, you might say.

Mr. Donovan: You have the word "to" before the word "fight." That word "to" is not in my copy. Is it in the transcript?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It does not say "bargaining right fight." It says "bargaining right to fight."

Mr. Donovan: Then you were not engaged in a bargaining fight at that time?

The Witness: We have always been engaged in a fight for bargaining rights, but we were not on strike at that time because of that.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Then, you are still engaged in a fight for bargaining rights?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was the principal reason for your strikes, wasn't it?

A. Coming from the membership, yes, it was. I would say it was not authorized by the Association.

Q. And taking all the time you need to examine the transcript, will you also state whether or not you said at this hearing on that occasion (Reading):

1186 "All we are seeking from the employer is the right to sit down and discuss and through collective bargaining, eliminate our differences."

A. I don't know where it is in this transcript, but I said it.

Q. Did you also say that: "The ultimatum is, yes, but an order to bargain would be very welcome at this time"?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I didn't get that.

Mr. Donovan: "The ultimatum is, yes, but an order to bargain would be very welcome at this time."

The Witness: Yes, I said that.

Mr. Donovan: Now, Mr. Keys—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record, please.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record. You may proceed.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan): Mr. Keys, referring to reporter's transcript of your answer of this morning to the question with reference to the reason for the foremen's strike, put to you by Mr. Nelson, your counsel, you answered as follows (Reading):

"Yes. Our Association, we believe, has been under constant attack by the employer since the Maryland Drydock decision. The members of our Chapters 1187 have repeatedly called upon the officers to permit them to stop demotions, discharges, transfers and so forth."

Do you recall making that statement?

A. Yes, I don't believe that is exactly the way I made it, but that is the substance of it, which is correct. I thought I said "permit them to strike."

Mr. Donovan: That is what I read.

The Witness: You said to permit them to stop demotions, discharges and transfers. I said, "The members of our Chapters have repeatedly called upon the officers to permit them to strike to stop demotions, discharges, transfers and so forth."

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Nelson, will you have Mr. Keys check as I read it back once more?

Mr. Nelson: Yes.

Mr. Donovan (Reading):

"Our Association, we believe, has been under constant attack by the employer since the Maryland Drydock decision. The members of our Chapters have repeatedly called upon the officers to permit them to strike to stop demotions, discharges, transfers and so forth. Because of the war effort we did not want our members to participate in the strike and we held it down pretty well for a full year following 1188 the Maryland Drydock decision and the members took it upon themselves to walk out and protest the attack on their organization."

Do you recognize that as a correct transcript of the statement you made this morning?

Mr. Nelson: I think the word "employer" should be plural, and that word should be "employers," otherwise it is a true and correct transcript.

Mr. Donovan: I will not object to that correction in the record. I will consent to that change in the record.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Keys, you recall the companies that were before the War Labor Board Panel hearing started with the application of the Briggs Manufacturing Company, Chrysler, Packard, Aeronautical Products and Gar Wood Industries, do you not?

A. Yes, I recall that.

Q. They were companies included in the foremen's hearing before the War Labor Board Panel, were they not?

A. That is right.

1189 Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Now, taking these one at a time and starting with the Briggs Manufacturing Company, what demotions were you complaining of?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What is the purpose of that question?

Mr. Donovan: Well, he is giving the reasons for strikes as the Employer's demotions, discharges, transfers, and so forth. That is what he says.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I know, but I am asking you what is the purpose of the question?

Mr. Donovan: We want to find out how good these reasons for these strikes were. What were their motives.

Mr. Nelson: I will object to it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Objection sustained.

Mr. Donovan: I am unable to understand the Examiner precluding us from exploring the reasons given by this witness for the strikes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you say they did not make that claim, then?

Mr. Donovan: That who did not make the claim?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The Foreman's Association.

Mr. Donovan: Well, have I not a right to show whether they did or not? I want this witness' testimony to show what demotions, what transfers, what discharges they are complaining of and then I propose to show, by reference to the transcript of the testimony in each case what the witnesses said and what the Companies' replies to those particular demotions, transfers, discharges were, and so expose the fallacious claim of demotions, discharges and transfers as being the reasons for the strikes, and my offer includes the evidence from that transcript in each case, if Mr. Keys does not give us the correct list to expose the fact that there was no merit to any of them as the cause of the strikes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The objection is sustained.

Mr. Donovan: Are we precluded from exploring the answers of the witness as to the demotions, transfers and discharges on the part of the Employer without asking what demotions, promotions, transfers, and so forth, he means, what they were, who they were and when they took place?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Donovan, I think it would be rather fruitless for me to keep repeating my reasons for my rulings. However, I will say it once more. If you care to show that those were not, in fact, the reasons asserted by the Foreman's Association at or about the time of those strikes, you may do so. If you want to go into the merits beyond that, you may not do so.

Mr. Donovan: Our offer of evidence at this time includes our wish to ask this witness what demotions, discharges and transfers he means when he used the language

1191 demotions, promotions, discharges and transfers by the Employers as the reasons for the strike. We want to find out what demotions, promotions, transfers, and so forth he means, and we wish to expose those demotions, promotions, discharges, and transfers one by one, by the testimony in this case, as being incorrect.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In other words, you are now inquiring into the merits of the individual demotions, transfers, and so forth?

Mr. Donovan: Yes, sir, we want to show that the reasons assigned by Mr. Keys as the reasons for the strikes have no basis in fact, and I think we are entitled to so show.

Mr. Nelson: I will object to that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Same ruling.

Mr. Dahling: May I suggest, Mr. Examiner, that to establish the reason for the strikes, of course, would be perfectly pertinent and to show these reasons did not exist and there are other reasons which are pertinent. If these are not the reasons, then there must be other reasons. You are precluding us from going into that phase of the case, although you are permitting the record to stand with the testimony of Mr. Keys accusing these companies of attacking his organization by bringing about and causing promotions and transfers presumably on the basis
1192 of these people having been Union men, or breaking up the Union for that purpose. The record, as it stands today, through Mr. Keys' testimony, is to that effect. We want to show those are not the reasons; that there are other reasons.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Within the limitation indicated by the Examiner, the record only shows that the Foreman's Association makes certain claims. I have already indicated that you may show, among other things, that these were not, in fact, the claims of the Foreman's Association and also that the claims of the Company, or companies involved, were entirely different or contrary.

Mr. Donovan: We desire to show through this witness when he specifies what demotions, transfers and discharges, he means, that they have no basis in fact and we offer to prove that, and so leave exposed the blame or the reason for the strike was purely one of organization, organizational strikes staged and executed solely for the purpose of organizing this Union.

Mr. Nelson: To each and all offers, I object.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I see no object in prolonging the discussion further. I have already indicated the reason for the ruling. The extent to which I will permit testimony or not permit testimony, has been indicated. You have already indicated on the record, I think, that you do not dispute the fact that the Foreman's Association did, in fact, 1193 make the claims they now assert, although you dispute the validity of the claims. You have also indicated on the record that you now propose to go into the merits of each one of those reasons, not disputing, however, that those were the reasons given. I have indicated the extent to which you may go into that matter and the extent to which you may go in impeaching the witness. I think I need go no further.

Mr. Donovan: I take it we have an exception to the Examiner's ruling?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is right.

Mr. Donovan: We may or may not have further examination of Mr. Keys. I could let the Examiner know if the Examiner will bear with me a moment.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

Mr. Dahling: If I may be permitted, Mr. Examiner, I would like to make a short offer of proof on behalf of the Packard Company, so there is no question in this record as to what we have in mind in insisting that we go into this testimony.

Certain reasons were given for the strike. The witness could have testified that they had complaints and, therefore, they struck. That would have satisfed the record, as far as the complaint existing; he could have testified he had complaints. He did not stop with his testimony 1194 there, but he deliberately went ahead, and, threw into this record what those particular complaints were. Now, you have ruled, Mr. Examiner, that that was proper testimony, although you say you will limit it to have the same effect as though he had only said, "We had complaints and therefore, we struck." Now, we are not protected, as far as I see it, by that particular ruling. I would like to offer also testimony that we do not know that those were all good reasons, that he had for striking, or were the reasons that they had for striking. There were other things, other complaints discussed at that hearing that had no merit. Now, if the whole picture would disclose that these people have no reason for striking, why, then, of course, that goes to impeach the witness, the testimony of this particular witness as to having any complaint at all, which we are, I believe, entitled to show.

I would like to make an offer of proof with respect to each and every one of the complaints, or, rather, the so-called grievances which they produced against the Packard Company at the time of this hearing, and my offer would include the answer to each and every one of those complaints, disclosing that there was no substance to any of them, no substance at all.

Now, I am not going to fill up the record with things that the Examiner does not feel should be in, but I
1195 want to make that offer at this time as to Packard, and I want to also make the same offer with respect to each one of the companies, because he has used the term "employers"—not "employer" and I presume he means by that all of the Companies in which Mr. Keys' organization, the Foreman's Association of America, has chapters.

Mr. Nelson: Of course—are you through, Mr. Dahling?

Mr. Dahling: No, I am waiting now for the Examiner's ruling on this offer of proof.

Mr. Nelson: To each and every part of the offer, I object.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You prefaced the offer of proof, Mr. Dahling, with certain argumentative material, which is strictly not an offer of proof. In that connection, you made certain observations, as to what you thought my ruling was. I think you have, in part, mistaken it. I have not said, nor did I intend to say anything that could be construed as meaning that the ruling was to the effect that the witnesses testified to the fact that the foremen had certain complaints. Among other things, I should like to point out to you that the testimony, in effect, is not that the foremen had certain complaints, but that the foremen made certain complaints of such and such a nature.

Now, with the limitation I have indicated, it may 1196 well be true that those complaints may be valid; they may be invalid, they may be mistaken, they may be false. You may show that they in fact did not take that position; that they did not in fact make—not have—but make those complaints. And you may further show that the Company took the position at that time, and takes the position now, and/or asserted that the real reasons were something else. You may also, if you desire, attempt to impeach or discredit this witness in any appropriate way. But the offer of proof you have now made, particularly in view of the content thereof, the form thereof and the breadth thereof, I think, is not proper, and it is rejected.

Mr. Dahling: You stated, in view of the form: I would, therefore, feel that I should make the offer of proof in another form, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the word was not a good one. I was thinking of the word "form" in the sense of breadth.

Mr. Dahling: If your ruling goes to the substance of the offer, the offer being to show that as far as these companies were concerned there was no substance to any of these complaints, and I might add another reason—of course, we have the right to attack the credibility of this witness, certainly, or—or that there was no substance to the claims made for the strikes.

1197 Trial Examiner Jaffee: I point out to you that Mr. Donovan stated that the Foreman's Association of America did take the same position at or about the time of the strikes.

Mr. Dahling: Yes, but there was no substance to the claim, and our offer of proof goes to the credibility of the witness' testimony as to whether anything really existed that was wrong and should be examined.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Does it affect the credibility that they made such a claim?

Mr. Dahling: If a person makes a claim that is ridiculous, that is absurd, I think it has a bearing on anything that person testifies to.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What other portions of the witness' testimony do you want to impeach?

Mr. Dahling: Of course, he has made other statements—I do not have the transcript in front of me and I do not believe it is necessary to disclose that at the present time, not having it before me for that purpose now.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: If you will point out to me what portions of the testimony you want to impeach this witness on, I will consider it.

Mr. Dahling: I did not suggest impeaching; I suggested as to the testimony generally of the witness; that there is no substance to the claim.

1198 Trial Examiner Jaffee: I can see an additional reason why that should not be permitted here; namely, the fact that you are attempting to impeach him with something which I think is a side issue in this case and which will involve a confusion of issues, which also involves the principle of the time it would take to receive such evidence, of which I made mention once or twice earlier.

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, I think there might be a possibility of having the parties agree upon the Company's record. Mr. Nelson has just suggested to me he might be willing to agree in part on the Company's position and so stipulate on the record. If we could have a few minutes discussion off the record, I think we could save considerable time.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We have been off the record this afternoon for three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. Nelson: Well, I will be glad to state if what the Company wants is to have its position on the record, I would stipulate that the Company in the proceedings before the National War Labor Board took the position that what the Association wanted was recognition and collective bargaining and not grievance machinery. That is the position the companies took. They may state it their own way, but in substance, that is what it was. If they want that on the record, I will stipulate that they 1199 took that position throughout the proceedings.

Mr. Dahling: I believe our position is very clear on the record and the Examiner has ruled on it. I assume we have an automatic exception to it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, of course. Is there anything further of this witness?

Mr. Donovan: We have no further questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness is excused.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, I wish to have it appear clear on the record that in the admission or concession, as the Trial Examiner has called it, of the fact that Mr. Keys made this statement, I want it clearly understood that all I am conceding or admitting is what everybody heard Mr. Keys say was the case. In other words, I am conceding that he has stated his claim for the strike, which is nothing more than an unsupported claim. As the record stands now, the witness has given reasons unsupported by any evidence whatsoever for the strikes of the foremen.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I understood those claims were made earlier, as well, is that right?

Mr. Donovan: The question was addressed to him generally. I took it he was speaking as of the present time and any time it would have been true, at any time.

1200 Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think you said specifically that that is and has been the claim of the Foreman's Association of America.

Mr. Donovan: All I intended to concede was that Mr. Keys gave his reasons, which I clearly say are nothing more than unsupported statements. We all heard that, but it was an unsupported statement.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think you are mistaken in part about what you said, but in order to remove any doubt, I see Mr. Keys is still in the courtroom. Let me ask Mr. Keys: Mr. Keys, were the claims you have now made on this witness stand, in this hearing, the claims the Foreman's Association of America made or took at the Panel hearings before the War Labor Board?

Mr. Keys: Identically the same.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Mr. Nelson: There is nothing further for the Petitioner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I understand the Petitioner rests.

Mr. Donovan: Just one second, Mr. Nelson.

Mr. Nelson: Well, I have said we rested, so let us get somewhere if we can. I think Mr. Iserman should sit at the counsel table. I have no objection to him counselling at all, but I think it should appear he is counselling 1201 the Company's counsel.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I see nothing wrong with counsel counselling them. I probably would do the same thing myself, as an attorney.

Mr. Iserman: Counsel does not happen to have been counsel for all the companies in that War Labor Board case; he does not know all the facts involved in that case.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I see nothing wrong in it. I should expect that.

Mr. Nelson: As I say, I have no objection to this illustrious array in the jury box aiding the Respondent in this case.

Mr. Iserman: I certainly like to be called an "array"; I am the only lawyer here, I think.

Mr. Donovan: Does counsel include the Press, who are also in the jury box?

Mr. Nelson: Some of them, yes.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I wonder if I could have Mr. Keys' answer to that last question you put to him? I am rather disturbed about that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you please read the question and answer back?

(Question and answer read.)

Mr. Donovan: What would be the point in that, Mr. Trial Examiner, in view of the Petitioner's counsel 1202 offering to disprove the claim — the Company's counsel, rather, offering to disprove the claim, whether he made it as of now, formerly, or when? Our offer of proof was to refute the claim, to show it was baseless.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I assumed that by using the phrase "refute the claim", you intended it as being equivalent to showing it as baseless. For that reason, the ruling is still the same. In other words, I have made my ruling several times. I think it is fairly clear.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, now that the Petitioner has rested, I wish to make the following motion:

The Company moves that the petition of the Foreman's Association of America filed in this proceeding be dismissed for the following reasons:

One: The assistant foremen, foremen, general foremen, and special assignment men in the Packard Motor Car Company, that being the categories named in the petition, are not employees under the National Labor Relations Act.

Second: The assistant foremen, foremen, general foremen and special assignment men of the Packard Motor Car Company do not comprise an appropriate unit under the National Labor Relations Act.

Third: Collective bargaining by a unit composed of the assistant foremen, foremen, general foremen and special assignment men of the Packard Motor Car Company
1203 would not effectuate the purposes of the National Labor Relations Act or the policies of the Act.

Mr. Donovan: I would like to add to that, "or to the policies of other and equally important acts of Congress and public policy generally and the national welfare."

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Does that complete the motion?

Mr. Dahling: That completes the motion.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Of course, I cannot concede, to begin with, that number four is any different from number three. I would assume that a proper interpretation of the purposes and policies of the Act include a proper regard for other—to use Mr. Donovan's phrase—other and equally important policies and acts of Congress—and perhaps more especially, the national welfare. However, as you gentlemen are doubtless aware, the Trial Examiner has no power to pass on a motion to dismiss the petition in these representation cases. He can only refer the matter to the Board for ruling, which, of course, means that for the purpose of determining how to proceed, I suppose you have to consider that so far as this Examiner is concerned, you have not made a motion at all or perhaps that it has been overruled temporarily. At any rate, I am referring it to the Board for ruling. I suggest that you proceed with whatever you desire to proceed with.

Mr. Dahling: We appreciate, Mr. Examiner, that you
1204 have not the authority to rule, but we do wish the motion to appear on the record, at the close of the petitioner's case, so that there will not be any misunderstanding that that is the position we will take.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, I understand.

Mr. Dahling: I will call Mr. Denison.

ALSON G. DENISON,

a witness called by and on behalf of the Company, being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) What is your full name, Mr. Denison?

A. Alson G. Denison.

Q. Where are you employed?

A. The Packard Motor Car Company.

Q. How long have you been employed by the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Approximately 17 years.

Q. What is your present position with that Company?

A. Personnel manager and assistant secretary and assistant treasurer.

Q. How long have you held the position of assistant secretary and assistant treasurer?

A. About five years.

Q. And how long have you been personnel manager?

A. Two and a half years.

1205 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are the assistant secretary and assistant treasurer two different jobs?

The Witness: It is one title but there is an "and" in there, they are not attached.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) When was the Packard Motor Car Company organized, if you know?

A. It was organized in Michigan in 1903. The first Packard cars were built in Ohio and then it was moved to Michigan in 1903 and incorporated in Michigan in 1903.

Q. Where is the Packard Plant located at the present time?

A. The main plant is located here in Detroit at 1580 East Grand Boulevard.

Q. You also have a plant at some other location?

A. At the present time we have a plant in Toledo, Ohio.

Q. Is that plant owned by the Packard Company?

A. No, the plant is owned by the Defense Plant Corporation.

Q. And you are running the plant for the Defense Plant Corporation?

A. That is right.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: By the way, Mr. Nelson, I meant to ask you this before. What plants are you seeking in this petition?

Mr. Dahling: That is why I am bringing this out. I wanted to ask the same question.

1206 Trial Examiner Jaffee: I have a note here to ask Mr. Nelson, but frankly, I forgot it.

The Witness: May I interject? Mr. Dahling's question is addressed to the matter of plants. We have other operations—if you are thinking whether or not these other operations have foremen in there that may be covered by the petition—we want that clarified too.

Mr. Dahling: I am bringing in the fact that there is a Toledo Plant and I would like to know if that is supposed to be covered by their petition.

Mr. Nelson: The Toledo Plant of the Packard Motor Car Company is organized as Chapter 90 of the Foreman's Association of America. It is a separate chapter. This petition is filed and prosecuted only on behalf of Chapter 5, that is the Detroit plant.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You are then asking only for a unit in the Detroit plant by that petition?

Mr. Nelson: In the Detroit plant by this petition, yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, does the Packard Motor Car Company also have subsidiaries?

A. Yes.

Q. What are they?

A. Primarily, sales and service subsidiaries.

Q. And are they located—have you one located in Detroit?

1207 A. We have what is known as a Detroit Branch in Detroit for the purposes of sales and services. It is incorporated and attached to the main factory and it is considered as part of the main factory organization.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I would assume—

The Witness: (Interposing) There are subsidiaries elsewhere in the country.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I would assume you are seeking the unit in the Detroit plant and only in the production end of it.

Mr. Nelson: I believe that is right because the sales end of it is not very active at this time. That is as far as we go. We have not claimed there are any foremen in the service department as connected with the sales department. Those are not at the Detroit plant and we claim no jurisdiction over them by the present petition.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I said "production", I believe I should have said maintenance as well.

Mr. Nelson: They did some repairs at the plant too, at the Packard Plant, that is, they did in normal operations at the plant, that we claim jurisdiction over. Outside the plant, we do not.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: How long—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) The service station is down here on Jefferson?

1208 The Witness: There are three of them, two on Jefferson and one on Woodward.

Mr. Nelson: And those service departments are departments we have claimed no jurisdiction over.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Then the plant you claim a unit in, is located by itself at one place and consists of several buildings?

Mr. Nelson: I believe that is a fact, isn't that true?

Mr. Dahling: I will bring that out. It is quite all right, Mr. Nelson, I intended to do it.

Mr. Nelson: To answer the Examiner's question, these three service stations, we do not claim jurisdiction over.

Mr. Dahling: I wanted to clear the two points up first, as to the Toledo subsidiaries—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) Evidently I am getting ahead of myself.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Now, the Detroit Plant, I suppose—and I am using that to cover the entire operation in all of the buildings—does consist of a number of different buildings, does it not?

A. Yes, however, I may be slightly confused by the question in this respect: There is one main plant in one fairly narrow area and there are two other factories in operation in Detroit in other plants located within 1209 a mile or two of the main plant. Within the main plant there are a number of buildings. Does that answer you completely?

Q. Yes. Approximately how many buildings do you have? Have you any record on that? If you haven't, about what is the square footage of the building in the plant on East Grand Boulevard? That is the main plant, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. About how many square feet do you have in that main plant layout there?

A. We have approximately four and one-half million square feet in the main plant on East Grand Boulevard.

Q. Then you have, you say, two other operations away from the main plant on East Grand Boulevard?

A. Yes.

Q. Where are they located?

A. One is located on Hernan and the other is located at the old Hupp Plant on Milwaukee Avenue, I believe.

Mr. Nelson: Near Harper?

The Witness: Yes, near Mt. Elliott, really.

Mr. Dahling: Do I understand you to cover these three locations in your petition or not?

Mr. Nelson: Will you permit me to ask the witness one question now by way of illustrating my answer? I am not trying to cross examine him at all and I believe he will understand that.

1210 Mr. Dahling: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Denison, is the Hupp Plant and the former Bundy Tubing Plant—the Bundy and the Hupp Plants, we will speak of now—you have taken them under your jurisdiction in the last 30 or 60 days, haven't you.

The Witness: Maybe a little ahead of that, but not much.

Mr. Nelson: Will you fix the time? I may be misinformed on the exact time. Let us say 90 days, would that cover the active operation?

The Witness: Let's say within the last six months.

Mr. Nelson: And you are gradually transferring your operations to those buildings to occupy them?

The Witness: That is right.

Mr. Nelson: Together with such personnel as are needed there as you develop the places?

The Witness: Yes, although there are some cases of men being hired directly for those plants. You said, "transfer" and that is not quite one hundred percent true.

Mr. Nelson: Some transferred and some original help?

The Witness: Yes, mostly transferred.

Mr. Nelson: I am required because of the newness of this policy proposition and these transfers; to take the motion on my feet. I answered the question for the Examiner and counsel for the Company by stating 1211 that we claim the two plants as part of the bargaining appropriate unit with the main plant. They are not far away and they will be operated essentially as one when they get them going together. We claim them in this petition and claim the benefit of this petition for the supervisory force in the Bundy and former Hupp Plants.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In that event, we will need a little more evidence on the relationship between the Bundy and the Hupp Plants and the main plant on East Grand Boulevard.

Mr. Nelson: There doubtless will be. I did not want to interrupt counsel for that purpose. I just merely indicated our position. He will now be able to examine his witness with the information I have given the Examiner and counsel, in mind.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, how large is this Bundy Tubing plant you have taken over, approximately?

A. Around 100,000 square feet.

Q. Is that being operated at the present time?

A. There are a few operations in there, but not many as yet.

Q. It is expected, however, that the operations will develop in that plant?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And now this other plant you spoke about that 1212 was about a mile and a half away?

A. That is the former Bundy Tubing Plant.

Q. There was another.

A. The Hupp Plant on Milwaukee near Mt. Elliott.

Q. That is in the process of development now?

A. No, there are operations in there now, it is nearly complete.

Q. It is nearly complete, you say?

A. The transfer of operations is nearly complete.

Q. How large a plant is that?

A. That has about 80,000 square feet.

Q. And it is intended that these two plants will be operated as a permanent part of the organization? Can you answer that?

A. That is a difficult question to answer. We have purchased the Bundy Tubing Plant owned by the Packard Motor Car Company. In the case of the Hupp Plant, I think the space is leased, I am not quite sure of that.

Q. Of course, you are going through uncertain times at the present time and you could not say now definitely whether this is a permanent change or not?

A. No.

Q. That would all depend, of course, on the course of the war and the course of business, I assume?

A. True.

1213 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Could you give us any estimate at all about how many employees you expect to be employed at these plants, roughly?

The Witness: At the Hupp plant I think it will run in the range of about 600 and at the Bundy Tubing Plant I believe it will be over one thousand.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And you have at those plants general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen and special assignment man?

The Witness: I am quite sure there will be foremen in all three categories, but I do not believe there will be a special assignment man, for example, at the Hupp Plant with only 600 men, but that is something that I am not sure about either.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Approximately in round figures, about how many of these foremen—using the broad term—would you expect that there would be in the case with the case of the 600 men and in the other case with the one thousand or so?

Mr. Dahling: Doesn't that depend a lot on what operations you put in finally?

The Witness: I am at a loss to hazard a guess. It would merely be a guess on my part.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Your guess would be better than mine. Do the best you can.

1214 The Witness: Just taking the ratio, let us say, of something around the 40 men per foreman, you come out with an answer approximately right. It depends more on the operation. In some places there are fewer foremen and in others there are more.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: About forty would be about the average, more or less?

The Witness: I believe that would be about right.

Mr. Nelson: I wonder, while we are at it, if we might have the witness' figures on the number of men employed at the main plant.

Mr. Dahling: I was going to develop that.

Mr. Nelson: Excuse me, I did not mean to interrupt.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I believe we have the information on that in Board's Exhibit 21.

Mr. Dahling: Yes, sir, I believe there is some there.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, what was the peacetime business of the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. The production and sale of passenger cars primarily.

Q. Did you manufacture any other type of automobile such as a truck?

A. Not for some years.

Q. Did you at one time?

A. Yes, during the last war and after the last war. I believe until around 1921 or 1922—I think the truck 1215 business ended there.

Q. And the Company has engaged in the business of manufacturing automobiles from its inception, except for the war period of the first world war, I take it?

A. Except for what?

Q. For the period of the first world war.

A. That is right.

A. And this war?

A. That is right.

Q. What did the Company manufacture during the last world war, World War I?

A. Liberty engines for aircraft, primarily. There were some airplanes made too but I do not think many were produced before the war ended.

Q. When did Packard go into the small car business as such, approximately? Can you give us the date?

A. If by "small car" you mean the introduction of the Packard 120, that began about 1935.

Q. I hope I haven't insulted the Packard Company by calling it a small car. That is what I had in mind, the Packard 120 and that was about 1925?

A. No, 1935.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You know what they say, ask the man who owns one.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Prior to that time, what type 1216 of car did Packard build? How would you describe the Packard?

A. Well, generally it is referred to as a big car. You understand, when we introduced the smaller car, we still made the bigger car.

Q. Prior to 1935 your factory was engaged largely in making what you call the bigger and higher priced car?

A. That is right.

Q. And of course, the operations in manufacturing—the operations were somewhat different in making such a car than in making these smaller cars, we will call them.

A. The quality was much greater and the production was much slower on the big car.

Q. What is the present business of the Company?

A. The manufacture of Rolls Royce aircraft engines and marine engines for the United States Navy.

Q. In what types of airplanes are these Rolls Royce engines used?

A. In the Curtis P-40, the North American P-51, known as the Mustang, in the British Lancaster, four-engine bomber, in the British and Canadian DeHaviland Mosquito, a two-engine bomber, and in the British Hurricane.

Q. Are those manufactured under a contract with the United States Government or with the British Government?

A. At the present time they are manufactured under contract with the United States Government entirely.

1217 Q. At one time you had a joint contract with the British and American Governments?

A. Yes, the contract called for producing a certain number for Great Britain and a certain number for the United States Army Air Force.

Q. You say that you manufacture a marine engine. That engine is for use in a boat or a ship?

A. In the PT boat, so-called, the Mosquito Fleet Boat. They are also installed in an Army Air Corps rescue boat, a crash boat. However, the greatest number of them go into the PT boats.

Q. And you furnish some of those for other countries?

A. Yes, practically every country in the Allied forces, have these PT boat engines, England and Holland and I cannot name them all.

Q. And that is the engine with which Mr. Wilkins testified he had something to do?

A. That is right.

Q. What is the extent of your business, not the number of engines. I understand that may be confidential—in dollar volume, can you give us that in round figures?

A. Yes, in 1941 the dollar volume of the Company was approximately one hundred million dollars, in 1942—this is from all sources, of course—in 1942 it was two hun-1218 dred and six million dollars, in 1943 it was three hundred and forty million dollars and in 1944, we estimated to be something less than five hundred million dollars.

Q. Do you still have a substantial back-log of orders, war orders?

A. Yes, our unfilled orders at the present time are in the range of eight hundred million dollars.

Q. When did you first start manufacturing—let us say tooling up and getting ready to manufacture the marine engine?

A. In 1939.

Q. And what did you do at that time? Were you in production at all?

A. It was a matter of converting an engine which we made in very small quantity through the years—of converting that to a type of engine that the United States Navy wanted for so-called PT boats in the year 1939. That year was given over quite largely to preparing the plant and converting the engine to the changes they desired to make.

Q. When did you go into production on the marine motor?

A. I am quite sure that the first engine was built in early 1940, but that is not a positive statement.

Q. When did you start working on the Rolls Royce Engine?

A. That was in the summer of 1940, that the contract was completed and as I recall it, we started immediately on the tooling job, the job of converting British 1219 blueprints so that they could be understood by American workers and generally getting ready, to produce the engine, building plants, offices and so forth.

Q. After Pearl Harbor, did you immediately go into full production—as full production as you could on these two items, the marine engine and the Rolls Royce engine?

A. That assumes, Mr. Dahling, that we did not go into as full production as we could before Pearl Harbor. We did. The whole program was accelerated right from the beginning; when Pearl Harbor came it so happened that we were about on the verge of mass producing the aircraft engine, fortunately.

Q. And you have increased your production on aircraft engine? Has it gone up?

A. Almost consistently every month from the beginning.

Q. You were also then, I take it, in production of marine engines by December 7, 1941?

A. Yes.

Q. When did the last car go off your assembly lines?

A. It would be to my recollection, February or March, 1942. Pearl Harbor was December '41, as I recall it, and it was within two or three months of Pearl Harbor anyway.

Q. Have you manufactured any automobiles since that time?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Would you say that you are one hundred percent in war work now?

1220 A. Yes.

Q. Now, have you gathered together some figures as to the number of employees employed by the Packard Motor Car Company commencing back at the year 1938?

A. Yes, I have some figures. Taking the figures as of June 1 of each year, in 1938 the total number of hourly and salary employees on our roll was 8,200; in 1939, the same date, 9,714; in 1940, 9,223; in 1941, 10,944; in 1942, 20,890; in 1943, 22,659; and in 1944, 39,020.

Q. That is as of June of each year?

A. That is correct.

Q. And that would include not only the employees who might be in the manufacturing departments, but that is both the productive and non-productive departments and also your office employees, isn't it?

A. That is the total number of employees, wherever they may work in the factory.

Q. What is the approximate number of employees in those categories at the present time?

A. As of November 30, 1944, 32,533.

Q. And that decrease has been brought about by what?

A. A substantial portion of it was brought about by no hiring, for several months, beginning in the middle of the summer and the balance by layoffs that occurred about a month and a half ago.

1221 Q. And that was due to a cutback in production?

A. In contracts, that is contract. I would like to make this clear, Mr. Dahling. This is at the Detroit facstory only and does not include the total help for Toledo or any subsidiaries, that is, in these figures.

Q. At that time you did not have the Bundy Tubing Plant and the other Hupp Plant?

A. We have in the figure quoted for November 30 of this year.

Q. You included those two plants, which are in Detroit separated from the main plant on the Boulevard?

A. That is right.

Q. Mr. Nelson would like to know the distance of the Hupp Plant from the main plant. Could you give that, approximately?

A. Well, from the closest point of our plant to the Hupp Plant, I do not believe it is more than a quarter of a mile, but from the main office to the Hupp Plant it may be three-quarters of a mile, or even a mile.

Q. How many acres does your main plant cover, approximately?

A. I don't know whether I can talk in acres or not.

Q. I thought you told me—

A. (Interposing) Yes, I have it here. The main plant covers 82.3 acres.

Q. And how does it compare in space to the Willow Run Plant?

1222 A. In floor space the Packard factory is about one-third larger than the Willow Run.

Q. But, of course, it is not all under one roof?

A. There are many floors in some buildings, yes.

Q. Do you have any information with respect to the number of supervisory employees for the same period that you gave the number of employees, generally?

A. Yes, in June, 1938, June 1st, 313, and for the same period each year, 1939, 342; 1940 there were 358; 1941, there were 449; 1942, there were 662; 1943, there were 835; 1944 there were 1,194.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: As of when?

The Witness: June 1 of each year.

Mr. Nelson: May we understand that that includes assistant foremen at the bottom?

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) What do these figures include? What ranks of supervision?

A. All supervisors, salary and hourly.

Q. And that would include general foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. Foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. Assistant foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. Special assignment men?

1223 A. Yes.

Q. Would it also include supervisors in your office?

A. Yes.

Q. Then it is a composite picture, and it does not include just those in the manufacturing division?

A. That is right.

Q. You do not call the people who are in your office force foremen or general foremen or assistant foremen, do you?

A. We generally refer to them as supervisors.

Q. Do the figures you have given me include the superintendents or assistant superintendents?

A. Yes.

Q. Do they include division managers?

A. It includes the president of the Company.

Q. In other words, that is a full list of supervision that you have given me?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: From top to bottom.

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Karasick: What is it as of November 30?

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Would you have any estimate as to what it is as of November 30?

A. I haven't got that. The only thing I can give is the figure submitted in the National Labor Relations Board—

Mr. Karasick: (Interposing) The paper you gave us
1224 is effective as to assistant foremen and all classifications?

The Witness: As called for by Petitioner's petition, general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen and special assignment men.

Mr. Dahling: I would like to have that in the record. What does that report disclose?

The Witness: A total of 1106.

Mr. Dahling: And they are broken down in what manner?

The Witness: In totals.

Mr. Karasick: May I suggest that it is in Board's Exhibit 21?

Mr. Dahling: I appreciate that. I very frequently like to have things in the record if they go along in chronological order, if you have no particular objections.

Mr. Karasick: I have none.

The Witness: General foremen, 125; foremen, 643; assistant foremen, 273; special assignment men, 65.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) That was as of what date?

A. December 2.

Q. How is the plant divided at the present time? Do you have a number of large divisions?

A. Yes, something in the range of twenty major manufacturing divisions or divisions related to manufacturing.

Q. Is your aircraft separated from your marine engine? Do you have separate divisions for each of those?

1225 A. Yes.

Q. That is, you have two main divisions, one aircraft and the other marine division?

A. Correct. There is some work done in the marine division, the marine engine division for the aircraft division but I do not believe there is any done in reverse.

Q. What designations do you use for these two main divisions there?

A. Designations?

Q. Yes.

A. Aircraft engine division and marine engine division.

Q. I saw a car marine division.

A. Yes, that is because the marine engine contract was our first contract in 1939. At that time we were making automobiles and there was just attached to the operations going on at that time—when the aircraft contract came along in 1940, a separate division was set up that left the car and marine division as one division and the aircraft as a new division. Eventually, car manufacturing dropped out and we did not drop the name off the division. That is all there is to it.

Q. Starting with two main principal divisions, you have other divisions in the plant?

A. Under the divisions?

Q. Yes.

1226 A. Yes.

Q. Approximately how many do you have?

A. Approximately 20.

Q. And you call them divisions, do you not?

A. Yes.

Q. And then, do these divisions have departments?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. And about how many departments would you have, approximately?

A. The total number of departments is probably about 300.

Q. When the foremen witnesses were testifying that they worked in a certain department, they would be referring to one of these 300 departments you have just testified?

A. Correct.

Q. Mr. Denison, do you have any organization chart of the Company?

A. Yes.

1227 Mr. Dahling: May we have a moment to locate some exhibits, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Certainly.

The Witness: I have a set here.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark these Company's Exhibits 22, 22-A through 22-J, and 23-A through 23-I?

(The documents referred to were marked for identification as Company's Exhibits Nos. 22, 22-A through 22-J; 23-A through 23-I.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Dension, I show you papers marked Company's Exhibits 22, 22-A through 22-J, for identification, and ask you what they are?

A. Exhibit 23 is an organization chart of the overall Aircraft Engine Division, covering everything. 22-A is a chart of the Army Airforce staff connected with the Aircraft Engine Division; 22-B is a chart of the "C" Division, machining crankcase and miscellaneous parts for the Aircraft engine; 22-C is a chart of the "D" Division, a machining division for major parts for the Aircraft engine; 22-D is a chart of the "F" and "K" Division, a division for the assembly and test of the Aircraft engine; 22-E is a chart of the "G" Division, a division for the manufacture of gears for the Aircraft engine; 22-F is the M. P. Division, the Master Mechanics' Division for the Aircraft Engine Division; 22-G is a chart of the division, the 1228 Inspection Division in the Aircraft Engine Division; 22-H is a chart of the purchasing and production control and spare parts and traffic groups of the Aircraft Engine Division; 22-I is a chart of the "P" Division, another machining division on aluminum castings; 22-J is a chart of the "U" Division, a machine division of miscellaneous parts and automatic screw machine.

Q. Where were those charts prepared, Mr. Denison?

A. At the Packard Motor Car Company.

Q. They were prepared by the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Correct.

Q. Are those the official organizational charts of the Aircraft Division?

A. Correct.

Q. Would they include all of the charts of that particular division or might there be some missing?

A. Well, there is no engineering chart here. These are the charts that would relate particularly to the group petitioned for by the Foreman's Association. There may be several others missing.

Mr. Dahling: I will offer in evidence Company's Exhibits 22, 22-A through 22-J.

Mr. Karasick: The Board would like to see a copy of those.

Mr. Dahling: Certainly.

1229 Trial Examiner Jaffee: By the way, are there any general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen or special assignment men in the Engineering division?

The Witness: I don't believe so, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Mr. Dahling: I find through some confusion we do not have enough copies of those charts. We will supply them.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: They are received.

(The documents heretofore marked for identification as Company's Exhibits 22, 22-A through 22-J, were received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, these charts are changed, from time to time, are they not?

A. Yes.

Q. A chart that was up to date today might have some changes made on it tomorrow?

A. The organization might be changed, but the chart might not be changed quite that rapidly.

Q. There would be a later printing of the new form, I take it?

A. When there are a sufficient number of changes to justify the printing, yes.

Q. The date when these charts were issued appears on the lower right-hand corner of this chart?

1230 A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Denison, I show you papers marked Company's Exhibits 23-A to 23-I, inclusive, and ask you what they are?

A. Chart 23-A is the organization—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just a moment, off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

The Witness: 23-A is the organization chart of the overall Car and Marine Manufacturing Division. 23-B is the chart for the "B" Division, which is the foundry; 23-C is the chart for the "E" Division, which is the forge; 23-D is the Inspection Department of the Car and Marine Division; 23-E is the Master Mechanics' Division of the Car and Marine Division; 23-F is the Plant Engineering Division of the Car and Marine Division; 23-G is the purchasing, production and control spare parts and traffic division of the Car and Marine Division; 23-H is the chart of the "S" Division, which is a machining division for the Marine Engine; 23-I is the chart of the "Y" Division, which is the machining and also assembly and test Division for the Marine Engine. Mr. Dahling, I would like to make a correction. You asked me the question

1231 whether the charts for the Aircraft Engine Division included all the divisions in which there might be general foremen, assistant foremen, foremen and special assignment men. I am reminded by the Marine chart that there is a plant engineering division in the Aircraft Engine Division that would have in it general foremen, foremen and assistant foremen, that is not in there.

Q. Was that left out for any particular reason?

A. No.

Q. We can get that chart to complete the picture?

A. I am not sure that there is such a chart, because the major portion of the plant maintenance work is done by the Car and Marine Division Department. There are some on the Aircraft Engine but it is a minor part of the work.

Q. Can you determine, however, if there are foremen or assistant foremen in that department and whether you do have a chart of that department?

A. Yes.

Q. If you do, you could produce that?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Nelson, you had some colloquy today and there has been some testimony just now to indicate that there may be people called general foremen, and so forth, in other divisions of the Com-

1232 pany, as well as other plants of the Company, and I would appreciate it if within the next day or two you could get together on paper precisely what the limits of your unit claim are so far as other plants are concerned and other divisions are concerned; that is, what you claim and what you do not claim. Could you do that, do you think?

Mr. Nelson: I do not quite understand what you mean.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Denison just points out that there are general foremen, and so forth, in the plant Engineering Division of the Car and Marine Division. I am not positive at the moment whether you claim such men in the scope of your petition.

Mr. Nelson: We do, without any hesitation at all.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, these are listed in the list of the general foremen, foremen, and so forth, which we presented to the witness.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In what list, do you mean?

Mr. Dahling: We were requested to present a list of general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen and special assignment men in accordance with the designation on the petition. We were requested by the Regional Board, and that is in Board's Exhibit 21. That is, that exhibit includes these people who are on the records of the 1233 designations which appear in the petition.

The Witness: Regardless of the division they are in. If there does happen to be a chart missing, that makes no difference, so far as this list is concerned that was submitted.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I see. At any rate, in view of the testimony, when Mr. Denison first came on the stand with reference to the service and sales, subsidiaries, with reference to the Bundy Tubing plant, the Hupp plant, and so forth, if you could indicate, in the next day or two in black and white, what you do cover and what you do not cover, geographically, so to speak, that might help.

Mr. Nelson: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Are the charts which are marked for identification Company's Exhibits 23-A to 23-K, inclusive, the charts of the Car and Marine Manufacturing Division of the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Yes.

Q. They were prepared by the Company?

A. Yes.

Q. And are used by the Company as charts?

A. Correct.

Q. Those are copies of the official or are the official charts?

1234 A. Correct.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And are prepared as of the dates indicated thereon?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: 23-A is the overall chart for the Car and Marine Division?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And corresponds to Exhibit 22, which is the organization chart, overall, of the Aircraft Engine Division.

The Witness: That is correct, Mr. Examiner.

Mr. Nelson: May I inquire at this time, Mr. Dahling, whether these charts include those men who are in the Hupp and Bundy plants?

The Witness: In that men are being transferred from some of these divisions to that plant and the probability is that the plants will house a complete division; the symbol will probably be transferred.

Mr. Nelson: So these charts as of the date they bear cover the main plant, the Bundy and the Hupp plants?

The Witness: I think that is a fair statement.

Mr. Nelson: That is what I understood.

Mr. Dahling: I will offer Company's Exhibits 23-A to 23-I in evidence.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

1235 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Received.

(The documents heretofore marked for identification as Company's Exhibits 23-A to 23-I, inclusive, were received in evidence.)

Mr. Dahling: May I retain these exhibits until I mark the sets with the proper designation, so I will know that we are referring to the proper exhibits?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Surely.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Do you have other divisions that are not shown on these charts?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let us get one thing clear. We have used the word "division" in two senses. For instance, the Aircraft Engine Division and the Marine and Car Division, those are divisions where we have used the word "division" in its broadest sense.

Mr. Dahling: Yes, could we call the Aircraft and Marine car Division the two large divisions and the other divisions the smaller divisions?

The Witness: That's perfectly true. We use the term "division" when it is only a subdivision to another division.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): You have only the two large divisions, the Car and Marine and the Aircraft Engine Division in Detroit?

A. That's true.

1236 Q. Then you have the other subdivisions of those two large divisions which you designate in what manner, by letters?

A. By letters.

Q. Now, do you have any of these smaller or subdivisions in the Packard plant here in Detroit which are not shown on these exhibits 22 through 23-I?

A. The charts that we showed, Mr. Dahling, were manufacturing division charts. Now, the subdivisions we show under the manufacturing division, I think, generally, are complete. However, there are other major divisions of the Company, such as the accounting, sales, advertising, engineering, industrial relations and administrative.

Q. Those are not included in these exhibits which have been offered in evidence here?

A. Only in the chart where a few of these divisions are, maybe like the manufacturing division, such as accounting and assembly.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In other words, it overlaps, so to speak?

The Witness: That is correct.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Would you say, then, that the charts which have been introduced into evidence cover the manufacturing divisions of the Company?

1237 A. Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And such administrative divisions, as well, whose work, in part, applies to manufacturing?

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): These others that you listed where you have no charts, did you list all of them?

A. I believe I did. I can't think of any omissions at the present time at least.

Mr. Dahling: I wonder if we can adjourn, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is now five minutes to five, and to assure you the Examiner is not nearly as hard as he sometimes likes to feel he sounds, we will recess at this time until 9:30 tomorrow morning.

(At 4:55 P. M., the hearing in the above-entitled matter was adjourned to Thursday, December 28, 1944, at 9:30 A. M.)

Pursuant to adjournment, the above-entitled matter came on for hearing at 9:30 A. M.

PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: As I indicated to you gentlemen earlier, off the record, I am required to handle another hearing this morning, at least for a short time, and with your consent, we will recess this hearing until ten-thirty A. M.

(At 9:35 A. M., the hearing in the above entitled matter was recessed until 10:30 A. M.)

After Recess.

(At 3:00 o'clock P. M., the hearing resumed.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the record already shows, gentlemen, that we did, at the opening of this morning's session, adjourn until 10:30 in order to permit the Examiner to engage in other official duties, which the record indicates. As it developed, further time was necessary and the recess until 10:30 continued, and the patience of counsel continued until the present moment, which appears, according to the clock in front of me, to be three o'clock. I gather counsel are now prepared to proceed with the rest of this hearing.

ALSON G. DENISON

1241 resumed the stand as a witness by and on behalf of the Company, being previously duly sworn, was examined and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination (Continued)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, at the close of the hearing yesterday, Company's Exhibits 20 to 22-J and 23-A to 23-I were admitted into evidence, these exhibits being certain organizational charts of the Packard Motor Car Company. I believe you testified at that time that these are not all of the charts, is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are produced as samples of the charts in what particular part of the Company, would you say, the manufacturing?

A. The manufacturing organization, yes.

Q. Where are most of the foremen who are listed on the petition in this case, where do they work?

A. Nearly one hundred percent in the manufacturing organization.

Q. Now, you have testified that there are two main divisions, the aircraft and the car and marine. Have you a list of the so-called manufacturing divisions in the two main divisions?

A. Yes.

Q. What are they and will you describe them briefly?

1242 A. In the aircraft engine division there is the F subdivision, the K subdivision and, of course, the work of these divisions is listed on the organization chart; I am not repeating it here, therefore. The C machining division, the D machining division, the G machining division, the P machining division, and the U machining division. Those, in general, comprise the productive divisions.

Q. That is the productive divisions of the manufacturing end of the business?

A. Correct. Then the non-productive divisions, in general, include the inspection division, the master mechanics division, the standards division, the plant engineer and maintenance, the production control division, the traffic division, the metallurgical division, the salvage division, the procurement investigation division, the quality control division and the general manufacturing administrative division.

Q. That is the general manufacturing administrative division in that particular aircraft engineering division?

A. Correct.

Q. The last that you listed you called non-productive. That, as I take it, means they are tied in with your productive divisions of that main aircraft engineering division, is that right?

A. Correct. In general, they service the productive
1243 divisions.

Q. What is your setup, then, on the car and marine main division?

A. In the car and marine, we have the B division, the foundry division; the E division, the forge shop; the L division, a machining division; the S division, a machining division; the Y division, a machining division and assembly and test division. Those comprise the productive divisions. The non-productive are the inspection, the master mechanic, plant engineering production, production control and traffic.

Q. Now, I believe you testified as to the—

A. (Interposing) Excuse me, Mr. Dahling, there is also a metallurgic division in the car and marine, a salvage division, a hospital division and a general manufacturing administrative division.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is that hospital division restricted solely to the car and marine division?

The Witness: It services both divisions; it is in the car and marine division, but covers the aircraft division too.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) In addition to that, you would have the general administrative, the clerical division, I would term it, would you not?

A. You are referring to divisions over and above
1244 the manufacturing division?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, there is engineering, sales, accounting, as I stated yesterday, and general administrative, advertising and industrial relations.

Q. Now, I think you testified yesterday as to the dollar value of the output of the Packard Motor Car Company. Do you have any figures on the value of the tools, the inventory of the tools that are being used?

A. The dollar value of the tools, dies, machines and equipment at the present time is approximately one hundred twenty-two million dollars. The dollar value of the inventory at the present time is approximately fifty-six million dollars.

Q. Mr. Denison, approximately how many foremen of the category listed on the petition in this case did Packard employ in its peacetime operations, say around the years 1938 or 1939?

A. In 1938 we had approximately 254 men of all categories.

Q. That would include general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen and special assignment men?

A. Yes, but there were not very many special assignment men at that time.

Q. You have increased the number of special assignment men largely due to your war operations?

1245 A. That, and the increase in the size of our operations.

Q. Where did you find your additional assistant foremen that you needed when your manufacturing increased due to the war orders?

A. Almost entirely from within our own organization. Generally from the hourly rate ranks.

Q. Is that true also of the foremen who may have been added to your list of supervisors due to the increase in your business?

A. Yes.

Q. They were recruited from the ranks of the assistant foremen?

A. In general, yes.

Q. When you say in general, would you have any idea, percentagewise, just roughly?

A. There are probably some foremen that came from the hourly rate ranks directly to the status of foreman, but of all categories of foremen, whether assistant foreman, foreman, or even a general foreman, since the war program started practically 99.9 percent have come from the rank and file within our own plant.

Q. That is, you did not go outside of your plant to hire in these foremen and general foremen?

A. I don't think there are five exceptions to that rule, Mr. Dahling.

1246 Q. Of course, many of the present assistant foremen or foremen would have been ex-members or are ex-members of the UAW?

A. Yes.

Q. And they were members of the UAW when they were promoted to the job of assistant foremen in the first instance?

A. Yes, because our UAW contract was initiated in 1937, before the war program.

Q. That is the first contract you had with the CIO?

A. Yes.

Q. That contract has been amended, has it not?

A. Yes, several times.

Q. The last contract, I believe, is in evidence here?

A. Yes, I believe it is.

Q. Have you investigated the pay differentials between foremen and the hourly rated workers?

A. We investigated that for the War Labor Board hearing, Mr. Dahling, and found this to be the situation: The average earnings per month of all categories of foremen, including special assignment men, for the period from January through April of this year was $496.54.

Q. That is the take-home money?

A. That is correct.

Q. And that would include the overtime?

A. Correct. You asked me for the comparison be-
1247 tween that and the hourly rate. That average per month is sixty percent higher than the average of the hourly rated employees in the plant for the same period of time. We made the further investigation of the comparison of that earning with the highest earning of the man in the department under each foreman.

Q. In that connection, did you take each one of the departments and select the highest paid man?

A. We took each supervisor, the man who earned the highest amount of money in those four months reporting to that supervisor.

Q. When you say supervisor, you are referring to whom?

A. General foremen, foremen, assistant foremen and special assignment men. The foreman was 26 percent higher than the highest rated employee.

Q. It appears from the report that was made to the National Labor Relations Board listing the number of foremen of the various ranks that you have set assistant foremen on an hourly rated basis. Can you explain the reason for that or how that has come about and continued?

A. It has been the practice in the car division, down through the years, to place many assistant foremen on an hourly rate basis.

Q. That was prior to the war?

A. Oh, yes, many years prior to the war, and when 1248 the war came along, those divisions, of course, remained in existence, carrying on as they had before, and those assistant foremen on the hourly rate remained there. As the aircraft engine division developed, a slightly different policy was followed, of placing all foremen, assistant foremen, particularly, on a salary basis. The car and marine division, though, wasn't changed. It had been that way before and it wasn't changed at the time.

Q. Is there any particular reason why it is not changed now?

A. No, there just has been no disturbance in regard to it, no complaint in particular, and it was just left as it was.

Q. Now, have you prepared a classification of the salaries of your salaried foremen to show the salary range?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us what this range is and what information you secured on that?

A. The range paid to the general foremen at the present time, the base salary, not including overtime, runs from $280.00 a month to $375.00 a month. Foremen, from $220.00, base pay, to $370.00 base pay. Assistant foremen, from $220.00 to $315.00 base pay.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: If I understood you correctly, then, some assistant foremen make more than some 1249 general foremen?

The Witness: Correct, depending upon the department they are in. It might be the tool room or some highly skilled division or department; whereas, the general foremen might have—I think you mentioned yourself—supervision over a group of sweepers.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Now, that would be based upon a forty hour week, would it not?

A. Yes.

Q. At the present time, how many hours are you working per week?

A. In the manufacturing division there is a schedule of 50 hours a week.

Q. Prior to that schedule of 50 hours a week, how many hours were you working?

A. As of about last September, we were working 55 hours a week, and about a year previous to that we were working 63 hours a week.

Q. Your 50 hour week, how is that set up, five days at ten hours?

A. Yes, at the present time.

Q. There is no work in the manufacturing divisions on Saturday and Sunday, then?

A. In general, there isn't.

Q. Prior to the war, what was the policy with re-
1250 spect to the paying of overtime to salaried foremen?

A. There was no pay for overtime.

Q. You were on a forty hour week in those days?

A. Yes.

Q. Was there any overtime worked?

A. Very little.

Q. Well, if a man worked overtime consistently, even in those days, what was done?

A. I don't recall of any adjustments being made.

Q. You do not recall of much consistent overtime either?

A. No.

Q. After you got into the war program, did you run into overtime for foremen?

A. Oh, yes, a substantial amount.

Q. What was done about that?

A. Prior to Pearl Harbor, where a foreman or other supervisors for that matter, who hadn't been receiving overtime and was excluded or exempt under the Fair Labor Standards Act, was asked to work a consistent amount of overtime, his pay was adjusted accordingly in base pay.

Q. That is, you raised his salary?

A. Correct, to meet the increased schedule he was asked to work. Then, after Pearl Harbor, there was the setting of the 63 hour week. We established an overtime plan for foremen and other supervisors which went into 1251 effect on March 1, 1942, but was pay retroactive to January 1, 1942.

Q. Have you with you an announcement of that plan?

A. You have it, haven't you? Look in that folder.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark this Company's Exhibit 24?

(The document referred to was marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 24.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) I show you papers marked Company's Exhibit 24, for identification, and ask you what they are?

A. Well, the last sheet is the announcement of the change in policy we had, signed by Mr. McCauley, Chairman of the Board of Directors. The first three sheets is a set of instructions sent out explaining the policy, and signed by myself.

Q. Were copies of this Exhibit 24 delivered to the foremen at Packard's?

A. Yes; in fact, the policy announcement was placed on the bulletin board.

Mr. Dahling: I will offer Exhibit 24 in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: No objection.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Received.

(The document heretofore marked for identification as Company Exhibit No. 24, was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, I notice that the policy announcement, which is the last sheet of the 1252 exhibit; refers to salaried employees exempt from overtime pay. What does that mean?

A. That refers to the exemptions established by the Fair Labor Standards Act. Quite a common term; well understood.

Q. That would include your salaried foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. The salaried employees entitled to overtime pay, which is the line at the head, would cover those who are not under the Fair Labor Standards Act?

A. No, just the reverse; it would cover those that were entitled to the overtime provision of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Q. That is right, I misspoke myself. Now, just generally, so far as the foremen were concerned, what did this policy mean to them by way of overtime?

A. It meant the provision of the payment of overtime for all scheduled hours that a foreman was asked to work.

Q. A what rate?

A. At time and a half.

Q. Did you readjust your base pay, then, back to a forty hour week basis?

A. Those that had been adjusted to meet the schedule they were working were changed back to a forty hour basis and then the overtime provision applied, of 1253. course, on top of that forty hour basis.

Q. That is to say, if a man worked fifty hours, he would get time and a half for the extra ten hours a week he worked?

A. If those were scheduled hours, yes, for him, or his department.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark this Company's Exhibit Number 25?

(Thereupon the document referred to was marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 25.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Subsequent to the—

A. (Interposing) May I inject something here?

Q. Yes, go right ahead, Mr. Denison.

A. I assume the thing you want to demonstrate is the overtime provision; that is only part of it, you understand?

Q. Yes, that is right.

A. It's the major part of it.

Q. It also covered other matters, did it not?

A. It provided for extra vacation plan, payment on holidays.

Mr. Nelson: Will you permit one question at this point, Mr. Dahling?

Mr. Dahling: Surely, Mr. Nelson.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Denison, if a foreman were required
1254 to work an additional period over the ten hours, he did not receive any additional pay, did he?

The Witness: If it were scheduled, yes.

Mr. Nelson: If it were not scheduled and he was not asked to do it?

The Witness: If a foreman was scheduled at a ten hour day and perhaps there was a bond drive and he stayed an extra hour to clean up, no. But if he were scheduled to work that time, yes.

Mr. Nelson: Who did the scheduling?

The Witness: Well, it would depend on the department.

Mr. Nelson: I see. Then your testimony, as I understand it, is for scheduled time over and above ten hours, he would receive overtime for that extra time if he were scheduled to work?

The Witness: That is right, if he were scheduled to work that time, but—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) Just a minute, now. Let me get your answer. Was your answer yes?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Nelson: All right. Now, if you have any explanations you would like to give, all right.

The Witness: The intent of overtime was not intended to be paid for intermittent hours here and there, but a consistent schedule was paid for, the plan provided 1255 for it. I think you will find that explained in the instructions.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) When you say for the scheduled time, that would be the scheduled time for the entire division, would it not?

A. Not necessarily. It might be scheduled for even an individual because it applied to more than a foreman.

Q. If you had a schedule, say, for a division of ten hours a day and the workers worked in that division ten hours a day and the foreman worked ten hours a day, that would be what you have in mind by the term you use?

A. Correct.

Q. But if the foreman should run over a half-hour or so to clean up his desk, he would not be paid overtime for that?

A. On the other hand, in this division, take any division, one department, let us say, was behind and they had to work two or three weeks to catch up on their schedule.

and the whole department and the foreman too were scheduled to work, he would be paid under this plan.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: May I ask you whether it was possible for neither a division nor a department to have scheduled overtime but for an individual foreman, using it in its broadest sense, in that division or department to have scheduled overtime, using the word schedule as you have used it?

The Witness: It is possible but somewhat improbable
1256 for a foreman. However, I illustrated my point by saying that this applies to more than the foremen. Perhaps someone in the advertising department working as an individual, writing something, a book, or whatever it might be.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In other words, it applies to salaried employees, foremen and otherwise.

The Witness: It applied to exempt employees, no matter what they were.

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Dahling, may I interrupt a moment to ask a question?

Mr. Dahling: Yes.

Mr. Karasick: In order to be sure that I understand your testimony, Mr. Denison, would this be correct: That if a department had a schedule of ten hours a day for its operations and on some particular day, due either to difficulties in securing materials, or for other reasons, it was necessary to work, say, eleven or twelve hours, then the foreman, using the term generically, in that department would or would not receive overtime for the extra one or two hours?

The Witness: He would not.

Mr. Karasick: He would not?

The Witness: Correct.

Mr. Karasick: Under those circumstances, would the rank and file employees below the rank of assistant 1257 foremen receive overtime?

The Witness: Oh, yes.

Mr. Karasick: They would receive the extra one or two hours?

The Witness: Let me illustrate just a little further by saying the policy was an attempt to carry on a plan that existed before the war and defense work started, and that provided for paying foremen a salary for forty hours a week. We didn't work many more hours than forty except rarely, but the foreman might have to spend a few hours some evening here and there, intermittently, that he was not paid anything for. This plan carries over the same philosophy into the war period, only the forty hours have become fifty, fifty-five or sixty-three, but there were still intermittent hours a foreman would have to put in.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Historically, is it not true that these foremen, when they were paid a salary, were supposed to be paid for this overtime that might have to be put in occasionally, in the amount of that salary?

A. Yes, correct.

Q. Is it not also true that these foremen had certain other advantages which took care of part of this overtime they might have to work occasionally?

A. Yes.

1258 Q. We will go into that a little later on.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In other words, in fixing originally the amount of a foreman's compensation, the Company's idea was that a foreman was to be paid for his job as a foreman, and part of the job as a foreman was that he would have to work overtime occasionally, and that was taken into consideration in fixing the usual salary?

The Witness: Correct.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: So in that manner, at least indirectly, he was paid for overtime?

The Witness: Yes, and that same plan carries through, except the forty hours—except with those forty hours were increased, the increased schedule paid them time and a half.

Mr. Nelson: I have still another line of inquiry that is closely related to this, if you are still patient, Mr. Dahling.

Mr. Dahling: I have no objection to it at all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Nelson: My inquiry is this: Mr. Denison, as a matter of fact, it is rather difficult for a foreman to get by with a ten hour day where the men under him are working ten hours? In other words, does he not have to come in 1259 some early and stay some late, generally speaking?

The Witness: Generally speaking, no.

Mr. Nelson: Is it not particularly true in case of conversion where you are setting up a new job? Does that not require longer hours of supervision than it does of maintenance and production workers supervised by them?

The Witness: Mr. Nelson, you are talking of what amounts to a situation that existed mostly in car days where every year you have a new model. We aren't changing these models of engines every year; they stay that way pretty much, except for some engineering changes.

Mr. Nelson: But in 1942 you were setting it up, you were setting it up brand new; it was an actual act of creation as far as supervision is concerned?

The Witness: It occurred before 1942; it started in 1940.

Mr. Nelson: I mean, in the early days.

The Witness: It started in 1940.

Mr. Nelson: You still do not quite answer my question.

The Witness: I do not know what you mean by "get by".

Mr. Nelson: He will have to come in early and stay late, especially when you are setting up a job?

The Witness: In occasional instances, yes, but that is not a general thing.

1260 Mr. Nelson: That is your answer?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Nelson: All right.

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Denison, do I understand correctly that the reason for the change in policy with respect to overtime pay for foremen was because after the war production program took effect, foremen of all these classes were working consistently more overtime than they had prior to that time, is that right?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Karasick: Is that essentially the basis for it?

The Witness: Yes. Of course, prior to this change in policy, we had paid many of them the overtime in their salary as part of their salary, but that was calculated on a straight time basis.

Mr. Karasick: You could have done that by calculating their salary in this situation too, but you preferred doing it by giving them overtime rather than raising their base salary?

The Witness: We much preferred it.

Mr. Nelson: Did you make those changes by negotiation with the foremen, or any of them?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Nelson: Were they consulted about it at all?

The Witness: No.

1261 Trial Examiner Jaffee: May I suggest, gentlemen, that while Mr. Dahling has kindly consented to let you gentlemen question out of turn, so to speak, and while there is, of course, some advantage in asking an occasional question out of turn, it has, as I think I indicated to you off the record, some disadvantages and I suggest that we keep it to a minimum as far as we can.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, in connection with this working of overtime, did you have a study made of that for the War Labor Board hearings this summer?

A. Yes.

Q. What does that generally show as to the amount of time worked by foremen over the scheduled hours of their department or the hours scheduled for them?

A. During the month of April—we picked that as a typical month—of this year, out of 872 foremen of all categories, the average overtime for the entire month was 54 minutes.

Q. Mr. Denison, I show you papers marked Exhibit Number 25 for identification and ask you what they are?

A. They are an announcement of personnel policies applicable to both exempt and non-exempt employees issued in October of this year.

Q. Was this announcement of policy delivered to the foremen and persons interested?

1262 A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: I will offer Company's Exhibit No. 25 in evidence.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Mr. Nelson: We have no objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And, of course, it reflects the facts indicated on the exhibit? That is to say, the facts indicated are true?

The Witness: Oh, yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It will be received in evidence.

(The document referred to was marked and received in evidence as Company's Exhibit No. 25.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Was this announcement, Exhibit 25, issued as a result of Petitions that you had filed with the Stabilization Unit of the Treasury Department earlier in that year?

A. In regards to the foremen, yes. In the case of non-exempt employees, it reflects a decision given us by the War Labor Board.

Q. Did you receive from the War Labor Board all that you petitioned for?

A. Eventually, yes.

Q. When did you first start your proceedings before—I do not mean the War Labor Board—I mean the salary stabilization unit.

1263 A. No, in the case of the Salary Stabilization Unit, we did not, and I believe it is mentioned in this announcement where they restricted us. There are two items, one being the night premium and the other being double time for Sunday work which they denied entirely as requested. There were some other changes we were forced to make that were not nearly so material as those two.

Q. Forced by whom?

A. By the Salary Stabilization Unit of the Treasury Department.

Q. Mr. Denison, what advantages or privileges do the foremen have which are not shared with the workers?

Mr. Nelson: Would you mind limiting some period to that, generally, at least? Do you think that is universal or continuous?

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Well, let us say, what privileges or advantages did they have prior to the war or, better, Mr. Denison, would you fix some time and give us the privileges and advantages and tell us whether or not they have been changed?

Mr. Nelson: It would seem that ought to be limited to some period relating to the period of organization, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think he may answer that question.

1264 A. In the announcement that was put in as Exhibit 25, there is a very definite difference shown in the absent allowances for exempt employees, which includes foremen, as against the rank and file.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) What is that difference, Mr. Denison?

A. The non-exempt employees are allowed an absence of three days for his first six months of service with the Company and six days for his first year of service with the Company and twelve days each year thereafter; whereas, the exempt employee is allowed twelve days of absence for the first year, 24 days for service from one to five years, 36 days—annually, I should add—for service from five to ten years and 48 days for service in excess of ten years or more.

Q. What other advantages do they have?

A. Let me finish this, Mr. Dahling, please.

Q. Oh, I am sorry, Mr. Denison, I did not mean to interrupt.

A. The allowance for the exempt employee, as stated here, is not a formula; there are a certain number of days each year allowed. Our request of the Treasury Department was not quite as definite as this. We wanted a certain amount of latitude and I think I can say without fear of contradiction that the allowances we have made for justified absences previous to this policy at least equal 1265 the amount allowed in this policy for exempt employees.

Q. When you say exempt employees, whom do you mean?

A. It includes the foreman of all categories, plus other supervisors.

Q. That is, other supervisors on salary?

A. Yes, supervisors on salary.

Q. Are there any other advantages you would say that the foremen have over the workers under the policy of the Company?

A. Over and above his salary?

Q. Yes.

A. As against an hourly rated employee, why, the vacation plan has been in effect for many years. He has the extra vacation plan, as explained in this exhibit, a separation pay plan, as explained in this exhibit, and in case of the night premium, we attempted to obtain a higher rate of night premium than is paid to the hourly rated employee, as explained in this exhibit also.

Q. What is the situation if a foreman reports in late?

A. The first half hour he is allowed.

Q. What is the situation if a worker clocks in a half hour late?

A. He is docked.

Q. The foreman, I think it has been testified, does not work with his hands, does he?

1266 A. No. I might add the payment for holidays, of course, the foremen's salary covers that, his salary goes on even though there are holidays.

Q. And in the old car days, what was done in an attempt to keep the foremen working during the slack periods? Were they given first consideration?

A. Well, if you are thinking of a model change period, in general, the foremen were kept on the job or their vacations were scheduled at that particular time. If you are thinking of the depression periods, every effort was made that could be made to keep them employed.

Q. That was felt desirable because they were the men you wanted when you started up again?

A. Correct.

Q. The Petitioner has put in evidence some sheets listing subjects which were discussed in the foremen's training school. Will you tell us about that school and how it operates?

A. The school has been in existence for a number of years, eight or nine anyway, I am sure of. It is conducted on a conference basis. There are practically no lectures. There is a conference leader who throws the discussion open on the floor and attempts to lead it, or acts as a moderator, so to speak. He generally works from some sort of an outline only.

1267 Q. Do you have any master schedules in connection with this school? Who plans the subjects for you?

A. The subjects have been planned generally by the Industrial Relations Manager, in conjunction with the manager of the school. The school, at the beginning, many of the sessions of the school, or conferences, were conducted by men brought from the plant to act as conference leaders. Several of these were foremen themselves.

Q. When is this school held, is it during working hours?

A. Yes, it is during working hours.

Q. Do the foremen continue to receive their pay while they are attending the school?

A. Yes.

Q. Are the classes scheduled with respect to size?

A. They generally run around 25 to a class.

Q. Are the foremen notified as to the class they are scheduled to attend?

A. Yes.

Q. Are they supposed, if they are unable to attend that class, to make that up by attending a class covering the same subject, a class that is scheduled for a different time?

A. If they miss a session, they are asked to come in at a later session so as to keep the continuity of the conferences.

Q. Have you also had specialized leaders come in occasionally?

1268 A. Yes, at different times we have even brought in talent from outside to deal with some of the sessions, so as to get the benefit of his material and use it in the foremen's training conferences.

Q. Mr. Denison, I show you Petitioner's Exhibits 26 and 27, and ask you if these exhibits contain the subjects which were discussed during the periods set forth in the exhibits at this foremen's school?

A. Yes, I believe they are.

Q. If I tell you that these exhibits are the same as the exhibits which were presented to the War Labor Board hearings this summer, your answer would be they are the subjects?

A. Correct.

Q. Exhibit 27 indicates that on July 3rd, 1944, new courses were started. Have those courses been completed?

A. Yes.

Q. What is being done now in connection with this school?

A. Well, we are continuing on our regular conference basis a series of sessions related primarily to interpretation of the contract with Local 190.

Q. Mr. Denison, does the Packard Company have a telephone directory, an internal telephone directory?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark this Company's Exhibit
1269 Number 26?

(The document referred to was marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 26.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) I show you a pamphlet marked Company's Exhibit Number 26, for identification, and ask you what it is?

A. This is the current telephone directory of the Company here in Detroit.

Q. Is that in use in the Company at the present time?

A. Yes.

Q. I notice that there are check marks opposite some of the numbers and names in the directory. What do those check marks designate?

A. Those represent foremen whose names are on the list we submitted to the NLRB as a result of this petition, showing that they do have telephones, that their names and numbers are listed in the directory.

Q. That would not mean, would it, that all foremen would be regularly listed in this directory?

A. No.

Q. That is, those to be listed are selected, having in mind the necessity of reaching people in these various departments, is that true?

A. Correct.

Q. And it would be unnecessary, of course, to list
1270 all of them for that purpose?

A. That is right.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I assume, speaking rather generally, that would mean that an assistant foreman would not be listed?

The Witness: I think you will find there are some, but there are probably a higher percentage of assistant foremen not in here than any other foremen. I notice, for example, Mr. Traen is in here. He has two numbers.

Mr. Nelson: Off the record.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Mr. Nelson: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Received.

(The document heretofore marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 26 was received in evidence.)

The Witness: I would like to point out one thing, Mr. Dahling.

Mr. Dahling: Go right ahead.

The Witness: This directory is subject to revision about now. You will notice this was issued in January, January 1, 1944, and to run a telephone directory for about a year and revise it these days is difficult. That might be 1271 the reason why there are new foremen whose names are not in here. This is being revised right now, preparatory to issuing a new directory.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark this Company's Exhibit Number 27?

(Thereupon the document referred to was marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 27.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, I show you two sheets marked Company's Exhibit 27, for identification, and ask you what they are?

A. This is an analysis of the classification, date of hire and the date promoted to supervisor, the signatures of the men that signed a petition for a charter for the Foreman's Association of America for the Packard Local.

Q. This schedule is a classification report on the men who signed that charter application?

A. Yes.

Q. You are referring, are you not, to Petitioner's Exhibit Number 10 when you speak of application for charter?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: I offer Company's Exhibit Number 27 in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Company's Exhibit Number 27, consisting of two pages, is received.

1272 (The document heretofore marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 27 was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) The first column on Exhibit 27 is headed, "Roll Number." What does that mean?

A. That's the symbol, the payroll number of the man whose name appears alongside the number.

Q. The next column, "Present Classification," that means the classification as of today?

A. When you say the next column, you mean the third column?

Q. Yes, I am sorry.

A. Yes, the classification as of the present time.

Q. And that would be as of the date of the preparation of this exhibit?

A. Yes, that was last week.

Q. The fourth column is the date when the person whose name appears opposite this column was first hired by Packard?

A. Yes.

Q. The last column is the date on which the person named was promoted to a supervisor?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, when I say supervisor, would that include assistant foremen, foremen and general foremen?

A. Yes.

1273 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just to clinch that last point, let us take the first name on the list as an example. I note that Mr. Peter's present classification is that of foreman. It also is indicated on the exhibit that he was promoted to a supervisor on March 15, 1936. I would assume from that that unless he went directly to the job of foreman and skipped the classification of assistant foreman, that he must have been promoted to the job of assistant foreman—strike that. I gather from that, that unless he was made a foreman directly from the ranks, that the date, March 15, 1936, was prior to the date he became a foreman, according to his present classification?

The Witness: If I follow you, if he was an assistant foreman before he became a foreman, the date shown in the last column is the date he became an assistant foreman.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

The Witness: I don't know that that is true in his case, but, as an example, I think that is an illustration of what you wanted.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) That is the last column which is headed, "Date promoted to supervisor", that would be the date when Harry B. Peter, who is the first man named on the exhibit was first promoted out of the workers' class or the rank and file to a job in supervision?

1274 A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: One further point, please. I notice on the same page, the second last name from the bottom, with respect to a man named Matthews, his present classification is indicated as "Time study observer." That, I assume, is not a supervisory classification?

The Witness: That is correct; that is his present classification.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes?

The Witness: In putting that in there, we are not disputing, necessarily, when he signed the charter that he was not a supervisor at that time.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the second sheet of the exhibit I notice the name of Ghuhran. He is listed, according to his present classification, as a job setter. The same applies to Mr. Norman and Mr. Lentz. I notice he is listed as "tur. lath." which, I assume, means, turret lathe operator?

The Witness: Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: None of those are presently supervisory jobs?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, the Company is not taking the position, however, on putting this exhibit in evidence, to make it clear, that they were not supervisors at 1275 the time they signed the petition.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, I understand.

Mr. Nelson: We will not take time on the subject ourselves.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: No, I understand. I merely wanted to clear up the meaning of the exhibit; that is all.

Mr. Nelson: For the purpose of the record, it is conceded that at the time the application for the charter was made they probably were all supervisory in rank?

Mr. Dahling: The answer is, we do not know. We are not contesting that fact, however.

Mr. Nelson: All right, if you are not, we are not either.

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, I wonder if I may inquire what the purpose of this exhibit is. I confess I am somewhat at a loss to see what the purpose is myself. I would like an explanation from counsel so the record may be clear.

Mr. Dahling: The purpose of the exhibit is to show the history of the men who signed this particular petition, to show the date when they were promoted to supervisory positions. I think you will note that the vast majority of them became supervisors during the war period and within two or three years, and must necessarily, of course, have been out of the rank and file. And for what 1276 other legitimate inferences can be drawn from the exhibit also.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The document has been received in evidence.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, did you at one time have at Packard an Independent Union of your technical men?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the name of it?

A. It was known as the Society of Designing Engineers, or the "S. D. E.," as it is commonly known.

Mr. Nelson: I do not see the relevancy of this, Mr. Examiner, I object to it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is probably a little bit too quick to object. You cannot get everything in one question.

Mr. Dahling: No, I would like to ask another question.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) What became of that Independent Union?

Mr. Nelson: I object to that as being incompetent and immaterial. Technicians are not supervision, ordinarily, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

A. The S. D. E., after a series of changes, eventually was absorbed by the hourly rated Local Number 190
1277 of the UAW-CIO in a contract written with them earlier this year.

Mr. Nelson: I move it be stricken as irrelevant now.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It may stay.

I assume that Mr. Dahling's question, which began with the phrase, I believe, "Did you have" should really have started with "Was there", and I assume the witness answered on that basis.

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: That is a good correction, Mr. Examiner.

Mr. Nelson: My objection was not founded on the idea that it was a Company organization, or anything of that kind.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: No, I understand.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark this Company's Exhibit Number 28?

(Thereupon the document referred to was marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 28.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, I show you a paper marked Company's Exhibit Number 28, for identification, and ask you what it is?

A. That's a copy of a petition that was being circulated on the basis of the information that came to me by the CIO stewards in our plant among the foremen, presumably in an effort to sign them up under the CIO.

Mr. Nelson: I will object to this.

1278 Mr. Dahling: Let us fix the date first.

Mr. Nelson: It has the date on it.

The Witness: This was being circulated just prior to the foremen's strike in May of this year.

Mr. Nelson: I move the statement be stricken and I object to the exhibit being received in evidence. There is no showing this has any connection whatever with the Foreman's Association or with any member of it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you have any comment on that, Mr. Dahling?

Mr. Dahling: Why, yes, I think it should be received in evidence. The Foreman's Association of America states that it is an independent Association and apparently intends to remain so. I think it is perfectly proper for the Company to argue that it may be independent now but it cannot remain so, and that is evidence from which an argument could be made or from which such an inference could be drawn. It is one of the issues of the case.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I call your attention to the fact, gentlemen, that the witness in his answers, has used substantially these phrases, "on the basis of information I have received," also, "presumably in an effort". I think that language in and of itself indicates the inadmissibility of the answer and on that sole basis I sustain the objection and strike the answer.

1279 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, did you receive this paper, which is marked Company's Exhibit Number 28, from some other person?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you receive it from that other person?

A. Oh, a week or two before the foremen's strike.

Q. In your position as a personnel officer, do reports come to you from the plant itself and the people in the plant?

A. Yes.

Q. They come to you in the usual course of business, do they?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you believe that the source of this report you received was reliable?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: I object to that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The answer may remain.

Mr. Dahling: I will offer again Company's Exhibit Number 28 in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: I object to it.

Mr. Dahling: I offer it as being a report that came to Mr. Denison in his capacity as the personnel officer and as an official of the Company and I will ask another question on it.

1280 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Did it come to you through numerous channels?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: I will object to that.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Denison being an officer of the Company and this coming to him in the ordinary course of business is the only way in which an officer could receive such reports.

Mr. Nelson: I still object to it. I would like to see the original document, frankly.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: If I understand the pending question, he asks merely whether or not Mr. Denison received this so-called report in the capacity indicated in the question.

Mr. Dahling: That is right.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness may answer that question.

Mr. Nelson: He did answer that question and then Mr. Dahling offered the exhibit and I objected to the receipt of it in evidence. My objection followed his re-offer in evidence.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am sorry, I must have been rather slow in picking it up. I think Mr. Dahling, on the same basis I previously indicated, my ruling so I applies.

However, let me ask you this first: I gather, al-

1281 though I may be wrong about this, that you are offering it merely to show that the witness as personnel officer received the document, but in addition, to show the truth of the contents thereof?

Mr. Dahling: No, for the sole purpose of showing that this is a document that was circulated in the Packard factory. I do not know the truth of it. I am not saying

Mr. Addes made the statement attributed to him in the document; just to show it was distributed, is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just to clear one minor point, the Company exhibit, as marked, does not bear any signature, although I do note Mr. Addes' name is mentioned in the second paragraph.

Of course, the mere fact that Mr. Denison received the document does not show it was circulated.

Mr. Dahling: No, but this is a report that came to him, that this document had been and was being distributed in the plant.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In view of the extent to which you asked that credit be given to the document; that is to say, since you ask more than the mere fact that it was received by the witness as personnel officer be found by this evidence, I think the objection is still good. However, as I probably indicated once or twice in this hearing before, perhaps without saying so specifically, you 1282 gentlemen, I am sure, understand I regard these hearings as an effort to get at the facts.

I may be wrong, but I would assume, Mr. Nelson, your principal objection is not to the basic competency of the evidence at all. That is to say, Mr. Denison did receive this document, and, assuming it was circulated, you still clearly think it is inadmissible?

Mr. Nelson: I do. You just cannot introduce a document and allow inferences to be drawn without any truth or proof in the document. And, of course, there is a lot more fact in this that is not included in Mr. Dahling's question. The inference sought is that somebody, or some foreman, caused it to be circulated. An equal inference would be that the Company set it afoot.

Mr. Dahling: Did the Company set it afoot, Mr. Denison?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Nelson: I will object to that. How would he know? There is no proof of any verity or credence to be given to this document; there is no proof it came from anybody connected with the Foreman's Association of America, and there is no proof that it was circulated by foremen in the Packard Motor Car Company, and all those inferences are sought to be drawn from this document.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: My last remark was delivered in the hope that possibly you gentlemen might 1283 stipulate to something, or that Mr. Nelson might concede something, if there was something to concede. I think, on the present stage of the record, I will have to sustain the objection, which I proceed to do.

Mr. Dahling: I then offer the exhibit in evidence, Mr. Examiner, as being a document which was received by Mr. Denison as an officer of the Company in the ordinary course of business and received by him as the officer of the Company to which documents of that character would be directed because of his position.

Mr. Nelson: I object to this even to that extent. As I understand Mr. Dahling's offer, it is now limited as an offer of a piece of paper that came to Mr. Denison, and nothing more?

Mr. Dahling: That came to Mr. Denison as an executive of the Company, who would, in the ordinary course of business, receive documents of this character if they were being circulated in the plant.

Mr. Nelson: Then you include the fact that it was circulated in the plant. I object to it That is a substantive fact of considerable import and there is no proof of that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In view of the fact that you have included the word "circulated" in your state-
1284 ment, I will still have to sustain the objection.

Mr. Dahling: Then I will remove the word "circulated."

Mr. Nelson: You mean, you are offering it just as a paper received by Mr. Denison?

Mr. Dahling: Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On that point, I think a little more foundation should be laid, because all we have at present is the witness' general conclusion and observation with reference to the paper.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, at the time this document, which has been marked Company's Exhibit 28, was received by you, in what capacity were you employed by the Packard Motor Company?

A. I was Industrial Relations Manager and Assistant Secretary and Assistant Treasurer.

Q. As Industrial Relations Manager, did you get reports as a matter of routine as to the situation with respect to labor matters throughout the plant?

A. Yes.

Q. And if they were regarding disturbances of any character, would that notice come to you?

A. Yes.

Q. If people were distributing among the employees and the workers any documents or pamphlets contrary to the rules of the Company, would that notice come to you?

1285 A. Yes.

Q. You would get that from various sources, would you?

A. Yes.

Q. Did this document, Company's Exhibit 28, reach you in that manner?

A. Yes.

Q. And because of your official position at that time?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: I renew my offer.

Mr. Nelson: I object to it, because the offer includes a lot of factual material.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: When you say, Mr. Denison, or, rather, when you adopt Mr. Dahling's question which included the phrase "in that manner," did you mean by that to indicate any more than the fact that you received this document as Industrial Relations Mannager?

Mr. Dahling: Maybe I can clear that up. I only intended to leave the inference from the question that this document was received by him as Industrial Relations Manager at that time in the regular course of business, the same as he might receive any other instrument which might be distributed, or an attempt might be made to distribute it among the workers in the plant.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let me put it this way: You would expect to receive, as I understand it, any 1286 document or information or knowledge of occurrences taking place in the plant which bore upon the work of your department?

The Witness: Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And such information might have to do with the circulation of a document or it might have to do with other aspects of personnel and labor relations which would not involve circulation of documents?

The Witness: Surely.

Mr. Nelson: Now, so presented, this document is without authenticity or relevancy or materiality.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Specifically, how did you get Company's Exhbit 28?

The Witness: It came to me from several sources. In fact, one or two of the sources were foremen themselves. They came to me from foremen, through other foremen that reported to me.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I notice that the exhibit bears no signatures, although the first line in the body of it begins, "We, the undersigned, foremen, general foremen and supervisors," and so forth. Did the particular document you received bear signatures or did you receive it in its present form as an exhibit?

The Witness: The one that I received, I don't believe have signatures on it, but I did see one with signatures on it. I haven't got it, however.

1287 Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right. The document is received in evidence for the limited and sole purpose of showing that it is the document which the witness received in his capacity as Industrial Relations Manager and for no other purpose.

(The document heretofore marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 28, was received in evidence.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I might point out in that connection an analogy with what has previously occurred in this hearing. Counsel for the Company several times objected to the Examiner's limitation as to certain testimony bearing on claimed reasons by the Foreman's Association for certain strikes, counsel for the Company indicating that there was a danger that the reviewing bodies might go beyond the limitations indicated by the Examiner. Now, here we have the situation reversed. I have no . received into evidence a document with a limitation which I would expect the reviewing bodies to observe. If there is a danger in the one case, then I suppose there is a danger in the other. If it is fair to impose the danger in one case, I suppose it is fair to impose it in the other. In both cases, the evidence has been received with the respective limitations.

I note counsel for the Board has arisen and I gather he is about to speak.

Mr. Karasick: Yes, I would like to say something
1288 about your receipt in evidence of this document,

Mr. Examiner. I have no quarrel with what you say in regard to the document, but I would like to call your attention to the fact that it is received in evidence for the limited purpose offered, that being done notwithstanding the fact that I do believe a proper foundation has been laid for the receipt of such a document. I point to the fact that although Mr. Denison did testify as a result of your examination that he had received this document from several foremen, none of those foremen were named. There is no person named. There is no person named as having submitted the exhibit. The document is subject, it seems to me, to the same curse of anonymity that Mr. Nelson pointed out in his original speech. I have no feeling one way or another about the receipt of the document, but I think any document, to do any good in this record, should have a firm foundation laid for its receipt.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The foundation necessary, of course, must be considered within the scope of its limits. I think a sufficient foundation has been laid for the document within the limitation indicated. Of course, the fact that I have received it does not mean you gentlemen cannot cross-examine on it. But I think, beyond what I have said, the matter to which you have referred would go more to the weight than the competency within the 1289 limited purpose in the ruling.

Mr. Karasick: Of course, I do not agree with you, Mr. Examiner, but neither do you agree with me.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That, unfortunately, Mr. Karasick, is the position a presiding officer gets into.

We will take a five-minute recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record. It has been indicated during the recess informally by counsel that since it is now four-thirty, and for other apparently good and sufficient reasons, we might as well recess at this time until the usual time tomorrow morning. The Trial Examiner has yielded to the blandishments of counsel, and we will, therefore, recess at this time until nine-thirty tomorrow morning.

(Whereupon, at 4:30 P. M., the hearing in the above entitled matter was adjourned to Friday, December 29, 1944, at 9:30 o'clock A. M.)

Friday, December 29, 1944.

Pursuant to adjournment, the above-entitled matter came on for hearing at 9:30 A. M.

Before:

Samuel H. Jaffee, Trial Examiner.

1292

PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are you ready to proceed, gentlemen?

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I have a question that I would like to ask Mr. Denison, a correction in his testimony.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

ALSON G. DENISON

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination (Continued).

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, you were asked yesterday whether or not you made a study of the amount of time worked by foremen over scheduled hours in their department and you answered that you did make such a study in April, 1944, picking 872 salaried foremen for the study and that the average overtime for the entire month averaged among these 872 foremen, in the amount of 54 minutes. Have you checked that matter since you gave this testimony yesterday?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the correct figure?

A. The correct figure is 94 minutes.

Q. What was the cause of the difference between the 54 and 94 minutes?

1293 A. I would like to explain that. When a foreman works in excess of his schedule, we have no particular interest in the time that he clocks out. He may be around there because he is working up, perhaps, the bowling scores of his league or chatting with another foreman or any one of a thousand personal reasons and stays a half hour or an hour or so and clocks out late. We have no rule that he has got to get out of the plant at the end of the shift hours. So, we took the clocking out time, regardless of the reason. We do not know the reason for the man staying over. We cannot definitely say that the overtime we show recorded here was overtime work. Some of it undoubtedly was. I would be willing to say that a good portion of it undoubtedly was, but I am also quite convinced that at least a portion of it was not. All time in excess of 15 minutes we pay overtime in units of 15 minutes—recorded on the clock by foremen averaged for the month of April, 94 minutes per foreman.

Q. And that study covered 872 salaried foremen?

A. That is about an hour and a half for a whole month's average per foreman.

Q. And some of the foremen, I presume, might have worked more than that?

A. Yes, that is an average, correct.

Mr. Dahlinger—That is all.

Cross-Examination.

1294 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Denison, do you have any notation of the number of foremen who were given retroactive pay about March 1, 1942 back to January 1, 1942?

A. I haven't it here, no.

Q. As a matter of fact, wasn't it just a few select foremen and the rest of them did not get it?

A. Oh, no, there were pages and pages of them, Mr. Nelson. I remember that very well.

Q. Why didn't they all get it?

A. As far as I know, all that worked did get it, if they worked a schedule.

Q. Your statement is that if they worked a scheduled period of work they got their back pay?

A. In the months of January and February of 1942. I presume that is what you are referring to?

Q. That is right.

A. Then that is correct.

Q. Now, this application to the Salary Stabilization Unit was made after the foremen organized and after the foremen had made demands on the Packard, wasn't it?

A. Well, the date of the organization, of course, has been established here. I do not know that we even knew when they were organized in and of ourselves before. It was after the date established in this hearing, yes.

Q. The application was made by the Company without consultation with the Association or any of its members, wasn't it?

1295

A. Correct.

Q. And there was nothing cooperative about the application so far as the foremen were concerned?

A. Well, Mr. Nelson, we did not recognize the Foreman's Association of America anyway.

Q. And you did not take the foremen into your confidence or consult with them about the application to the Stabilization Unit, did you?

A. Let me elaborate on that a bit. Any policy change such as the one you are referring to, is developed through consultations with plant managers and others, who in turn reflect the attitude and interests of their foremen and in probably many cases even consult with them. I don't know. If you were asking me if the committee that sat down to do this job included a member of the Foreman's Association of America, the answer is no.

Q. And you don't know of any consultation with foremen, do you?

A. By plant managers and others?

Q. By anybody in connection with this application?

A. No, no specific one, I know how they operate.

Q. Your statement is that on general principles, they do talk things over but you do not know if any 1296 conversations were had with any foremen on the application, for instance, affecting them?

A. That is right. I might add to that it affected a lot of other employees also.

Q. Is it a fact that in the period you have been discussing here, which roughly is the period of organization of the Association, that the salaried help beginning with superintendents and above that, received a bonus each year?

A. No, that is not correct.

Q. What exceptions are there to it?

A. We have what is known as an executive roll and that is known as a roll to which bonuses may be applied if there are any. That does not include all the categories that you have mentioned.

Q. Well, the bonus system does not apply to foremen, general foremen, assistant foremen and special assignment men, does it?

A. That is correct.

Q. Is it also a fact that the hourly rated assistant foremen receive from five to fifteen cents an hour more than the rank and file that they supervise?

A. The hourly rated assistant foremen?

Q. That is right.

A. I believe that statement is substantially correct but the great bulk of them receive at least ten cents 1297 an hour more, you said five cents to fifteen cents.

Q. That is right and you are placing the bulk of them at around ten cents?

A. I don't know that I can even agree with that, that there are any at five cents. I am not sure.

Q. But it does mathematically fall between five and fifteen cents, fifteen cents high and five cents low?

A. Five cents, I believe, would be a rare exception.

Q. And wouldn't fifteen cents be a rare exception too?

A. I don't think so.

Q. I want to examine and come to Exhibit 28, Mr. Denison. I will ask you—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) Company's Exhibit?

Mr. Nelson: Company's Exhibit 28. By the way, do you have your original exhibit here, Mr. Dahling?

Mr. Dahling: I believe it is in the pile there (indicating).

Mr. Nelson: Is it conceded that the paper you offer is a copy you made?

Mr. Dahling: That is a copy.

Mr. Nelson: And it is not the one he received?

Mr. Dahling: It is a copy, yes.

Mr. Nelson: What I want is the actual paper you received.

1298 The Witness: What is Exhibit 28, Mr. Nelson?

Mr. Nelson: It is that letter dated April 25, 1944 and it is to the Executive Board of the International Union, United Auto Workers of America. I would like the exact paper that you received.

The Witness: Here in the courtroom?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, I would like it now.

The Witness: You mean the one I received here in the courtroom?

Mr. Nelson: No, the one you received in the factory when this first came to your attention.

The Witness: I haven't got it here now.

Mr. Nelson: Where is it?

The Witness: I presume it is in my file in the office.

Mr. Nelson: I will be glad to excuse the witness then and let him get it.

Mr. Dahling: I have the mimeographed copy from which these copies were made and I think that is in my file here somewhere.

Mr. Nelson: I will wait until you find it, Mr. Dahling, because I want the paper.

The Witness: I don't know. Might the original have been presented to the War Labor Board hearing, Mr. Dahling?

Mr. Nelson: I am perfectly willing for you to sit down, Mr. Denison, and assist in any way you can in 1299 locating the paper.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let the record indicate that the witness leaves the witness stand. Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Dahling: May the record show that I have handed to Mr. Nelson what I understand is the original of Company Exhibit 28.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well. And let the record also show that the witness has resumed the witness stand.

Mr. Nelson: Now, I am going to ask that this paper be marked Company's Exhibit 28-A.

Mr. Dahling: I have no objection to that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: There being no objection, it might be so marked.

Mr. Nelson: Is that a suitable marking, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, in the absence of any objection on the part of the Company, it is all right. Mr. Dahling has given his permission. I assume you offer it in evidence, do you?

Mr. Nelson: I do, under same limitations as the original Company Exhibit 28 was offered. In other words, I offer this actually as a substitute for Company's Exhibit 28.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received as a separate 1300 exhibit, Company's Exhibit 28-A.

(The document above referred to was marked and received in evidence as Company's Exhibit No. 28-A.)

Mr. Nelson: I wish it understood that I offer this document in evidence without waiving any objections I made to Company's original Exhibit 28.

Mr. Karasick: Do I understand that Mr. Dahling said this is the original of Company's Exhibit 28?

Mr. Nelson: The original of the one he received.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Denison, Company's Exhibit 28-A is the actual paper that you received in the factory at the time this matter came up?

A. Correct.

Q. The one you had yesterday was a copy made for convenience here in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the N. A. W. A., if you will note the last paragraph there?

A. I don't know.

Q. Do you know of any such organization?

A. Not by those initials, no.

Q. Do you know of any such organization by any initials?

A. No.

Q. Will you take a look at this paper and tell me whether it is a paper of the stock, of the kind that 1301 the Company had at that time?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are you showing the witness Company's Exhibit 28 A?

Mr. Nelson: I am, and he is examining it in the light.

The Witness: I couldn't say.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) You could not say?

A. No, it's a Hammermill Bond of some type.

Q. Can you make out the type of Hammermill Bond?

A. I can't make out the word ahead of the word "Bond".

Q. Did the Packard Motor Car Company at or about the time in question have Hammermill Bond stock in and about its premises for use in its affairs?

A. I don't know.

Q. Will you observe the typewriting and state whether your had typewriters of approximately that type?

A. Oh, yes. This is a mimeograph, I am quite sure.

Q. Oh, you think it is?

A. Well, don't you?

Q. I do not know.

A. I am quite positive this is a mimeograph job.

Q. And not typing?

A. Yes.

Q. Of course, the mimeograph would disclose the general confirmation of the type, would it not?

1302 A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: Perhaps the Examiner would like to see it?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) How many more of these do you have, Company's Exhibit 28?

A. This is the only one that I have.

Q. Are there any more in the possession of the Company, as far as you know?

A. I believe there are, but I am not sure, because a number of others had them and told me they had them but I am sure they destroyed them because they were not as much interested in them as I was.

Q. So, at the present time, it would be your idea that this is the only copy of Company's Exhibit 28 in the Company's possession?

A. That is probably true.

Q. Now, I want to ask you who brought that to you, I want his name?

A. You want the name of the employee?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. That was brought to me by one of our foremen training supervisors by the name of N. C. Rogers.

Q. N. C. Rogers?

A. No, no, I beg your pardon. It was brought to me
1303 by Al Sours.

Q. How do you spell Mr. Sours' name?

A. S-o-u-r-s.

Q. What is his position?

A. He is one of our foreman training supervisors, at that time on the night shift.

Q. Just answer this question yes or no, if you please: Did he make a statement to you as to where he got this paper, Company's Exhibit 28?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you do with the paper when you got it?

A. I kept it.

Q. Did you do anything further with it?

A. With the paper?

Q. Yes, Company Exhibit 28 A?

A. Not that I recall now.

Q. Nothing that you recall now?

A. No.

Q. Just answer this question yes or no, if you please,

Mr. Denison: Did you call that paper to the attention of any of your superiors?

A. I am not positive. I am almost certain that I did.

Q. Well, give us your best recollection of the name of the persons to whose attention you called it?

A. I know I discussed it with others in the organi-
1304 zation that might be considered on an equal basis as myself.

Q. Well, I asked you for a name.

A. Mr. Weiss and Mr. Floyd Bird.

Q. Anybody else?

A. Not that I recall. I believe I discussed it with Mr. Christopher, but I am not positive.

Q. Did you give it to Mr. Christopher?

A. I am not sure, Mr. Nelson.

Q. Were you present in his office when that paper, Exhibit 28-A, was discussed with representatives of Chapter 5 of the Foreman's Association?

A. No.

Q. Were you present at any discussion of Company's Exhibit 28 with representatives of the Foreman's Association, Chapter 5?

A. No.

Q. The first time you discussed it was here in Court as a witness?

A. With whom?

Q. With anybody aside from the men, Weiss and Bird, as you have named them?

A. You asked me to name them.

Q. Yes, and you did.

A. I remember the discussions with Weiss and Bird.
I am just as sure I discussed it with a number of 1305 other people as we went through the course of our business at that time. You want to remember a foreman's strike occurred just after the issuance of this paper, Mr. Nelson.

Q. And you knew it was going to occur at the time?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Well, you knew there was ferment there in the plant at the time?

A. No.

Q. You did not know that?

A. No. I know this, if I recall correctly, the foremen of the Briggs Company were on strike at the time.

Q. At the time this paper came to your hands?

A. I believe so. You will notice the date on the paper is April 25.

Q. That is right.

A. The strike occurred at Packard, I think, around the 3rd or 4th of May, and if I recall correctly, the Briggs strike occurred about a week before.

Q. About a week before April 25?

A. No, about a week before the Packard strike.

Q. So the Briggs' men had just gone out when this came to your hands, probably?

A. I believe so.

Q. Now, answer this question yes or no, if you please, Mr. Denison: Do you know who composed this letter?

1306 A. No.

Q. So far as you are concerned, the letter is anonymous?

A. Yes, I think my previous answer covers that.

Q. And you received it from Mr. Sours?

A. I received this copy from Mr. Sours, yes.

Q. Did you receive other copies?

A. I am quite sure I saw other copies in the hands of other executives.

Q. You stated yesterday that you were pretty sure that you saw signatures or a signature of a paper like Company's Exhibit 28-A.

A. There is a signature on here (indicating).

Q. A signature?

A. I assume it is a signature, I don't know that.

Q. Where is there a signature on that?

A. In the upper righthand corner.

Q. You mean that pencil notation?

A. It is a name a department symbol that I recognize.

Q. Whose handwriting is that in, Timberman?

A. I don't know.

Q. Is it yours?

A. No.

Q. Is it Sours'?

A. I don't know.

Q. Do you know the handwriting at all?

1307 A. I know Mr. Sours' handwriting; I'm quite sure it isn't his.

Q. Do you know the handwriting in which the word "Timberman" appears there?

A. No, the symbol "D. S. B." follows.

Q. Yes, that is one of your departments, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. What department is it? I really just want the information; I am not trying to test your recollection.

A. A D division material handling department.

Q. Now, did you have a man by the name of Timberman in that department at that time?

A. I understand he was a CIO steward.

Q. He was not a supervisor at all?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Can you give me the name of any person who you would claim signed some one of these Company's exhibits 28-A?

A. I couldn't tell you. At the time I was told of some, but I didn't make any mental note of it.

Q. I am not asking you what you were told. If you will observe, Mr. Denison, I have carefully avoided asking you what you were told. I have stuck to what you saw and what you know yourself, and I am doing so in this question: Can you give us any name that you ever saw signed on Company's Exhibit 28-A?

1308 A. No.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Or on any copy thereof?

Mr. Nelson: I am referring not only to this paper but any similar paper or copy.

The Witness: No.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) So the answer is that as far as the paper itself is concerned, you could not, of your own knowledge, say that you ever saw a signature on it, could you, and give us the name of the person?

A. Not positively, no. I have seen other copies and my recollection is that there were some signatures on them but it is very difficult to remember. You will remember that was back in April, Mr. Nelson. I wasn't particularly interested in any names on there; I was interested in the general proposition.

1309 Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Well, you were interested in whether the CIO was organizing the foremen or not, weren't you?

A. Correct.

Q. Was the name Timberman, D. S. B., on that Exhibit 28-A, at the time it came to you?

A. Yes.

Q. And you have not changed it in any way?

A. No, I haven't touched it.

Q. Did you call Mr. Timberman in?

A. No.

Q. Did you have him called in anywhere down the line?

A. No.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Timberman?

A. No.

Q. Direct or indirect?

A. No.

Q. As I understand it then, you did not either call Mr. Timberman or cause him to be called in or say to him in effect, "Look, what are you doing with this and what do you want to do about this?" You didn't do anything of the kind, did you?

A. No.

Q. Did you call in any foreman or representative of the Foreman's Association and in effect show him C-28-A

1310 and say, "What about this, what do you want about it?"

A. No.

Q. You didn't do anything of that kind?

A. No.

Q. As far as you know, neither did any other officer of the Company?

A. I cannot say anything as to what they would do, or as to that.

Q. You don't know that they did anything of the kind?

A. No.

Q. I am not asking you to say that they did, I am asking you whether you, as a Labor Relations man, knew of any other officers or some of your superiors calling in Mr.

Timberman or a foreman or representative of the Association and saying to them in effect, "What about this, what do you want about it?"

A. No.

Q. You don't know of any such event as that at all?

A. No.

Q. And your answer is no, isn't it, Mr. Denison?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Nelson: Will you mark this as Exhibit 42?

(Thereupon, the document above referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit 42 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Mr. Denison, I hand you Peti-
1311 tioner's Exhibit 42 for identification and ask you to compare the handwriting of Timberman, D. S. B. on Exhibit 42 with that on Exhibit C-28-A.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you read the last question, please?

(Question read.)

The Witness: I am not a handwriting expert, but they look to me to be the same.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): So, as a layman, it looks to be the same signature?

A. Yes.

Q. Would it help you any in answering these questions if I advise you that the handwriting on Petitioner's Exhibit 42 is that of Mr. Prosper Traen?

A. In what respect?

Q. In answering these questions. If I gave you that information would it help you?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean in the last series of questions you asked?

Mr. Nelson: Yes. I will say to you, Mr. Denison, that that is the handwriting of Mr. Prosper Traen, President of the Packard Chapter of the Foreman's Association of America.

Mr. Donovan: On what?

1312 Mr. Nelson: On both, we claim. It certainly is on 42 because I just handed him a piece of paper and had him make it here at the table.

Mr. Dahling: What is the point?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am not sure what you are getting at.

Mr. Nelson: I am not trying to take a man of Mr. Denison's experience by surprise.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Now, if the word Timberman, D. S. B. on Exhibit 28-A is the handwriting of Mr. Prosper Traen, do you want all of your testimony to stand as to where you got that letter and what you did with it and what occurred in connection with it?

A. Absolutely.

Q. You want it to stay just as it is?

A. Yes.

Q. And you agree that the handwriting appears to be similar, just as a layman and not as an expert?

A. Yes, maybe Mr. Traen is a good forger.

Q. No, he has just written it at my request.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well—

Mr. Dahling (Interposing): Mr. Examiner, if Mr. Traen says that that is his signature and he wrote it on the exhibit why we have no objection to that.

1313 Mr. Nelson: It is our claim, of course, that we investigated the source of that and found it not to be Mr. Timberman who put it on the paper and later it came from Mr. Denison.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is Mr. Traen here now?

Mr. Nelson: He is right here.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You are still under oath, Mr. Traen, did you just sign that slip?

Mr. Traen: I just signed it, yes.

Mr. Nelson: I will show it to him.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just a minute. I understand, for the protection of the witness, since all of us are sometimes inclined to overlook the fact that what we intend to say as a pleasantry sometimes may not appear that way in a cold transcript,—I am sure the witness would want me to say that when he used the word "forger" in connection with Mr. Traen, he said it accompanied by a broad smile and obviously meant it as a pleasantry. I might also say that once or twice in the record, in the past, I have made certain remarks intended in a like vein and as you read it in cold print, somebody might get the wrong impression.

Mr. Nelson: On behalf of Petitioner, we had no intention of imputing a serious intent to Mr. Denison's state-
1314 ment to Mr. Traen.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am sure you did not. Sometimes other people read the record a long time afterwards, and they are not here and do not see what happens.

Mr. Nelson: I offer Exhibit P-42.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received.

(The document heretofore marked Petitioner's Exhibit 42 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): So far as any knowledge you have of Company's Exhibit 28-A, in itself, is anonymous and the circulation of it in the plant is anonymous.

Mr. Dahling: You mean he does not know who circulated it?

Mr. Nelson: He doesn't know who composed it or circulated it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: May I amend that by adding that I would like to construe the evidence at the moment to mean that he doesn't know, and I emphasize "know", that it was circulated at all.

Mr. Nelson: I did not want to ask him that again but I will add the Examiner's questions. You don't know that it was circulated at all, do you?

The Witness: As to positive knowledge and seeing it done and signed, the answer is definitely no. If I 1315 might qualify that? I will want to say this, that the information came to me from a number of different sources that these things were running through the plant. I had one and that was the only one I wanted. I made no effort to get any more or to go out and snoop to see what was going on with regard to it. I felt quite sure that from the number of reports that came to me, that that was sufficient evidence that it was going on.

Mr. Nelson: And you didn't call anyone and have a talk with them or anything about it?

The Witness: No, I did not.

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

The Witness: Let me qualify that, Mr. Nelson. By "anyone or anybody" I mean anybody of the ones that you mentioned of the Foreman's Association or the CIO stewards.

Mr. Nelson: Anybody that might be in any possibility responsible for the preparation of the paper or the circulation of it.

The Witness: My discussion of it was limited with men whom I worked with from day to day, general executives like Mr. Bird and Mr. White and others.

Mr. Nelson: And Mr. Sours?

A. Mr. Sours, yes.

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee): Mr. Denison, you
1316 indicated that as a result of what was handed to you, and what was told to you, you became convinced—and I think I am quoting you—you became convinced what was going on—I think that is the phrase you used—do you mean by that that you became convinced of the circulation of the paper?

A. Yes. If I might elaborate on that a bit. I want to make this clear, Mr. Examiner, if Mr. Sours brings a paper like that to me and he says he has been told by the foreman that this is—

Mr. Nelson: Let me interrupt to impose an objection to the question and answer because they are all hearsay.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, I think—

Mr. Nelson (Interposing): Of course, I cannot overrule the Examiner, obviously.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You can object to an Examiner's question.

Mr. Nelson: I object to the question and answer as calling for hearsay.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness started—

Mr. Nelson (Interposing): And calling for a conclusion.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness started to volunteer something beyond the answer to the question. The 1317 question is proper and the answer to the question was proper but the witness started to volunteer something beyond it—

Mr. Donovan (Interposing): All Executives get reports that are hearsay and routine and normal and necessitous in procedure. They find out what is going on in the plant from reports of men whom they can depend upon.

Mr. Nelson: But that does not enable him to put it in evidence.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is the point. All of us in our everyday dealings act on hearsay. No business could operate properly without a degree of hearsay information being received. If the top executive had to rely on personal knowledge, as we use the term in lawsuits, I do not see how any business could function. However, I suppose that in turn the court has to operate to a degree on a bit more strict principle.

Mr. Karasick: If the witness wants to qualify his answer to the question he should be permitted to do so and if it is improper after he has finished his answer, a motion may be admitted to strike the answer.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness' last few words given by the witness on his part, as to the volunteer addendum, indicates the impropriety on the face of 1318 it, so I will sustain the objection as to the last part.

The Witness: You mean that you want me to go on with that elaboration as I called it?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, it is difficult to know whether part of it might be good and part of it might not. You started out with some parts which were clearly improper. I don't know whether it is up to me to try to separate in advance what might be good and what might not.

Mr. Dahling: Of course, Mr. Examiner, it has been our position that Mr. Denison because of his position in the Company had these reports coming to him because of his position and as a matter of routine in the ordinary course of business. And that he can testify to them as a fact. That came to his knowledge in his official capacity.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What facts are you talking about?

Mr. Dahling: Well, the circumstances surrounding the circulation of these petitions, Exhibit 28.

Mr. Nelson: Then hearsay on the broadest possible basis would be admissible. If you are to rely on hearsay evidence of two representatives of the Company getting together and talking, do you want the conversation in the record? That was just what Mr. Denison was offering.

1319 Mr. Dahling: Not that broad.

Mr. Nelson: That is my objection.

Mr. Dahling: It is to some extent limited, Mr. Nelson. These reports that people in industry get from others in management come to them and if they do come to them in the regular course of business and as a matter of routine, I think they are admissible as facts.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You don't claim, Mr. Dahling, that papers like this, circulated, are circulated as a matter of routine?

Mr. Dahling: Yes, because it is part of the duty of those in the Company who have the obligation to check up on what is being distributed through the plant to report back to certain officials in the Company, and that deals with the worker or when it deals with the foreman, to report that matter to the Industrial Relations Department.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I assume from that, Mr. Dahling, that what you mean by that is that it is the duty of the officials in the plant to report to the Industrial Relations or Labor Relations Department or Personnel Department, matters which affect their department, no matter what the particular item happens to be?

Mr. Dahling: I was specifying the distribution of 1320 pamphlets. That would be the responsibility and duties of them.

Mr. Nelson: Would you then object if I were to offer to show what Mr. Traen and Mr. Turnbull said when they met on the same proposition?

Mr. Dahling: You have a different proposition there. What offered happened with the internal workings of the Company.

Mr. Nelson: Well, one of them is president of the Chapter and the other on the National Board, and they have a duty to meet and talk with each other. Of course, you would object to that evidence because they have a duty to the Association and you make a distinction because it is not a duty to the Company.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You made a point yesterday in arguing for the admissibility of Company's Exhibit 28—I thought then and I think now that you were stretching it somewhat—I don't mean in any attempt to deceive the Examiner. Of course, we will disagree as to what constitutes admissible evidence. You are stretching a bit the applicable rule of evidence with reference to what you call reports received in the usual course of business. I did receive Exhibit 28 with remarks indicated in the record.

I do not think that the principle of what you term
1321 reports received in the usual course of business goes to the extent of receiving matters such as you have sought to introduce, that is to say, the entire conversation of the nature that is involved in Company's Exhibit 28. In general those so-called reports have to do with writings, received in the regular course of business by people whose business it is to receive them.

Mr. Nelson: In handwriting and signed by the person in authority and in that position, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I would not be quite so technical as that. At any rate, I do not think it goes to the extent that you, Mr. Dahling, have sought to apply that rule of evidence and I think an inspection of Wigmore, et al., will bear me out.

Mr. Donovan: As a matter of fact, Mr. Examiner, during the present conditions of greatly augmented production force represented by an active union, to-wit, the CIO, and no presence of other union interests in the employees, leads to reports that would otherwise be made in writing being verbally made for such good reasons as this. Written remarks about the activities, union activities of an employee, are very difficult and present a very difficult problem for the employer under the National Labor Relations Act, as meaning interference within the meaning of the act
1322 of Unfair Labor Practices. Unfair labor practices may be inferred from various like actions. Where writing may be pointed to they give ground for fear that they will cause hearings and charges of unfair labor practices. It is not at all unusual that reports received by a man like Mr. Denison in his position at the business end of the Labor Relations Department, would be partly verbally as well as in writing, and not in the old sense of a strictly evidentiary rule, as suggested by Mr. Nelson, as such report in a formal nature on a form signed in writing by a particular man, on which management might depend for information, would have slight applicability under the present condition. I think that is a thing that might enter into the diposition of the evidentiary document. I think it should.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I point out in addition, Mr. Donovan, there has been no showing that other—and we might probably term it—better evidence is not available. There has been an attempt made to get into evidence, at least the inference, that this document was circulated. Second, that it was circulated by foremen, using the broad sense; and, third, that it was circulated improperly, and so forth. As far as the present stage of the record goes, that, if true, could be proven by people who either did the circulating or who actually saw the circulating being 1323 done and who saw the persons engaged in the circulating. If, for no other reason, it seems to me, it is proper for me to rule, and, in fact, it is one of the bases for the ruling, I do not think we ought to get this second- or third-hand information; we ought to get it direct. In any event, I think it would be more appropriate, perhaps, if the witness answers specific questions rather than going on saying something that is not in response to any pending question.

Mr. Nelson: I want to interpose a motion now to strike from the files Company's Exhibit 28, and with it, of course, Company's Exhibit 28-A.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The motion is denied.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): This man, Timberman, is in this man Crawford's division, is he not?

A. No—well, in that division, but not reporting to Crawford.

Q. No, I said nothing about reporting to Crawford. Timberman is in Crawford's division?

A. So far as the area is concerned, yes.

Q. And as far as supervision is concerned?

A. No, he does not report to Crawford either directly or indirectly.

Q. He is a steward of some division of the CIO, is he not; that is your information?

1324 A. That is correct.

Q. He is not a foreman, Timberman?

A. No.

Q. And he is in Crawford's physical division, if you want to call it that way?

A. But reporting to another division head, not Mr. Crawford.

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): Mr. Denison, how many plants or buildings are there at the main plant of the Company?

A. How many buildings?

Q. Yes.

A. Understand, Mr. Karasick, taking this building, as an example, it is one building or it might be four wings and, therefore, it is called four buildings. In our designation of buildings, we would probably call this four buildings. I just want to make that clear. I think I have some figures on that basis of designation.

Q. You mean, if a building branches out in one or more wings, each wing might be called a building?

A. For our purpose, yes.

Q. Can you tell me how many buildings there are, I mean separate physical structures?

A. No, I can't, because we designate them on the basis I just described.

1325 Trial Examiner Jaffee: The difficulty is unless we get the exact definition of buildings, we do not know what the figures would mean.

Mr. Karasick: We will try to get it, Mr. Examiner.

The Witness: 115, that's an area of a plant about a mile long and approximately a quarter of a mile wide.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): Are those 115 buildings enclosed, that is, with a fence, or something—

A. (Interposing): No, there are streets that run through but the plant would be on one side of the street and on the other side of the street there is no grade space between these buildings.

Q. There are over-passes and under passes between the separate physical structures?

A. There are several of those, yes.

Q. And all these buildings are in the same general area?

A. Yes, you take an area approximately one mile long and a quarter of a mile wide, all these buildings are within that area.

Q. Now, does the Bundy plant on Hearn Avenue consist of one separate physical structure or more?

A. I have never been inside the building, Mr. Karasick, but my understanding is it is one building, in this regard, I think there is an office in the front and a 1326 factory adjoining the office, which you might call two buildings.

Q. Is that true of the Hupp plant on Milwaukee Avenue?

A. In the Hupp plant, we have a part of one of the Hupp Buildings, as I understand it, I have never been in that building yet.

Q. But it does not consist of two or more buildings, your properties at the Hupp plant?

A. From what I know, it doesn't.

Q. Can you tell me what the present total number of employees are at the main plant? You say the figures you gave previously, Mr. Denison, included the Hupp and Bundy plant.

A. I said 32,583.

Q. That is right, including the Hupp and the Bundy plants.

A. I can estimate it, and that's all.

Q. Give us an estimate for the Hupp plant first?

A. The main plant only, at the time of those figures, which was November 30th, would comprise about 32,000 employees.

Q. There would then remain about 533 who would be either at the Hupp plant or the Bundy plant?

A. That's my estimate. If it is of any importance, I would be glad to get those figures for you, Mr. Karasick.

1327 Q. I wish you would get the figures of the number of employees at the Hupp plant.

A. As of November 30th?

Q. Yes, and the number of employees at the Bundy plant.

A. I will be glad to do so.

Q. You do not have those figures available with you now?

A. No.

Mr. Donovan: You mean the total number of employees of all sorts, Mr. Karasick?

Mr. Karasick: Yes.

The Witness: You understand, I believe, that these plants are just starting up, particularly the Hearn Avenue plant, and to some extent, the Hupp plant. I can get the figure as of November 30th.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): That will be satisfactory in order that the Board may see what the present state of employment is at each of these plants.

A. Yes.

Q. While you are on this point, Mr. Denison, I take it that it is anticipated that the Hupp plant and Bundy plant will work up to a total personnel figure the Company has in mind?

A. I stated some figures earlier, I believe, during Mr. Dahling's questioning, that there were approxi-
1328 mately 1,000 at the Bundy plant and approximately 600 at the Hupp plant. That's the probable objective, as I understand it now.

Q. Both the Hupp plant and the Bundy plant are now manufacturing the same type of materials, or part of them, that you are manufacturing at the main plant today, is that correct?

A. In the Aircraft Engine Division.

Q. Yes, what is your expected rate of increase at the Hupp plant and at the Bundy plant to reach the figures that you have given?

A. You mean when will we reach them?

Q. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean as to the number of employees?

Mr. Karasick: Yes.

The Witness: When we will reach the 1,000 at the Bundy plant?

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): Yes.

A. I don't know, Mr. Karasick.

Q. You have no idea?

A. I think I can get that also.

Q. All right, and the same for the Hupp plant.

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, it may help to know how many 1329 employees you have and you intend to hire, if you can, of course, per month, until the period that you reach your total employment figure at each plant, according to the best calculations you can make at present. I understand you can only approximate the figures.

A. Yes.

Q. Who is in charge of the Hupp plant?

A. Well, it's under the division head, Mr. H. A. Garvey. He will be in charge, as I understand it, of both the Hupp and the Bundy operations.

Q. He is also in charge of the main plant operations?

A. He is in charge of the "C" Division and his organization chart was submitted in evidence.

Q. Actually, no, these are separate physical properties, they will be under the same operation and control as similar departments would be in the main plant?

A. Yes.

Q. The only difference is they are physically separated?

A. The parts moving into these plants are coming from the "C" Division, of which Mr. Garvey is the head.

Q. The Labor Relations matters at each of these plants will be handled by the same individuals who handle Labor Relations matters at the main plant?

A. Yes.

1330 Q. In other words, they will not have separate controls or operations, as far as management is concerned, at each of these two plants?

A. They will be looked upon the same as any other division in the plant is now. They will be handled, so far as I know, the same way Labor Relations and everything else is.

Mr. Nelson: You mean by that, just as though they were in this general body, a quarter of a mile long and a mile wide—or however you said that?

The Witness: That is correct, as far as I know, I think practically all services, and so on, will be handled as though they were in some building right next to the main plant.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): Did I understand you yesterday correctly to have testified that hourly-rated and salaried foremen—and I use the term generically now, are really the same that the amounts they receive are equivalent, the only difference is the difference in pay, which is a matter of past historic basis. It makes no difference as to the amount they receive?

A. I think generally that is a fair statement, yes. Of course, one is paid on an hourly rate basis and paid according to hourly rate principles; the other is paid on the salary basis and paid according to salaried 1331 principles.

Q. But they receive approximately the same amount?

A. The assistant foreman on hourly rate will earn, I am quite sure, the same as an assistant foreman on salary.

Q. And that is true of the other classifications in question in this proceeding?

A. I don't think there are any others but assistant foremen on the hourly rate. There may be a few more men, but very few, if any.

Q. Are there some women in the plant who would fall in the classifications we have been interested in in this case; in other words, are there foreladies?

A. There are a few.

Q. Do you know how many there are and in what classifications they fall?

A. I don't believe there would be over five, and I am quite sure they wouldn't be above the rating of assistant foremen.

Q. How are foremen in the four classifications classified under the Fair Labor Standards Act?

A. You are thinking of the exceptions, like executive, administration and professional?

Q. Yes.

A. As executive.

Q. As executive employees?

1332 A. Yes. To qualify that, the special assignment men, I believe, on our last report to the Wage and Hour Division, were classified as administrative. I think they might just as well have been classified as executive, too, because of the dual function they perform.

Q. When were they so first classified?

A. Are you referring to the Fair Labor Standards Act now?

Q. Yes.

A. From the time of the Fair Labor Standards Act, from the time it became effective.

Q. And that, prior to the war, meant that persons qualified as executives under the Fair Labor Standards Act, would not receive overtime pay for work over the number of hours set forth in the Act per week?

A. If I got your statement, it was to the effect they would not receive it. I don't believe that is quite a correct statement.

Q. All right, then you correct me when I am wrong.

A. There is nothing to prevent any company paying overtime to foremen, as far as the Wage and Hour Division is concerned, but you are not required to do so under the Act.

Q. That is right. We agree upon that as being correct with respect to such a group of persons.

1333 A. You asked me a question back there about the date. I think the Fair Labor Standards Act became effective in 1938.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In fact, that is the title of it, the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): I believe you stated yesterday that prior to the war when foremen consistently worked overtime, instead of paying them time and a half for the overtime so worked, you, instead, raised their base pay so that it became an increase on a salary basis, is that correct?

A. You used the term "prior to the war." By that do you mean Pearl Harbor?

Q. I do not know. If there is a distinction in dates, you give it to me.

A. In my testimony I established definite dates. The one being the institution of the plan of payment of overtime effective March 1, 1942, and that plan in general was made retroactive to January and February preceding March, 1942. That brings us down to January 1, 1942. Prior to that, and beginning with the defense program, prior to Pearl Harbor, the whole thing was known as the defense program; not the war program, where there was consistent overtime scheduled, we increased the base rate of those men. It wasn't large at that time, I mean 1334 the number of those men wasn't large at that time. We weren't in high production in the Aircraft Engine Division nor in the Marine Engine Division.

Q. What I wondered was this, when you did increase the base pay of these men was it your computation—well, what was your computation based on, how did you compute the increase they were to get?

A. Prior to any changes, their base pay was on a forty-hour basis. If, let us say, the foremen of the Tool Design Department—that's the department that had a great deal to do with getting the program rolling—were working fifty, sixty or even 105 hours, their pay was adjusted accordingly.

Q. Was that computation based on the amount of time over forty hours they worked at straight rate or at one and one-half time?

A. At straight time.

Q. In respect to this ninety-four-minute average worked by foremen, I think you said in April, 1944—

A. (Interposing): You said "worked." I question that term.

Q. You term it what it should be, then.

A. The time showing on the clock card over the normal quitting time of the foremen and generally his department.

Q. Let us call it time put in. Will that be satis-
1335 factory to you?

A. "Put in" to me means work in general, time in the plant.

Q. This ninety-four-minute average you were speaking about was ninety-four minutes, as I understand, over the amount of time that they were to work in the plant. That was based on a ten-hour day, ninety-four minutes over the ten-hour day they were regularly scheduled to work?

A. You are taking that ten-hour day, assuming that is the only schedule we had. We had men from eight hours on and some on twelve hours.

Q. On April 12th, when you made that study?

A. That's true at that time. Remember, in some departments we had three eight-hour shifts. But by and large, the greatest bulk of the factory, and, therefore, the foremen, worked a ten-hour day.

Q. And the ninety-four minute average was based on a study computed from a ten-hour day?

A. Yes; of course, if a man was an eight-hour man, it was in excess of eight hours.

Q. Were there any eight-hour schedules in the plant at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. Were most of them eight or ten?

A. Most of them were ten hours; some were nine,
1336 as I recall, but the large majority were ten hours.

And, incidentally, of course, that was also five hours on Saturday, a total of fifty hours a week.

Q. I see. If you will pardon me just a moment while I look through these exhibits, I want to get ahold of Company Exhibit 25 and ask you about it.

A. What is Exhibit 25, Mr. Karasick?

Q. It is a proposed change, or proposed changes in salary and vacation, holidays and sick benefits that you spoke of yesterday.

A. Here is one (indicating).

Q. Do you have a copy of it there? Thank you. Mr. Denison, I would like to ask you a question or two about Company's Exhibit 25, because I am not sure that I understood yesterday your testimony with respect to it. My recollection is that you testified that foremen received certain privileges that regular employees did not, as set forth in the document. You pointed out such things as vacations, absence allowances, night premiums, extra vacations, I think, and separation pay, is that correct?

A. Well, a supervisor—a foreman supervises generally a number of hourly-rated employees. I take it you mean your statement to mean the men he supervises, and he does receive these benefits, but the men he super-

1337 vises do not get them. Now, you mentioned the night premium. I qualified that by saying that we attempted to get more for the foremen than their employees get, but were unable to, and that is explained in this exhibit. We attempted to get five per cent for the foremen, but the Salary Stabilization unit limited us to five cents, which is the same thing the hourly rated employees get as night premium.

Q. As to the night premium, the regular employees—I mean by that the rank and file—and the foremen receive the same benefits, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. All right, now, let us go to—what is it, absent allowances?

A. Yes.

Q. Do the foremen receive any greater benefits with respect to absence allowances than the rank and file employees?

A. The hourly-rated rank and file receive no absence allowances.

Q. But the foremen do?

A. As listed here and as limited here by the Salary Stabilization unit also, Mr. Karasick.

Q. All I am interested in knowing is whether or not foremen do receive benefits with respect to absence allowances that the regular hourly-rated employees do not?

1338 A. That is correct.

Q. Now, do foremen receive any greater benefits with respect to vacations?

A. Yes.

Q. As set forth in that document, is that right?

A. There is no comparison here. This indicates what a foreman does receive. If you want to know the differences, I can explain those.

Q. Would you?

A. Yes. The hourly rate employee does receive a vacation payment, but the qualified period for the vacation payment for the hourly-rated employees is much longer than indicated here for supervision. The qualified period for a two-weeks vacation for a foreman is one year; for an hourly-rated employee it is five years. A one-week vacation for a foreman, it is six months; for an hourly-rated employee, it is one year.

Q. What about separation pay, are there any greater benefits the foremen receive?

A. There are no separation pay provisions for hourly-rated employees.

Q. So that separation pay provisions apply only to regularly exempt employees, as you call them, or from assistant foremen on?

A. That is correct.

1339 Mr. Karasick: That is all, I believe.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Any further questions of the witness?

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Denison, referring again to Exhibit 28-A, did you have that prepared?

A. 28-A being this letter or petition? No.

Q. Yes, being the document about which we have had considerable discussion yesterday and today.

A. No, I did not.

Q. Do you know where it was prepared?

A. No, I do not.

Q. Was it, to your knowledge, prepared by the Company?

A. No, I am quite sure it wasn't, but I don't know that positively.

Q. When you say the Salary Stabilization unit, or rather, your petition to the Salary Stabilization unit in connection with certain adjustments with reference to pay, vacation, separation pay, and so forth, include others than foremen, will you state for the purpose of the record just what categories were included?

A. All exempt employees, Mr. Dahling, as defined by the Fair Labor Standards Act, where we apply that in our operations. That includes, in addition to foremen of all categories, superintendents, various office super-1340 visors, various other supervisors, engineers, doctors, various technical office employees that can qualify in the professional exempt classification, certain professional assistants that can qualify under professional exemption. There are others, but I can't think of all of them at this time.

1341 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) So that would include all higher executives and administrative employees of the Company, isn't that true?

A. Yes, as we apply the exempt status, yes.

Mr. Dahling: That is all.

Mr. Nelson: I have a couple of questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Suppose we take the morning recess at this time.

(Recess.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are we ready to proceed, gentlemen?

Mr. Nelson: I have a couple of questions.

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Denison, is it a fact that if a man is demoted he does not get any separation pay, if he is demoted from supervision to an hourly rated maintenance and production worker—that he does not get any separation pay?

A. In a case where the change is effective immediately, in other words, a transfer, the answer is no, he does not, but if he is laid off, he does. Perhaps as in many cases, he may be laid off and called back again when another opening occurs; in that case he does get separation pay.

Q. That would be by reason of the layoff?

1342 A. Yes.

Q. And not growing out of the demotion?

A. As a matter of fact, Mr. Nelson, the Salary Stabilization Act prevented us in their ruling in paying it in many cases of transfer.

Q. The point about it is that if he is laid off, that is, not necessarily a demotion and he does not know about it until he comes back and there is no place in supervision that you can put him in, so you put him on an hourly rate of pay?

A. That is substantially true. A man may be laid off and given a semi-promise that we will probably have something for him in two or three weeks.

Q. And he wants to go to work before you have a supervisory position for him, so you put him back to work in whatever you have?

A. The point is—

Q. (Interposing) The point is that at the time you laid him off he does not—he isn't demoted. If he is demoted he does not get separation pay, so my statement is correct, isn't it?

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. As the matter now stands without any representation of the foremen and no agreement, a member of the supervisory force taken into the Military Service who 1343 comes back has no representative as such, to take up his situation and re-employment—

Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) Just a minute, I will object to that question because there are a variety of agencies having to do with nothing but that particular problem and there are a large number of appropriations that have been made. The Government has acted in that matter and I do not think this witness should be asked to answer that question for the purpose of drawing an unfavorable inference against the Petitioner—against the Packard Company. I object to the question.

Mr. Nelson: I am referring to representation by supervisors as such, and not to public agencies. I will limit my question to that.

Mr. Donovan: I object to the question for another reason. It is another way of asking whether or not the Company has collectively bargained with the foremen supervisory employees. We all know they are not.

Mr. Nelson: I put in my question, no representation and no contract as such. The supervisory force returning from Military Service is not represented in any supervisory organization whatsoever.

Mr. Dahling: By whom?

Mr. Nelson: Supervisors or Association.

The Witness: You know, Mr. Nelson, that there is a 1344 memorandum 190 on Selective Service in the Act which provides for re-employment of anyone going into the Service by the Company which he left.

Mr. Nelson: That still leaves a lot of questions to be decided, if the man happens to be a supervisor, doesn't it?

The Witness: Not many.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) It leaves some questions?

A. No, not if he left our employ.

Q. In other words, you are so good at that at Packard's that you eliminate all questions?

Mr. Donovan: I object to that. He is arguing with the witness.

Mr. Nelson: In other words, the Packard Company is so careful in those matters that there are no questions to be decided, is that right?

The Witness: We are extremely careful in the matters and are quite familiar with the provisions of the Selective Service Act and the memoranda issued by the Selective Service Division.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Within those limitations, the man is without any supervisory representation, isn't he?

A. Correct, in the form of a Union, yes.

Q. And there will be no other supervisor who will come forward to speak for him and assist him. You do 1345 not recognize anybody competent enough to do it, any supervisory body?

A. Surely. I would speak for him, any of his superiors would speak for him and any of the executives of the Company.

Q. Sure.

A. If you are implying that we have no interest in the man at all, that is dead wrong.

Q. I didn't say that. I said he has no supervisory representation, recognized as such under the present setup.

A. In the form of a union? Yes, that is so.

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of this witness?

Mr. Karasick: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) Mr. Denison, do foremen in the plant have seniority?

A. Seniority? By that you mean men under a contract? No. But if you mean do we recognize the man's service in the Company or in our dealings with him, absolutely, yes.

Q. In what manner and to what extent?

A. Perhaps if you can tell me what you mean—I would say this: The demotions and promotions or anything that affects him—in those things, his length of service is considered. It may not be the only consideration 1346 but it is a consideration that is never overlooked.

Q. I would like you to refer to Company's Exhibit 25 again. You have a copy of that available, I believe.

A. Yes.

Q. On the second page there is an explanation of the method by which extra vacation credit is awarded. Those extra vacation credits are the same for non-exempt and exempt employees, are they not?

A. That is correct.

Q. Non-exempt employees mean employees below the rank of some supervisory status?

A. On a salary. In this instance this is a salary personnel policy, Mr. Karasick.

Q. And that would include non-exempt employees—that would cover hourly salaried employees who do production and maintenance work?

A. Not hourly salary.

Q. Salaried employees who do production and maintenance work throughout the plant?

A. If there were any, it would include them, but there are none. Non-exempt salary employees in general include clerks, stenographers, typists and draftsmen—

Q. (Interposing) Someone other than a supervisor?

A. Supervisor, administrator or professional.

Q. Now, again referring to that document, the provision for computing vacations allowed to both non-exempt and exempt salaried employees are the same, are they not?

1347

A. Yes.

Q. That is also true with respect to separation pay?

A. Yes.

Q. Turning to page 3, with respect to dismissals?

A. That is part of separation pay, yes.

Q. And discharges?

A. Yes.

Q. And resignations when two weeks notice has and has not been given?

A. Yes.

Q. And inductions into the Armed Services?

A. Yes.

Mr. Karasick: That is all.

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Denison, isn't it a fact—referring to the matters which we talked about a moment ago—that it is the overwhelmingly general practice to demote the supervisor instead of laying him off?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

The Witness: To keep him in our employ, yes.

Mr. Nelson: You demote him first?

The Witness: Yes, that is correct.

1348

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Examiner, may I have it appear on the record that a demotion may be necessarily involved in an attempt by the Company to retain a man in their employ rather than let him go sometimes under very difficult situations. I think counsel hopes for some unfavorable connotation from the use of the word "demotion." There might be action by the Company in retaining a man by transfer which would necessarily involve a lower pay and which would not be unfair and an unfriendly act between Management and that employee.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Your statement is noted, Mr. Donovan. Are there any further questions?

Mr. Dahling: I have a few questions.

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) I have a few questions on demotions and separation pay. We will say, Mr. Denison, that you have an assistant foreman and the production goes down and you have no further need for the assistant foreman, if that assistant foreman is then given other work with the rank and file, is that what you term a demotion?

A. Our terminology is generally transferred, I believe the word "demotion" as used by Mr. Nelson so applies, yes.

Q. You don't use the term "demotion"? You call it a—

1349 A. Yes, we generally refer to it as a transfer.

Q. This assistant foreman who would be transferred back into the hourly rate, would lose his status as assistant foreman but not necessarily because of any fault on his part?

A. That is true in a great majority of cases, yes, if it is tied in with a layoff in the department or division of the plant.

Q. In the days of the manufacture of automobiles, and a change of models, wasn't it necessary to lay off a large number of men?

A. Yes.

Q. That happened every year, didn't it?

A. A layoff every year? No.

Q. How often?

A. There would be a brief shutdown while a model change was going on. We did not look at it as a layoff. It might have been a temporary layoff. A layoff to us is a complete severance with the Company.

Q. And separation pay relates to a complete layoff, a separation of an employee from employment with the Company?

A. That is correct.

Q. And if your assistant foreman is transferred from an assistant foreman to an hourly rated employee and takes up his job immediately, that is not considered a layoff?

1350 A. No.

Q. And he receives no separation pay in that event?

A. No.

Q. On the other hand, if he was separated from the Company and then hired back again, a matter of two weeks, he nevertheless, would get his separation pay?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: I have no further questions.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee) Mr. Denison, I think one of the charts which is part of the Company Exhibit 22 series, indicates—if my memory serves me correctly—that there is a Labor Relations Department—and perhaps I use the word "department" rather loosely—a labor relations department, an industrial relations department, a personnel department and an employment department. I wonder if you could, for the record, indicate what those are generally and their relationship to each other.

A. The departments that you mentioned are all part of the industrial relations—let us say division—and the industrial relations division is split into two groups, one is the labor relations, which in general has to do with dealings with labor organizations, almost that and nothing more, and the other group is the personnel group which comprises the employment or procurement of employees and in general all employee services, such 1351 as feeding, insurance, hospitalization, coordination, gasoline rationing and a number of other matters that come under the heading of employee services.

Q. What is this department or group which is known as the employment department?

A. That is part of the personnel division or personnel department.

Q. Would you indicate for the record also the names of the persons who have charge, first, of the main labor relations division and these various groups you just mentioned?

A. The main division is the industrial relations manager, Mr. E. Patskowsky, the man in charge of labor relations is Mr. Walter Smith, the man in charge of the personnel function is myself.

Q. And this employment section or group or unit, or whatever it is, the employment department?

A. That is headed up by a man by the name of C. W. McCoy.

Q. When, in the first stage of the grievance procedure, a rank and file employee goes to one or another of these four foremen and the matter is not settled there and it is necessary to go to the second stage, precisely where does it go?

A. In the first stage, if it is a grievance, a Union grievance, it is presented to the foreman by the 1352 steward. If it is not satisfactorily settled, the steward takes it to what is known as a district steward. The district steward contacts a man in the labor relations division that is assigned to him or his division and attempts to settle it there. In many cases they will come back to the foreman that made the original decision. When the district steward comes back to the foreman he is supposed to come back with the labor relations man. There are other procedures above that.

Q. When you say "come back to the foreman" what do you mean?

A. Well, here is a matter that the foreman has ruled on and given the chief steward his answer. The chief steward is not satisfied and wishes to appeal so he takes it to the district steward. The district steward then contacts the labor relations man assigned to the general area he is in. Now, they may be able to settle it between them and in most cases the labor relations man is particular and wants to discuss the matter with the foreman. He might do it on his own. If the district steward wants to discuss it with the foreman, he is supposed to go to the foreman with the labor relations representative with him.

Q. What I mean was, what do you mean by saying "back to the foreman"?

A. Carry the grievance back to the foreman. The 1353 district steward has never been to the foreman in any phase of it.

Q. At that point the grievance is primarily within the jurisdiction of the labor relations department?

A. Yes.

Q. And it is part of its job to go back to the foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. And it is not a case where the whole grievance is passed back to the foreman for handling?

A. The man who made the grievance is entitled to an explanation. Nothing is written in this stage of the procedure.

Q. What is the next step?

A. If the district steward is not satisfied with the decision rendered at that stage, he in turn takes it to the plant committee and the plant committee covers the entire plant and deals with the labor relations manager in that matter. At that stage it must be written.

Q. And there are further procedures still higher up, I presume?

A. Well, there is a labor relations committee set up by the Company to deal with the plant committee, as a further appeal step.

Q. All right now, would it be a fair statement, Mr. Denison—without attempting to give any percentages, which I suppose we can in the nature of things—

1354 that a very large percentage of the complaints—I won't use the word "grievances," for the time being—are made by the rank and file in the belief by such rank and file, whether right or wrong that they honestly have a complaint?

A. I think that is a fair statement, yes.

Q. Of course, I am basing my questions to you, on, what I am sure is your general overall knowledge of your job?

A. Yes.

Q. Would it be fair to say that they present and handle that grievance, or rather complaint in a substantially large portion of the cases, at least, would that be rightly or wrongly?

A. When you say "they" do you mean the foremen?

Q. No, the rank and file, to begin with. That is, they think—

A. (Interposing) You said "present and handle." Perhaps I do not know what you mean by "handle."

Q. I will strike the question and go to something else. Reference has been made by Mr. Keys to a booklet entitled "Foremen's Guide to Labor Relations," Bulletin Number 66 of the Division of Labor Standards of the United States Department of Labor. Are you familiar with that booklet in general?

A. I have read it sometime ago now, but I do not recall it in detail.

1355 Q. In a very general way?

A. Yes.

Q. On page 21 of that booklet under a heading on page 17 which is entitled and reads: "Suggestions for Handling Grievances," there appears in the first sentence of paragraph three on page 21, the following words: "Don't be afraid to say no when the facts warrant it." Do you think that is good advice?

A. I presume that is advice being given to a foreman?

Q. That is right.

A. Yes, when the facts warrant it, yes, undoubtedly.

Q. And I don't think it would be improper for me to say that I agree with you. Now that, as a matter of fact, I presume, is good advice, not to only the foremen, but to every Company official above the rank of foreman who handle the succeeding stages of the grievance procedure.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, we have started out, I think—at least, I have assumed that, and your testimony would tend to indicate, I believe,—that a substantially large proportion of those grievances presented by the rank and file, at least, are presented with the belief that they have a good grievance and complaint or squawk, to use an inelegant term.

A. Yes.

1356 Q. Now, I assume it is fair to say, or is it not, that in a great many of those cases, either the foremen or higher officials in the handling of those grievances or complaints may think otherwise?

A. Yes.

Q. That is, they may think the complaint or grievance does not have merit?

A. Let me clear my thinking on it. Your question is a matter of sincerity? Whether the man is sincere in his grievance? I think in most cases he is. Relating to merit of the grievance, that the foremen will rule on.

Q. As distinguished from sincerity?

A. Yes.

Q. Despite the rank and file employee sincerity, the foremen and the people higher up in the various stages may think there is no merit to the grievance itself?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Although you would assume, I suppose, that they still think that the man who made the grievance was sincere in making it?

A. In most of the cases?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, you have an awful lot of people—I won't use the word "awful"—a very large number of people to deal with, of course, as in any human institution and there are all kinds of people, except, of course, the fact that the Packard employees are probably better than other companies.

1357

A. Yes, well, we claim that and of course, the foremen too, generally.

Q. Now, will this be a fair statement: That however far this particular grievance may be carried, we may end up in a large number of cases, both a large and intrinsic number, relatively, where a grievance has been originally presented and thereafter carried on by the representative of the employee or even directly, with the utmost sincerity and good faith on the part of the person presenting and handling it for the employee, if he is represented by somebody else, yet, when the thing is over, the representative of the Company, including foremen of all grades, and the higher ups have been of the opinion that the facts have not warranted the remedying of that alleged grievance and have thus said no?

A. Yes. May I interject something there?

Q. Yes.

A. In grievance procedure I think it has been brought out already that there are certain policies about grievances and I think it is difficult to define the word "policies"—that do not go through the foremen's hands.

1358 We are talking about grievances that go through the foremen's hands quite largely?

Q. Yes. Would you also say that by and large there are at least some people in the plant at any given time who think they have valid grievances?

A. Yes.

Q. And would you say that that thought on their part is reflected to the rank and file, or would you include foremen, using the word broadly?

A. No, I think they apply to foremen as well as to their estimate of their grievances.

Q. As to their particular estimate?

A. Yes, and of course, I qualify it by saying most of them. There are some instances, where there are sincere ones in the rank and file and among the foremen.

Q. Your last answer may be a bit ambiguous in the record. In most cases they feel sincerely, as well as in a few cases, some of them are insincere?

A. Yes, however, that means that even the sincere ones may be a delusion on their part from our point of view.

Q. To sum it all up, then, it comes down to the trite saying, "There are all sorts of people in the world".

A. Yes.

Q. Would you expect, as a man experienced in personnel relations, Mr. Denison, that what you have said

1359 about the situation at Packard is roughly true in other plants?

A. I do not believe I am qualified to answer that.

Q. Let's go back to May of 1944 for the moment. I gather from the testimony that a substantial number of foremen were on strike during that period. Is that your understanding? Sometime in May?

A. Are you referring to the Packard Motor Car Company?

Q. And other places as well.

A. A substantial number?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. To put it negatively, would you say that there were not at least some of these people who thought that they had a substantial grievance and a valid one?

A. That were on strike?

Q. That is right.

A. Well, Mr. Examiner, I am not too familiar with the situation in other companies. I believe—

Q. (Interposing) Let's take Packard.

A. All right. The Packard strike, I think, it has been alleged, was for no other purpose than recognition. I do not doubt the sincerity of the foremen's desire for recognition of their Association.

Q. My question is specifically whether or not you believe that some of these foremen thought they had a valid

1360 grievance against the Company?

A. You are relating it to a strike that occurred in May, 1944?

Q. Let's put it this way: Do you think that at least some of those foremen thought they had valid grievances against the Packard Motor Car Company at the time in May when those strikes took place?

A. Without relating it to the cause of the strike?

Q. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, aren't you asking the witness to delve into the minds of others? How can he testify as to what some of these foremen might have thought? I don't think there is much question that some of the foremen may have been sincere in their beliefs. Is that what you have in mind? I don't think there is any question about that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let me put it in Mr. Dahling's language. Do you believe that at the time of these strikes in May, a substantial number or a fairly large number of these foremen, at least, were sincere and believed at the time of those strikes that they had grievances against the Packard Motor Car Company?

Mr. Dahling: You say "a substantial number of these foremen."

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let us break it down. Let's 1361 say some.

Mr. Dahling: If the witness will answer, or rather, can answer what some man might have in his mind.

The Witness: I have some doubt how to answer that. I know a number of these foremen, I think, were sincere. We have said that they are deluded about their grievances. You are referring to a strike which they admit was caused merely for recognition of a Foreman's Union and was in no way tied to grievances. If at that time, you are asking me if they had some of them that were sincere and believed they had some grievances, I believe that is true.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee) Do you doubt the fact that of the large number of foremen involved at that time in connection with Packard, that some of them thought they had grievances against the Company aside from the question of recognition?

A. Some of them thought they had grievances?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Examiner, would you add to that question, "Before or after they joined the Foreman's Association of America"?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: At the moment the strike began, I will put it that way, at Packard?

The Witness: I suppose so.

1362 Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee) As a matter of fact, to put it in broad terms, as broad as possible, is it or is it not a fair statement to say that any given time among a thousand or so people, whether foremen or otherwise, we are inevitably bound to find some people who honestly and sincerely believe they have a legitimate squawk?

A. I agree. It probably applies to the National Labor Relations organization, as well as to any other, that is true.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And in connection with that last remark, I also agree with it.

Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record. Are there any further questions of the witness?

Mr. Dahling: I have a couple.

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, in this matter of grievances or complaints, I presume that superintendents might have complaints and be very sincere in their belief that they should be remedied?

Mr. Nelson: I didn't know that a superintendent could be mistaken.

The Witness: I haven't any doubt of it, Mr. Dahling—answering Mr. Dahling's question.

1363 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) How about your assistant manager? Might they also sincerely believe that they had a complaint?

A. Yes, and we hear them there, Mr. Dahling.

Q. Does that apply to the division managers also?

A. Yes.

Q. And to the vice-presidents?

A. Yes. I have even heard those.

Q. And I suppose the president himself might feel he had a grievance that he wanted to take up with the Board of Directors?

A. I suppose so.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Dahling, you are approaching pretty close to God.

The Witness: That is a good list of possible clients for Mr. Nelson.

Mr. Nelson: That is quite an impressive list of probable clients, thank you.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Dahling, I notice that you left out the industrial relations division itself.

Mr. Dahling: I was afraid to go into that.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Denison, I believe at this hearing this summer, the foremen put in testimony relative to certain alleged grievances, did they not?

A. Yes.

Q. And the Companies answered this testimony with 1364 the facts concerning the matter of these grievances?

A. Yes.

Q. Were any of the grievances which the foremen presented at those meetings substantial?

Mr. Nelson: Just a minute. That would be purely a matter of opinion. It is irrelevant and immaterial and he is seeking to pass upon all of the twenty-four volumes now.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Read the last question, please.

(Question read.)

Mr. Dahling: Not any more than if the foremen are sincere in their grievances.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness may answer the question. The answer may remain for the limited purpose of indicating the Company's position or claim as to such grievances. In other words, I am making the same ruling as I made when the question first came up and was presented, through evidence during the case of the Foreman's Association.

Mr. Nelson: But that question does not ask for a claim, it is for a statement of fact which can rest only in the opinion of the witness. I don't even know that he was there at all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am not too much concerned with the form of the question. I may point out to you, Mr. Nelson, in the form at least, in which the answers of Mr. Keys were—to use him as an illustration—they went 1365 beyond the language of a claim and if I took those answers in and of themselves without the limitations I placed upon them—they indicate more than a claim. I have received them to indicate the claim only, although in form here and there they go beyond it. They stand, so far as this record is concerned with my ruling, as only a claim, a statement of position, you might say, a sworn argument, that is all.

Mr. Dahling: In accordance with your ruling, Mr. Examiner, the effect of the answer to this last question would be the same if the question had been framed in this way: Is it the claim of the Company that there were no substantial grievances?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

The Witness: Is that the question I am to answer?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Nelson: That last one I still object to because their claims are irrelevant and immaterial and relate to another proceeding. Again it is not open to the objection the first one was.

Mr. Dahling: I am trying to comply with the Examiner's ruling.

Mr. Nelson: I disagree with his ruling to the effect that these claims can be stated here as evidence in this case. I would have no objection to those things 1366 being stated in a brief or argument.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think, Mr. Nelson, that I ought to be consistent, even if, although I do not believe it, I am consistently wong.

Mr. Nelson: That is what I suggested on this point. It has got us into all kinds of trouble.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Go ahead. The witness said yes in answer to the question.

Mr. Dahling: No further questions.

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Denison,—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) Before you go ahead, I think I want to amend my last remark which was perhaps another one of those pleasantries. Of course, in saying that I believe I should be consistent, what I meant obviously is that if I afford a certain right or privilege to one side, I think I should accord an equal right or privilege to the other in similar circumstances, and that I have attempted to do.

Mr. Nelson: Will you mark this as Petitioner's Exhibit 43?

(Thereupon the document referred to was marked Petitioner's Exhibit No. 43 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 43 for identification, being two typewritten pages cor-1367 respondence size and ask you if you saw a paper identical with or similar to that?

A. I am not sure, Mr. Nelson. I will say this: The first section of this looks, without my reading it, to the agreement that the foremen brought in about two years ago.

The latter I do not think I have ever seen—that is, the last part of it.

Q. Wasn't the last part attached to the working agreement suggested?

A. No, the agreement was the only thing submitted.

Q. Did you ever see that in any form except the form that it appears there, Mr. Denison?

A. Are you referring to the first section?

Q. The whole thing.

A. I don't recall ever seeing the whole paper.

Q. The first portion you do recall some two years ago?

A. Approximately.

Q. Well then, hasn't there been the representation of grievances in writing made to the Packard Company for upwards of two years by the foremen?

A. In writing?

Q. Yes.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Examiner, we formerly objected to such proceeding antedating and being prior to the election. Everybody agrees that it was not in force 1368 or effect. This is one of the things connected with prior events and antedates events which were held at Packard which is on record. I assume we have a continuing objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I must observe—where, Mr. Donovan, do you get the phrase "everyone agrees"? I gather that there is considerable disagreement.

Mr. Donovan: Everyone agrees that there was a Packard election at one time. It is on the record here.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is not the way you expressed it.

Mr. Nelson: I am doing my best to disagree with you.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Nelson, have you copies of what you are showing the witness?

Mr. Nelson: I will dig them up. Yes, I can submit copies, but not in the form they have been attached to there. They are attached to a blue back and that is the only difference, I believe. That is Exhibit 43 and I give counsel copies thereof. It is a little different in form. It has a blue back.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The copies are prettier, that is all.

Mr. Nelson: I was afraid to give it to Mr. Denison because he might want to keep it. Mr. Denison, I am having a carbon copy of a letter marked Petitioner's 1369 Exhibit 44 for identification.

(The document referred to was marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 44.)

Q. By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Denison, I ask you if the Packard Motor Car Company did not receive on or about May 21, 1943, the date this bears, a communication of which Exhibit 44, Petitioner's Exhibit 44 for identification is a carbon copy and I ask you if you do not have the original of it or a carbon copy of it?

A. Well, there was addressed—this is addressed to Mr. C. E. Weiss. I have not checked every word of it but I believe it is a letter that was received by the Industrial Relations Department.

Q. Subject to comparison as to detail, it appears to be a letter originally—the original of which was received by Mr. Weiss, to your knowledge?

A. There is not much doubt about it.

Q. Now, I hand you Exhibit 43 and ask you if that is not the enclosure referred to in Exhibit 43. Didn't that come to Mr. Weiss along with 44?

A. Of course, that too was received by Mr. Weiss and I think we found it in our files at the office.

Q. Well, I will offer Exhibits 43 and 44 in evidence and then I will be glad to show counsel the letters.

A. I have not checked it word for word, but I have 1370 a copy that looks just about like it.

Mr. Nelson: We stipulate that we will agree with you on any differences and we will take your copy instead of ours on any difference.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, the exhibit just offered I objected to on the ground that they relate to matters which predate the petition filed in this case. The letter Exhibit 44, I believe it is, being dated May of 1943 and presumably was accompanied by the agreement which is Exhibit 43.

Mr. Nelson: It is an agreement and statement of demand.

Mr. Dahling: The position is taken by the Company that it is immaterial and irrelevant and has no place in this proceeding, relating as it does and as I have said before, to matters which are not here involved and to things that occurred prior to the filing of this petition.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Petitioners' Exhibits 43 and 44 are received.

Mr. Karasick: Just a minute, Mr. Examiner, I have not had a chance to examine the documents.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The ruling will be revoked, at least temporarily.

Mr. Nelson: While Mr. Karasick is examining that, I am going to ask the Reporter to mark a three page carbon copy as Petitioner's Exhibit 45.

1371 (Thereupon the document above referred to was marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 45.)

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Denison, I am going to hand you Petitioner's Exhibit 45 and ask you to locate, if you can, your copies of the letter to Mr. Christopher dated November 12, 1943 and the accompanying letter to the Conciliation Service, while Mr. Karasick is doing the other work. Perhaps we can make a little progress.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, we might be able to save a little time here. I assume these are the two copies of the letters and we will not object to them on that basis. Our objection, however, is to the relevancy and materiality and would go to this, the same as Exhibits 43 and 44.

Mr. Nelson: I will offer Exhibit 45 so you can make an objection to it.

Mr. Dahling: Yes, this is the letter that I thought it was. I am referring to Petitioner's Exhibit 45 and I am assuming it is a correct copy of the original.

Mr. Nelson: If it isn't, we will accept your copy and correction on it.

Mr. Dahling: It is objected to and I will not repeat the objection for the same reasons that we objected to Exhibits 43 and 44.

Mr. Karasick: No objection to Petitioner's Exhibits 43, 44 and 45.

1372 Trial Examiner Jaffee: They are received.

(The documents heretofore marked for identification as Petitioner's Exhibits 43, 44 and 45 were received in evidence.)

Mr. Nelson: May I ask the witness a question?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) To your knowledge, Mr. Denison, have any of these demands or grievances or complaints or requests, or whatever you want to call them, included in these Exhibits 43, 44 and 45, have any of them been negotiated or settled with the foremen, as far as you know?

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Nelson, will you divide your question? Have they been negotiated with the foremen?

Mr. Nelson: Up to the time of the strike?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Nelson: Or since that time?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Nelson: Or settled with foremen up to the time of the strike?

Mr. Dahling: You mean collectively by agreement with the foremen?

Mr. Nelson: With the foremen.

The Witness: As a union?

Mr. Nelson: Either way or as a group.

The Witness: As a union, no. Perhaps some things have been settled with individual foremen who have 1373 come and talked about them. We may have settled a number of them.

Mr. Nelson: Individually, you may have, but you do not recall any?

The Witness: I do not pay particular attention to the demands.

Mr. Nelson: Just as you sit there, Mr. Denison, you do not recall any that have been adjusted even with individual foremen or do you want further time to study it?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Nelson, I do not think the question is a fair one.

Mr. Nelson: So far as you know, have you settled any of these grievances, demands or complaints, or anything of the kind, even up to the present time with the foremen as such?

The Witness: As a Union?

Mr. Nelson: As an association or a group?

The Witness: No, not as a union.

Mr. Nelson: Now, as to individual matters that may be covered here, you are not informed at the present time, is that right?

Mr. Donovan: I will object—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) Let him make his own request. Do you want time to consider any individual case?

The Witness: I am looking here at number three. The Company does not have any sick leave provision—1374 we have settled a number of requests in that regard, whether they are going to be paid for sickness and such things, is that what you mean?

Mr. Nelson: Yes. How many of them?

The Witness: Oh, my God! hundreds, hundreds.

Mr. Nelson: Those were all settled individually?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Nelson: Was there anything else that occurs to you from your examination of that?

The Witness: When I mentioned sick leave I said it was No. 3, it is No. 4. This letter of November 5, 1943, I am talking about. No. 3 has to do with seniority rights. If that refers to Union seniority on a collective basis, the answer is no, but if it refers to a consideration of a foreman's service, there have been a number of those settled with the individual foremen.

Mr. Nelson: Coming back to seniority there for just a minute, you know that the word is "rights," the foremen asked that they be accorded them as rights and not concessions by the Company. There is a difference.

The Witness: The whole thing is predicated on Union act of collective bargaining.

Mr. Nelson: It has reference to rights that they desire to establish collectively.

The Witness: We have not settled anything that 1375 way—in that way.

Mr. Nelson: Up to the time of the strike—up to the time of the hearing last summer, even up to the present time?

The Witness: That is right.

Mr. Dahling: Do you mean, Mr. Nelson, that we have not negotiated with the Foreman's Association of America or bargained with them? Is that the point?

Mr. Nelson: I mean a little more than that. I mean that the matters covered by these communications are no more recognized as rights now than they were then.

Mr. Dahling: You mean rights of the Foreman's Association of America?

Mr. Nelson: Rights of foremen employed by the Packard Motor Car Company as distinguished from individual concessions that the Company might make. To establish them as rights is the point and he says they have not been done. That is the way I take his answer and that is the point of my question.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean, I assume, to establish them as rights as for example by a contract?

Mr. Nelson: That is right. A contract exemplifies it perfectly.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) Mr. Denison, I believe you testified that there are certain grievances that foremen 1376 cannot handle because those grievances are matters related to policies of the Company, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. What would be some of those matters?

A. In a broad sense they are matters that go beyond the foreman's own department. If a steward asked his foreman for a general ten-cent increase for all the employees of the Packard Motor Car Company, naturally the foreman is in no position to answer that request or grievance. That is of the type I mean, something that would affect many more employees in general than the employees of the foreman—

Trial Examiner Jaffee (Interposing): It might affect—

The Witness (Interposing): —in question?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It might affect the employees in other departments as well, by virtue of the fact that that grievance was of such a nature as would—in the opinion at least of some of the employees—create a precedent which they could point to?

The Witness: Perhaps I can illustrate with an illustration. The foreman might say that he approves a general ten-cent increase for all his employees. It has to be applied to all the other employees in the same classification because the same classifications prevail 1377 in the plant.

Mr. Karasick: Can a foreman recommend a ten-cent increase for a particular employee or group of employees in his department?

The Witness: Yes. There is nothing to prevent him from recommending it. However, you want to remember that the grievance procedure refers to a grievance initiated by the CIO Union. In this incident of Company policy the steward takes it direct to the district steward and completely circumvents the foreman in his department.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): What I am trying to arrive at is some understanding as to what you regard as Company policy. The line of demarkation between what a foreman would or could not handle as a grievance.

A. I don't know a better way to answer than: Those matters that would affect him or other employees. Suppose the steward wants to work his men six days a week instead of five. That is not possible because the operations in that department integrated with the operations in many other departments.

Q. Can you give me another example?

A. Well, I cannot give you any others that come to me at the moment that are as good as those two which clearly illustrate it.

Mr. Nelson: I will suggest a better one, the 1378 recognition of the Foreman's Association of America, isn't that a better policy?

Mr. Dahling: It isn't a policy, the answer is no.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick): How does a foreman know—

A. Another example would be suppose a steward and his men wanted a two-hour lunch period, naturally the foreman could not possibly settle that. He knows his operation has to be integrated with the departments ahead of his and behind him. While his men are out to lunch the other departments are working. In a mass production type of industry that we are in, it just could not be done.

Q. Even though it would not affect other departments, the foreman could not handle such an agreement, could he?

A. I don't think that is quite true. If there was a department all of its own and not tied to any operation in any other department and if a steward and his men wanted a different lunch period or other hours of employment, it might be done. The question would be given serious consideration.

Q. Who would question it?

A. We are referring to hours of work, aren't we?

Q. You gave me an example of a two-hour lunch period.

A. Whoever controls the production of that department upon which it might have an effect, would have to help settle the issue.

1379 Q. We are assuming that it would not affect the production of another department or the operation of another department.

A. Of course the example is a little far-fetched, Mr. Karasick, it is hard for me to conceive—I gave it as an illustration of a point. I cannot think of a department quite in that position which does not affect anything else around it. It might be such that it would not have a very serious effect, however.

Q. How does the foreman determine whether a grievance which is presented to him involves the question of policy which he cannot handle?

A. Well, he would know his limitations in answering the grievance because of the effect it would have on some others. He would realize that there has got to be a Company policy established to settle that grievance. That is common sense on his part.

Q. Well, there is a sheet showing the most common type of violations in the plant and the discipline to be accorded employees who engage in such violations, that sheet the foremen have, do they not?

A. Yes.

Q. Does that roughly cover the scope and type of grievances that a foreman would be empowered to handle which would not be regarded as Company policy?

1380 Mr. Dahling: That is the sheet, if I recall, that had to do with penalties which may be assessed because of rules that are broken by the rank and file, and it has nothing to do with grievances, there is nothing in evidence on that.

Mr. Karasick: Well, there is nothing that definitely indicates to a foreman what is a matter of policy and what is not a matter of policy, he has to use his judgment?

A. If you mean he is given a formula as to what he can handle or not, no. He uses his judgment. There are many other matters—that list you referred to a minute ago—that a foreman handles.

Q. Policies are matters that are determined by higher management, is that it?

A. Yes.

Mr. Karasick: No further questions.

Mr. Nelson: No further questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness is excused.

Mr. Dahling: Just a minute, Mr. Examiner, I have a lot of further questions. It would be useless for us to go into them now if we are going to have an adjournment for lunch.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In that case the witness is not excused.

Mr. Dahling: There are those matters of the partic-

1381 ular grievances and the letters. I am going to have to go into them quite fully.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is now a quarter of one. Would two o'clock be all right? We will recess until two o'clock.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2 o'clock p. m.)

1382

After Recess.

(Pursuant to recess, the hearing resumed at two o'clock P. M.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will resume, gentlemen.

Mr. Dahling: I have no further questions of Mr. Denison.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I thought you said you had some more?

Mr. Dahling: Yes, but during the recess I decided I had no further questions of him.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, call the next witness.

Mr. Dahling: I will call Mr. MacAuley.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Before questions are asked of Mr. MacAuley, I would like to make some observations with respect to the transcript of December 27, which I read last evening. Sometimes things come in so fast that as we read it over later there may be some possible ambiguity in a particular statement, and in order to remove any possible misunderstanding, it is advisable to supplement what appears earlier with an additional statement.

Thus, for instance, on page 1171 of the record, it shows that, among other things, Mr. Donovan said, and I begin with line 21:

"We offer it to show the claim of the Packard 1383 Motor Car Company in this case," and so on; and then at the top of page 1172, he continues:

"and that the so-called grievances of the foremen"

et cetera; or:

"no grievances at all."

I think I indicated several times in giving the basis for my ruling limiting certain testimony offered by the Petitioner that I would permit evidence as to the claim and I emphasized the word "claim" of the Company as to the strikes to which reference had been made in connection with the ruling that I have indicated.

However, Mr. Donovan, at that point, was offering, as I construed it and as I did then construe it, to put in evidence both the matters referred to; that is to say, the claim and the fact that the "so-called grievances" were "no grievances at all." Having thus in my opinion joined the competent with the incompetent and having at that point in the record not asked that evidence merely as to the claim be received, the Examiner took the position which the record thereafter indicates.

If the Company, as I said before, wants to put in evidence limited to (1) the fact that what the Association says is claimed was not in fact, claimed by it; or (2) the contention or claim or position of the Company that the reasons for the strikes were something else; or (3)
1384 that the events which occurred particularly during the War Labor Board Panel hearings affect the credibility of any of the Association witnesses or make them subject to impeachment, they may do that and they may offer any other evidence they desire to offer within the limitations previously indicated, and which I do not at this moment attempt to spell out to the extent I have previously done. I think, as a matter of fact, what I am now saying is probably indicated in the record as a whole, and, of course, my ruling is indicated not at just any particular line or paragraph where some comment has been made upon it, but naturally must be interpreted or, at least, should be interpreted, I think, from all the remarks I have made with reference to the subject matter.

Then a little later on, on page 1172, beginning at line 19, the transcript indicates I made this statement to Mr. Donovan:

> "I will permit you to put in evidence a statement as to the Company's claim," et cetera. I should like to elaborate on that a bit further by saying that the Company would be permitted and is now permitted to do that by any statement which is either sworn or unsworn; that is to say, the statement may be made by a witness on the stand who will testify to the claim, it may be made by counsel, or it may be made 1385 in any other appropriate way.

I think that concludes all the remarks I care to make at this moment. You may proceed, gentlemen.

Mr. Donovan: May I say, Mr. Trial Examiner, that counsel would like to review the transcripts referred to, together with the transcript containing the Trial Examiner's present statement, before we make any further statement on the record. We can do that over the week-end.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Certainly, that is perfectly all right.

MORTIMER F. MacAULEY,

a witness called by and on behalf of the Company, being duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. MacAuley, what is your full name?

A. Mortimer F. MacAuley.

Q. What is your address?

A. 4661 Motorway Drive, Pontiac, Michigan.

Q. Are you related in any way to Mr. Alvin MacAulay, Chairman of the Board of the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. No, I am not.

Q. I believe your name is spelled differently?

A. It is spelled with an "ey" instead of "ay."

Q. Are you employed by the Packard Motor Car Company?

1386 A. Yes, I am.

Q. How long have you been employed by that Company?

A. A little over ten years.

Q. Mr. MacAuley, are you a graduate of any engineering school or college?

A. Yes, University of Michigan, chemical engineer.

Q. At the time you were a student at the University of Michigan, what did the term "chemical engineer" include?

A. General engineering, including chemical engineering.

Q. During what year did you graduate?

A. 1922.

Q. Will you give us a description of your experience in the automobile industry, commencing with the date of your graduation from the University of Michigan?

A. In 1922 I went to the Olds Motor Works in Lansing and I stayed there until 1926.

Q. Is that the company which manufactured the Olds automobiles?

A. Yes.

Q. All right, will you go ahead?

A. At the Oldsmobile Company I started in with plant layout work, converting piece work into the bonus system and setting up material control systems. I did that for the years 1922 and 1923. In 1924 I became an assistant master mechanic. In 1925, to 1926, I was master mechanic.

1387 I left Olds in 1926.

Q. Before you get to your next position, you say you were an assistant mechanic and a master mechanic?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just what sort of job was that?

A. If a part was released by the planning department to be manufactured, it was turned over to the master mechanic and it was his job to see that the job was processed and broken down to individual operations, that the tools were specified, the machines were specified, the tools ordered, tools designed, tools purchased and the machines purchased. We did that by working with the different divisional managers, superintendents, general foremen and foremen.

Q. After you left the Oldsmobile Company, where did you go?

A. I went to Richmond, Virginia into a consulting engineering firm, the L. A. Blackburn Engineering Company. We were engaged in manufacturing—in converting over former buggy plants and wagon plants into bus body plants and also in converting a warehouse into a cotton seed oil plant.

Q. How long were you with the engineering firm?

A. One year.

Q. Then what did you do?

A. In 1927 I went to the Pontiac Motor Car Company, Pontiac, Michigan.

1388 Q. What were your duties there?

A. Starting in 1927 we laid out the new Pontiac plant and I was the Chief of Standards.

Q. The Pontiac Company, is that a part of the General Motors organization?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And was it at that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you stated all of your activities while you were at Pontiac?

A. No. In 1928 I was appointed general foreman and later superintendent of the paint, polishing and plate departments. In 1929 to 1931 I was manager of the assembly plant, the paint, the plating, the polishing and the body trim; that is, at the time we were building open bodies only. The last part of 1931, due to a new program, I returned to the planning department and stayed there about six months.

Q. Will you just continue with the experience you have had in the industry, Mr. MacAuley?

A. In the latter part of 1930 I left the Pontiac Company and went to the Buick Motor Car Company where I was employed in manufacturing and research, in charge of plant layout, standards, material tests and tool tests. I stayed there until 1934 and then I went to Packard.

1389 Q. And you have been at Packard since that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have been the various positions you have held in Packard?

A. I started at Packard as assistant manager of the Small Car Division.

Q. When you say Small Car Division, you mean—

A. That's the 120 at that time.

Q. Did you go to Packard at the time they brought out the small car, so-called?

A. That's why I went there.

Q. What other positions have you held at Packard?

A. In the latter part of 1935 or the early part of 1936 I became manager of the Small Car Division and in about 1938 I returned to become a special assignment man to Mr. Christopher, which was embodying the consolidation of the large car and the small car divisions. In 1940 I was assigned to the Aircraft Division work.

Q. That is the division which is now manufacturing the Rolls Royce?

A. Yes, sir, I stayed here until about two months ago when I returned to the Car Division.

Q. What are your present duties in connection with your job in the Car Division.

A. Known as the manufacture and control manager.

1390 Q. What does that mean?

A. That has control of all procedures and standard practices, organization charts, manufacturing costs, manufacturing estimates, material control and material handling.

Q. When you say material control, that means controlling the material you need?

A. That controls the amount of raw material ordered and the orders issued to the shop and how many pieces are produced, to see they are produced and to synchronize all the parts being manufactured so that we have a definite building schedule and have the necessary parts.

Q. You are setting up that department at the present time, are you?

A. That's right.

Q. It is not completely organized and functioning yet, is it?

A. No, it is not.

Q. Mr. MacAuley, what general term is given to the type of production carried on by automobile companies?

A. It is known as mass production.

Q. Can you tell us just what mass production is?

A. Well, I think I can tell you better by comparing other production.

Q. Use your own methods, Mr. MacAuley.

1391 A. In ordinary production an operator will usually start from the raw material and take the part through the subsequent operations and will probably do a series of operations, maybe even to completing the part himself. Whereas, in mass production, we break that up into small, minute operations. Maybe each operation is only a minute or a fraction of a minute's time and we use mostly specialized machines and special tools.

Q. In that case the operator, of course, does not need to be nearly as skilled as under the circumstances where he probably made the whole part?

A. That is definitely so. That is why we have to do it. In other words, we would never have been able to build a Rolls Royce engine; for example, in the motor building alone it takes quite an experienced motor builder to build it all the way up, but in breaking down the operations, there is no necessity for the skilled workers.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And the use of special purpose tools helps in that connection?

The Witness: Definitely.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Getting back to the automobile, and, of course, that is the product that the Packard Motor Car Company really manufactures, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. This period during the war it is merely helping 1392 the country by manufacturing articles of war?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, getting back to the manufacture of cars, will you outline for us how it starts and how it is developed? I suppose it first begins when someone has an idea of a car. Will you develop it from that time on?

A. It usually starts with the president calling a meeting of his vice-president of engineers, vice-president of sales, the comptroller and the vice-president of manufacturing, anybody interested in the car itself. In that meeting the vice-president in charge of sales is requested to give his views on the type of automobile and the volume and price range in which he thinks the public would be interested. The vice-president of engineering is then instructed to go out and design an automobile, maybe design two or three automobiles within that range. During that design period the vice-president will call on the others, the divisional manager will call in general foremen and foremen for general information, for ideas of the different methods for manufacturing given parts. In other words, there may be some parts designed by the engineer that as far as production is concerned, is next to impossible to make, so we call in the people that know more about it and have consultations with them.

Q. Pardon me, just a minute, Mr. MacAuley. This 1393 testimony you are giving now is from your own personal knowledge?

A. That is correct.

Q. And you have been a party to these things you are testifying about?

A. Yes. And from the model, they make up a model, and from that model they will also have criticism from the manufacturing department.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: There is usually more than one model made, is there not?

The Witness: Oh, yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In other words, you start with a small model and end up with a big model?

The Witness: The stylist usually makes a small clay model, but as the car begins to be designed he goes into full-sized models.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): And there might be more than one model of a car?

A. There might be all the way up to thirteen or fourteen models of that one car.

Q. And there might also be cars in different price ranges?

A. That is correct, but I am just taking one in general because they are all treated about the same. At the time the wood models, that is what I will call 1394 them, are being made in the Experimental Department, the different people involved in the manufacture of that are called in for their advice.

Q. Who are those people?

A. The divisional superintendent in charge of that particular piece, right down through to the foreman. It never goes below the foremen, because that is strictly confidential information.

Q. Because that would be your car that would come out at a later time, I take it?

A. All the way from a year to eighteen months later. After that is approved, temporarily at least, it is drawn up in a final print and that print is released by the Engineering Department.

Q. When you say a final print—

A. (Interposing): That is of a given part: I am down to an individual part right now. After that part is released, that is their only authority to proceed to manufacturing it. It is released first to the Planning Department and the Planning Department decides whether they are going to make that piece or buy it.

Q. There is a planning department at Packard?

A. Yes, sir. Oftentimes there are people in business who are set up with special equipment, which we know of, and it is better to buy the piece from them than 1395 to manufacture it; in that case we would purchase it. Then it is released to the master mechanic.

Q. You have described the duties of a master mechanic at Olds; are the duties of a master mechanic at Packard's practically the same as at Olds?

A. Yes, sir, the master mechanic gets his process men, who work with the superintendent, general foremen and foremen, in deciding what tools they will use and what machines they will use.

Q. Have you been present at any of those conferences?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I suppose those conferences might continue over a period of time?

A. Oh, no, it goes on for days on some complicated pieces. After the routing is agreed to, it is written up in pencil and signed by everybody concerned, that they agree that they think this is the way to make that part. Then the routing is typed and the routing becomes the official word all through the shop and through the stores, what would be ordered out and what sequence of operations.

Q. What do you call that particular document?

A. Process routing.

Q. Is that prepared in a specific department in the Company?

1396 A. It is prepared in the master mechanic's office by his process man.

Q. The processes are in the master mechanic's office?

A. The process routing is ordinarily, although we have some process men located in the various divisions with the divisional manager, and they prepare the routing and clear it through the central process routing group.

Q. Then what follows, Mr. MacAuley?

A. From that, the tools are designed, if they are special tools.

Q. Who designs those?

A. There is a group of men known as tool designers working for the master mechanic. They are approved and ordered.

Q. Who approves them?

A. Well, sometimes it goes right through to the general foreman to approve and sometimes they don't approve them; in other words, the general foremen are willing to accept the process man on the drawing after being satisfied. Sometimes the general foremen want to approve it themselves. We have had cases both ways, it depends on the general foremen. We have even had the foreman approve them in many cases. After approval, the tools are turned over to the Purchasing Department for purchasing.

Q. When you say "tools" ordinarily that would 1397 mean to me a wrench or a screwdriver. What does it mean in automobile companies?

A. Well, there are a number of tools. First, there are the non-perishable tools which we don't ordinarily replace every year. Those are the holding fixtures which hold the part, and gauges, some types of gauges; there are arbors and, oh, it might be a special drill head. Then we have what we call the perishable tools.

Q. Before we get to that, you say you have some tools for holding fixtures?

A. We call them holding fixtures.

Q. Holding fixtures, and what are they used for?

A. That's to hold the piece on the machine in the correct position and in the same place each time so that each piece will come out the same.

Q. What are these arbors?

A. We use those for holding grinding wheels, sometimes for holding the piece itself.

Q. I suppose tools of that character must be very carefully built up?

A. That is correct, because every piece must be as near alike as we can possibly make it.

Q. Those are the tools, when you talk about your tooling department, those are the tools prepared in the tooling department?

1398 A. That is correct.

Q. And you sometimes buy those from outside sources, from what we term here in Detroit the tool shops?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then there was another type of tool you were going to tell us about?

A. Perishable tools. Those are tools that are replaced a number of times during the year. They are usually a cutting tool. Under that would fall such things as drills, reamers, cutter head blades, plug gauges, any tool that is worn out and has to be replaced during the year. Those are usually classified as perishable tools and there are two types of those, the special and the standard.

Q. What do you mean by special?

A. Well, it is easier to explain the standard. The standard is a tool that is usually made by manufacturers. For instance, standard drill sizes, they may come at thirty-second intervals, whereas a special may be a decimal drill, which is not catalogued and has to have a blueprint in order to be made. Usually any tool we have to make a drawing of to purchase it, we call a special tool.

Q. Or you might make a drawing of it and build it in your own tool department?

A. That's right; it is still called special.

1399 Q. Then these tools all have to be arranged for before you can even think of getting started in building the parts?

A. That is correct. Those are all ordered and the divisional manager gets a copy of the orders so they know that they are on order at all times. The master mechanic will see that enough parts are ordered; there are at least three set-ups of those tools ordered and one is given to the foreman, one in the grinding room, one in the toolroom and one in the crib.

Q. When you say crib, is that where you keep the tools?

A. Yes, sir, that's in the departments.

Q. When you say departments—

A. (Interposing): The manufacturing departments.

Q. Those would be the smaller departments into which the division is broken up?

A. That is correct.

1400 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Then what happened?

A. After the tools—at the same time that the tools are being ordered and designed or ordered and being made, the planning department at the present time has ordered the material, whether it be bar stock, rough castings, forgings, or whatever it is. They have that material on order and have it scheduled as to how many pieces they want and the time they want it. When both are received they are delivered to the department in which they are to be made and at that time it is the responsibility of the foreman to set up his department with these tools with any help he requires. He can call on anybody he needs to help him. That is, master mechanics, divisional tool engineers, the process man, the standards division, or anybody else he requires any help from, he can get it.

Q. Now, there was some talk here about the layout of a department; who prepares that particular layout?

A. That layout is being made at the same time as the tools are ordered. The routing is completed and it goes to the plant layout department and they take a routing and make a rough layout of the department as they see it, working with the foreman and the general foreman at the time they are being made. After it is finally approved by the foreman, general foreman, divisional manager, the layout is completed and the prints are sent 1401 to the plant engineering department, who in turn estimates the cost of setting up the department.

Q. That layout, would that disclose the machines, and where they are to be set?

A. That discloses the location on the floor, the heights from the floor, the conveyors in between the machines, or anything that has to do with the operation itself is shown on the layout, lights, air hose; if there are special lightings, it shows it there and air hose it is shown, and water line is shown and conveyors and conveyor heights and anything that is needed in that department is shown on that layout.

Q. After that is prepared and approved, is it placed upon the floor of the department in accordance with the layout?

A. Definitely.

Q. Then, just continue with that car of ours.

A. After the foreman starts his job off and he finds there is necessity to change the routing or change an operation—he may find he has one operation which is too complicated and has to be broken down into two operations, he requests a change in the operation, or he may find the reverse, that he has two operations set up and he can do it in one, so he requests that. At the same time we may have specified at this time that certain oil was cutting—or that certain compounds or a grinding wheel, to the best of our knowledge at the time, was the 1402 best wheel to put on the job. Then we can find that we are wrong. He does and has the privilege of requesting a change in that run or a test of those different kinds of wheels to find which kind of wheel or oil he wants.

Q. Just staying on the subject generally, when these departments are set up, they commence functioning and manufacturing the various parts of the car, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. That is, those parts that you have not purchased?

A. That is right.

Q. Approximately how many parts would there be in an ordinary automobile, that is, different parts, without duplication?

A. Roughly, 4,000 different parts.

Q. And of course, you might use a number of the same parts on the car?

A. That is right, there are some that we use as high as a hundred of the same pieces or part number in different places.

Q. What would you say would be the approximate total number of parts which would go into the making up of an automobile?

A. 14,000 or 15,000 pieces.

Q. Now, as those parts are manufactured and pur-
1403 chased, are they fed into an assembly line in some way?

A. Yes, they are scheduled right into a definite assembly at a definite rate of speed.

Q. Is there more than one assembly line?

A. There are more than one assemblies and sub-assemblies off the main line. On the motor assembly line we have some sub-assemblies off the main motor line and off the axle assembly line we may have sub-assemblies of axle parts to make into a main assembly and we have the same thing with the body and the final car.

Q. When you come to the line on which you assemble the final car, how are these various parts fed into that?

A. Well, you start out with a chassis assembly first.

Q. You start off with your frame, which is purchased complete ordinarily, and then the different brackets are added to that.

A. As it goes down the line it goes down a definite line and is fed into a gas tank sub-assembly that is fed in from the side line.

Q. And that has to be synchronized with the speed of the chassis?

A. Yes. It might be an eight-cylinder body going down at one time and a six-cylinder body the next time. We have to see that the eight-cylinder gas tank goes on the eight-cylinder car and the six-cylinder gas tank
1404 goes on the six-cylinder car and it might be a Super Eight and we have to have a complete rear axle go on the front axle assembly which will eventually be on the complete motor assembly. When the motor hits the line, it is complete with the motor and transmission.

Q. But in building up your motor you might have an assembly line for that purpose to build up the motor?

A. There will be an assembly line for the motor line, and sub-assemblies off the side line.

Q. Is that the type of assembly line that Mr. Turnbull has charge of?

A. Well, Mr. Turnbull is on the Rolls Royce engine, which is a little more complicated than the ordinary car engine.

Q. However, it is broken down the same way?

A. There are sub-assemblies of his line.

Q. The assembling of a motor is just one part of the job in building the car?

A. Yes.

Q. You would have to assemble the rear axle and other parts?

A. That is right.

Q. And they all have to be routed into the main car assembly line and synchronized as to time and types of material and so forth?

1405 A. That is right.

Q. Where is the design made for the setting up of these various assembly lines?

A. Well, the general plan is laid out in the plant layout department just like any other department. That is laid out in the same manner and in consultation with the men who are going to do the work on it.

Q. And of course, the car comes off the main car assembly line as a completed automobile, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. In the days when you were building cars, how often might you have model changes?

A. Usually once a year.

Q. When you had those model changes, what would that require in connection with new processing and routing?

A. It meant considerable changes because the major parts were usually changed on a model. For instance, you almost invariably changed your fender, your bonnet, your radiator or body appearance and that would in turn affect a lot of the chassis work.

Q. So you would have to each year, in the old days, if you changed your model, go through a great deal of this detail in getting the plant set up?

A. That is right.

Q. For service at least once a year?

1406 A. That is right.

Q. Were there any changes during the year?

A. There were times when we would have to make engineering changes during the year due to some defect that might crop up or something the public did not like about the automobile. We would have to change it and we might change it during the model year.

Q. When you were starting in with a new model, the first few runs might develop quite a few defects, isn't that so? You might find that your layout is not perfect when it starts out?

A. That is right.

Q. Where do you in Packard get reports on the operation of your layout in the first instance, we'll say?

A. Almost all I ever remember came from the foreman himself. He would call us up or else send through a move order requesting or asking that a machine or some equipment be moved to a different location and that it was not possible to function. Sometimes it came while making time studies if we found that the operator was doing extra work and that it was inconvenient for him. The request would be talked over between the time study man and the foreman and the result is that we would get a request to move.

Q. Of course, at the present time you are manufac-
1407 turing the Rolls Royce engine and marine engines and you do not have any model changes?

A. There are changes, yes.

Q. But there are no decided changes as in the old days of the automobile?

A. Yes, the engine is changed on the Rolls Royce quite considerably from single to two stages.

Q. When those changes are made, you have to go through the processing and routing again?

A. It is the same thing.

Q. And there are improved techniques in the operation of the particular layout and suggestions for improvements that you receive, you say, from the foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. And you consider that a duty of the foremen to check into those matters and make these reports?

A. Certainly.

Q. Now, you spoke about a routing sheet. Do you have an example of that sort of document with you?

A. Yes, I have. Here is the original on a simple connecting rod blade bolt.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark that as Company's Exhibit 29 for identification?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit No. 29 for identification.)

1408 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. MacAuley, I show you a series of sheets clipped together and marked Company's Exhibit 29 for identification and ask you what they are.

A. This represents one of the original routings, or the original routing on part number 608601, which is a connecting rod blade bolt for the Rolls Royce engines. It is the original set of routing made on that part.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Dahling: I will offer Company's Exhibit 29 in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: Will you fix the time on this?

Mr. Dahling: I will go right through that then.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. MacAuley, when was this routing sheet prepared?

A. This particular routing was prepared in April, 1944.

Q. And where was it prepared? At the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it part of the document of the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: Do you mean by that, has it been used in the work?

1409 Mr. Dahling: No, just that it is a document.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Has it been used in connection with the manufacture of the part which is described therein?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it in use at the present time, so far as you know?

A. This particular part is now being released to be purchased on the outside. Whether or not it has all gone out at this time, I am not sure.

Q. Is the same part still being used in the engine?

A. It was manufactured up to now, but whether it is still being made, I cannot tell you that.

Mr. Dahling: Do you have any further questions you want me to ask him?

Mr. Nelson: I think that it has been established as a part of the record of the Company, and I think that is true. We do not question it.

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, I would like to know what the purpose of the offer is.

Mr. Dahling: I would say generally in answer to your question, Mr. Karasick, that we want to show on this record just what is an automobile company and just what is mass production. Have you any objection to such a showing?

Mr. Karasick: I do not see the materiality of the 1410 proffered document and I object to it. I think the record is unduly burdened with a great deal of material that is irrelevant and immaterial.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Karasick, you will have an opportunity to object to it when it goes in.

Mr. Karasick: You have offered it and I object to it.

Mr. Dahling: Do you have an objection to it?

Mr. Karasick: That is right.

Mr. Dahling: Then I will ask for a ruling.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well,—

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I can go into great detail in connection with this document. I could string it out for fifteen or twenty minutes here if the gentleman wants it done.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I apparently have an automobile here now.

Mr. Nelson: Now you can make your own.

The Witness: That is just one piece.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Petitioner's Exhibit 29 which consists, I gather, of thirty-six sheets bearing thereon duplicated typewritten material, pencil material, ink, and assorted crayon, et cetera, is received in evidence.

1411 (The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit 29 for identification was received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. MacAuley, I call your attention to what would be the second sheet of Company's Exhibit 29, and ask you what that is?

A. What do you mean, Mr. Dahling?

Q. What does that disclose?

A. This discloses here the operations to be performed.

by the different departments. In other words, it starts with the "U. D. L. Department" and goes—

Q. Before you get to that—those are the operations in connection with the manufacture of this one part?

A. This particular piece 608601.

Mr. Nelson: What was that part again?

The Witness: Connecting rod blade bolts.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): The first sheet shows the departments that that progresses through?

A. That is correct. It starts in the U. D. L.—

Q. What is the U. D. L.?

A. The automatic screw machine.

Q. And there is one operation in that department?

A. Well, there might be one or more.

Q. Then where does it go?

A. To the heat treat department, the G. J. J.

Q. What is done there?

1412 A. It is carbonized or hardened, I don't know what this particular one calls for, but I would have to look it up.

Q. We will get to that later. Then what department does it go to?

A. It goes back to the machining department.

Q. And from that department where is it routed?

A. After the heat treat it goes to the machining department to be ground, and from that department it goes to the U. D. A., which is a miscellaneous machine, for further operations from the U. D. A. it goes to the U. D. E. for burring. Then it is returned to be etched; afterwards it is ground again and there are further drilling operations.

Q. These are the processes to which this goes?

A. Yes.

Q. The first or second sheet of this exhibit discloses what departments that work is done in?

A. That is right, and the total times in each one of those departments.

Q. That is more or less the master sheet showing the progress of this part?

A. That is right, the operations which this part must go through before it becomes a completed part.

Q. What do these other sheets show, take the third sheet of the exhibit?

1413 A. The third sheet breaks it down into the detailed operations, showing all the tools that are used on this particular operation No. 10.

Q. What would operation No. 10 be?

A. In this particular case rough turn, O. D., and break-down for cut off, finished turn, .460 diameter.

Q. What does that mean?

A. That is the diameter at that particular area as shown on the blue print. To .475, the form chamfer 45 degrees, by .359 diameter and face end.

Q. What do you mean by "face end,"?

A. To cut the end off square. Finished form .670 to .675 diameter.

Q. Now, Mr. MacAuley, that is set forth, what you have just read is set forth on the third sheet of Exhibit 29?

A. Sheet No. 2, this is just a cap sheet.

Q. That would be really numbered sheet No. 2?

A. Of the thirty-six, yes.

Q. And this operation as set forth on that sheet takes place in Department 10, that is the tenth operation?

A. Yes.

Q. What department is that?

A. U. D. L.

Q. What is the U. D. L. Department?

A. The automatic screw machine.

1414 Q. You read a number of things here that are done. In language that a lawyer understands, just what is it?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Now, you will really have to make it simple.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): In simple language.

A. Really what they are doing here is taking the bar stock and blanking out a piece out of that which will have subsequent operations performed on it after heat treating, which will make bolts of it and finished out of it. This is merely roughly form of bolt, when it comes out of that department.

Q. In other words, the bolt, when it comes out of that department, has to have the dimensions and other physical attributes set forth in this routing sheet, sheet No. 2?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Only a few of which you referred to orally?

The Witness: That is right.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Now, I note on the left-hand column of sheet No. 2 the letter in capitals M. U. followed by "100," what is that?

A. That represents the classification of the man that is to do the job.

Q. That would be the worker who does the job?

A. Yes.

Q. And that classification is put in there for what 1415 reason?

A. So that the foreman and everybody else connected and using the routing will know on this particular operation that they are supposed to have an operator M. U.-100 man, which happens to be an automatic machine operator.

Q. That classification covers automatic machine operators?

A. Yes, automatic screw machine operators.

Q. And he would be the type of man to carry that classification and to carry out the operation as set forth on No. 2?

A. The reason we put that on there is that we may have men in similar departments entirely removed from this particular job, doing the same identical work. So we can inform the foreman that is the classification so that we aren't running one classification in one department and another in another, we specify that in the central office, the type of man that should be on that job and his classification.

Q. That is the type of man then that is sent to the foreman in this particular department to operate that job?

A. The foremen from these routings will requisition a M. U.-100 man. From the time that we show on here, which is a total time per piece, and the schedule we

1416 give him, he will know whether he needs one or two or three men or whatever it is, to operate. We show that this particular job—on this particular job the man is to operate two machines. In other words, the time is shown as a two-machine time and that this one operator is to operate two of these machines.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I notice that there are three columns headed "Standard hours" and that there is a sub-heading in the first column which says "allowance." On this particular sheet there is a figure .0023, what does that mean?

The Witness: That is in decimals of hours.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Specifically what does that mean as applies to the markings on this particular part?

The Witness: This is the allowance we give the operator in changing tools, his personal allowance, for tools, and we know that there is some unavoidable scrap. We admit that he cannot help that scrap and we allow that extra in there for that scrap. On certain jobs we know we can expect a certain amount of scrap in it. So you will give him that allowance; also give him time for cleaning up his machine.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): That is done through your time study people?

A. Yes.

1417 Trial Examiner Jaffee: The second column headed "Floor to floor," and there is a figure there. What does that mean?

The Witness: .0110 represents the time for the completion of a cycle to complete the operation from floor time to floor again. That is, from the time he picks up a piece and puts it in the machine it goes through a machining cycle and is completed and returned—the piece is returned to the bench again and we call it a floor to floor—it could be bench to bench.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The next column is headed "Total" and which bears the figure .0133, that is merely the total of the first two columns?

The Witness: That is correct.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: There is another column after that headed "Floor to floor production per hour" and there is a figure there of 90.9.

The Witness: That is the number of pieces per hour that that machine will produce with no allowance provided.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Then there is a last column which is headed "Required average hourly production per 100 per cent efficiency per shift," and in that particular column there happens to be the figure written in "75" and that figure is encircled. What does that mean?

The Witness: The encircle does not mean anything
1418 in that case.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Suppose we disregard the circlement.

The Witness: In that case it means that with a total time of .0133, which represents the floor to floor time plus his allowance, that an operator has to produce 75 pieces per hour.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: So that when the foreman knows how many pieces are supposed to be produced by him, that is to say, by the men under him, and he sees from the sheet that he gets, the labor routing and the operation sheet how many pieces per hour he is supposed to put out—that is supposed to be put out by each man, he then knows how many men he needs.

The Witness: That is right.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Is it important that the men working on this operation produce that many parts per hour?

A. Definitely, there has to be that production or we will run out of parts and eventually there would be a stop in the schedule.

Q. And if you run out of parts?

A. Well, you tie up a whole line, assembly line or a motor line or any one of the lines.

Q. So it is vitally important that this production is 1419 kept going?

A. That is right.

Q. And at the rate set forth?

A. That is right.

Q. Now referring back again to page 1 of this exhibit, that is, I am referring to sheet No. 1 which is really the second sheet—

A. It is sheet No. 1 here.

Q. —of the exhibit, I note that there are certain places designated for approval. Who approves the routing sheet?

Mr. Nelson: We would like to know when it is done.

Mr. Dahling: You may ask the question later.

Mr. Nelson: I don't know whether it is after or before it goes to the shop.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We only get sufficient intelligence after we read the entire record. I prefer to have the time set.

The Witness: These routings are signed in the original say in pencil before they are typed in by the typographical department. We do not type anything in unless the signatures are on. It is not sent to that department until they are typed.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): The signatures provided for are whose?

1420 A. Process department, time study for the classification of the operator and the time, the foreman and the general foreman and the manager of the division.

Q. Now, Mr. MacAuley, in your personal experience, tell us, are those approvals actually placed on this routing sheet by the parties that you named?

Mr. Nelson: I object to that. It obviously isn't. There is the evidence of it there (indicating). There isn't a foreman's name on that. You can turn those sheets as far as you like. Why should he be asked to testify contrary to fact. The only foreman on there is the time study foreman.

The Witness: At the time this was signed there was Wendt's signature on it, Hanley signature on it, Brzeski signature on it and Casey, who was a foreman or general foreman. As the manager, Crawford signed it. Foreman of the Process signed it, Radomski; J. Budnik for the time study as well as Nadeau; for the process Clark and Duclos. It was also signed by J. Cook who is foreman of the Process Department.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): When, if you know, was that signed? Before or after it was sent into the shop?

A. It has to be signed before because we do not type these until these are signed. The girls have instructions not to type any of these routings until the signatures 1421 appear.

Q. Have you ever been personally present or a party to any of these so-called routing sheets?

A. Many times, yes.

Q. Of your personal knowledge are the foremen and general foremen present while these matters are being discussed?

A. Always, as far as I have ever been in it.

Q. Have you ever personally discussed the matters with foremen and general foremen who might be called upon to manufacture the part?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Have you asked them for their suggestions?

A. Definitely.

Q. As a matter of fact, if a foreman of a certain department is going to do an operation on a part such as this, it would be advisable, wouldn't it, just as it is good business, to call him in and find out if he could work it out in that manner?

A. If we didn't there would be a continual round of argument between the process men and he. If he never signed it he would never agree to it. As a matter of course we always ask them to sign it.

Q. Now you come to sheet No. 3, is that another operation on this particular piece of stock?

1422 A. In this particular sheet it is operation No. 10 and it is the details of the tools used on operation No. 10. In other words, sheet No. 2 describes the operations to be performed with no tools shown, and sheets 3, 4, 5 and 6 and up to the first half of sheet No. 6 show the tools used on operation 10, to manufacture that part.

Q. And these tools are furnished to that particular department for that purpose?

A. Yes.

Q. In the quantity necessary?

A. That quantity we show here under the set-up. We show twelve of these and twelve of those (indicating), that first position (indicating).

Q. Approximately how many tools do you have listed there as necessary for that operation?

A. Well, there are quite a few.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. MacAuley, are these tools that we are talking about used in the machines?

A. Yes, they are used in six spindle automatic machines which are six positions and which we use in a total of six positions and we use forty-five different tools.

1423 Q. In going over this routing sheet with people who approve it, do they also check into the type of tools that are to be used on the machines?

A. Just in general, on this particular case these tools are most of them special and will be designed later. The type of tool, they do agree on, in the manufacturing process, yes.

Q. Now the second half of sheet No. 6, I believe, is where you stopped in adding up the tools that were used for this operation 10. I notice that there is some further material on the bottom half of sheet 6, is that another operation?

A. Operation 20 comes first.

Q. What is that operation?

A. That is to remove the burrs.

Q. What do you mean by that?

A. Well, in turning it off the automatic, there is a little tip left on the end of the piece or the edge is turned up, due to the cutting tools that we use. We use the grinder to grind off the rough burrs.

Q. Does this sheet designate the type of grinder and type of machine that is used?

A. Yes, we use a Marschke grinder machine numbered DP-1678.

Q. Is the time of the operation also shown on the 1424 second half of sheet No. 2?

A. Yes, the classification is here and the classification of the man in this case is MU-119.

1425 Q. What would you call that?

A. It's a burring operation.

Q. And the time for the operation as fixed by the time study appears on the right hand side of the sheet, the same as in connection with operation number ten?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will take a short recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. MacAuley, you still have in your hand Company's Exhibit 29?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe you finished with the operation which had to do with removing the burrs from the part, is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, what is the next operation?

A. It is the wash and dip, dip the head in rust preventive oil.

Q. That is operation number 30?

A. That is correct.

Q. The same information appears on the exhibit with respect to that operation, in general, in connection with the other operations you have described?

A. Only that in the particular case of washing this particular group of men are charged into a non-productive account in which we show no time as a productive operator.

1426

Q. What is the next operation as shown by the exhibit?

A. The next operation is inspection before it leaves the department, which happens to be in this case UDL.

Q. That sheet lists the gauges which are used in making the inspection?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. If after this route sheet is set up, a foreman decides that the process could be improved, what does he do?

A. He requests a change in the operation sheet.

Q. Does he have a regular form which he sends through on that?

A. He does.

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark this Company's Exhibit 30?

(Thereupon the document referred to was marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 30.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) I show you Company's Exhibit Number 30, and ask you if that is the form to which you have just referred?

A. Yes, sir, it is.

Q. And that is entitled, "Recommendation for tool or operation change"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where would that form be signed by the foreman making the request?

1427 A. Down in the lower lefthand corner.

Q. That is a form which is in general use in the Packard Company?

A. Yes, it is.

Mr. Dahling: I offer Exhibit Number 30 in evidence.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Mr. Nelson: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Received.

(The document heretofore marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 30 was received in evidence.)

Mr. Dahling: Will you please mark these Company's Exhibits 31, 32, 33 and 34?

(Thereupon the documents above referred to were marked for identification as Company's Exhibits 31, 32, 33 and 34.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. MacAuley, I show you forms which have apparently been filled in and which have been marked Company's Exhibits 31, 32, 33 and 34, and ask you what they are?

A. Exhibit 31 is a recommendation for a tool and operation change requested by A. Lynch, Department GDM, asking us to remove from operation 10 and replace in operation 240 the part of the operation of forming the 90 degree radius on the inside of the gear.

Q. Who is Mr. Lynch?

A. He is the foreman of GDM department. And on 1428 that he also requests the two changes he wants made.

This was put into effect on our change number 253121 and 2, with alterations for the layout issued on July 8, 1944.

Q. Now, I notice that these forms in the bottom lefthand corner have the words, "Requested by"?

A. That is right.

Q. And that is where the form is signed by the foreman or general foreman?

A. The foreman or general foreman requesting the change.

Q. Then just to the right of that in the next column, the next column is headed "Approved by".

A. That is where the change involves a whole lot of expense. It might have to go in, in that case, to the divisional manager and the master mechanic for approval to see whether the requested change would make a saving to justify it.

Q. If the saving is not great?

A. In these particular cases nobody's name appears but the general foreman and the foreman and the process man that made the change.

Q. Coming to the form marked Company's Exhibit 32, was that initiated by a foreman?

A. This was requested by Mr. Kimmel, in GDX.

Q. That was a request for a change in the operation?

A. It says on here, "Please change operation and 1429 tools to the way operation is now being run." In other words, the foreman in this case changed it before he had a change on the process sheet. Now he is trying to get the operation on the sheet up to the way he is performing it.

Q. What is Company's Exhibit 33, for identification?

A. That is a request by J. Miller.

Q. What is he?

A. He is a foreman in the GDC; in which he asks that a tool be added to the routing sheet MP-1007-T, a three-cornered scraper.

Q. Did that go through and was it approved?

A. It was sent through by Mr. MacDonald, of process, and says here, "The tool has been in the crib but not on the process sheet."

Q. What is the form marked Company's Exhibit 34, for identification?

A. That is a request for a change by A. Lynch.

Q. Who is Mr. Lynch?

A. He is a foreman in GDM.

Mr. Nelson: Is he a foreman or a general foreman?

The Witness: I don't know.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: By the way, you are using the word "foreman"—

The Witness: (Interposing) In general terms.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In general terms?

1430 The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: The reason I raised the point, Mr. Examiner, is because the testimony now would indicate that these may not be originated by an assistant foreman, and it would appear on the record up to now that it could be done only by a foreman or a general foreman. In other words, an assistant foreman would assist to his foreman and the foreman would originate that.

The Witness: Usually it is the foreman and the general foreman that we get these requests from.

Mr. Nelson: Oh, we will agree there might be an exception here and there on that.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) What is requested?

A. He requested certain items be added to the routing sheet. For instance, he wanted added to operation 46 a Tampico Brush and added to operation 47 a washing operation, and add to operation 65 a Tampico Brush, and add to operation 222, to break all sharp edges and add to operation 223 an air gun on the teeth.

Q. Now, these forms, exhibits 31 to 34, inclusive, for identification, were taken from the records of the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They are a part of their permanent records?

A. Yes, sir.

1431 Mr. Nelson: Do you mind if I ask a question about each of these?

Mr. Dahling: No.

Mr. Nelson: Regarding Company's Exhibit 31, who is Mr. Gubbins?

The Witness: He would be the process man that made this change in the routing. This shows the change number.

Mr. Nelson: That is Mr. Gubbins' signature?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: He is the process man to whom this request was referred?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: And it became operative because he requested it?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: Now, on exhibit 32, the signature of Mr. C. Harter appears. Who is Mr. Harter?

The Witness: Mr. Harter is a process man.

Mr. Nelson: With authority to approve the recommendation of this kind?

The Witness: He adds it to the routing sheet, yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: On Company Exhibit 33 there is a signature of J. MacDonald over a date. Who is Mr. MacDonald?

The Witness: He is a process man.

1432 Mr. Nelson: He had authority to act on a recommendation of that kind?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: On Company Exhibit 36, I see here a little out of place, but in red, Mr. B. Terry. Who is Mr. Terry?

The Witness: Mr. Terry is a process man.

Mr. Nelson: With authority—

The Witness: (Interposing) To add to the process sheet.

Mr. Nelson: On exhibit 31, and Exhibits 32, 33 and 34, when these exhibits are acted upon, then that is reflected in either an amendment to or a new issue of Company's Exhibit 29?

The Witness: There is a new routing sheet and a new issue number assigned to it. Whatever the last issue, there is a new issue added to indicate these changes.

Mr. Nelson: And that would apply to the department from which it came and to the department to which it went?

The Witness: Wherever the routing sheet is distributed they all get copies.

Mr. Nelson: It will go to any department that it affects?

The Witness: That is right.

Mr. Nelson: As to either tools or material?

The Witness: That is right.

1433 Mr. Nelson: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Received.

(The documents heretofore marked for identification as Company's Exhibits 31, 32, 33 and 34 were received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) In each case, however, on exhibits 31 to 34, inclusive, the recommendation was initiated by a foreman, was it not?

A. A foreman or a general foreman.

Q. I think we had gotten to the sheet that had to do with the washing operation; had we not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I am referring now to exhibit 29, the routing sheet. Just generally, what operation follows the washing?

A. On this one, it is inspection.

Q. Do you have a regular department for that purpose?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They inspect this part?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. The gauges used in connection with making the inspection are shown on this sheet 7 of Exhibit 29, is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. Then what is the next operation?

A. They shipped them to heat treat.

1434 Q. You consider the heat treat as one operation?

A. Well, there is a number of operations within that heat treat department.

Q. Can you give them to us just rapidly?

A. Well, this particular one, the first operation, is to degrease.

Q. That is to clean the part?

A. To remove the oil, the film on the part.

Q. Then what is the next operation?

A. Then to harden. After hardening, it is degreased again.

Q. When you say harden, that is done through some sort of heating process?

A. Heating and dipping in oil, then it is degreased again, then it is drawn.

Q. What do you mean by drawn?

A. Well, heated up to—set the heat and bring it back by cooling at a certain rate of speed, after which it is wheelabrated.

Q. What is that operation?

A. That's an operation equivalent to sand blasting in which they remove the scale.

Q. And the time of the operation as fixed by the time study is set forth in the same manner on this sheet number 8 as in the previous sheets that you have testified about?

1435 A. That is correct.

Q. What is the next operation?

A. Then they spot polish the piece.

Q. What is spot polishing?

A. They merely spot polish one particular spot, so they can make a Rockwell hardness test of the piece. In other words, we must remove the surface in order to obtain the correct Brinnell or Rockwell hardness test.

Q. And this particular part has to come up to specifications?

A. That is correct.

Q. And part of those specifications are that it must have a certain hardness?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is determined by the test that you have just spoken about?

A. That is correct.

Q. What is the next operation?

A. After which it is dipped in rust preventive oil.

Q. Then what is the next operation?

A. It is shipped to Department UDK.

Q. Then UDK continues working on this piece?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. What are their operations?

A. They grind the end face at thread end to three—

1436 Q. (Interposing) Well, just a minute, they grind the end face. That is to a certain size?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the total operation in that department?

A. Well, there is further operations in UDK.

Q. What are the further operations? Just state them generally.

A. A rough grind, a centerless grind.

Q. What does centerless grind mean?

A. It means they pass this piece through two grinding wheels, running in the opposite direction to grind this piece perfectly round. In other words, they could do it a second way, by putting this bolt on an arbor and face grinding it or OD grinding—rather, not face; centerless grinding is much faster.

Q. What other operations are there in that particular department?

A. It is shipped from there to UDA.

Q. And there are further operations there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just generally, what are they?

A. They broach the head.

Q. What do you mean by that?

A. In this particular case it is similar to an operation of milling.

1437 Q. I do not know what milling means.

A. By milling we mean cutting the surface to a flat edge or area.

Q. Then what happens to the piece?

A. It remains in the same department where we drill through the complete bolt from end to end.

Q. That is the work done in one department, is it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after that is done?

A. There is still done in UDA further work.

Q. What is the further work?

A. We face the head end of the bolt.

Q. It goes from there to what department?

A. To inspection again.

Q. Then after it clears that inspection?

A. It is sent to UDE, another department, where we remove the sharp edge on the point 385 diameter.

Q. In other words, you remove the sharp edge to bring it down to a certain size?

A. Yes, sir, we just ground the edge.

Q. What further work is done in that department, if any?

A. Well, the burring operation where we burr the head of the bolt in UDD.

Q. Now, when you say that is the operation in UDD, does this department do any other type of work?

1438 A. Mostly on burring and polishing, that type of work.

Q. So that people in there would be burrers and polishers, is that it?

A. They are specialists in that kind of work.

Q. And this part comes to them together with other parts of similar character for the purpose of being polished and so on?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What happens then?

A. It is rough polished to the point 229 diameter hole and it is finish polished, then washed and dipped in rust preventive.

1439 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Now, then, follow through after that.

A. It is inspected again in that department.

Q. Then where does it go?

A. It is shipped to the UDA Department.

Q. What do they do in that department?

A. They etch the part.

Q. When you say they etch, what do you mean by etch?

A. They mark it with an electric—in this particular case, with an electrical tool indicating the part number on the head.

Q. And I take it, it is practically completed?

A. No.

Q. What happens?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You are not going to get off that easily, are you?

The Witness: It is sent to the ADK for semi-grind on the face—under the face of the bolt head.

(By Mr. Dahling) Is that another operation, to bring it down to specifications?

A. Yes. After that, it is drill to cotter pin holes.

Q. Is that in the same department?

A. Yes. Then we counter-sink to cotter pin holes. Then we ream to cotter pin holes. Then we center the thread end.

Q. Is this hole in the one department?

1440 A. Yes.

Q. And they do similar work on other parts?

A. Yes.

Q. With the idea that you have these departments established so that as these various parts for the automobile are made and have to have identical operations on them, you have a department, which will carry through those operations on all of the parts?

A. That is ordinarily right and true, but in this particular part, in the DUA Division, the U Division generally is what we call a miscellaneous department, where due to the short operations of the pieces we use the same machines to run a number of pieces rather than setting the machines up and running a line production in which we never change the machines. This particular department is set up to run a variety of pieces.

Q. In the other departments or some of the other departments you mean the machines would be set up so as to just work on—

A. (Interposing) The same piece?

Q. The same piece, the same job on the same piece?

A. That is right.

Q. As it came to them down the line or by means of truck?

A. That is right.

Q. Then what happens after that?

1441 A. We centerless grind it again and then we grind the thread and then we hand-file or hone the sharp edge. It is then washed and magnafluxed.

Q. What is the purpose of that operation?

A. That is to check to see whether there are any surface cracks in the bolt due to the heat treat or grinding during the process.

Q. And that is done by means of electricity?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. What is the next operation?

A. Inspection.

Q. Then it is inspected?

A. Yes. And then it is degreased and dipped in rust preventative oil and shipped to DDX, where they use the part.

Q. And that is the story of this particular part and of its manufacture?

A. That is the story of a single bolt.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is the story only in its highlights?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) In addition to the general information you gave us, these sheets show, do they not, the result of the time study and the time of each one of the operations as fixed by the study?

1442 A. Yes, sir.

Q. Except in those cases where the non-productive departments are?

A. In this particular case, being an original routing, that would not be the result of a time study, that is an estimated time on those, it is later that the time is studied.

Q. I notice that on some of the sheets there appear to be lines, crayon lines, drawn through some of the writing and some of the typewriting. What does that mean?

A. We use those sheets rather than rewrite by longhand and we take an old sheet of a similar part and cross off the tools or parts of the operations which no longer apply to this part. That is to save time, why we do that.

Q. And if you had a brand new part that you had not manufactured before, you would have to set that up complete from the beginning, however?

A. It would be all in pencil, in that case.

Q. When you say that you had inspection, is that your Company inspection?

A. That is Company inspection.

Q. This is a part for the Rolls Royce motor?

A. Yes.

Q. Does the Government inspect that at any time—I mean this part?

1443 A. The Government inspector will check, in that particular case, with our inspection, and if he is satisfied that our inspector is doing a satisfactory job and that our equipment is satisfactory, he will accept our inspection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That Company's Exhibit 29 which you went over, Mr. MacAuley, applies to Rolls Royce engine?

The Witness: Yes, it does.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I say that because Mr. Dahling and I have inadvertently, in our questions, referred to an automobile—

Mr. Dahling: (Interposing) Yes, I know I did.

The Witness: I answered that on the basis that we do treat all automobile parts similar to this part. These are routings and operations which we must go through— and the same procedure in making a car and in making a simple bolt like this bolt for the Rolls Royce engine.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Then, just some of the detailed things are different?

A. Yes.

Q. And in the case of an aircraft engine, it is more difficult?

A. Yes.

Q. Well then, would you—

1444 A. (Interposing) We would not make a bolt for an automobile similar to that one.

Q. When you make the bolt for the automobile, you mean it does not have to go through as many operations?

A. No, sir.

Q. What is the reason for that?

A. The stress on the bolt in an automobile that we have on an aircraft engine—in other words, an aircraft engine is stressed up to the point where we develop about one horsepower for each pound of weight, where in the automobile we may add that up to ten or fifteen pounds of weight per horsepower.

Q. Consequently, the parts do not have to be as hard or as finely machined?

A. It is not finely machined or accurately machined.

Q. When you are building automobiles, you prepare the same type of routing sheets for these parts and they flow along generally the same course of procedure as set forth in Exhibit 29, except that you maintain so many operations or so many inspections, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, I believe you said that there were about 4,000 parts to the ordinary automobile?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: 4,000 different parts.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

1445 Q. (By Mr. Dahling) As to each one of these parts, would you have a routing sheet of this sort, if you were manufacturing that part in your plant?

A. Yes, and on purchased parts which we have to inspect as received, we will put out a process routing on those showing the gauges used in the inspection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I know now the cause of the paper shortage.

Mr. Dahling: It is helped by the Government departments.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: They run neck in neck.

Mr. Dahling: I do not like the policy of the Government in using both sides of the page.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. MacAuley, referring again to Company's Exhibit 29, I believe you have already testified, but I want to be sure of it, that when you come to a model change in a car, you might have to make extensive changes in the routing sheets covering the part in that car?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was particularly true, wasn't it, when you set up the small car department?

A. When we set up the small car production, it required a complete set of new routing and every part had to be re-processed.

Q. Then, as you changed your models, it was not 1446 necessary to change all of them but some of the designs being changed, you had to set up new routing sheets again?

A. Any time any dimension on any given part is changed, we have to change the routing sheet reflecting that change.

Q. Based upon your personal experience, when changes of that character are made, are they ever referred or discussed with the foreman?

A. Very definitely. I do not know of any time—at least, they have been very few, if there are any—when they are not discussed, because the process man has to make the change and he and the foreman and the general foreman and the division manager and working together almost all the time.

Q. And you have personal knowledge of the fact that that is done?

A. Yes.

Q. And have you yourself, in connection with these routing sheets, discussed matters involved and problems involved in connection with routing sheets with foremen and general foremen?

A. I would never sign a routing when I was a division manager unless the general foreman's and foreman's name was on it ahead of me. I wanted to be sure that he had seen it and agreed to it.

Q. And you had been a division manager?

1447 A. Yes; at Pontiac and Packard.

Q. And the same situation you are testifying to would apply to both Pontiac and Packard?

A. Yes.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I see it is four-thirty and I have an important appointment with a gentleman who is leaving town tonight. I wonder if it would be possible at this time to adjourn? I would consider it a great favor if you would grant the request.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well. You have also indicated it to me off the record, Mr. Dahling. Since it appears that we cannot finish this case by tomorrow and since Mr. Donovan indicated no anxiety about sitting tomorrow and since next Monday is New Year's Day, we will recess at this time until next Tuesday, January 2, 1945, in Judge Picard's old courtroom on the northeast corner of the eight floor at 9:30 A. M. I wish you gentlemen a happy new year.

(Whereupon, at 4:30 o'clock P. M., Friday, December 29, 1944, the hearing was adjourned until Tuesday, January 2, 1945, at 9:30 o'clock A. M.)

PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are we ready to proceed, gentlemen?

MORTIMER F. MACAULAY

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination (Continued).

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Macaulay, the preparation of the routing sheets for the various parts of the automobiles in peacetime and for the products you are presently producing, in the manner you have testified that Exhibit 29 was prepared, is standard practice at the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And once that routing sheet has been prepared and approved, must that be followed by the foreman?

A. Once a routing sheet is prepared and approved and typed and sent to the shop it becomes the official "Bible," as we call it, for the whole manufacturing division.

Q. And that would be not only for the foreman but also the superintendents and assistant division managers and division managers and so on up?

A. Everybody, including the divisional manager, is supposed to follow that routing or ask for a change in it.

Q. And those changes, of course, could be suggested 1451 by any one of the managerial staff?

A. That is correct.

Q. And that would start with the foreman and go on up through the division manager?

A. That is right.

Q. I presume in case of an emergency they could temporarily make a change, if that was required?

A. In case of an emergency they do divert from the routing, but they cannot continue because if they did we would not have the tools available for them.

Q. As I understand the process men in the first place will make up this routing sheet after various conferences, is that true?

A. That is right, he makes what we call a recommended process.

Q. Then what follows?

A. He takes the routing and goes over it with supervision, at which time they can concur with the process men and approve it, and if they do not approve it he changes it so that finally an approved routing is ready for typing.

Q. Where does the foreman appear in this particular picture?

A. He approves it with the other supervisors that are affected.

Q. Now, does it happen at times, Mr. MacAuley, that 1452 changes in tools or various apparatus which may be used will be requested?

A. Why, when it comes to tools and non-productive supplies, such as oils, compounds, or other things that are used in connection with the operation—at times, the original specification will not do the job satisfactorily and the foreman does have the right and does request that a trial run be made on different tools or different oils.

Q. Is that request presented in writing?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any of the forms used in that connection?

A. Why, there are some here, yes, some on gloves, some on files. This is a honing compound (indicating).

Mr. Dahling: Will you mark these documents Company's Exhibits 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40 and 41?

(The documents referred to were marked for identification as Company's Exhibits Nos. 35 to 41, inclusive.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. MacAuley, I show you papers marked for identification as Company's Exhibits 35 through 41, inclusive, and ask you what they are? Just generally, in the first place, what are they?

A. These reports—they represent requests for test material, the original in pencil, followed by a report of the trial test in pencil, which was made in various departments on various materials, with the typed sheet, 1453 the top sheet typed, a copy of the report.

Q. Who makes these requests, Mr. Macaulay?

A. The request for the test can come from various sources, many of which we receive from the foremen themselves, some are received from the purchasing department and some from the metallurgical department.

Q. Are these papers, which are designated as Company's Exhibits 35 to 41, part of the records of the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Yes, they are.

Q. Will you start in with Exhibit 35, the first exhibit, and tell us what it is?

A. Exhibit 35 is a request for a test made by E. Regul, department foreman, in which he wanted to try out some taps. This test was run on a number of different size taps, a list of which is attached and a copy of the Foreman's report is attached, signed by Edward Regul. The test was conducted by Winfield and H. Papke. The test was approved by the foreman, Edward Regul. It was also approved by the divisional manager, G. Deislinger.

Q. When you say the test was approved, do you mean they approved the use of the new taps?

A. They approved the result of the test. In other words, in this particular case his report is that, "These taps have been tried and have worked fairly satisfactory. A 1454 complete analysis and recommendation establishing the correct taps for all operations will be issued at the completion of the investigation."

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is something you just read from the exhibit?

The Witness: That is correct.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) That is the report of the foreman as it appears on the exhibit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. MacAuley, that last Company exhibit—no, take the next one, Company Exhibit number 36, and just tell us what was tested in that case?

A. In the particular case the test was conducted by foreman Smith, the department foreman.

Q. Yes, but what was tested, was that an oil?

A. This was to check a honing compound.

Q. And the request was made by whom?

A. The test was evidently made by the purchasing department.

Q. Coming to Company's Exhibit 37, what does that request cover?

A. This request covers a test on a double cut taper file and the test was requested by the department foreman, Charlie Naas.

Q. Company Exhibit 38, who made that request?

1455 A. The request is signed by William Rogers and was a test made on aluminum flux.

Q. Who is Mr. Rogers?

A. He is a foreman in the B. A. Department.

Q. When you say it is a test on aluminum flux, what would that mean? What do you use a flux for?

A. It is a material we use in melting aluminum.

Q. Company's Exhibit 39, who made the request there?

A. The request is made by Otto Beyer, department foreman in the YBD Department.

Q. What did he desire to have tested?

A. He was checking on gloves.

Q. And Company Exhibit C-40, who made that request?

A. That was made by Mr. Fuller, who is the departmental foreman in the "E" division.

Q. What did he desire tested?

A. He was checking "Eyegard" shields. That is a trade name.

Q. E-y-e-g-a-r-d, Eyegard is a trade name for shields? What type of shields?

A. It is for the protection of the eyes in the forging shop.

Q. Company's Exhibit 41, who made that request?

A. That request was made by the purchasing department because of the War Production Board Conservation 1456 Order Number M-106, which restricted the use of shellac. The test was made by A. Bede.

Q. Who is Mr. A. Bede?

A. He is the carpenter foreman in the plant engineering department.

Mr. Dahling: I offer Company's Exhibits 35 to 41, inclusive, in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: No objection to the exhibit on our part.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is there any objection to the exhibits, gentlemen?

Mr. Karasick: I have not finished them yet, Mr. Examiner.

Mr. Nelson: Can we speak off the record for a moment?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record. Company's Exhibits 35 through 41 are received in evidence.

(The documents heretofore marked for identification as Company's Exhibits 35 through 41 were received in evidence.)

Mr. Dahling: Would you care to look at the exhibits, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Later.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Macaulay, I believe you stated that the report of the test appears as one of the papers in each one of these exhibits?

1457 A. Yes, it does. The report of the test is usually the last sheet in this particular bunch.

Q. And where the test has been made by a foreman, does he sign this report?

A. If it hasn't been made by him, he concurs with the test and agrees that it is satisfactory or unsatisfactory.

Q. These exhibits, Company's Exhibits 35 through 41, inclusive, are samples of these requests for tests?

A. That is correct.

Q. You have others in your file?

A. We have a number of those, yes.

Q. That is the same situation with respect to Company's Exhibits 31 to 34, inclusive, in connection with recommendations for tool or operation changes?

A. That is correct.

Q. Those exhibits are samples and you have others in your files?

A. That is right.

Q. These materials that are tested, do they come from various manufacturers?

A. Manufacturers all around the country.

Q. Would the source of the material appear on the article or would that be made known to the person making the test?

A. They always know where it comes from, because if it is a tool it usually has the Company's trademark 1458 on it; if it is a compound or oil, the drums are so marked.

Q. I notice in one of these Company exhibits, Exhibit Number 40, it appears that the test was made of a goggle or shield with the trade name of "Monogoggle" manufactured by the American Allsafe Company, Incorporated?

A. That's right.

Q. The same information with respect to other products would likewise appear on these requests?

A. The foreman gets a copy out of the report showing from whom it was received so he can fill out the necessary information.

Q. Now, Mr. MacAuley, what are the different managerial levels at the Packard Motor Car Company, starting with, we will say, the president?

A. Well, immediately next to the president would be the vice-presidents.

Q. Do you have an executive vice-president at the present time?

A. Yes, we do.

Q. That is Mr. James Marks?

A. That is correct.

Q. The next in line would be the vice-presidents?

A. We have a vice-president of engineering—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) Just answer the question, please; we will get along much faster.

1459 The Witness: Okay. We have other vice-presidents.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Who are these other vice-presidents?

A. Vice-president of engineering, vice-president in charge of sales, vice-president of manufacturing, a comptroller.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Have you finished the vice-presidents?

The Witness: No, there is a vice-president in charge of Mr. Tibbetts—I don't know.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) He is patent counsel, is he not?

A. That is correct.

Q. What is the next level below your vice-presidents?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just a moment, off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Dahling: Will you read the last question?

(Question read.)

The Witness: Do you want to go to manufacturing?

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Confine yourself to the manufacturing department. As I understand it, the vast bulk of your foremen who are designated on the petition in this case are in the manufacturing departments, both productive and nonproductive. To save time, will you confine yourself to those particular departments, Mr. MacAuley?

A. Next to vice-president of manufacturing is the 1460 manager; next to the manager is an assistant manager and under the assistant manager we have a manager of the G Division.

Q. Just so this is clear, when you say next under the vice-president of manufacturing comes the manager, will you tell us the manager of what?

A. The aircraft division.

Q. That would be what we have termed one of the large divisions?

A. This is just typical of another division.

Q. You would also have the manager over your car and marine division?

A. That is right.

Q. Then under these managers of the two main divisions, you also have a manager of the smaller divisions, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The smaller divisions, into which these large divisions have been broken?

A. That is right.

Q. Do you also have assistant managers?

A. In the small divisions?

Q. Yes, in the small divisions?

A. Yes, we do.

Q. What is your next level below your assistant division managers?

1461 A. We have a few cases where there are superintendents.

Q. They would fall in next below your assistant division managers?

A. That's right.

Q. When I say assistant division managers, am I correct that these division managers operate and supervise in the smaller divisions into which your two large divisions have been broken up?

A. They are what we might call sub-divisions of the main divisions.

Q. Then, below the superintendent, what is the next level?

A. The general foreman.

Q. Below the general foreman is the foreman?

A. The foreman and the assistant foreman.

Q. Below the assistant foreman you go to the rank and file?

A. Well, you have leaders and job setters and then what you might call the rank and file.

Q. What is a leader?

A. He is a productive operator in a department, who instructs new men as generally in a small group and is responsible to his assistant foreman as need be. That is a productive worker.

Q. He is a member of the CIO insofar as the Packard Motor Car Company is concerned?

1462 A. Yes, he is.

Q. You spoke of a job setter. What is a job setter?

A. Also a productive operator in a department, who sets up the various machines, and in some cases, particularly where we have women operators, do the dressing of the wheels.

Q. Is the job setter among those who are included in the UAW Union?

A. Job setters are included in the UAW and are members.

Q. And your contract covers job setters?

A. That is right.

Q. That has not been true at all times, has it?

A. No, that was changed from originally when they were not included.

Q. Let's start back up the line again, Mr. MacAuley, with, we will say, your superintendents. Over what do these superintendents have jurisdiction?

A. The superintendent is usually a man who has jurisdiction over a number of departments.

Q. Now, I believe that there is testimony that there are approximately 300 departments in the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. That is approximately right.

Q. And the superintendent would have jurisdiction over a number of these departments?

1463 A. That is right.

Q. Some superintendents would have jurisdiction over more and others would not have so many, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. What is their particular function? That is, I am referring to the superintendents now?

A. They assist in a sense—they are assistants to the divisional manager or to the assistant divisional manager and they supervise and consult with the general foreman as to his problems.

Q. And if they have problems, with whom do they consult?

A. Superintendents?

Q. Superintendent.

A. He will consult with the assistant divisional manager or the divisional manager.

Q. I believe you testified that they may in that sense supervise a number of departments?

A. That is right.

Q. Next above is the assistant divisional manager of a small division—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) How many superintendents are there?

The Witness: As far as I know in the aircraft—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) In the plant?

Mr. Dahling: That figure can be arrived at from the 1464 charts.

Mr. Nelson: Maybe he could tell us.

The Witness: I do not know offhand, Mr. Nelson.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, I thought we could get the number of superintendents, assistant division superintendents and division managers and assistant division managers.

Mr. Dahling: That appears in the chart covering the manufacturing division. I intended that to be the source of my computations. I have not actually counted them.

Mr. Nelson: We do not have the charts.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let's go ahead, gentlemen.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) I believe you are now going to tell us about the assistant manager of a division. What is his jurisdiction?

A. His jurisdiction is that he supervises and consults, if there are any superintendents in that division or he consults with the general foreman as to his problems.

Q. Now, the assistant division manager would supervise a number of departments?

A. That is right.

Q. And would the number of departments exceed those over which you had a superintendent?

A. Usually it does.

Q. Your next in line then is your division manager?

A. That is right.

1465 Q. What is his jurisdiction?

A. He has jurisdiction over the whole division which may consist of a number of departments under which he has general foremen and foremen and possibly assistant foremen.

Q. And he, of course, is responsible for the work?

A. Of that division, yes.

Q. Of that particular division?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: When you say may consist of a number of departments, are there any cases where it does not?

The Witness: In some cases like the F and K we do not have many departments. Those are large departments, but usually we break our departments down so that there are usually in a division a number of departments.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any cases where a single department constitutes one division?

The Witness: In manufacturing?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

The Witness: I don't know of any offhand.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) If there are, would they show in the charts placed in evidence?

A. They would show in the charts. I do not know of any.

Q. In the manufacturing and productive division above your division manager, who would then come? Your vice-president?

1466 A. Above your divisional manager comes your assistant factory manager or factory manager.

Q. When you say the factory manager, is there more than one?

A. There is in the aircraft one and in the car division one.

Q. Who is the factory manager in the aircraft division?

A. Mr. Brown.

Q. And in the car and marine?

A. Mr. Reifel.

Q. Do they have assistants?

A. Mr. Brown has an assistant. Mr. Reifel does not.

Q. Then above these factory managers would come the vice-president in charge of manufacturing?

A. Yes.

Q. And above the vice-president in charge of manufacturing would come the president?

A. The executive vice-president and the president.

Q. A number of these division managers, superintendents, were originally foremen, were they not?

A. As far as I know, every one of them has been at one time. I do not know of any exceptions right now.

Q. Mr. Christopher is the president of the Company?

A. Yes, he is.

Q. Was he at one time a foreman?

1467 A. At Delco, at one time.

Q. How about your factory managers that you have named?

A. I don't know too much about Mr. Brown but Mr. Reifel was at one time, way back in the experimental days; later he was superintendent of the experimental department.

Q. When you get down to your division manager and assistant division manager and superintendents, you would say that the majority of them are?

A. I do not know of any case that a divisional manager has not been a foreman at one time.

Q. How about your assistant divisional managers?

A. The same applies.

Q. And that applies also to superintendents?

A. The same thing.

Q. Now, coming down the ladder again to the foreman level, I wish you would tell us, Mr. MacAuley, just what are the powers, duties and responsibilities of the foreman from the viewpoint of the Packard Motor Car Company? In that connection you may use any notes you may have prepared.

A. Well, I have listed the different responsibilities, and I can go over them.

Q. Would you go over those different responsibilities and tell us about them?

A. First—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) I think the 1468 witness ought to indicate what he is reading from or looking at.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. MacAuley, you are reading from a paper at the present time?

The Witness: I am reading from a set of notes I made myself.

Mr. Dahling: Those were made by you personally?

The Witness: Yes, they were.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) I didn't consult with you about them?

A. No, sir.

Q. And you are using that for the purpose of refreshing your recollection so that you will give the full story?

A. That is right. There are so many responsibilities that I listed them out and had them typed out so that I would have them.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. MacAuley, did you prepare an analysis of what you believe is a foreman's job?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And did you list in there what, in your opinion, are his duties?

A. I did.

1469 Q. And his responsibilities?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And his authority?

A. Well, I wouldn't say that the authority is outlined in detail, but he has to have authority to complete the responsibilities as shown here.

Q. In your opinion, from your experience, does he have that authority?

A. Yes, he has.

Q. This analysis that you prepared was prepared, based upon your experience in the manufacturing of automobiles, and at the present time, war production?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Do the various duties and responsibilities which you have listed on your analysis of the foreman's job—strike that. Do you, based upon experience, have foremen who actually and substantially carry out these duties and responsibilities?

A. We have.

Q. If you did not have foremen or assistant foremen who substantially carried out these duties and responsibilities, what effect would it have upon your production?

A. Well, production would be limited, it would be very costly and we would have considerable labor trouble and considerable trouble amongst themselves.

1470 Q. In other words, the level of foreman is an important level in the operation, in the running of the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Definitely.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I have this analysis of a foreman's job concerning which Mr. MacAuley has testified, consisting of five sheets. In a discussion off the record, I believe that it was agreeable that that might be copied into the record rather than have Mr. MacAuley testify as to each particular item?

Mr. Nelson: That is agreeable with me.

Mr. Karasick: I will agree to that also.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well, the material just referred to may be copied by the Reporter and it will follow at this point in the record.

M. F. Macaulay – a
12-15-44"

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. MacAuley, a foreman, above all things, I suppose, must be a good leader?

A. That is right.

Q. He must have patience?

A. That is correct.

Q. And use good judgment?

A. He certainly must.

Q. He, of course, would be the first man who would know certain operations which were provided for on the routing sheet did not work out well in practice, would he not?

A. Yes.

Q. I believe you have included in your list of his duties that it would be his duty, then, to report those matters to his superintendent, if he had a superintendent, or to the assistant manager, if he had no superintendent?

A. Oftentimes he doesn't report—he immediately.

1477 contacts the process man himself or the tool engineer, whatever he is having trouble with, and gets that man down there to help him; it might be inspection, a process man, a tool man or it might be a metallurgic process. Oftentimes, he calls that help in himself.

1478 Q. (By Mr. Dahling): And based upon your experience that is actually done by the foreman?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Now, I believe, Mr. MacAuley, you were division manager at one time, were you not?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. What division did you manage?

A. I managed the small car division or 120 division.

Q. Approximately how many departments were in that division?

A. I would say about twenty-five.

Q. Would you remember offhand how many foremen you might have had in the division

A. I don't remember offhand. I would have to recheck that.

Q. Well, there would be foremen in each one of these departments, I presume?

A. That is right.

Q. Who was directly under you in connection with the supervision of this division?

A. I had two people, one in charge of the chassis and motor and I had another man in charge of all bodies.

Q. What title did they bear?

A. They were superintendents.

Q. And did you also have under the superintendents
1479 the general foremen—

A. General foremen and foremen and assistant foremen.

Q. Now, in connection with this analysis that you have made and which is now a part of the record, was that prepared based upon your personal experience as a division manager?

A. That was prepared from experiences I have had over a number of years dealing with foremen, the things I held them responsible for and the way we always operated, as far as I was concerned.

Q. And based upon your experience, if a general foreman or a foreman makes a recommendation, how is that considered by the superintendent or as in your case, the division manager, if it got up to you?

A. Well, almost invariably we went along with them unless we definitely could see something wrong with the recommendation and we told them why we did not agree with them.

Q. What might be some of the reasons you would not agree with the general foreman's recommendation?

A. Well, we might know that the expense of the recommendation was far greater than the saving to be made, over a period of time. We may have had advance information that a particular part was going to be 1480 obsoleted and that the cost of the change would be greater than the saving made over a few pieces.

Q. Furthermore, of course, you would have to bear in mind the operations of the entire division while the foreman would be interested in his department?

A. That is, his department, yes.

Q. Now, then, just to particularize a little more, take your position as division foreman—pardon me, division manager—and state what your duties and responsibilities were in that position.

A. My responsibilities were to see that all the general foremen were working under the same conditions and that they were treating their people alike and were working together in coordinating their efforts.

Q. And you were responsible of course, were you not, to get out production in the division?

A. Yes.

Q. You, of course, had to keep the costs down?

A. That is right.

Q. Would you say that you generally had to run that division as if it was more or less a separate shop and approximately the same as a man would if he had his business and conducted that business on the outside?

A. We ran the whole division just as though it was 1481 one big department, as far as I was concerned. Each individual foreman or general foreman was responsible for their individual department.

Q. And you in turn were responsible for the entire division?

A. That is right.

Q. If matters came up that you felt should be gone into by upper management, who did you contact?

A. Usually, if it would pertain to the body division we would call in the superintendent of the body division and his general foreman.

Q. That is where you were dealing with your own men?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, we will say that some matter came to you and you thought you would have to consult with higher authority in the Company, to whom would you go?

A. I would go to the vice-president of manufacturing.

Q. Did you frequently consult with your superintendents?

A. With my own superintendents?

Q. Yes, with your own superintendents?

A. I would say on the average of at least twice a week.

Q. While you were division manager were you on the floor of the plant very many times?

A. Many times.

Q. Did you ever consult with your general foreman?

1482 A. If they had a particular problem I did.

Q. And they could come to you with their problems?

A. Yes, they could.

Q. You preferred, I presume, their going through their particular superintendents first, however?

A. I asked the general foreman as a rule if I discussed anything with them, that they be sure and contact their superintendent and advise him of the decisions we reached, so that at all times he knew that we had arrived at a decision and he was not unfamiliar with it.

Q. In what sense, a broad sense, would you say that your duties and responsibilities as a division manager followed very closely or paralleled those the foreman had in his particular scope of authority?

A. I think we both had the same responsibilities. The only difference I would say, was that I had to worry over a division and he had a department. We had the same responsibilities to the management and to the workers. I had to see that he did do it.

Q. Mr. MacAuley, I presume at times the production in an automobile factory goes down?

A. That is right.

Q. Then you do not need as many men after your production has been reduced?

A. That is right.

1483 Q. And it might also mean that you would have to reduce the number of your supervisory employees?

A. That is right.

Q. Take an example of where production goes down and you will, let us say, do away with the night shift, that would mean that you would need less foremen in that particular department, would it not?

A. That is right.

Q. How do you select the foremen who are going to remain on the job?

A. We make a complete list of all the foremen we have, both day and night, and go over the list with the superintendent. It would refer to foremen and would take in the general foremen and superintendents and we would completely survey the list of day and night men. Between the general foreman and the superintendent and myself we would pick out what we consider our best men, from their production records, as to trouble with workers and their production ability, their general ability and overall ability.

Q. You say that if it was a question of which foreman you would keep on the job as a foreman, that that matter would be taken up with the superintendent and general foreman?

A. That is right.

1484 Q. And if it was a question of your having to reduce your force by not using as many general foremen, with whom would that matter be discussed?

A. I would discuss that with the superintendent. I felt after all it was his responsibility to run the job out there and I wanted him to have the men he felt best capable to do the job.

Q. Would you say that that was the general practice?

A. I think it is.

Q. I'm sorry.

A. I think it is. It is our job, after all—our jobs after all are no better than what the foremen do for us.

Q. My question was, do you think that that is the way this matter is taken care of in the Packard Company, generally?

A. I would say it has been; I haven't seen it otherwise.

Q. I think I said "Do you think." Is it to your knowledge, I should say, that this procedure is carried out in the other divisions in the same manner that you in your division worked out?

A. I discussed it with all of them and they said they were doing it the same way.

Q. You would say, in your opinion, it is a standard
1485 practice in the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. I don't see how it could be otherwise, Mr. Dahling.

Q. If you, as the head of this division, found it was necessary to transfer some of your foremen, we will say, what would you do with them? That is, you could not use them as foremen any longer because of the reduction in production and you had selected foremen whom you felt were better qualified than these others. What would you do with those men?

A. I would try to find them jobs some place else.

Q. You would transfer them to that job?

A. That is right.

Q. It might also be possible they would be transferred back to hourly rate workers, is it?

A. It is, yes.

Q. The foreman might be reduced to an assistant foreman, I assume?

A. He might be.

Q. It would be your assistant foreman who, in case of a reduction in production, would be transferred back to the rank and file, would it?

A. Usually that's the way we step it down, yes.

Q. Do you know, of your own knowledge, Mr. MacAuley, in your division did your superintendents 1486 ever have meetings with the general foremen?

A. Yes, sir, they did.

Q. In those meetings would the foremen sometimes be present?

A. Oh, yes. If there is a particular problem in that man's department, the foreman will always be there. On a general policy meeting, on general information or schedule or cutbacks, he would probably be called in by his general foreman only. Regarding a certain department, the foreman would be in there.

Q. That is the policy generally, throughout the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You feel that is essential if you are going to do a good job?

A. You have to, Mr. Dahling.

Q. Mr. MacAuley, if a foreman—we will take you back to your division again—if your division decided a man is incompetent and sends through a query asking that this man be cleared from the rolls, and, we will say, the steward agreed to that clearance, what would you as divisional manager do?

A. I would have nothing to do with it except to see that he was cleared.

1487 Q. In other words, you as the divisional manager, if the foreman felt a man was incompetent and requested his removal, would not stop the procedure?

A. No, sir. I have signed requests, Mr. Dahling, the foreman has made, but I did that merely so that I would be in constant touch with what went on in my division. In other words, it was impossible for me to be in the departments every day and I kept in touch by asking the foreman to let me sign what he sends out. That was also a protection to the foreman because I couldn't accuse him later on of doing something I didn't know anything about, because it was signed by me.

Q. You would say in your particular case if a foreman recommended a discharge of a man for incompetency, unless the Union stepped into the picture to have the trials and hearings, you would follow the recommendation of that foreman?

A. I would have to. If I didn't have confidence in my foreman, I wouldn't have him working for me.

Q. It is very important that you have foremen in whom you have confidence?

A. You have to have.

Q. You could not run a factory if the president did not have confidence in his vice-presidents, and so on down the line?

A. That is right.

1488 Q. So your feeling is that if these foremen found this particular man was not doing a good job, inasmuch as they were responsible for their end of the job, you should carry out their recommendations?

A. Definitely.

Q. Was that particularly true in peace times?

A. Sure.

Q. There was some testimony here that the man would be removed from the roll of the department but might be given a job in some other part of the plant. That happens, I suppose?

A. That happens. We find one man might get along with some foremen all right and in other cases he couldn't get along with another foreman at all. In a particular case, where a foreman would say on his query he didn't desire to have this man placed any place else in the plant, the Employment Department would not place that man in any other department.

Q. In some cases it would be just a clash of personalities, I suppose?

A. That is right.

Q. And the man might not in one department work out all right; whereas, he would work out all right in another department?

A. That is right.

1489 Mr. Dahling: Would it be possible to have a recess at this time, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will take a ten-minute recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The hearing is in order.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Macaulay, in comparing this analysis of the foreman's job, duty and responsibility, is there anything particularly new in that list?

A. No. That list was a list made up that I accumulated over the years, of different subjects we discussed in our foremen training schools, both at Packard's and General Motors. It is an accumulative list I maintained.

Q. And those are the duties and responsibilities that you have listed, which are the duties and responsibilities these foremen have had over the years?

A. That is right.

Q. Mr. Macaulay, there is some testimony in the record that after the Foreman's Association of America was formed, and had their Chapter 5 at Packard's and the president and vice-president of the Chapter were promoted, I believe the president's name was Lempke. Do you know anything about that promotion?

A. Yes. Mr. Lempke was promoted in the "D" Division and was under, at that time, a man by the name of 1490 Mr. Gates. Mr. Gates was eventually removed from that job and Mr. Lempke was next in line and was given his job. Then in our expansion program going from a 1400 program to a 2700 program, it was necessary to set up a separate division and expand our production. When the "C" Division was expanded Mr. Lempke was advanced to assistant divisional manager under Mr. Garvey.

Q. He was next in line for that particular job?

A. Yes, he was.

Q. Was he promoted because he happened to be president of the Foreman's Union?

A. Not a bit.

Q. The vice-president; I believe his name was Ruggles—that name has been furnished me by the Petitioner—was also promoted at about the same time, apparently, do you know anything about that promotion?

A. Yes, that was a similar case of expansion. We put in a second tear-down and build-up line in the motor room in the "K" Division and Mr. Ruggles was next in line for that job.

Q. Would you say those promotions were based upon ability and experience?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. Did they have anything to do with the fact that these two gentlemen had happened to be president and 1491 vice-president of the Foreman's Union?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. Now, the name of Mr. Hunt was also mentioned in the testimony as having been one of the officers of the old Local 918. Is Mr. Hunt still with the Company?

A. Yes, he is.

Q. Do you know his employment history?

A. Yes, Mr. Hunt used to work for me.

Q. What happened to Mr. Hunt?

A. Well, when we discontinued car production Mr. Hunt was on the trim line at that time. Of course, there is no trim work in the war work. Mr. Weiss called me one day and said he had a number of foremen both in the paint and trim and asked me whether I could use them. I took Mr. Hunt and put him on plant layout work.

Q. Is he still in that job at the present time?

A. Yes, he is.

Q. How does his present pay compare with what he received on his old job?

A. I would say he is getting some $50.00 more now than he did as a foreman, per month, base pay.

Q. There is also testimony in the record by Mr. Beyerley who was a spot welder, apparently, on bodies. Did you make any change in connection with your manufacture of bodies along in '40, or '41?

1492 A. Well, that was the time that we decided to buy a portion of our bodies. In other words, we formerly made all our bodies and it was decided that we would let out one of the models to the Briggs Company. We bought one of the models—

Q. And that meant you reduced your force working on the bodies?

A. The force was reduced.

Q. The force was reduced?

A. Yes.

Q. In connection with your supervision, that meant that you likewise reduced your supervision?

A. That is right.

Q. And you kept in supervision the men you thought best qualified?

A. Yes.

Q. And the others—some of them were transferred to the rank and file?

A. Yes.

Q. And they accepted those jobs, did they not?

A. Right.

Mr. Dahling: You may cross-examine.

Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Mr. MacAuley, how long have you been at the Packard Motor Car Company?

1493 A. Slightly over ten years.

Q. In those ten years have there been and are they now any printed rules or statements of a foreman's responsibilities and duties?

A. In printed form?

Q. Yes.

A. No, sir.

Q. So that all that a foreman knows about it is his own sense of his position and what is said to him orally?

A. Only what he has covered in the school sessions we have held.

Q. Still it takes five printed pages for you to list your conception of what a foreman's duties and responsibilities are?

A. Those are discussed with him, Mr. Nelson, as the job goes on. He discusses those with the superintendent, the general foreman and the foreman. He has to have those in order to function.

Q. You are a university man, aren't you?

A. Yes.

Q. With an engineering degree?

A. Yes.

Q. There are not very many college men in the foremen's list at Packard, are there?

A. Why, I don't know any offhand, Mr. Nelson.

1494 Q. Many of them, as we note from the testimony, quit school at about the eighth grade?

A. No, that is not right.

Q. Some of them had some high school?

A. One or two years of high school and then perhaps the university.

Q. Is it true that the management group at Packard's above superintendents receive a yearly bonus?

A. Yes, they do, when there is a bonus available.

Q. I am assuming a bonus is paid.

A. To the best of my knowledge, yes, sir.

Q. Those below the rank of superintendents do not receive bonuses ordinarily?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. The knowledge that a part is to be declared obsolete or to be obsoleted, as you said, is that knowledge not always conveyed down the line? Or, as a matter of fact, it is only infrequently conveyed down the line, is it not, that is, as far down as the general foreman?

A. I don't quite understand the question, Mr. Nelson. If it has been decided to obsolete that particular part, the Engineering Department will issue an alteration or change notice which the foreman gets a copy of. If there is a change on something that is considered confidential information, before the release issued, and if it is to 1495 affect a particular foreman, usually in deciding the design of the new piece the foreman is usually called in to offer his suggestions on the manufacture of that part.

Q. That is not what I am talking about. I am talking about the notifying of a man down the line. We will assume it is originated in the Engineering Department some place, say a model is to be changed or the part or the manufacture of the current model is to be changed. That would originate presumably in the Engineering Department?

A. Engineers design the part and issue the release.

Q. Well, is it not true that men are inclined to be a little less exacting of themselves and others if they know they are operating on something that is just about to be passe?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. But is there not a little tendency to be so?

A. To be careless about it?

Q. Yes, the parts not being continued, sort of like a dead horse?

A. He might make the parts just as well, but he may not want to make any more changes in his tooling.

Q. Is if not true this knowledge comes to the general foreman only shortly prior to the actual making of the change?

1496 A. No, because he had to assign the routing for the new part.

Q. As a matter of fact, does a foreman of any grade have anything to do with the kind of a car that is to be manufactured?

A. The kind of a car?

Q. Yes.

A. No, only in the manufacture of the parts, as far as his suggestions are concerned.

Q. But he is only offering suggestions for the manufacturing of a part for a certain kind of a car that somebody else has determined to make?

A. That is right.

Q. His whole capacity is to get out that part, we will say, at best, as well as he knows how and as cheaply as he knows how?

A. That is right.

Q. The same applies to tools, does it not?

A. (No response.)

Q. If he wants a tool to get out a part for a car that somebody else has determined?

A. What he does on tools, a process man recommends a group of tools to perform a particular operation. The foreman will concur with the process man and agree that that is the tool best adapted for that operation and 1497 then he has the privilege later on of running a test if it is not satisfactory.

Q. Outside of James Wilkins, do you know of any foreman of any grade who was consulted about the layout of any department in which he works?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Who is it?

A. Mr. Kohlhal was one.

Q. What grade of foreman is he?

A. The last I knew of him, he was a general foreman.

Q. In what department?

A. Conn. rod.

Q. What did they do in his department?

A. Manufacture the connecting rod for the Rolls Royce engine.

Q. How long did that conference last?

A. In the layout?

Q. With Mr. Kohlhal, how long did the conferring on the layout of his department last?

A. About a week.

Q. You mean he gave an entire week to it?

A. He gave us about five hours a day for a week.

Q. Mr. Wilkins testified he spent some five minutes on it?

1498 A. I don't know when Mr. Wilkins saw that layout; I wasn't there.

Q. What other foreman, now, besides Mr. Kohfhal?

A. Mr. Massuch.

Q. In what department does he work?

A. He is foreman of the Polishing Department.

Q. How much of his time was taken in consulting about the layout?

A. He spent about three days of about four hours apiece with us.

Q. Any other foreman you recall, of any grade, who was consulted?

A. I can't tell you of the foremen, but Mr. Breske, of the "U" Division, has spent time with us.

Q. What department was that?

A. The U. D. A.

Q. What do they do there?

A. Miscellaneous machining operations on small parts.

Q. How much time did he spend?

A. He spent around three days, about three hours apiece.

Q. Are there any others you can recall?

A. I can't recall all the foremen, but I don't recall any layout that has not been approved and worked on 1499 by foremen.

Mr. Nelson: Do you have Exhibit 29 convenient, Mr. Dahling?

Mr. Dahling: Yes, here it is (indicating).

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Now, it is noticeable here that on Exhibit 29, I believe the foremen signed on just one sheet?

A. That is right.

Q. I take it you mean to imply that these sheets are bound together in this manner when they go to the foremen?

A. That is right.

Q. Let us not spend a lot of time with this, but this amounts to a written order to the foremen, does it not, Exhibit 29?

A. That amounts to this, the process man recommended that method of making the part.

Q. And the foreman is expected to carry out that method?

A. The foreman agrees he can do it that way and recommends we make it that way.

Q. Suppose he refuses and says no?

A. Then a meeting is called between he and his divisional manager, the process man and the master mechanic, all four of them will sit down and discuss it.

Q. Well, suppose he still says no?

A. Well, he will have to have a good reason for saying no.

1500

Q. He may have what seems to him to be a good reason?

A. If his divisional manager backs him up, then the master mechanic will have to make a change there.

Q. Suppose the divisional manager does not back him up?

A. In that case there is three against one.

Q. And the majority, I suppose, rules?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So he either has to do it or get out?

A. That is right, he has to have a good reason, though.

Q. Who is the judge of what is a good reason? Somebody besides the foreman, is it not?

A. Well, if three other people believe he is wrong, I don't think a foreman would stick very long on that.

Q. He would not stick at all; he would have to step aside?

A. He would have to step aside or do it.

Q. So measuring his practical experience against the abstract theories of other men who are not at the machine, if three of them go against him, he steps away?

A. Those three men have the equivalent of more experience than he.

Q. But he is one of the four who at that particular time is in contact with the men, machines and material, is he not?

1501 A. Those three men have the equivalent or more experience than he.

Q. But he is one of the four who at that particular time is in contact with the men, machines and material, is he not?

A. That is right.

Q. This paper comes to him with all of the other signatures on it, does it not, Exhibit 29?

A. No, he signs it before the divisional manager signs it.

Q. That is brought to him with everything on it except the signatures?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he is asked to look it over and sign it?

A. That is right.

Q. Ordinarily he does so, doesn't he?

A. Almost invariably he does, unless there is some particular operation he disagrees with.

Q. Then it is signed and sent back to him and he is expected to produce according to that layout?

A. That is right.

Mr. Nelson: May I have Exhibits 35 to 41, please?

Mr. Dahling: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): With respect to Exhibits 35 to 41, both inclusive, the first page appears to be a type-1502 written page in each case?

A. Yes.

Q. And apparently is made up somewhere besides in the Foreman's office?

A. That is right.

Q. It is a standard form sheet, apparently?

A. Yes.

Q. So, the foreman has no responsibility for what appears on the first page?

A. That is a copy of the sheet in longhand—of the last sheet, which is in longhand. The typed sheet is a copy of the penciled sheet.

Q. We are just taking Exhibit 39. Taking this basic sheet here which is the bottom sheet, the discussion appears to be in two handwritings, doesn't it, neither one of which appears to be in the handwriting of the foreman?

A. I would say the top part is in the handwriting of the foreman, Mr. Nelson, as near as I can tell.

Q. You couldn't be very sure of that, could you?

A. No, I am not a handwriting expert. I don't know for sure.

Q. What I am getting at is as I look these over—will you tell me whether that discussion in any of these Exhibits 35 to 41, is in the handwriting of the foreman
1503 whose name appears, as you would say? You have passed on Exhibit 39.

A. Well, I would say this one is definitely in the handwriting of the foreman.

Q. That is Exhibit 37, you say that is in the handwriting of Nass?

A. That is in Charlie Nass' handwriting.

Q. I suggest that it is not, if you want my opinion on it. I will hand it to the Examiner for examination.

A. This one I do not know whether it is in Mr. Rogers' handwriting and signature or not.

Q. Exhibit 38, you would not say that that was William Rogers' handwriting?

A. I couldn't say for sure.

Q. The second part certainly is not?

A. That is true?

Q. It is not?

A. Yes.

Q. On Exhibit 38 the original remarks are erased for some reason and there is writing over it. It was not satisfactory and there has been an erasure on the whole line, hasn't there?

A. I wouldn't say that for sure, that looks like ditto ink underneath there. It is just the same as that 1504 was (indicating), and not erased.

Q. Wasn't it?

A. No.

Q. There is a good deal of erasure on that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you say it is ditto ink?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean that much? (indicating).

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): That smudge of carbon is a smudge instead of an erasure? Well, then, you would not say that the second part is in Mr. Rogers' handwriting?

A. That is clearly Mr. Bellamy's handwriting.

Q. The supervisor of materials specialist department?

A. Yes.

Q. The first part you cannot say is in Mr. Rogers' handwriting, either, can you? "Not satisfactory," beginning there?

A. I am not sure, but it looks to me as though it is.

Q. Coming back to Exhibit 39 for a moment, can we not agree that the bottom three lines and remarks are in Mr. Bellamy's handwriting again?

A. Yes.

Q. Clearly so?

A. Yes.

1505 Q. And the remarks above, would you say that is in the handwriting of Otto Beverley?

A. I would say so.

Q. I will pass it to the Examiner for him to determine. Now you have which one?

A. Forty.

Q. Exhibit 40?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I might say while you are examining 40, Mr. Nelson, so far as Company's Exhibit 38 is concerned, with particular reference to the part which might possibly have been erased or smudged, I would say at the moment that it is a smudge.

Mr. Nelson: I am inclined to think so, now in holding it up to the light. It is a smudge of purple carbon.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Let me ask you pointblank, Mr. MacAuley, what is this man's name?

A. Nathan B. Fuller?

Q. Yes. What test was conducted by Mr. Fuller?

A. He is a foreman in the department.

Q. Isn't that remark there Mr. Fuller's handwriting?

A. I think they are Fuller's or Guy's. Mr. Fuller is a department foreman.

1506 Q. He is a department foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Isn't Mr. Bellamy's handwriting there?

A. No.

Q. How about that one?

A. Daschke? I would say it was his handwriting.

Q. You cannot make up your mind between Fuller and Guy?

A. No.

Q. Well, I will pass that to the Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: When you use the words "department foreman," what does that mean?

The Witness: He is the foreman in charge of a department.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Does that mean general foreman?

The Witness: Not in these cases, no, a general foreman is usually over a series of departments.

Mr. Nelson: More than one?

The Witness: That is right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): And that has been the testimony here that in some cases it is as low as two and in some cases as high as three and four and five?

A. That's right.

Q. Let's take Exhibit 41.

A. I would say that was written by Mr. Bede.

1507 Q. Is that his signature?

A. That is his signature.

Q. Now, Exhibit 36, who is Jederhaus? Well, on Exhibit 36 is that the handwriting of Mr. Bellamy?

A. I would not say it was Bellamy's signature.

Q. You would not say it is not, would you?

A. No, I am not sure.

Q. I didn't ask you to be sure. Isn't that Mr. Bellamy's handwriting?

A. This up here?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know, I don't think it is.

Q. I am passing it to the Examiner. On Exhibit 35 whose handwriting are in "Remarks" there (indicating)?

A. In that particular case the handwriting is the handwriting of C. Winfield.

Q. Who is he?

A. He was the process man. It is approved by Edward Regul.

Q. Is C. Winfield—is that his signature or somebody else's writing?

A. That is his signature.

Q. The process man?

A. Yes.

1508 Q. We will pass that to the Examiner also. A moment ago you said something about a foreman sending a query through to the effect that he wanted a certain working man discharged and that word "discharge" ordinarily would mean discharged from the plant?

A. No, sir, discharged from his department.

Q. "Discharged" would mean only discharged from his department?

A. That is right.

Q. Well, let's suppose a case. Take a woman employee who has been tried in various departments and found unsatisfactory in all of them, not being willing to work, in general. Without going into all the reasons—the foreman finally says to her, "Now, Mamie, you just do not show a disposition to work and haven't done a day's work in the factory, and I am discharging you." Whereupon the woman slaps the foreman's face. The foreman then puts through a request for a discharge. What would you say, in the normal course of events, tested by what you say a foreman has power to do, should result?

Mr. Donovan: Is the question addressed to what the witness should do or what?

Mr. Nelson: What he thinks should be done under the rules laid down.

Mr. Donovan: By whom?

Mr. Nelson: By the Company.

1509 The Witness: In that case the foreman would send a query through notifying the Employment Department of all the facts in the case and in that particular case if she was tried in various departments before and had proven unsatisfactory in his department and had slapped his face, the Employment Department would see that she was thrown out of the plant.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Entirely?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, she wasn't and that is recent and the foreman involved is Robert Turnbull.

A. There might be cases and other reasons for it that I do not know about.

Q. Well, there would in any event be two counts against that woman, wouldn't there? One, she hadn't shown a disposition to work, presumably on the facts I stated. In any event, she had shown an affirmative disposition not to work, and the other reason is that she was unruly and violent in her attitude towards supervision?

A. In my opinion she should be fired. I don't know the other points in the case.

Q. But those two characteristics stand out on that experience?

A. As far as I am concerned, definitely.

1510 Q. She should go?

A. Yes.

Q. If your rule or rules are applicable correctly, she would have been discharged from the employ of the company?

A. Yes.

Q. By the way, while we are on the subject and without arguing the matter, that puts a foreman, with a woman who takes that kind of an attitude towards a statement concerning her work in the plant—that puts a foreman in a pretty bad spot, and a dangerous spot, is that true?

A. Yes.

Q. Because if she was untruthful as well as lazy and violent, she might have charged him with something else and put him in a dickens of a position, to put it very mildly?

A. Yes.

Q. If the foreman is to have any protection in the exercise of his authority that he is supposed to have, that would be a shining case to apply it?

A. He should see that she is taken out of his department, especially where she has been tried before, unless they have some other reason for it—to see that she was discharged.

Q. In any event, the woman's name was Mamie.

Mr. Dahling: What was the name of the woman?

1511 Mr. Nelson: Mamie. Do you want it on the record? If you do we will give it to you on the record. Perhaps you would want to have it in private.

Mr. Donovan: When did this occur?

Mr. Nelson: About six months ago.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Now, perhaps we can take another example. Take a CIO steward who had been more than once found sleeping in the toilet. That is more or less common—that is a common occurrence—that is nothing unusual, is that?

A. It has happened before.

Q. And he repeated it to the point where he was discharged by the foreman. There was a query sent in recommending his discharge. Now, by the rules you have stated here, should the foreman have been retained?

A. Why, I don't know all the other facts in the case, Mr. Nelson.

Q. I gave you the facts. You have to take them as I gave them to you. If the facts are wrong my question falls flat and it will be my fault.

Mr. Donovan: I object to the questioner not giving the witness sufficient facts. Foremen witnesses have testified that foremen sometimes desire a man taken out of the plant and that owing to the influence of the CIO after he was discharged and gotten out of the plant he 1512 might come right back again. Mr. Nelson has stated the facts incompletely and the witness does not know whether there were special circumstances or occasion for special pressure or solicitation on the part of some CIO official or steward, on behalf of the particular employee. Without such basis the witness could only speculate. He evidently did not sit in on the appeal, if there was one, in consideration of the particular discharge that he is being questioned about. He would be unable to answer the question as put. Insufficient facts have been given him.

Mr. Nelson: Let me restate the question to save time. That is Mr. Donovan's first effort in the New Year and it is successful. I will change the question.

1513 Q. Now, what about repeated—just say anybody—repeated offenses, by way of going into the toilet to sleep? Might they be carried to the extent where a man would be put out of the employ of the Company?

A. That is right.

Q. It would make no difference whether he was a CIO steward or otherwise?

A. I wouldn't think so.

Q. Let us take the offense of gambling. That, of course, involves cooperating with some other employee. If a man has sort of a leadership in that regard, it could be very decidedly disruptive, could it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Repeated offenses in that connection, no matter who it is, would you not say would justify a foreman in recommending discharge?

A. I would.

Q. In either of those events, if you take the case I just gave you, without taking anything else into consideration, he should be suspended?

A. That is right.

Q. And if he was not, his authority was undermined by somebody else, that is, the Foreman's?

A. To my knowledge, the other facts are given to the foreman why he isn't discharged.

1514 Q. We will say matters like some superintendents would not be a good justification?

A. No.

Q. While we are at this, let us take this subject of a discharge from the Company. Now, what happens to an employee who is complained of? He becomes known, that is, the facts of the complaint become known throughout the plant, do they not?

A. That is right.

Q. And particularly the department where he and his foreman are involved?

A. That is right.

Q. It becomes a direct challenge to the authority and prestige of the foreman, does it not?

A. Yes.

Q. When he commits himself on a query of that kind?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it does make a difference whether the man is merely transferred to some other department or whether he is discharged out of the plant and out of the employ of the Company?

A. That is right.

Q. It makes a difference to the foreman and it makes a difference in what the other employees under that foreman's direction thinks of the foreman, does it not?

1515 A. It does.

Q. It challenges his judgment and his prestige, does it not?

A. That is right.

Q. So that it is not just an empty matter whether he goes out of the employ or not; it is a substantial matter of discipline, is it not?

A. Well, as I said, Mr. Nelson, he might be a man that will get along with one foreman and not get along with another; we have had cases of that type.

Q. If he persists in gambling under one foreman, he is likely to continue under another, is he not?

A. That is right.

Q. Because the personality of the foreman does not enter into whether that man goes into the toilet and sleeps habitually or whether he goes in there and gambles habitually?

A. Only to the extent if he is lacking in supervision, to see that the men are kept on the job.

Q. It is possible the capacity of the foreman might enter into it, but generally, it is the characteristic of the man that shines out, is it not?

A. Usually it is.

Q. I will admit there is an exception to anything.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It might also be the luxury

1516 of the rest room?

Mr. Nelson: It might be, but not at Packard's.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Well, are they usually luxurious there?

A. Usually they are not too bad, Mr. Nelson.

Q. I did not mean to impute any lack of care. What was the office of Mr. Hunt in Local 918?

A. I don't know that he held any office, except that he told me one time that he was an officer of 918.

Q. Well, we have a situation like this, at the disbanding of Local 918 the end result is that Mr. Hunt is advanced in position, and on the organization of the Foreman's Association, Chapter 5, the President and the Vice-Presidents are advanced in position and income. That is correct, is it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As I understood you to say, these men had served some time in the Packard Plant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Hunt for how long would you say?

A. I think Mr. Hunt came in about 1936, around about that time.

Q. So he had been there four or five years, in round figures?

A. Well, it was around six years.

1517 Q. Six years; and Mr. Ruggles has been there how long?

A. About the same time.

Q. Six years, approximately?

A. Mr. Ruggles came, I think, in about 1935 or 1936; I am not sure.

Q. And Mr. Lempke came to work for the Company about when?

A. I am not sure when he did come.

Q. He had been there as long as or longer than the other two?

A. My impression is about the same time; I am not sure.

Q. You would not want to say that it was ten years?

A. I do not know, Mr. Nelson.

Q. At any rate, the Company had quite a little while to inform itself on the characteristics and capabilities of each of these men, had it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I suppose the fact that they occupied these positions of trust and confidence in the minds of their fellow foremen had nothing to do with the Company finding out suddenly, so to speak, that they were due for promotion?

Mr. Dahling: I object to that. There is no testimony in the record it was found out suddenly.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Sustained.

Mr. Nelson: I am asking him if he did not find out all of a sudden.

1518 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Your question assumes something there.

Mr. Nelson: That is right. I am cross-examining this witness: I am not taking advantage of him; I am putting it fairly to him, Mr. Examiner, that all of a sudden these three men were due for advancement.

Mr. Karasick: I would like to object to this line of questioning on the ground that there is not issue here with respect to unfair labor practices on the part of the Company involved and there is no question as to the improper promotion of foremen or members of any labor organizations, and I think it is an issue which is extraneous to this proceeding.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: For one thing, Mr. Karasick, it came in; counsel for the Company countered it with evidence. I suppose we might as well finish it. In any event, I think the question assumes a fact not in evidence and the mere fact that it is done in cross-examination, in my opinion, does not cure it. I have sustained the objection.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) How do you determine who is next in line?

A. Usually if we are going to advance a man to a superintendent's office, usually we pick him from the general foremen group; if we are going to advance a foreman to a general foreman, we advance him from the Fore-

1519 man's group; we advance general foremen to superintendents.

Q. Now, when you say "we," who is "we"?

A. The divisional manager in charge of a particular division.

Q. But you had to take Hunt into another division?

A. That is right, he was out of a job entirely.

Q. What?

A. In the case of Mr. Hunt, he was out of a job entirely. His department had been discontinued.

Q. So your divisional foreman there could do nothing for him and he had to call his name to the attention of some other division, did he not?

A. He was called to my attention through the employment department.

Q. When you say who is next in line, you mean the divisional foreman decides who is next in line; do you not?

A. The division manager, you mean?

Q. Or the division manager, yes.

A. You said division foreman.

Q. I am sorry, it should have been division manager.

A. When they are advanced to a superintendent it is usually at the discretion of the divisional manager. In advancing assistant foremen to foremen, we follow the recommendation of the general foreman.

Q. Well, was the general foreman consulted as to 1520 who was next in line?

A. At what time, Mr. Nelson?

Q. As to Mr. Hunt, Mr. Ruggles or Mr. Lempke?

A. Mr. Ruggles went from general foreman to superintendent and Mr. Lempke went from general foreman to superintendent and then to divisional manager and Mr. Hunt was out of a job entirely and went on plant layout work as a Grade C layout man.

Q. Let me put it to you this way: As a matter of fact, none of the other supervisors who may have felt that they had more seniority and ability were the next in line were consulted about any of these three promotions, were they?

A. Not in those particular cases, no.

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

Mr. Karasick: Mr. Examiner, at this point I would like to move to strike all of the testimony in the record with respect to promotions of the individual the witness has just testified to, both on direct examination and cross-examination.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It may stay.

Mr. Karasick: Are you finished, Mr. Nelson?

Mr. Nelson: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) Mr. MacAuley, I hand you Company's Exhibit 35 and call your attention to the fact that there a number of names listed at the left-hand corner, top, of that exhibit after each name, and appearing also the designation of a department.

1521

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Taking Exhibit 35, beginning with the first name, that of Mr. Bellamy, will you identify who Mr. Bellamy is?

A. Mr. Bellamy is in charge of the department which issues these tests and specifications covering the results of the tests.

Q. Is a supervisor of the material specification department?

A. That is correct.

Q. These names in the upper left-hand corner of Exhibit 35 mean what. Why are they placed on there?

A. Copies of this test report are forwarded to these people.

Q. Will you identify Mr. Ralston?

A. Mr. Ralston is in charge of purchasing of tools and non-productive supplies in the car division.

Q. And Mr. Kierstead?

A. Mr. Kierstead is foreman of the tool storage division which supplies the shop with the necessary tools.

Q. Mr. Leonard?

A. Mr. Leonard is a foreman or a supervisor in charge of material tests in the aircraft division. His job is similar to Mr. Bellamy's.

1522

Q. You say he is a supervisor?

A. Yes, sir, the same as Mr. Bellamy. Mr. Bellamy is in the car division; Mr. Leonard is in the aircraft division. He is informing Mr. Leonard of the test so we won't duplicate the test in the two divisions.

Q. All right; Mr. Winfield is a general foreman?

A. No, Winfield is in charge of process of that particular department in which this test was involved UDC; and that is notifying Mr. Winfield that the test has been made, so the necessary changes can be made on the process routing.

Q. Then after that appears the word "foreman, YDC" and under that "superintendent, Y". That means the foreman and superintendent of those respective departments have also received copies of this document?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With minor changes as to any of these, that is true, with respect to Company's Exhibits 36 to 41, inclusive?

A. That is right.

Q. I believe you testified, Mr. MacAuley, that if a foreman experienced difficulty with a particular tool or material, he could contact the inspection or process department without consulting any superior of his and have the trouble looked out for?

A. That is right, yes, sir.

Q. Now, could a foreman on contacting the process
1523 department say to them, "This tool is no good, take it out of here"? Would that be done without the approval of any superior of his?

A. That is done if he works with the process man and convinces the process man that the tool is no good. In other words, when that tool is on the job, it means we have already purchased a number of the same tools and it is a check to be sure that there is no way of altering that tool before we discard it entirely.

Q. You mean, he and the process man could get together and decide a tool should be changed?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That would require the approval of the process man, as far as the foreman is concerned?

A. That is right, and that is later approved by the process department foreman. He approves all routings eventually.

Q. After the immediate process man has approved it, together with the agreement of the foreman?

A. Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You say he approves them eventually. You mean he has the power to?

The Witness: He has the power to, yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) Now, if a foreman—and again when I speak of foreman, I speak of the term generally—all grades of foremen recommend the discharge of 1524 a particular employee from the Company, as a whole, rather than from his particular department, who has the final word as to whether that employee is discharged entirely or sent to another department to work?

A. You mean by that, there has been no recommendation filed by the Union or anybody else protecting this man?

Q. Well, let us assume, first, that case where no recommendation has been made. Then what happens?

A. As to whether he is transferred is left in the hands of the employment department. But, as I said before, if the department foreman will write on his memorandum to the employment department that he recommends this man not be rehired in any other department, invariably that recommendation is taken and the man is discharged from the Company.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What do you mean by "invariably" in that connection?

The Witness: There have been cases when it has slipped through the employment department and the employment department has not followed it through and kept the man out of the plant. I don't want to say it is one hundred percent. Cases have gotten away from us.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) Let us take the mechanics of such a recommendation made by the foreman. The foreman sends a slip to the employment department?

A. Yes, sir.

1525 Q. Does the employee report to the employment department?

A. He clears through there, yes, sir, through the tool crib and the time department.

Q. When he goes to the employment department, is the foreman present?

A. No.

Q. So the employee tells the situation to the employment department and the foreman is not there?

A. No, sir.

Q. It is possible, is it not, that the employee can point out things to the employment department which can convince that department that he could have a transfer to another department rather than to be discharged outright?

A. If the memorandum calls that he be discharged outright and the employee convinces the employment department the foreman is wrong, the employment department will still contact the original foreman and get additional facts on the case.

Q. Then the final word comes from the employment department, is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They might disagree with the foreman?

A. They might, but I don't know of any cases like that.

Q. You spoke of several foremen who had approved changes in their department with respect to the 1526 physical layout. Do you recall that testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did those foremen in each instance recommend a change in the department or have the recommendations come from someone else?

A. No, we make a preliminary layout in the layout department, then we ask the foreman to come over and criticize the layout with us.

Q. You are talking in general. I want to know about these specific cases you spoke of.

A. Oh, in those cases the recommendation came from the foreman.

Q. I see. They had to get the approval of his superiors—that is, the foreman had to get the approval of his superior, did he not?

A. Yes.

Q. Again, the ultimate word, if there was disagreement, would be that the change should not be made if the foreman so recommended and the superior disagreed, is that right?

A. That is right; it depends on the expense a little too.

Q. I am not sure whether this has been covered or not, Mr. MacAuley, but with respect to Company's Exhibit 29, the second page, bottom right-hand corner, there is the signature of the department foreman whose name is Beyer.

A. Yes.

1527 Q. Before his name appears some initials. What are those initials and whose are they?

A. I don't know whose initials those are. I can't make them out at all.

Q. You do not know whose initials those would be?

A. No, I don't.

Q. I hand you Company's Exhibit 41—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) May I suggest the name Benoit as a possible solution?

The Witness: No, there is a K on the end of it, Mr. Nelson.

Mr. Nelson: I see. Well, he signs with sort of a T, though.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) I hand you Company's Exhibit 41, at the bottom of the page in the right-hand corner and the second line there appears to be the same type of initials as also appear in Company's Exhibit 39?

A. Yes.

Q. Would that recall to your memory whose initials those are?

A. It looks here as though it is a divisional process and I think it probably is in this case, in number 39, because in this case the request for the trial came through the purchasing department. In other words, it was due to a War Production Order here that we were forced to 1528 discontinue the use of shellac. In the first place, the first place he would get that would be through the purchasing department.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) Then the divisional process?

A. In this particular case the divisional process man requested the test in conjunction with the department foreman, who agreed to make the test.

Q. I see.

Mr. Karasick: No further questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of this witness?

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. MacAuley, you are not a handwriting expert, are you?

A. No, I am not.

Q. When you testified as to the handwriting on Exhibits 35 to 41, inclusive, Company Exhibits, you were making a guess and giving your best interpretation?

A. I was giving my best judgment.

Q. But the sheets on which the handwriting appear, I believe you testified, were actually signed by a foreman?

A. Yes, a foreman has signed those sheets in the lower left-hand corner.

Q. I refer you now to Company's Exhibit 35, the second sheet.

A. On the second sheet it is signed by the foreman
1529 in the right-hand corner, on the results of the tests.

Q. That is the last sheet of exhibit, Company's Exhibit 35?

A. Yes, it is signed by the foreman in the lower left-hand corner.

Q. And in each of these cases, I am referring you now to Company's Exhibits 35 to 41, inclusive—I ask you if the last sheet, the report of the trial tests, appears to have been signed in each instance by a foreman?

A. Yes, those have been signed by the foreman.

Q. In connection with discharges by the foreman, the steward, of course, can ask for a hearing under the procedure set forth in the contract with the UAW?

A. That is right.

Q. And if the chief steward makes no such request, the employee concerned can ask the district steward to help him out?

A. He can ask the district steward or maybe the plant committee.

Q. Where a request is made for a hearing, then these hearings are held, as has been testified to before in this case?

A. That is right.

Q. At times, the foreman's penalty of discharge may not be carried out. Is that true?

A. That is right.

1530 Q. In other words, the plant committee and the industrial relations officer of the Company may feel that the foreman's penalty is too severe or possibly not based upon fact?

A. That is right. We have certain cases where the precedent has been set up before by some foreman who is not following through with his duty and we get those thrown at us. "Why penalize a man in one case and not penalize him in another?"

Q. And that was the reason for putting through a list of established penalties for certain offenses?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you would have uniformity?

A. That is right.

Q. Mr. MacAuley, do you recall where a foreman ever had to step out of a job and quit because he did not follow the routing sheet?

A. Never, not to my experience.

Mr. Dahling: That is all.

Mr. Nelson: No further questions.

Mr. Karasick: No further questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee) Mr. MacAuley, reading into the record your analysis of the foreman's job, 1531 you have divided it mainly into these divisions, have you not? His responsibility to Management, his responsibility to the workers, his responsibility for material and equipment and, finally, his responsibility to himself?

A. That is right.

Q. Then under that you have various headings and subheadings?

A. That is right.

Q. Thus, for instance, in connection with the first main division, that is to say, his responsibility to Management, you have such things as his responsibility for production, responsibility to maintain quality, to control costs, to make records and so on?

A. That is right.

Q. And then in connection with the next main divjsion, which is that of his responsibility to the workers, you have such items as responsibility to maintain discipline, secure cooperation and maintain cleanliness and to see that proper recommendations are made as to promotions and transfers and so on?

A. That is right.

Q. In connection with the responsibility for material and equipment, you have such items as the handling of such personal property and their maintenance?

A. That is right.

1532 Q. Now, in connection with all of these things—of course, I have only mentioned some of them—is it or is it not true that because of the very nature of the mass production industry it is necessary for higher Management to set down, in as much detail as possible, its plans and instructions leading from the top and going down to the bottom, in order to maintain a constant control and check?

A. That is right.

Q. Of course, that constant control and check, I assume—and if I am wrong, you can correct me—applies primarily to the production process?

A. If I understand the question right, Mr. Examiner, it is necessary that we know at all times in production just where we stand all the way from the foreman right up to the division manager and including the factory manager. He must know by the hour what the production is and the rate of production.

Q. Essentially, when you come right down to it, would you say that the foreman—I am using the word broadly—the foreman's job principally is to see that the material which comes into his department leaves the department with dispatch and with the work of that particular department done upon it?

A. That is right, it is strictly his responsibility.

1533 Q. Would it be fair to say that he is somewhat the traffic cop, so to speak, so that subject to traffic rules, already set, he sees that the traffic moves through his department and to the next stop or department in line.

A. I would even go stronger than that and I would say he is the manager of his own department. He manages the people and sees that he has the material and tools and if he hasn't got them, he sees the services or servicing division that we have established for mass production, which include material handling and tool division and tool stores and tool cribs and maintenance departments and planning engineering. All these services are available for him when he needs them.

Q. If I have understood one of your previous answers, it is the main job of the foreman to see that what comes into his department, the personal property that comes into his department—a part or the engine in its semi-finished state—comes through with dispatch and that the work done in that particular department is done upon it and that then that particular part or assembly or semi-finished article leaves that department and goes to the next department?

A. That is right.

Q. Of course, various men work on that part or semi-finished article in the process?

A. They all perform operations on it, yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions?

1534 Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) In your analysis of the foreman's job you used certain headings which have been referred to by the Examiner and one of the headings is "Responsibility to the Workers," to fit the worker to the job and to instruct the worker. That, of course, would be one of the duties of the foreman to perform for the benefit of Management also, would it not?

A. Oh, yes, Management benefits by it because unless the foreman produces, the whole plant suffers.

Q. And you also use the heading "Responsibility to Workers," to maintain discipline and that same responsibility is to the Company also, is it not?

A. Certainly.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Dahling, I would assume, as a matter of fact, that all of these things are actually inter-related anyway. They are broken down just as a matter of convenience.

Mr. Dahling: That is the question I was going to ask.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) You merely use the headings as a matter of convenience?

A. I put it there that way because unless he got the cooperation and help of the workers, he isn't going to get along any more than Management would get along unless he works with us all the time.

1535 Q. And it is his responsibility and duty to so conduct himself and the departments to get the production out of the men and lead them in properly doing their job?

A. That is right.

Q. And it is a responsibility to himself, which is of the same character, is it not?

A. Very similar.

Q. He has to see that he leads instead of drives. You have to have leaders in this business?

A. You cannot drive anyway.

Q. Coming to the question again of mass production, in mass production, it is necessary, of course, is it not, that, we will say, the assistant foreman—let me put it this way: The people in charge going down the line must rely on and have confidence in the people below them?

A. In mass production?

Q. Isn't that true?

A. Definitely.

Q. In other words, the division manager cannot possibly watch over every operation that goes on?

A. No.

Q. And he must have confidence in his superintendent below him?

A. Certainly.

1536 Q. And the superintendent, while he supervises perhaps a number of departments, cannot watch every operation and see everything that is going on?

A. He cannot.

Q. And he therefore must have confidence in the general foreman below him?

A. That is right.

Q. And the same applies to general foremen, does it not?

A. Yes.

Q. You must therefore have this confidence all down the line from the president down to the assistant foreman—in other words, those above must have confidence in those below them?

A. Confidence is what holds the structure of organization together. Destroy that and it is all destroyed.

Mr. Dahling: That is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions.

Mr. Nelson: No further questions.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee:) Mr. MacAuley, take your last answer. Would that apply down to and including the rank and file?

A. Well, it is more important, I would say, Mr. Examiner, to have your management all coordinated together and in confidence with each other.

Q. More important than what?

1537 A. Than the men farther down the line into the workers' class, because in our opinion, any organization is built of three things: First, the capital structure, which is the Management and the workers. Now, in Management, the responsibility and scope of the man's job is so great and he has so many functions to perform compared to the workers who only work on one operation—it is more important to me that we have confidence within Management although it is important that we have the confidence of the worker also. To me Management is the most important of the two.

Q. Of course, without the worker you would not get anything produced?

A. That is right. You have to have his confidence too. However, I do not believe, to the degree we need it in Management.

Q. I want to make a statement, not as a fact, necessarily, but I want to get your observation on it. Suppose that I say to you instead of having two classes—that is to say, Management and the rank and file—suppose I say we have three for the sake of argument, namely, Management, Supervision and the Rank and File, what would you say to that?

A. To me, supervision is Management.

Q. No matter how low it goes?

A. Down to the workers.

Q. You spoke of the responsibility of the foreman
1538 to himself. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. That is one of the headings, in fact, in the list you read into the record?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you intend by the five items you have listed under that heading, to include all the matters that come under the title "Responsibility to Himself"? I will change that. Would you say that all the items listed under that heading are all the items involved, which fit that title?

A. No, they are not all of them. Those are the ones that came to my mind as I wrote those notes.

Q. Would you say that what foremen in general think is their responsibility to themselves in connection with their work should be listed on that list?

A. Can I have that question read, please?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Read the question.

(Question read.)

The Witness: Why, I think there are and can be others added to this list.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee) Suppose that the foreman—this is just a supposition now—Suppose the foremen think it is their responsibility to themselves to join the Foreman's Association of America. Do you think that that should be listed on the list?

1539 A. Whether it should be on the list or not?

Q. That is right.

A. Well, there are lots of questions on that. That covers a lot of territory. If I was a foreman there would be one answer and they might have another answer. If I was a foreman I would not be interested in the Foreman's Association of America.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions?

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) On this last heading on the list where Responsibility to Himself is the heading—I believe you said that you picked these designations for no particular fundamental purpose?

A. I put them in there where I felt it was most important—the most important part of the discussion to fall into.

Q. Now, where you say to see that he leads instead of driving, that is also one of his duties as a good foreman, isn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. That he avoid being authoritative or belligerent, that is a duty for the benefit of Management also?

A. That is for his own protection, or else he will have trouble with the workers.

Q. C. D. E. under the same heading are the same characteristics and duties and responsibilities towards 1540 Management, as well as towards himself?

A. That is right.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: So that I suppose you would not consider it the foreman's duty to Management to join the Foreman's Association of America?

The Witness: No, sir, not to me.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I believe we have some confusion and I suggest we knock off the heading entirely.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I don't think it is descriptive myself.

Mr. Nelson: I would like to ask the witness a few questions.

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I would like to ask you, Witness, if you think a foreman has a responsibility of duty to his fellow foreman?

A. Does he have any responsibility?

Q. Does he have any in a plant like Packard?

A. He has to develop cooperation and coordinate with them.

Q. Is that all?

A. What else?

Q. Let's take the situation—do you think he owes his fellow foreman any duty of getting in line and taking promotions as he earns them on merit and seniority? Do you think he owes his fellow foreman a duty of that kind?

1541 A. Those things come by themselves. If Management has confidence in him and he in they, they will take care of it automatically.

Q. You don't think that he as a foreman has any duty to consult with his fellow workers as to what procedures are just and what priorities are just and fair in the plant and as to what men should be raised and what men should be transferred in order in any way, and the order in which that should be done? Do you feel that he does not owe his fellow foreman a duty of that kind?

A. The Management, superintendent and general foreman should have confidence in the foreman and the foreman in reverse should have confidence in these men.

Q. And each one should push his personal advantage and advancement at will and as he can?

A. That is typical of a good leader.

Q. That is typical of the kind of relations you would like to see in the Packard Motor Car Company plant among the foremen, is it not?

A Yes.

Mr. Nelson: That is your answer. That is all, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think I should say that my last two or three questions merely were to indicate that the last heading "Responsibility to Himself" was prob-

1542 ably a bit inappropriate on the sheet. I just wanted to point that out. Mr. Dahling, apparently we agree on that phase of it anyway.

Mr. Dahling: Yes, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of the witness, gentlemen?

Mr. Nelson: Nothing further.

Mr. Dahling: Nothing further.

Mr. Karasick: No questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness is excused.

(Witness excused.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will recess at this time until 2:15.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until 2:15 o'clock P. M.)

1543 After Recess.

(Whereupon, the hearing was resumed, pursuant to the recess, at 2:15 o'clock P. M.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The hearing is in order. Are we ready to resume?

Mr. Dahling: I understand we are finished with Mr. MacAuley?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: So I understand.

Mr. Dahling: I call Mr. Patzkowsky.

ELMER G. PATZKOWSKY,

a witness called by and on behalf of the Company, being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Patzkowsky, are you employed by the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. I am.

Mr. Nelson: What was his first name?

Mr. Dahling: What is your first name? Is it Elmer?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Dahling: And your initials?

The Witness: G.

Mr. Dahling: Will you spell your name for the benefit of Mr. Nelson?

The Witness: P-a-t-z-k-o-w-s-k-y.

1544 Mr. Nelson: The only thing I was in doubt about was whether it was an "i" or a "y."

The Witness: Y, I don't know.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Patzkowsky, how long have you been employed by the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Since the early part of 1936.

Q. You graduated from Teacher's College in Kalamazoo, Michigan?

A. That is right.

Q. What did you specialize while you were in college?

A. In machine shop.

Q. After you left college will you give us a brief recital of your experiences in the industry?

A. The first year out of college I taught machine shop and auto shop in the Flint public schools. The three following years I worked for the telephone company as a foreman in construction. After that I returned to school part time and worked in several job shops here in Detroit as a toolmaker. From there I went to Chrysler Corporation.

Q. About what year would that be?

A. 1934, I believe around 1933. I think I first went to Chrysler.

Q. What work did you do there?

A. I worked as a production worker on production work, as a jobsetter.

1545 Q. You worked as a jobsetter during the time you were at Chrysler?

A. Yes. From Chrysler I came to Packard Motor Car Company.

A. T[illegible] was in the early part of 1936?

A. 1936, yes.

Q. What did you first do when you joined Packard?

A. The first job I did at Packard was operate some Gisholt lathes.

Q. And you were a rank and file worker at that time?

A. That is right.

Q. Will you tell us what happened after that? Let's fix that date again, that was in the early part of 1936, did you say?

A. February, I believe; in the early part of 1937 I was made an assistant foreman.

Q. In what division?

A. That was the "S" Division at that time.

Q. What is manufactured in the "S" Division?

A. That was the general machine division and the particular department where I worked in was where we machined and assembled the differentials.

Q. Were there other assistant foremen in that division?

A. There were, yes.

Q. About how many, do you recall?

1546 A. In the whole division, I wouldn't know. I couldn't even attempt to guess. I wouldn't know as far as the division was concerned.

Q. Well, did you have a general foreman over you?

A. I did.

Q. Did you have foremen in that division?

A. Yes.

Q. Then how long were you in this "S" Division as assistant foreman?

A. Until 1939, November of 1939.

Q. Then what happened?

A. I was made a general foreman.

Q. In what division was that?

A. That was in the same division, the "S" Division.

Q. The same division.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you worked in any other division in the Packard plant other than the "S" Division?

A. Yes.

Q. What other division?

A. In the "D" Division.

Q. What do they do in the "D" Division?

A. Well, that is the general machining division, in the aircraft division again.

Q. In any other divisions?

1547 A. "G" Division.

Q. What is done in that division?

A. That was a majority of machining of gears.

Q. Did you work in any other divisions?

A. Temporarily, at times, I worked in the mechanical division.

Q. Does that bear any other designation, by letters or by numbers?

A. Well, at that time, I forget what the symbol for the mechanical division was. I can't recall what that was.

Q. Well, you were a general foreman while you were working in the various divisions that you have just named?

A. All but the "G" Division and the Mechanical Division.

Q. What was your title in those divisions?

A. Well, in the Mechanical Division in periods of changing models, we were loaned to the Mechanical Division as process men.

Q. Was that done frequently?

A. Quite frequently.

Q. Was that done frequently during slack seasons, taking foremen into the Process Department?

A. That is right, it was.

Q. They would be taken from various other departments which had slowed down because of the change of model?

1548 A. Yes.

Q. They would work on the new designs for the new cars.

A. Well, they wouldn't really work on the designs of the new cars. They would work on the processing of the new parts for the new cars.

Q. I see. That would be working up the material which appears in the routing sheet, Exhibit 29, which is in evidence here, Company's Exhibit 29?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, then, after you were general foreman, what job did you have?

A. After I was general foreman I was made manager of the "G" Division.

Q. When was that?

A. In 1942.

Q. How long did you remain manager of the "G" Division?

A. Until September of this year.

Q. What is your present job?

A. Industrial Relations Manager.

Q. Was the Industrial Relations Department reorganized in September of this year?

A. To some extent it was.

Q. While you were acting in the capacity of a general foreman did you ever recommend any promotions from the rank and file to the position of assistant foreman?

1549 A. I did.

Q. What happened to those recommendations?

A. They went through.

Q. Did you as general foreman ever recommend the advancement of assistant foreman to foreman?

A. I did.

Q. What happened to those recommendations?

A. They were all carried.

Q. Would you say that you did that on more than one occasion?

A. Yes, in several cases.

Q. Would you say that you also recommended several of the rank and file to assistant foreman and those recommendations were carried out?

A. Yes.

Q. While you were acting as general foreman did you ever have occasion to send through a query clearing a man from the rolls?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have occasion to do that more than once?

A. Yes.

Q. Would that be for incompetency and other reasons?

A. Yes.

Q. What happened to those recommendations?

1550 A. As a general rule they carried through.

Q. But they might have disagreed with you occasionally?

A. That is right.

Q. When I say "disagreed," were some of them carried through the Union grievance procedure?

A. That is right.

Q. At the hearings held, the people holding the hearings did disagree with you on some occasions?

A. Well, perhaps not disagreeing so much as bringing out other evidence that they shouldn't be discharged from the Packard Motor Car Company.

Q. In other words, for reasons perhaps unknown to you, they decided that they shouldn't be discharged?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you had occasion while you were acting as assistant foreman, foreman or general foreman to apply disciplinary measures to the workers?

A. Yes.

Q. You have sent through the queries of the type which are in evidence here?

A. I have, yes.

Q. You have been at this hearing since the beginning, have you not, Mr. Patzkowsky?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the general result of these queries that 1551 were sent through in disciplinary cases; were you supported in some of them?

A. In by far the large majority I was supported.

Q. Coming back to our routing sheet, Exhibit 29, I believe you are familiar with that, are you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you had any experience in the preparation of these routing sheets?

A. Plenty of experience.

Q. Have you as a foreman ever been called into conferences in connection with the preparation of routing sheets?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you in your position of general foreman also been asked to attend conferences in connection with the preparation of routing sheets?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you signed these routing sheets as appears on the first page of Exhibit 29?

A. Yes.

Q. Were those signed before or after they were distributed in the plant?

A. Signed before.

Q. They were signed, but would be signed by you as a foreman before they were distributed through the plant?

1552 A. Yes.

Q. When you were a general foreman were you also called upon to check the routing sheets and execute these sheets if you felt that they were satisfactory?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that on one occasion or more than one occasion?

A. Plenty of occasions.

Q. When you say "plenty of occasions," would you say that it would happen in every case where there was a change in routing through your particular department?

A. In every case.

Q. Would that apply—would the same apply to the other divisions, other than the divisions that you have testified you worked in?

A. I believe that is true.

Q. Did you ever have occasion to object to any of the processes provided for in any routing sheet?

A. Yes.

Q. That is, you have disagreed with what the process man's original ideas were on how the work should be done, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. What happened on that occasion?

A. We usually recommended a different method.

Q. After you made that recommendation what would 1553 happen next?

A. As a rule it would be approved and the method put into effect.

Q. Would you discuss your recommendation with anyone?

A. Yes, occasionally.

Q. Who would it be on this discussion?

A. The plant manager and representatives of the Master Mechanics Division, the process men and his supervisors.

Q. Did you have occasion to make recommendations more than once?

A. Yes, lots of times.

Q. Were all of them carried through?

A. The majority of them, I believe, were.

Q. And in some they disagreed with you?

A. That is right, some they disagreed with.

Q. However, you continued in the employ of the Company, nevertheless?

A. I did.

Q. Have you ever had occasions to request material tests?

A. Yes.

Q. I show you Company's Exhibits 35 through 41 inclusive and ask you if these are the requests and reports on material tests that may be requested? I will ask you if those are the form of report and request?

1554 A. These are the form of report and requests that we use in requesting a change of material.

Q. I believe you stated that you have made requests for these material tests?

A. I have.

Q. Would you in that connection sign the request which appears to be the second sheet, we will say, of Company's Exhibit 35?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you make those requests as general foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you made them as foreman, also?

A. Yes.

Q. I believe that you stated you have on more than one occasion made these requests for material—for testing material?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: May I interject one question there?

Mr. Dahling: Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Were you ever a foreman as distinguished from an assistant foreman or general foreman?

The Witness: I was not.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): That is correct. I believe you

1555 went from assistant foreman to foreman?

A. That is right.

Q. When you testified that you requested these tests to be made did you ever make such request as assistant foreman?

A. I did.

Q. Were these requests complied with?

A. Well, as far as these requests usually are made—in a lot of requests you try two or three different materials and you reject one or two of them and decide which one you want to use. As a rule we did not just write in one type of material. You might get two or three companies—for instance, if we had trouble on a grinding job and we wanted to use a different type of grinding wheel we might go and get two or three different companies and get their sample wheels and keep records of the use of each wheel and the quality of the work gotten off of the wheel and we would decide which would be the one we would use. On each particular wheel a request would be made out. We would perhaps reject two and keep one.

Q. Who ran those tests?

A. The production people.

Q. What did you have to do with the tests as foreman?

A. I supervised to see that it was being carried out
1556 under normal conditions.

Q. Then after the test was run, we will say on this grinding wheel, was a report made out?

A. Yes.

Q. And let's take your case, who would make out that report?

A. Well, the first report of the result of the test would be made out by myself as supervisor of the job.

Q. Would you then sign that report as a general foreman, if you requested it as a general foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. And then what would happen to the report? To whom would it go then?

A. Well, that would be taken back to the department that took care of all these requests and they in turn would type it up and distribute it to the different people that would be concerned in it, the purchasing department, stores, Master Mechanics Division and everyone that might have any particular use or should be informed that there was being a change made.

Q. Would a typed copy of the report come back to you as general foreman, the general foreman who had made out the pencil copy in the first instance?

A. It would.

Q. And did you request a number of these tests
1557 during your time that you were employed as assistant foreman and foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever requested any change be made in the operations of any department that you might have had charge of as general foreman?

A. Change in the personnel, you mean?

Q. In the method of production, we will say?

A. Oh, yes, the rearrangement of machinery or rearrangement of other things connected with the production of stock bins and benches—

Q. Would you in that case make out a written recommendation?

A. Yes.

Q. Who would receive that written recommendation?

A. Those recommendations were usually turned in to—directly to the division manager.

Q. Were you ever called into conference in connection with any recommendations you had made?

A. As a rule those recommendations were—there was a space on the recommendations for a reason why you wanted those changes and if those reasons did not seem sufficient why, you might be called in for a conference on the thing. As a rule if you made those requests out in full they were never questioned and went right on through.

1558 Q. Have you ever, as a matter of fact, been called into conference on these changes that you might have suggested?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, there has been some testimony in the record on this matter of the layout of the department. While you were acting as a general foreman, were you ever called into conference to discuss the layout of the particular department that you were in at the time?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you ever as an assistant foreman asked to discuss with others the layout?

A. Yes, when I was an assistant foreman I remember one model change in particular where we had quite a few changes to be made. The layout man was continuously contacting myself and other people of supervision in the department.

Q. As general foreman in these divisions where you supervised, did you ever hold conferences with your foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. And your assistant foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. As a matter of fact, you were on the floor most of the day, were you not?

A. As a general foreman you spent most of the time
1559 on the floor.

Q. You were more or less in constant touch with the foreman and assistant foreman in your department?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were available at all times to discuss their problems?

A. That is right.

Q. Did they bring their problems to you?

A. They did.

Q. Did you attend the foremen's training school at Packard?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever have anything to do with the school itself?

A. Yes. When I was an assistant foreman I was a leader of those conferences for one season.

Q. When you say "a leader" just what was your job?

A. Well, we would have one meeting of the leaders where we would discuss the topics we would want discussed with the other supervisors and get a general knowledge in which direction we would want to steer the conference from the topics we had. The following week we would conduct a conference of our own with other supervisors.

Q. Now, Mr. Patzkowsky, you have testified as to some of your experiences as a general foreman and assist-
1560 ant foreman, that covers, as I take it, four divisions?

A. Four divisions? I wouldn't hardly say that. I worked in four different divisions but in reality I was being loaned to the Mechanical Division. However, I was working in the four divisions when I was in there.

Q. But you actually did work in three different divisions?

A. Three different production divisions.

Q. They were all production divisions?

A. Yes.

Q. You were then under three different division managers—I am relating to the time you were general foreman and assistant foreman?

A. Four different division managers, because we had a change one time when I was a general foreman.

Q. Did these division managers ever have conferences with the general foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that just occasionally or would you say frequently?

A. I would say frequently.

Q. From your experience and observation while in the Packard Motor Car Company, acting as an assistant foreman, general foreman and division manager, would you say that these things you have testified about that 1561 you have done are also done by other foremen and general foremen and assistant foremen throughout the plant?

A. Generally I would say yes.

Q. The results of their recommendations were substantially the same as were the results of recommendations that you made?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, these things you have testified to are more or less what you call standard practice of the Company?

A. I say they are.

Mr. Dahling: I wonder if we could go off the record for a moment?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Patzkowsky, you heard the testimony of Mr. MacAuley?

A. I did.

Q. Did you go over the analysis of a foreman's job that was prepared by Mr. MacAuley?

A. I did.

Q. Which has been placed in the record in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you state whether or not the duties and responsibility and authority of a foreman which are set 1562 forth in this analysis of a foreman's job are actually their duties, responsibility and authority in the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. I believe they are.

Q. You agree with the testimony given by Mr. MacAuley as to the duties and responsibilities and the authority of foremen in the Packard Company?

A. I do.

Q. There is testimony in the record that on March 1, 1942, an overtime policy change was put into effect with respect to the payment of overtime to foremen; do you recall that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Did you know about that change before it went into effect on March 1, 1942?

A. Yes.

Q. How did you happen to hear about it?

A. Well, there were several different plans being discussed in meetings with our plant manager at the time. I was a division or general foreman, at the time.

Q. Your division manager held various conferences in connection with this matter of overtime pay?

A. He did.

Q. You were present at those conferences?

A. Yes.

1563 Q. Were there others also present?

A. Yes.

Q. Other general foremen?

A. That is right.

Mr. Dahling: I ask that these documents be marked as Company's Exhibits Nos. 42 and 43.

(Thereupon, the documents above referred to were marked Company's Exhibits Nos. 42 and 43 for identification.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Mr. Patzkowsky, Petitioner's Exhibit 24 is a sheet on which there appear to be shop rules and penalties for violation, reissue December 14, 1944. Were there previous issues of these rules for penalties?

A. Yes.

Q. I show you Company's Exhibit 42 and Company's Exhibit 43 and ask you what they are?

A. Well, on the Exhibit 43, dated September 1, 1944, were a group of rules that were negotiated with the Plant Committee of the CIO, Local 190, and our Labor Relations man.

Q. Is that the first issue of the printed shop rules and penalties for violations?

A. That is the first group of them. At one time or another each particular one may have been negotiated 1564 at meetings that they had, but this was the first time that they had grouped them as one group.

Q. Exhibit 42 was the reissue of Exhibit 43, which is dated September 1, 1944?

A. Yes, with some minor changes because in checking back we found that they had changed the penalties that had been in effect in previous meetings, but had not been published, and the rank and file didn't agree with all the penalties, so they were reissued.

Mr. Nelson: There is no objection.

Mr. Dahling: I offer Exhibits 42 and 43 in evidence.

Mr. Karasick: No objection.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Received.

(The documents heretofore marked Company's Exhibits Nos. 42 and 43 for identification were received in evidence.)

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): Now, I notice on Petitioner's Exhibit 24, the third rule, "Fighting—Any employee striking a blow, the penalties are one week, two weeks, to be negotiated." What does that mean?

A. To be negotiated?

Q. No,—

A. (Interposing): The first time that the man is fighting, the general rule is one week off. I believe they say one week the first time?

1565 Q. Yes.

A. And when the second time he is fighting, it is two weeks off.

Q. Yes.

A. Perhaps the third time to be negotiated, whether he be discharged or removed to a different department or penalized in any other manner.

Q. To be negotiated would mean that there would be a hearing with the Union people in connection with the third offense of that character?

A. Not necessarily, to be negotiated between the foreman and the steward of the department.

Q. If they agreed upon a discharge, why, it would be a discharge?

A. Yes, or a transfer or whatever it might be.

Q. Whenever on this exhibit P-24, under the heading "Penalties" there appear to be more than one penalty, that covers the matter of first, second or third offense?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It says so on the exhibit there.

A. I think that is in the lower paragraph, the lower line.

Mr. Dahling: Yes, I believe it does.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): I show you now Petitioner's
1566 Exhibit 33 and call your attention to the paragraph numbered 2 on the first page of this exhibit, which reads as follows: "The great majority, ninety per cent of the grievances and queries should be disposed of by the Division Labor Relations representative, as his authority is decisive in all cases except those involving rates and general plant-wide Company policy." Will you explain this particular paragraph, what that means?

A. Well, perhaps I should explain the thing as a whole. First, it is the minutes of the meeting between the Labor-Management Committee and the Plant Committee of Local 190, and this was taken down with a stenographer as it was said in the meeting.

Now, the meaning of what we were getting at in the previous paragraphs, which tells you that the cases were not being handled according to procedure. Some overly ambitious stewards didn't attempt to negotiate or bargain with the steward. He immediately wanted to go to the top—I didn't mean to say with the steward—with the foreman. He immediately wanted to go to the top to plead his case, and we were attempting to get the Plant

Committee to get their stewards in line that they would follow procedure, that they would stay with the first step of the grievance with the foreman and the steward, and then the next step would be with the district steward and the district Labor Relations man.

1567

Q. Is that the step that is referred to in paragraph 2?

A. Yes, that is the step.

Q. See if I get this straight. Your first step in the grievance procedure is between the foreman and the chief steward of the Union, is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. Then if they can't agree, your next step is the division steward and the division Labor Relations man representing the Company, is that right?

A. We call, what you call the division steward, we call them district stewards.

Q. District stewards. Yes, I think that is right. I have heard that used. You were referring to the fact that grievances that get by the first step and get into the second step, ninety per cent of those should be settled before they go up to the third step?

A. That is right.

Q. In other words, only ten per cent of those that get to the second step of the grievance procedure merited any further action further up?

A. That is right.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What is the lowest rated steward in the plant?

The Witness: The lowest grade of steward that we recognize as a steward is a chief steward. Now, the chief steward nominates, or he appoints deputy stewards to act in his absence, which we negotiated at that time. Otherwise he is just another member of the rank and file when the chief steward is on the job.

1568

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The steward immediately above him is the—

The Witness: The district steward.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think you began your first comment with reference to Petitioner's Exhibit 33 by referring to a Labor-Management Committee; what is that?

The Witness: That is what we call the Labor Committee. It is the people from the plant committee representing the Local UAW-190 and the management is our Committee of our own people.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think you started your answer rather ambiguously because you said the Labor-Management Committee met with the UAW Local.

The Witness: I should have said it was a joint meeting of the Labor-Management Committees.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I see.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling): The grievance procedure, of course, is set up in the contract Packard has with UAW Local 190?

A. That is right.

1569 Q. And the agreement in Article 2 provides that there shall be a plant committee of the UAW of not more than three selected by the Union and then there shall be representatives of the Industrial Relations Department and these two committees are supposed to meet as the top step in the grievance procedure?

A. Yes.

Q. And also to discuss problems which might arise?

A. That is right.

Q. I show you Petitioner's Exhibit 25 and ask you if that is the chart of the Labor-Relations Division which is now in effect at Packard?

A. Well, I wouldn't say that this is the chart that is in effect now. I believe that there have been some additions made to this (indicating). This does not happen to be dated but I know that there have been some additions.

Q. That is in names, you mean?

A. Yes.

Q. But the general set-up of the division is that as set forth on this Petitioner's Exhibit 25?

A. Yes, as far as myself, Mr. Smith, Mr. Watts and Mr. Probyn are concerned. Some of the men on the day shift here may have been transferred over to the night shift. There have been additions to both day and 1570 night shifts since that was made up.

Q. You do have an assistant Labor Relations manager on duty during the day?

A. Yes.

Q. And also one for the night shift?

A. That is right.

Q. And these assistant Labor Relations managers have district Labor Relations men under them?

A. That is right.

Q. And they are present during the day and also at night?

A. Yes.

Q. These are the district Labor Relations men, referred to in this chart,—are the men who represent management at the second step of the grievance procedure with the UAW?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Patzkowsky, I forgot to ask you this question: Petitioner's Exhibit 24 lists thirteen offenses and the penalties for each of those offenses; might there be other things for which a rank and file worker would be disciplined by the foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, can you think of some of them?

A. Well, if the individual was continuously being 1571 careless in his work and causing excessive tool breakage he might be demoted to a more simple machine where he wouldn't receive as much pay.

Q. Who would recommend that demotion?

A. The foreman.

Q. Might there also be a case of a rank and file worker refusing to do the job?

A. Yes.

Q. And improperly using tools?

A. Yes.

Q. And excessive breakage of tools?

A. Yes.

Q. And also creating unsafe working conditions?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, who would fix the penalty in those cases where they are not covered by the penalty sheet, Exhibit 24?

A. The immediate supervisor.

Q. And that would be—

A. (Interposing): The assistant foreman or foreman.

Mr. Dahling: You may cross-examine.

Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): May I have the three sets of grievances and penalties, Exhibits 24, 42 and 43? I have before me, Mr. Patzkowsky, Petitioner's Exhibits 24 and Company's Exhibits 42 and 43 and I notice that 1572 Exhibit 24 was signed by a committee for the maintenance and production workers Union and the Company, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And it is dated December 14, 1944? I also note that Company's Exhibit 43 is issued under date of September 1, 1944 and only on the authority of the Company?

A. Well, Mr. Budd—

Q. That is correct, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Budd's position is what?

A. He was Labor Relations manager at that time.

Q. And Company's Exhibit 42 is dated October 17, 1944, likewise, and purports to be an authority only on behalf of the Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, what happened was, that the Union kicked, so to speak, to put it shortly, isn't it so, to having these automatic penalties fixed without any consultation with them?

A. The rank and file did. The Plant Committee could not sell the bill of goods, you may say, to the steward body.

Q. They made two attempts and then failed and then negotiated with the Union stewards?

A. I don't follow you.

1573 Mr. Donovan: I do not believe the witness understood your question.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): After the first two—Exhibit 43 on September 1st and Exhibit 42 on October 17th, of the past year, then you got together with the stewards and negotiated Petitioner's Exhibit 24?

A. No, that is not the stewards, that is the Plant Committee.

Q. That is the only thing? I will amend my question, it was negotiated with the Plant Committee?

A. That is right.

Q. When the maintenance and production workers, the hourly-rated workers, picked on the setup in Exhibit 42 and Exhibit 43, Company's Exhibits—

A. (Interposing): They kicked on it due to the fact that all these rules had been in previously at one time. In previous meetings the penalties were set of some sort and when they tried to group them together and some of the penalties were changed—when the old records were dug up is when they took the thing up with the Plant Committee and wanted to know why, when they had agreed to something previously—why they were making the changes.

Q. Generally speaking, the penalties are lower in Petitioner's Exhibit 24 and less severe than in Exhibits 42 and 43, isn't that a correct statement?

1574 A. That is right, and some of them have even been taken out.

Q. And that was on the objection by the Plant Committee?

A. No, not entirely of all the Plant Committee, the Army objected to one of them.

Q. To one of them?

A. Yes.

Q. Which one was that?

A. The one on the coffee-making proposition. First, we had a penalty for making coffee during working hours.

Q. And the Army objected to that?

A. No, the Army had given permission to make coffee during working hours, and they did not want to go back on that, on their word.

Q. To your knowledge was any foreman consulted about any of these exhibits, Exhibits 24, 42 or 43?

A. I think at different times in the last several years the foremen have been consulted on all of them. That is where, you might say, the law of averages was derived from.

Q. By the words "the foreman" just who do you mean?

A. The foreman.

Q. You mean the Foreman's Association of America or representatives of organized foreman or just occasional foremen were asked a question?

1575 A. I would say foremen in groups by the plant managers.

Q. In groups? What kind of groups?

A. When the plant manager would have a meeting of the supervisors some of these things would be discussed.

Q. Oh, you mean some of the offenses described here?

A. Yes.

Q. Some of the things that disturbed the work were discussed at these meetings?

A. Yes. You see, we were getting beat, one foreman to another. The Union operates a good deal on common law. If you pass out a penalty one day for fighting of one day off in one particular department in one week and the next week a foreman in another department wants to give a fellow a week off, he will say you cannot do that because they have set a precedent in the previous week by only giving him one day off. That is what caused the bringing about of getting uniform penalties.

Q. And it was in effect the lack of uniformity which produced the uniformity represented by these exhibits?

A. That is right.

Q. As a matter of fact, as to none of these publications or announcements, that is Company's Exhibits 42 and 43 and Petitioner's Exhibit 24, were foremen as a body consulted, were they?

A. As a body?

1576 Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. As a matter of fact, all of the foremen at Packard's are themselves subject to these rules, aren't they?

A. I presume they are.

Q. And you have the situation where a foreman may be disciplined under a set of rules fixed by maintenance and production workers Union and the Company, without consultation with them, isn't that a fact?

Mr. Donovan: I will object to that question because the testimony does not show they were subject to the rules. They were evidently rules settled upon between the CIO and the Company which the foremen used. It does not mean they were subject to them.

Mr. Nelson: I am entitled to ask that question, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The witness did say "I presume so" in answer to that precise question a moment ago.

Mr. Donovan: That is the reason I object to this question. I do not think the witness should be required to answer the question just asked by counsel.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think it is proper in view of his previous answer. You may answer.

Mr. Nelson: That is the fact, isn't it, Mr. Patz-
1577 kowsky?

The Witness: In rare occasions where penalties are being given to our supervisors, the same as the rank and file.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Under these rules?

A. Under these rules, that is right.

Q. You seem to be a little generous about it. I suppose the occasions for disciplining foremen are as you say, rare?

A. That is right.

Q. Comparatively?

A. That is right.

Q. Because they are a disciplined and selected body of men?

A. Yes.

Q. Therefore, their transgressions, perhaps, on a percentage, are fewer in number?

A. When we are picking our supervisors we hope that none of them will ever be caught on any of these rules.

Q. So, therefore, you use the word "rare"?

A. Yes.

Q. The fact of the matter also is, isn't it, Mr. Patzkowsky, that when the question arises as to whether the foreman has transgressed the rule as evidenced by these exhibits 24, 42 and 43, he appears individually 1578 and without any representation, doesn't he?

A. No, I wouldn't say that.

Q. Doesn't he? Who appears for him, then?

A. As a rule his immediate supervisor will appear with him.

Q. He appears against him, doesn't he, as the man who leveled the charge, probably, doesn't he?

A. I wouldn't say that he appears against him.

Q. Does he appear on behalf of the foreman or on behalf of the Company? I am speaking of his immediate superior.

A. I imagine he appears on behalf of the Company.

Q. Then the man is alone, isn't he?

A. That is right.

Q. The foreman is alone?

A. Yes.

Q. Let's take another situation. Let's take the situation of a dispute as to whether a maintenance and production worker or the foreman was the aggressor or was in the wrong and you set your grievance machinery in motion. Of course, there the foreman could not solve it, he being the first step in the grievance machinery, and automatically it would go at least one step higher, wouldn't it?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. Would the foreman be allowed to pass on his 1579 own guilt or innocence as between he and a production worker or would they take it a step higher?

A. I cannot imagine the kind of case you are talking about, Mr. Nelson.

Q. A dispute as to who hit the other or who hit first.

A. Oh, you are talking about a fight case?

Q. Take that as an example. I made it broader, where it is a dispute as to whether the worker, the hourly-rated worker or the foreman—let us say the hourly-rated worker says the foreman hit him first and the foreman says that he did not hit him but put up his hands to protect himself. There you would have to take it somewhere besides the foreman, wouldn't you?

A. Yes.

1580 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) And immediately the steward appears for the maintenance production worker, doesn't he?

A. Yes.

Q. That is right, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. And the foreman appears alone and without representation, doesn't he?

A. Well, I wouldn't say he appears alone without representation. There are other foremen as a rule or labor relations men appear with him.

Q. They appear with him. I am talking about somebody appearing for him, in the same sense that the steward appears for the hourly rated man.

A. I believe the foreman is capable of appearing for himself.

Q. So you feel that he is able to appear for himself under those circumstances?

A. Yes.

Q. As a matter of fact, aren't foremen now regularly and haven't they been for some time, taking their five or six days off as a penalty and refusing to go in and assert their innocence or even try their case? Isn't that the rule now at Packard's?

A. No.

Q. Well, hasn't it been for some time?

1581 A. No, I wouldn't say that.

Q. Isn't the reason that the Company at Packard's for a long time has adopted the policy of standing with the steward and the maintenance and production worker and against the foreman?

A. No.

Q. That as a consequence of that, Mr. Patzkowsky, the foremen are taking their medicine rather than even try the merits of the dispute?

A. I disagree with that.

Q. You do?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know a man by the name of Kenneth Warden?

A. I know of him.

Q. What grade of foreman is he?

A. What grade?

Q. Yes.

A. I couldn't say.

Q. What?

A. I couldn't say.

Q. But he is a foreman, isn't he?

A. Yes.

Q. He is off right now on exactly the situation that I described?

A. I believe so.

1582 Q. Yes, sir. Where he refused to go in and even try to defend his case because of the consistent policy of the Company of standing against the foremen?

A. That is wrong. He appeared in a meeting with several different people. He was represented by his immediate supervisor. He was represented by the labor relations people, more than one.

Q. That is the last man that you have had in a meeting of that kind as a foreman, is that right?

A. That happened last week, I believe.

Q. As to suggestions, do you have in effect out there, and have you had since the United States went into the war, a Work-to-Win Program?

A. About that time it was put in, I guess.

Q. Well, we won't debate the time. It has been in effect for some period now, hasn't it, Mr. Patzkowsky?

A. Yes.

Q. That is a plan under which anybody in the plant can make a suggestion or a recommendation for the betterment of things, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. So, you don't have to be a foreman, do you, to make those recommendations and suggestions?

A. Well, I would call them suggestions. They certainly aren't recommendations. They are usually very 1583 much in their infancy, as a rule turned over to the foreman first for his consideration, and then he passes them on to the—perhaps the right people that will or can elaborate on them, if he approves of them.

Q. Well, but suppose a maintenance and production worker, suppose you are a maintenance and production worker and you hand it in to the president and pass everybody by?

A. He doesn't hand it. They all go to a central clearing place and then the work-to-win committee.

Q. And that is a joint management-labor committee?

A. Yes.

Q. What have the foremen to do with that committee and its scope of operations?

A. Well, the—I don't know exactly what they are.

Q. Let me first ask you then, if you don't know, let me suggest some specific inquiries. Is there a foreman on the committee?

A. I don't believe there is. At one time when I was a general foreman, I acted on that committee at alternate times, five or six times a year. We have changed that procedure. We have changed that procedure several different times. I couldn't say at the present time if there is a foreman on that in those meetings at one time or not.

Q. Well, that is a plan of operation specifically as operated at Packard's between the Union, representing 1584 the maintenance and production workers, and the Company, isn't that it?

A. Yes.

Q. And the foremen are subject to whatever rules or regulations grow out of that Work-to-Win Program, aren't they, and subject to the demands of the program?

A. If it is adopted as a rule, yes.

Q. They are expected to forward or aid in the work of the Work-to-Win Program, aren't they?

A. Sure.

Q. Without any voice in it whatsoever?

A. Oh yes, they have plenty of voice in it.

Q. What, for instance?

A. As I say, at different times the foremen have been on the Work-To-Win Committee.

Q. Who besides yourself now, while you were on it?

A. Well, Oscar Padget was one.

Q. Who?

A. Oscar Padget.

Q. Is he a manager now?

A. Yes, he was a foreman at that time. And Arthur Lynch.

Q. Where is he now, what is his rank now?

A. Mr. Lynch is a general foreman.

Q. In G. Division?

A. Yes.

1585 Q. How long was he on the committee?

A. As I say, we acted on this committee at just one meeting, and then we would skip several meetings and drop back into it again. The Work-to-Win Committee doesn't amount to much other than segregating the suggestions and in sending them into the proper channels where they are acted upon. The Work-to-Win Committee doesn't make any decisions.

If it is a suggestion pertaining to plant layout, it will be shipped to the plant layout department, and they will investigate it and give their answers back. If it is approved, put into effect, it is sent back to the Work-to-Win Committee, stating such, and the individual who put in the suggestion will receive his award.

If it is not approved, it is sent back the same way and the Work-to-Win Committee notifies the individual that put in the suggestion, stating the reasons why it wasn't approved.

So, as far as the functioning of the Work-to-Win Committee on acting on the suggestions is concerned, it is practically nothing.

Q. Well, it is still in operation, isn't it?

A. Oh, yes. You have got to have someone to determine where these suggestions should be sent to, if approved, where they should be sent for approval.

Q. I notice all these inter-departmental communica-

1586 tions that you offer from the files from the Company have that conclusion, "Work-to-Win". It seems to be a kind of a slogan in the Company.

A. It is.

Q. And you say that it doesn't amount to very much?

A. As far as the committee acting upon the suggestions, I say, it does not amount to much.

Q. Well, then, it is window dressing, isn't it, and slogan, only sound in appearance without substance?

Mr. Donovan: Oh, I think he is arguing with the witness, Mr. Trial Examiner. It is the same thing as "buy bonds."

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Is that your idea?

A. No.

Q. That is not your idea?

A. No.

Q. Well, I will ask you, Mr. Patzkowsky, while we are on that subject, whether you regard the problems of the Work-to-Win Committee in the Packard Company as a genuine labor-management experiment, yourself, is it your opinion that it is?

A. Is has been very beneficial.

Q. Very beneficial to the Company?

A. And to the workers.

Q. And to the workers?

A. Yes.

1587 Q. Is that right?

A. Yes, and to supervisors.

Q. What benefit could you say a supervisor derived out of it?

A. Well, there are times when a supervisor thinks and perhaps he is too busy to stop and listen to a worker's suggestions. Perhaps the worker doesn't want to take the time to explain his suggestion to his supervisor. Perhaps it takes time to make a sketch, and he may do that on his own time, turn it in and the result is it gets back to the foreman. We have had cases—

Q. (Interposing) Gets back to the foreman from where?

A. From the Work-to-Win Committee.

Q. Oh, Goes up to the top and then comes back to the foreman?

A. Well,—

Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) I will object to that.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Is that right? I want to know.

Mr. Donovan I will object.

A. I don't know.

Mr. Donovan: Wait a minute. I object to the counsel's remark, "Goes up to the top." There is nothing in the evidence to justify that characterization of the Work-to-Win Committee. It carries an unfavorable inference against the foremen, attempts to submerge the fore-1588 men in an unfavorable light. I object to the question, Mr. Trial Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, as I understood the question, he is just asking the witness.

Mr. Nelson: That is all. He can say it isn't so or tell me where I am wrong.

Mr. Donovan: His question includes the statement that I object to.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

The Witness: I can't understand what you mean by "up to the top" and back to the bottom again.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Well, the foreman and the worker are side by side at the bench, we will say, or the machine, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. That is the general idea of it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the Work-to-Win Committee is a plantwide committee, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, as you said a moment ago, that was intended to head up and form a focus to gather all of the suggestions, isn't that so?

A. That is right.

Q. And suggestions there go directly to Manage-
1589 ment, don't they, when made to the Work-to-Win Committee?

A. They go from the Work-to-Win Committee to the Management.

Q. Certainly, because Management is half of it, isn't that so?

A. Sure.

Q. Well, all right. Now, will you tell me what benefit you think it is to a supervisor to set up a committee of that kind so that they can conveniently and properly by-pass the foreman, just what does that do for a foreman?

A. Well, as I have stated, as I have started to state, in some cases we have had some very good suggestions—

Q. (Interposing) I am not talking about the merits of the suggestions.

Mr. Donovan: I think you should let the witness finish his answer. He is answering your question. Give him time to finish.

The Witness: And the individual working for a foreman couldn't speak English. He had to have someone else interpret for him and put it onto a piece of paper, and he turned it in to the Work-to-Win Committee. In turn, the Work-to-Win Committee sent it back to the foreman for his investigation and his comments, and if the foreman approves of it, it would help his job or he wouldn't approve of it, and in that way it makes his easier
1590 or he certainly wouldn't have an interpreter for this individual, and he carries out the suggestions of the individual which may have taken hours for him to explain in his broken English out in the shop.

Q. Well, if the situation is that bad, there is some doubt about whether that man and that foreman can get along on the day's work, isn't there?

A. No, I wouldn't say that.

Q. If he needs an interpreter to the extent where he couldn't give him an idea—

A. (Interposing) A lot of people need an interpreter to express themselves, but yet can do a very good job of following instructions.

Q. Who picks the leaders?

A. You mean the leaders as we call them?

Q. Yes, I am using the leaders.

A. A definite classification?

Q. Yes.

A. The foreman or the immediate supervisor.

Q. Has the leader any supervisory function or authority?

A. As far as people are concerned, no, other than instructions of operating methods.

Q. As I understand it, you don't include instruction as a supervisory function, am I right about that?

A. That is right. Generally speaking, as far as 1591 instructions of operation on any particular details according to our operation sheets, that is usually taken up by the utility men or leaders.

Q. Now, the job setter also has something of an instructional function, too, hasn't he?

A. That is right.

Q. So far as the job setter is concerned, you don't consider instruction as supervisory in its nature?

A. No, I would say it was more of a teaching nature.

Q. Why do you include instruction when you mention the manifold duties and responsibilities of a foreman?

A. Well, someone has to instruct the job setters and leaders.

Q. In other words, it depends on who performs the function of instruction whether it is supervisory in its nature or not, is that correct?

A. Yes. One of them deals with tools and the other one deals with people.

Q. When the job setter comes along and shows a workman how to set it up and do it, he is dealing with those tools and people and material, isn't he?

A. Yes.

Q. In the office of instruction?

A. Yes.

Q. When the leader does the same thing, he is dealing with all four of those elements together, isn't he?

1592

A. That is right.

Q. And in the form of instruction?

A. That is right.

Q. What is the difference when the foreman does it?

A. The foreman isn't actually performing. It is a different method of teaching. The one is teaching, you might say, a skill, where the higher supervisor would be directing the working force of the people and the whole period.

Q. Well, then, as I get your answer, it depends upon the form of instruction, is that right, whether it is merely oral and subjective or whether it is objective as by way of demonstration, is that the difference?

A. That should cover it.

Q. That is the line of departure as you think?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, as I understood the testimony here, Mr. Patzkowsky, these leaders, if they show other characteristics and qualities, are selected and sent to a training school for foremen, aren't they, or given some instructions?

A. Leaders?

Q. Yes, or are sent in with the foremen at these meetings?

A. I don't know of any of the leaders ever being sent in with the foremen.

Q. Do you recruit foremen from leaders?

1593 A. What is that?

Q. Do you recruit foremen from leaders?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you give the leaders any instruction or special opportunity before they become foremen?

A. Well, it is a stepping stone, and as a rule, just prior to his being made an assistant foreman, we usually give him instructions at that time, how to—what we expect of an assistant foreman or a foreman.

Q. Who selects him?

A. Well, if it is an assistant foreman, the foreman usually selects him in his particular group, if he knows his group well.

Q. You mean he recommends him?

A. Yes.

Q. So far as you yourself are concerned, you have definitely more experience and training than the average general foreman, foreman or assistant foreman, haven't you, Mr Patzkowsky?

A. Perhaps in some lines.

Q. Well, I understood you to say you had been to college and presumably you got a degree, didn't you?

A. No, I have no degree.

Q. What degree did your studies generally lead to?

A. What would it lead to if I had finished up?

1594 Q. Yes, if you had finished the course you were on?

A. Well, the Teacher's College, you get a life certificate.

Q. As a teacher?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you specialize in manual training, the sciences and things of that kind?

A. Just in manual training.

Q. Just in manual training?

A. Yes.

Q. You would have finally gotten perhaps a B.S. if you had broadened and continued your studies?

A. Well—

Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) Well, if he had broadened that, he might have gotten an M.A.

Mr. Nelson: He might have, and he might yet.

The Witness: That is the thing, I broadened them so far that I would have to get an engineering degree. That would be the easiest way out of it if I had finished.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) A general engineering degree?

A. Mechanical engineering degree.

Q. Mechanical engineering degree?

A. Yes.

Q. How many years did you go?

A. At Kalamazoo I went three years and two summer schools, and since that time I have gone at odd times a couple full semesters and part time work for several years.

1595

Q. You apparently didn't bother to drive straight for a degree; you took the work and sat contented with yourself in that?

A. That is right.

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Ten minute recess.

(Recess.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The hearing is in order.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) I believe, Mr. Witness, that you testified with respect to Company's Exhibit 24 and on March 1, 1942 there were certain salary increases and other benefits granted foremen, is that correct?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is that in connection with—

Mr. Karasick: (Interposing) Mr. Examiner, that is Company's Exhibit 24, not Petitioner's Exhibit 24.

The Witness: I do not recall if there was tied up with that in any exhibit or not—if that was tied up in any exhibit or not.

Mr. Dahling: I think he testified that there were certain overtime arrangements made for foremen at that time.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) I hand you a copy of Company's Exhibit 24 and ask you if that is the document with reference to the change you testified to?

1596 A. Yes.

Q. The salary increases and the other benefits granted at this time, as referred to in Company's Exhibit 24, were increases and benefits which were granted to both exempt and non-exempt employees under the Fair Labor Standard Act, is that correct?

A. I believe they are.

Q. The exhibit itself so states?

Mr. Dahling: I think that has been completely covered, Mr. Examiner, hasn't it? The exhibits, of course, speak for themselves.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) I believe you also testified that foremen attended conferences with respect to these changes which were granted?

A. Yes.

Q. Did all the foremen in the plant attend these conferences?

A. I was a general foreman at that time. The foreman at that time, all the general foremen of the division met with the division manager and all the foremen and assistant foremen that worked for me met with me and I carried on the message in a two-way communication, you might say. There was a matter of two or three months that that thing was being discussed back and forth.

Q. Were these conferences—what was the purpose

1597 of these conferences? To inform them of the contemplated changes?

A. Well, if I remember correctly, at one time there was a plan to pay supervisors on a straight hourly basis and a lot of the foremen preferred that at that time. Naturally, if you are going to pay for overtime, that seems to be the easiest way of computing the wages earned. I know that was brought up with the division manager and at the same time it was brought out that if you missed a day during the week and if you worked on Saturday or Sunday—how the wages would be computed for that. That was kicked back and forth until everyone was presumably satisfied.

Q. Was my understanding correct, that these contemplated increases in salary and benefits were drafted and then the foremen, through conferences—I mean foremen of all grades—through conferences at one time or another, were informed of the changes contemplated and the changes that would go into effect?

A. That is right.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I do not think Mr. Karasick means to mislead the witness. He testified as to conferences only in the division where he was a foreman. I think that was what the witness had in mind.

The Witness: Yes, I am speaking of myself and the conferences in which I was directly connected.

Q. (By Mr. Karasick) So as to the other foremen 1598 you do not know?

A. I speak of the general foremen of the division I was in, the foremen working for me. Being a general foreman at that time, I was not familiar with how it was carried on in the rest of the plant.

Q. I believe with reference to the exhibit which shows on its face an indication that the Company desired the foremen to take up and the Union steward to take up grievances from the lower step to the higher stage in connection with that exhibit, you testified that the stewards wanted to go to the top and that it was necessary to indicate to them that they had to start at the lowest level and work up?

A. That is right, they weren't sticking to procedure.

Q. Why did the stewards want to go to the top?

A. Why?

Q. Yes.

A. There may be a number of different reasons. Really, I could not say, other than for political reasons of their own. They are by-passing their own district stewards when they are doing that. Maybe there was a feud between the district steward and themselves and they may go around the division to try to get something to gain their own political ends.

Q. Was it perhaps the finality of the decisions arrived at at the top stage of the grievance procedure which 1599 would induce the stewards to want to go to the top?

A. I don't believe so because there were too many times when they might get knocked down on it, you might say, and they would suffer defeat rather than gain their end.

Q. Is this your surmise or do you know that it was so?

A. I cannot speak for a steward, but naturally, it would be so knowing the actual happenings and assuming—I am assuming what might be going on in a steward's mind.

Q. Did any steward ever tell you?

A. Yes, stewards have made the crack that they were out to get the next election, plenty of times you find that true. That is strictly political, you know.

Q. You mean that in the sense that they wanted to be successful in the presentation of their grievances?

A. That is right.

Q. They did want to take them to the top and had to be told to start at the bottom and work up?

A. If they could gain something, they could get an answer back to their boss, you might say.

Q. Now, with reference to the shop rules and penalties for violations which is in evidence as Petitioner's Exhibit 24. I am not sure whether I understood you correctly to say foremen fixed the penalties of violations of rules not listed on that exhibit. When you so testified, if you did so testify, you meant within the regular limits that the 1600 foremen have of recommending actions which are then passed on up the line until final approval is had, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Are foremen regularly represented on the Work-to-Win Committee, or do they serve on that committee only sporadically?

A. I couldn't say for sure.

Q. How large is the committee?

A. I think there are three of each.

Q. Three of each what?

A. Three from Labor and three from Management.

Q. And the three from Labor would be the rank and file represented by the UAW in the plant?

A. Yes.

Q. And three from Management?

A. Yes.

Q. I see.

Mr. Karasick: No further questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Anything further from the witness?

Mr. Nelson: No questions.

Mr. Dahling: No questions.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee) Mr. Patzkowsky, am I correct in assuming that leaders are covered by a UAW contract?

A. Yes.

1601 Q. May I see that list of foremen attributes, or whatever it is called? Mr. Witness, you testified, I think, that you agreed with Mr. MacAuley's list making up his conception of the analysis of a foreman's job?

A. Yes.

Q. Which Mr. MacAuley read into the record?

A. Yes.

Q. And you recall that the list in substance was an itemized list of certain responsibilities?

A. That is right.

Q. To Management, to the workers, and thereby to Management and his responsibilities in connection with tools and equipment and thereby to Management and so on?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you an opinion, Mr. Patzkowsky, as to what the effect on these responsibilities would be if foremen were organized into a union and were recognized by the Company, if the Company recognized such a union of the foremen? First, the question is, have you an opinion?

A. Yes, I believe I have.

Q. Can you point out which of the items on that five-page list—let's say some of them, because the list is very long—which of the items you think might be affected adversely, if you so think, by the fact that the foremen were organized into the Foreman's Association of Amer-

1602 ica and the Company recognized that Association as their representative?

A. You say from this list?

Q. Yes, just pick out a few illustrations, you do not have to take them all.

A. Well, of course, according to this, he is responsible to the Management for production. In our past history of Unionism, it tends to stop the individualism of a person and he certainly would not attempt to increase production as he has previously had and as in the testimony which has been brought out here previously, the better workers do not produce any more than the average workers and if that held true, as it always has in the past with unions, that would have a tendency to cut down production in individual departments.

Q. Now, by the "past history of Unionism" what in general do you refer to?

A. Well, I think I can bring that down to Packard.

Q. Perhaps I can save some time. Do you refer to rank and file Unionism?

A. Yes.

Q. What you have said, then, would be a reason, would it not, or would it, why there should be no union among the rank and file in Packard.

A. As far as the individual is concerned in his progress and creative nature, as far as that is corcerned, 1603 he perhaps would be better off without a union. You see, at the present time, I might give you an illustration—at the present time if you get an excellent mechanic as a production man and he would like to transfer to the mechanical division and become a toolmaker and he has had five or six years seniority as a production worker, going from one machine to another learning machining methods and becoming a good mechanic and gaining experience—when he gets transferred in case he does, he does not retain all his seniority as a mechanic in the mechanical division, that he has gained at the Packard Motor Car Company as a whole and it ends up being a temporary job. If it weren't for the Union, he may go in as a toolmaker and become a Grade A or topnotch toolmaker and remain there.

Q. That is because—I may be wrong about this—is that because of the operation of the particular contract you happen to have with the UAW?

A. Oh, I presume it is that, and it is seniority rights.

I do not know of a contract in the industry that does not have seniority rights in its contract..

Q. Well, seniority or what you refer to as seniority "rights" are arrived at as a result of collective bargaining between the Company and the UAW, isn't that a fact?

A. Yes.

1604 Q. So that to an extent, am I correct in assuming, both the UAW and the Company have had a hand in creating those rights, to that extent?

A. Of the Company being forced into it. That has always been a main issue because it is the average number of people or the majority of number of people and workers that agree to that one. That is why it is taken into consideration. Now, when your supervision, which is a small percentage of the total number of workers that we have, and we have picked the choice from the rank and file—they certainly should be allowed to express their creativeness to make work easier and more efficient than other people so that by those methods they can advance themselves.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, now, am I correct then, in gathering from your testimony that, speaking generally, you think Unionism deters initiative and individual ambition?

The Witness: I agree with that.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee) Is that the reason why you think that foremen at Packard's should not belong to the Foreman's Association, and that Packard should not recognize the Foreman's Association?

A. That is my belief.

Q. Is that the only reason?

A. Well, of course, you could assume what may

1605 happen, if that did happen, which you have assumed, our training program would have to be changed. Of course, that is assuming again, I can't imagine of one being supervised by another one as foreman or as assistant foreman belonging to the same Union. Perhaps someone would want to discharge, we will say, a general foreman and you may be called upon, the representative or the steward of an assistant foreman, or an assistant foreman to pass on the qualifications of the general foreman. Now, I don't think that would be fair to the individuals.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, do you think a steward is a steward of an assistant foreman or is he a steward for the entire department?

The Witness: I figured he would be a steward for the entire department.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee) Well, all right. Then, am I to understand that as far as you are concerned so far, we have two reasons why you think foremen shouldn't be recognized or organized into the Foreman's Association or recognized by Packard; namely, one, it lessens individual initiative, and, two, the rank and file and the foreman, using the term generally, should not be in the same union?

A. I didn't mean to say rank and file. I meant to say that supervisors in different grades would be in the same—you see, an assistant foreman is supervised by a 1606 foreman and a general foreman.

Q. Yes.

A. Those three people have different grades, and a special assignment man, perhaps, working for a general foreman. He would have three different people working directly for him, and yet they belong to the same Union.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let's take the case simply of the assistant foreman and let's forget for the time being the foreman, the general foreman and the special assignment man. Do you think it would affect any of the attributes listed in those five pages which have been read into the record to have the assistant foremen alone in the Union of their own?

A. Well, as I stated before, it is still the same as far as the individual is concerned. You would tear down his initiative to advance, and as he is the direct supervisor or manager of the department, the industry as a whole would suffer. We wouldn't be progressive and as soon as you aren't progressive, why, the public will suffer, the cost is going to increase and your standards are going to decrease or be lowered.

Q. Why are employees in the rank and file promoted to the job of supervision?

A. Why are they?

Q. Yes.

1607 A. Well, I would best answer that because we can't get them from anyplace else.

Q. How is it you pick individuals for promotion rather than among the rank and file?

A. Well, in some cases the individuals have shown and told us or expressed to us that they would like to show their initiative and do a bigger job, and they have been more or less handicapped as the rank and file worker to do any of that, yet, nevertheless, by talking to the foreman, becoming acquainted and expressing what he would like to do and showing us his utmost ability on the job that he has, presumably why a job setter, I am speaking of machine shops now, and those people with the experience in that particular line of work are the ones that are entitled to be promoted to a supervisor's job.

Q. In showing, to use your phrase, in showing the utmost ability on the job which he has, would he thereby, at least in some cases indicate a degree of initiative?

A. Yes.

Q. An individual ambition?

A. Yes.

Q. Am I to understand then, that it is from that desire as expressed to his superior, which is generally the basis for advancement?

A. Yes.

1608 Q. So that, does it not come down to this then, that you think the assistant foreman should not be organized into a union of their own, limited to them alone, because you think it would deter or lessen their individual initiative?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I want to point out something to you, Mr. Patzkowsky, and I want to point it out to you because I want you to appreciate any possible implications in your answer.

Your previous testimony along the same line, so far as it appears as to rank and file, would indicate, whether valid or not—I am not passing on that point—would indicate whether valid or not, a reason why rank and file should not belong to the Union.

Now, as far as assistant foremen are concerned, you have indicated only that reason, if I understand your testimony correctly.

A. That is one of the reasons.

Q. Well, what other reason is there?

A. As I stated, that it would—in that particular group, you wouldn't have progressiveness in the department in itself. Now, you have overlapping assistant foremen, you have an assistant foreman that is in charge of production work. In the same department you may have an assistant foreman who is an assistant foreman of inspection which is the control of the standards. The standards may 1609 get to the very low point and the inspection foreman never notify anyone concerned that they are right on the ragged edge. You have assistant foremen in the tool repair, and the same thing may carry on from them, the same as machine repair. So, from that point, as it has always in the past, Union men protecting one another, shielding one another, it certainly wouldn't improve the product if conditions were such.

Q. How do you know?

A. Well, we are just assuming these things. As I say, from the past history of it, we know that Union men shield one another.

Q. Well, do you mean the past history of the UAW?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, we have had the Foreman's Association in there—I don't mean recognized—but it has been in there or at least, the foremen have been members of it in your plant for how long?

A. I couldn't say definitely for how long.

Q. Can you say whether or not the fact that they are members of the Foreman's Association at Packard has adversely affected their jobs; that is to say, has adversely affected the manner in which they did their work?

A. At times I believe it has.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Can you illustrate?

1610 A. Well, when they were out on strike, it certainly didn't help their job any.

Q. Other than that?

A. At times it has looked very suspicious when parts got onto the assembly line that were passed through inspection by the inspection people, that there may have been good will between the production and inspection foremen.

Q. Have you any evidence to support that beyond the fact that you indicate a suspicion?

A. No. That would be quite hard to trace down.

Q. Anything else?

A. No, I don't believe so.

Q. So, we have then, the strike and the suspicion?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if I understand the Company's claim correctly, it claims that the strike of last April or May of 1944 was a strike by the Association for recognition, is that right?

A. I believe so.

Q. To that extent, then I would assume—if I am wrong you can correct me on it—if the Association had been recognized by the Company, of course, that means obviously there would have been no strike for recognition, at least there would have been no occasion for it. That follows?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, is there anything else you want to add to 1611 any of the answers that you have given or to any of the questions I have asked?

A. I don't think so.

Mr. Dahling: I think the witness should be given an opportunity. The subject gone into is a subject that has not been brought out before, and you are asking him to go through a long list and state certain things.

Mr. Patzkowsky, have you been a witness before? Have you had any experience in a case?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Dahling: This is your first appearance?

The Witness: That is right.

Mr. Dahling: I believe the witness should be given an opportunity to examine into this matter now. Apparently, Mr. Examiner, you are going into the whole question of the possible effect of the unionization on the Company. That is the unionization of the Foreman's Association, which is a very broad subject and on which this witness, if he is to testify, should have an opportunity to prepare himself.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I have no objection to that at all.

Mr. Dahling: So, I don't believe he should be asked at this present time on the stand if he has anything further to say until he has a chance to look into it somewhat and look it over.

1612 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Naturally, my question asking the witness whether he had anything further means has he anything further to say at this time. I appreciate the fact that the question is a difficult one. It wasn't asked by other counsel of this witness and I have no objection at all. I think it is perfectly proper for him to come back at some subsequent stage of the proceeding and add anything else he cares to add on that subject. It is not an easy matter at all.

Mr. Nelson: I would like to ask the witness a couple of questions at this time.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Mr. Nelson: On which he is informed, I assume.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I am not complaining that you are not a good witness, Mr. Patzkowsky. I should think they would be satisfied.

Mr. Dahling: I think Mr. Patzkowsky is a very good witness for the purpose for which he was called, but I think this new subject being brought up the way it was, the witness should have an opportunity to look into it somewhat and crystallize his ideas on it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is perfectly all right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Now, in this Packard Plant, there has been at all times since the start of the program

1613 they are working on now, Army and Navy inspection, hasn't there?

A. Yes.

Q. And the plant is fully protected by the FBI and other policing agencies?

A. Yes.

Q. It has its own policing agencies, doesn't it, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And any wilful interference with production there you would recognize as an offense, wouldn't you?

A. That is right.

Q. And that is generally known in the plant, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Certainly known to the foremen, isn't it, that any sabotage of the war effort would be a serious matter?

A. That is right.

Q. You knew that as a foreman?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was common knowledge among the foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, since October of 1942 the production of the Packard Plant has gone, I would say, steadily up, to make an understatement, actually it has gone up by leaps and bounds, hasn't it?

A. I wouldn't say that.

1614 Q. Well, then, let's be content with steadily.

A. I couldn't hardly say that. It all depends on what you mean by "production".

Q. Well, you have got 36,000 people out there now, and you had how many, about eight or nine thousand to start with?

A. In car division days, you mean?

Q. Yes.

A. Before the war, before we entered the program?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. But, of course, it has gone up even compared to those figures, hasn't it, production has steadily gone up?

A. We have consumed more man hours.

Q. And you have put out more production per man, haven't you?

A. No, I wouldn't say that.

Q. You wouldn't say that?

A. Not more production per man.

Q. Hasn't the award of the Army and Navy recognized that fact, and hasn't the award of the Army and Navy recognizing that fact been granted Packard?

A. I don't think they go into it in that consideration.

Q. Well—

A. (Interposing) Of course, you have no compari-
1615 son. If we were to start back building automobiles and we built so many per day with 8,000 people and then we put on 32,000 people and we built five times more automobiles than we did before and you would only increase the man hours four times, that would be a direct comparison.

Q. Haven't you done just that and better?

A. We have no comparison.

Q. Since October, 1942?

A. Until now?

Q. Right up until now. I will leave out the period of the strike.

A. I say, I don't know.

Q. You don't know?

A. You couldn't even compile figures to that effect.

Q. Well, the cold figures of production would more than amplify my statement and support it, wouldn't they, Mr. Patzkowsky?

A. No.

Q. Since you started the war program, hasn't your production gone right up to the height where you have even had to have cutbacks?

A. Perhaps I misunderstood you. I thought you made the statement that parts were produced per man hours.

Q. That is exactly what I mean ultimately by what I say. It is the truth, isn't it?

1616 A. I don't follow that one at all.

Q. Aren't you producing more engines, marine and this Rolls Royce?

A. With less people than we did in 1941?

Q. Let's take the absolute proposition. You are producing more engines, aren't you, than you did in October, 1942?

A. I don't think that is true generally.

Q. You don't think it is true?

A. No.

Q. The absolute figures?

A. No.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean regardless of the number of employees?

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Regardless of the number of workers, you are producing more engines, aren't you?

A. Not in the marine division. I think in 1942 we were producing more engines, I believe. I am not familiar with it, but I believe in 1941 more engines were produced than we are producing at the present time.

Q. Then you are not familiar with the production out there at all, are you?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. You are?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you had a cutback lately in the marine division?

1617 A. We had several.

Q. You have had several. Up to the time you had the cutback, the first cutback in the marine engine division, didn't you steadily increase production in marine engines?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Now, you are still producing your full quota of Rolls Royce airplane engines?

A. No.

Q. Have you had cutbacks on that?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you get the first one?

A. I think September 1st.

Q. Of 1944?

A. Yes.

Q. And up to the time you had the first cutback in the Rolls Royce engines, you had steadily increased production, hadn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, as a matter of fact, you had increased production per man up to that time, per man employed, hadn't you?

A. I wouldn't say that honestly, whether we have or have not.

Q. What is the matter with that statement? Isn't it true?

A. We have no figures to base your theory on from these operation sheets. If the standard hours were cut 1618 universally throughout and we knew exactly how many standard hours were cut off the entire engine, yes, but during the period, we just have estimated times which weren't standard times, and we haven't as yet even completed the entire time study on the Rolls Royce engine on all its detail parts. So, we can't say that we have produced more per man hour than when we started.

Q. You are apparently not willing to say that although the Foreman's Association has been organized nearly one hundred percent from October, 1942 to the present in the Packard Plant—

Mr. Dahling: (Interposing) There is no testimony to that effect. It shows you have 872 out of some 1100 or so.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) All of the people that we want in. We have about 98 percent, Mr. Patzkowsky.

Mr. Dahling: I don't think there is anything in the record to that effect.

Mr. Nelson: I think there is.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) And you are not willing to say that production has gone steadily up with that situation existing among the foremen in the Packard Plant?

A. No.

Q. No?

A. I base my answer—

Q. (Interposing) Do you want to explain that answer?

1619 A. Just a little bit. We receive periodic reports from the Government so far as loafing conditions are concerned in the plant and they tell us that we have not improved in the last two years.

Q. You haven't improved?

A. That is right.

Q. You charge it to the organization of the foremen?

A. No, not necessarily to the organization.

Q. Any part of it to it?

A. No.

Q. Now, would it have been any worse if the Company had recognized the foremen and dealt collectively with them, in your opinion?

A. It could have been.

Q. It could have been worse?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Well, I asked you for not a possibility but an opinion, if you will venture one?

A. We have had difficulty in the foremen of stepping up to their responsibility to take their responsibility, due to any inexperience of some of the new ones, if they knew that they were being protected and cared for by a union, perhaps wouldn't try to advance themselves and to create better human relations, to produce more and a better product.

Now, we have quite a few people that have been 1620 put onto the roll as a supervisor that are taking night courses and educating themselves on their own time to do a better job for us, and, of course, it is kind of hard-hearted to say, because we might be afraid of the axe, but at the same time if they were being protected and knew that no one else was producing, they might sit back—I say, "they might"—sit back and know that there is no use replacing them because the next fellow that would come along would operate the same way that they have been operating.

1621 Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Now, have you had and do you have or rather, have you had for the past two years and four months and do you now have a competent set of foremen, generally speaking, at Packard's?

A. Generally speaking, I would say yes.

Q. I don't mean anything absolutely overwhelming but the foremen as a rule are competent and sincere and sincerely devoted to their job, at Packard's, is that a fact?

A. If you are asking for facts—

Q. I am asking for facts and nothing else.

A. When I was general manager I was told by a foreman that he could take off as much time as he pleased and he could run around with people that were working for him as much as he pleased, because the Foreman's Association would protect his job.

Q. Would you like to give us that man's name?

A. If you care to have it, but he is not with Packard's any more.

Q. I would like to have his name.

A. His name is Mayday.

Q. When did he tell you that?

A. Approximately a month after the Foreman's strike.

Q. Now, I want to come back to my question which is, whether in your opinion a foreman, in your expe-

1622 rience, the foremen at the Packard plant have been for somewhat over two years and are now a definitely competent set of men for that purpose?

A. For what purpose?

Q. For the purpose of supervising the Packard factory?

A. Yes, they have been that for years.

Q. They have had a competent supervisory force and they have one now?

A. I would say so.

Q. Will you tell me what you would suggest as the reason why those men individually or collectively would receive any benefit or credit for protecting an incompetent or dishonest supervisor out there? Just what benefit would they receive from a program of that kind?

Mr. Donovan: That could come back from a Union man who could tell what objectives they had. All this man sees is the results. You better question some Union man about that.

Mr. Nelson: I am asking him, he is on the stand, let him suggest.

Mr. Donovan: You are asking him something that goes on in the mind of a Union man for his several objectives. He is not able to answer that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

The Witness: I wouldn't know.

1623 Q. (By Mr. Nelson): You cannot think of any benefits that they would get out of a program of that kind?

A. I never gave it much thought.

Q. Mayday was discharged?

A. Yes.

Q. Did the Foreman's Association interpose any objection whatsoever to his discharge? They didn't, is that correct, is that the fact?

A. Perhaps because they did not have anyone to interpose their objection to.

Q. And well, perhaps they did not like that kind of foreman. Wouldn't that be another, perhaps, Mr. Patzkowsky?

A. Well, they had to take my word for it and they did interpose for him.

Q. They did interpose for him? You are then changing your answer now?

A. No.

Q. Who interposed for Mayday?

A. Another representative.

Q. Who do you mean now? Well, we will have to have more names, now that you have given us Mayday and said that somebody interposed for him. Who interposed for him?

A. Charles Hardan.

Q. Was Hardan at that time an officer of the Fore-
1624 man's Association of America?

A. I couldn't say.

Q. As a matter of fact, he has never been an officer, to your knowledge, isn't that so, Mr. Patzkowsky?

A. No, to my knowledge, no.

Q. Of course not. Was he a friend of Mayday's?

A. I presume so but I do not know he was a particular friend or not.

Q. You know the officers of the Association, do you not?

A. I would say I do not know all of them on the Executive Board.

Q. But you do know the prominent ones?

A. I believe Charlie was one of them.

Q. An officer of the Association?

A. I believe he had some minor job.

Q. Well, then, what job would you suggest he had?

A. I believe he was a representative.

Q. What kind of representative?

A. Of the Foreman's Association.

Q. What would you suggest by way of his office?

A. I don't know just how they do operate, he may have been a steward.

Q. Did he use the name of the Association in making a defense of Mayday?

1625 A. He said he would take it up with the other members of the Board, that was the statement he made.

Q. And that is what Hardan said?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is the only thing that happened by way of a defense of Mayday?

A. Yes, as far as I know, they may have contacted other people.

Q. Mayday was discharged and the discharge stuck?

A. Yes.

Q. And there was no disturbance by way of a strike or anything of the kind, was there, as a result of that discharge?

A. No.

Q. Has the Company cut the standard hours on the Rolls Royce engines since they started that program?

A. As a total?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know, but I do not think so. As I said before, they have not completed the entire time study. I know that they have cut the standard hours on certain operations and they have increased the standard hours on other operations.

Q. Well, on the whole Rolls Royce, aren't the hours cut and cut by the Company, the standard hours?

1626 A. I couldn't say. I don't think we even—

Mr. Dahling: You mean the hours per week that they are working?

The Witness: You see, Mr. Nelson, we have never had an entire time study on the Rolls Royce. If we are doing any time cutting it would be a cutting of a guess estimated time.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): You have got an hour per engine allowance for the Rolls Royce, haven't you?

A. Estimated, yes.

Q. And that has been cut, hasn't it?

A. On some operations it is and on some it has been increased. As a general overall picture, I would not say whether it has been increased or decreased.

Q. You don't seem to think that the Company has much to boast about in the last couple of years out there in their program, do you?

A. I wouldn't say that.

Q. But it would be a distinct accomplishment if, for a man employed, the production went up, wouldn't it?

A. Certainly.

Q. And that is what has happened, hasn't it?

A. I don't know. I can say this, I doubt if there is anyone at Packard's that does know.

Q. You don't know whether it is a fact and you
1627 don't whether there is anybody that would know, so I could not call anybody else and ask them the same question?

A. No.

Q. What is the matter, don't they know what they are doing up there?

Mr. Donovan: I will ask that be stricken from the record. If counsel wants to subpoena any witnesses he can do so.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes. "What is the matter out there?" and the answer that follows, if any, is stricken as argumentative.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson): Has there been a cut in price of engines by the Government?

A. I don't know a thing about the prices.

Q. That is something you do not know about?

A. No.

Q. I suppose that there would be somebody out there that would know what they are paying for them?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I hope so.

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Nelson: Who would that be?

The Witness: The Executive Vice-President.

Mr. Nelson: What is his name?

The Witness: James Marks.

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

1628 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is there anything further from this witness?

Mr. Dahling: Not tonight, Mr. Examiner, I wonder if we can adjourn. It is now five o'clock.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, we will adjourn until 9:30 tomorrow morning, gentlemen.

(Whereupon, at 5:00 o'clock P. M., Tuesday, January 2, 1945, the hearing was adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 3, 1945, at 9:30 o'clock A. M.)

PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Gentlemen, are we ready to proceed?

Mr. Dahling: Yes.

ELMER G. PATZKOWSKY

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Patzkowsky, yesterday afternoon you were asked certain questions with respect to how a foreman's responsibilities would be affected if he were a member of the Foreman's Association of America and if that particular Union was recognized by the Company and the Company was required to collectively bargain with it. I would like to ask you further questions along that line. Take this situation: Suppose all of your supervision, that is, the foremen of the three classes and the special assignment men belonged to the Foreman's Association and the Company was forced to recognize and collectively bargain with that Union, in your opinion, could those foremen carry out their responsibilities to Management properly?

A. I don't believe they could.

Q. Let's take a few of the major headings on this list that has been copied into the record entitled "Analysis of a Foreman's job". In your opinion, if these 1632 foremen were members of this Union and the Company was forced to collectively bargain with them, could these foremen interpret the policies of the Company regarding the welfare, safety and adjusting of grievances and wages and promotions in a manner that you feel would be proper and satisfactory to Management?

Mr. Nelson: I don't see how that is a helpful opinion.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer.

Mr. Nelson: There are too many suppositious elements in it.

The Witness: In my opinion, if I was taking the decisions of the supervisors, I couldn't rely on them due to the fact that I would not know if he was making the decision for his own personal gain in his own Union or with the rank and file Union, which eventually, perhaps he would use for his own gain anyway.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) In other words, you feel that if the situation I have described did exist as a fact, there would be the matter of divided loyalty between Management and the Foreman's Association of America?

A. That is correct.

Q. And consequently, you would not be able to rely upon the act and actions taken and the recommendations made by the foremen because you would not know whether the particular act or thing done was to foster the 1633 Union or to foster the interests of Management, is that what you meant by your answer?

A. That is correct.

Q. And I believe you also indicated that you felt that if the Foreman's Association of America was given collective bargaining, there might be some question as to whether you could rely upon your foremen in dealing with the UAW Union, because they might want to be on a friendly relation and get the assistance of that Union at a later time when the Foreman's Association might need it.

A. I believe they would.

Q. Now, in your opinion, could you rely upon the actions of the foremen in rating the worker and making recommendations with respect to this worker in the UAW—say a recommendation to the post of assistant foreman?

A. I could not rely on it due to the fact that the basic principles of seniority in all unions seem to be present. I think he would be recommending the individual with the greater seniority rather than with the greatest ability.

Q. When you come to recommendations for promotions and transfers, would your same answers apply to that? That you would be fearful that he might consider seniority alone without ability?

A. Yes, it would.

Q. How about his responsibility for material and 1634 equipment? Would you feel that if the foreman was a member of the Union you could rely, to the extent that you have heretofore, on the matter in which he handled his materjal and handled his equipment?

A. With regard to material and equipment, it comes down to the cost control of running the department and in past dealings with the Union, they have disregarded cost entirely. The leaders of the Union, regardless of how good—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: By the way, which union?

The Witness: Well, the one I have had experience with is the CIO Union.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Go ahead.

The Witness: With the Union, regardless how good the relationship with Management is, the leaders of the Union still make demands to help their members and with no regard for cost.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) In other words, they want to keep their members working and that is their first objective and how much it costs the Company is secondary?

A. I doubt whether it is even secondary. It just does not enter as far as they are concerned.

Q. You feel that it is your opinion that if the Foreman's Association had collective bargaining, that it would not only be interested in working with the UAW Union, but also would be more interested in maintaining the 1635 employment of its members than cutting down costs for the Company?

A. I believe that would be correct.

Q. That would be your opinion?

A. That is right.

Q. In your opinion, what would be the effect of the unionization of foremen and the granting of the foremen of collective bargaining, on the foreman's responsibility to suggest improvement that might reduce costs in manpower?

A. Well, if it had anything to do with the reduction of the force—one of the basic principles of all unions seems to be the same and I believe that they would hesitate in making those kinds of suggestions.

Q. For the reason that it might affect the number of foremen that would be employed in the first instance?

A. That is right.

Q. And also it might affect the number of hourly rated men that were employed?

A. That is correct.

Q. That would be employed?

A. Yes.

Q. In your opinion, would you be able to rely upon the foreman in case this organization had collective bargaining, to manage his department in such a way as to bring about the highest production?

A. I don't believe he could.

1636 Q. In other words, it would be a question of your not being certain that he was exerting his best efforts for the Company?

A. He would have divided loyalty. If he knew the majority of his Union had other ideas, irregardless of what his own personal ideas might be, he would have to operate according to the majority of the members of his Union.

Q. In your opinion, when a union is organized and given collective bargaining, does the same friendly attitude exist between the members of the organization and the Company, or is there a tendency for the organization and its members to become antagonistic to the Company?

Q. Well, in the past, the people that are in the bargaining agency for the Union have assumed an antagonistic attitude towards Management.

Q. Isn't that attitude reflected down through the ranks of the workers themselves?

A. That is right.

Q. As a matter of fact, these leaders have to be elected, do they not, in a Union?

A. Yes.

Q. That is according to the testimony in this case?

A. Yes.

Q. And it is necessary for them to make constant demands to keep in the limelight, let us say?

1637 A. Yes, and secure extra votes for the coming elections.

Q. To cement the Union, hasn't it been a fact, that the leaders have attacked Management?

A. Yes.

Q. And you feel that if the Foreman's Association were permitted to collectively bargain, the same thing might result as has in the past with the other Unions?

A. Well, their primary beliefs are the same and I could not believe anything else.

Q. That was so testified in this case, was it not?

A. I believe it was.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What was?

Mr. Dahling: That the Union principles are the same as to the Foreman's Association of America as with the other Unions.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Patzkowsky, could you rely, we will say, on the foremen who were members of this organization who had collective bargaining, to see that the men remained on their jobs until quitting time and did not crowd the clock alleys, in your opinion?

A. In my opinion I would not be too sure that he would because he may be wanting to set a policy that would give an advantage to his own union.

Q. And also, might he not want to work with the members of the rank and file union in order to keep on 1638 a friendly basis with the Union?

A. Definitely so.

Q. And that would be one of the reasons why you feel you could not rely on the foremen properly carrying out that job that he had?

A. That is right.

Q. On the question of the responsibility to maintain discipline, you believe that if the Foreman's Association of America was organized and granted collective bargaining that you could put full reliance upon the foremen properly carrying disciplinary measures as to the rank and file union?

A. In my opinion I do not believe he would.

Q. In other words, you could not rely upon him in that connection?

A. I could not rely upon him, yes.

Q. He might, for the purpose of remaining on friendly terms with the other Union, and so he could get its assistance for the Foreman's Association or get its assistance later be lax in his application of discipline?

A. Yes.

Q. Under the present procedure, the grievance procedure, the foreman is the first step in Management that considers grievances of the workers. What is your opinion as to whether you could continue that procedure if 1639 the Foreman's Association was given collective bargaining rights?

A. I believe that particular step of the grievance procedure would have to be changed.

Q. And it would have to be given, as far as Management is concerned, to someone whose undivided loyalty was to Management?

A. That is right.

Q. There has been some testimony and some exhibits admitted in this proceeding with respect to the testing of materials. Take this situation: Say that you were testing some tools or materials that had been supplied to the Company by a concern that was then in a fight with the Foreman's Association over, we will say, recognition and your foremen were members of the Foreman's Association of America and had been given the right to collectively bargain. In your opinion, could you rely upon the report of a foreman in your plant who made that test?

A. In my opinion, I could not rely upon him.

Q. You would be fearful that he might, through and because of his Union affiliations, turn in an improper or biased report due to the fact that some of his brothers were in a strike fight or in a collective bargaining fight with the Company furnishing the material?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I want to point out that even though there has been no objection to the form of 1640 your questions, many of which have been extremely leading, it makes it difficult to know how much weight should be given to the answers to such questions.

Mr. Dahling: I will try to make them less leading. Since some of them are so apparent I did not think very much of the leading character of the questions.

Mr. Nelson: The reason I did not object was because they would not be excluded. That is the reason I did not object. I am pretty well aware of Mr. Dahling's opinion and I do not know whether Mr. Patzkowsky shares them when he says he does. That is all right with me. I have tried for many years to persuade Mr. Dahling to a more enlightened view in these things without any success, which leads me to be perilous of my own powers of persuasion. In any event, I did not make any objection on this record.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I gather that neither of you have been able to persuade the other.

Mr. Nelson: They have recognized the difficulty of persuading me and recognize that.

Mr. Dahling: That is one point on which we are in complete agreement.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Patzkowsky, we will say that the CIO or the AF of L or some other Union should attempt to organize the foremen of the Packard Motor Car Company after the Foreman's Association of Amer-
1641 ica have been given the right to collectively bargain and that such an organizational plan was in progress by this other Union, what effect do you think that would have upon the Packard Motor Car Company in its production?

Mr. Karasick: I would like to raise an objection at this point.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you read the question, please? I missed the last part of it.

(Question read.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Have you finished your objection, Mr. Karasick?

Mr. Karasick: I merely stated that I wish to make an objection. I would like to state the grounds of my objection, and that is that the question itself is not only hypothetical but contrary to the evidence already in this record.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: To which evidence do you refer?

Mr. Karasick: I am referring to the fact that both the constitution and by-laws of the Foreman's Association of America, if I recall correctly, and the written agreements that are in evidence and have been introduced in evidence show that the Foreman's Association of America has an organization and has pledged itself as an organization not to affiliate with another organization.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Suppose they change their 1642 minds tomorrow?

Mr. Karasick: I suppose anything can happen.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is what he is asking the witness. He may answer.

Mr. Nelson: Would it help any if I would concede that all of the incidents of organized labor might follow the recognition of the foremen? That I do not know. Every eventuality that experience has taught us in the organization of labor is a possibility. I suppose I should concede that is so, but that it is probable, I do not concede. There is no evidence to support that supposition, I do not believe.

Mr. Donovan: We will accept the concession. I think the rest of it is a matter for argument.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In other words, you want me to take the concession that two and two are four?

Mr. Nelson: That is what it amounts to.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right, I will take the concession.

Mr. Nelson: The probability is the thing which the witness does not address himself, nor does counsel. There is a possibility of anything taking place, practically speaking, of an incident of the organized state of the foremen out there, that is possible and conceded on the record.

1643 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, I suppose anything is possible. It is even possible that we might get through with this case sometime.

Mr. Nelson: That is something I am not so sure of.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: At any rate, the witness can answer the question.

The Witness: I believe it was brought out on previous testimony that if anyone else was trying to organize into the Foreman's Association or in that particular rank, a fight would be brought about—of course, that would create confusion and it would slow up production of the shop entirely at the same time. One of the principles of unions is that in numbers they have strength. If they weren't gaining their point, perhaps a lot of the people would rather join a union that had more members than the one they are affiliated with at the present time.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) In other words, you feel that the mere fact that the Foreman's Association is independent at the present time does not mean that it will or can remain independent?

A. That is right.

Q. If, of course, it was not independent, but was affiliated with the CIO, you would have a situation of your supervisors who would have the power to recommend the firing and disciplining of workers in the same union 1644 with workers themselves. What do you think of that situation as far as Management is concerned?

A. Well, you just wouldn't have a grievance procedure where you needed it the most. Where you were directing the working force of the people.

Q. What reliance could you put upon the actions of your foremen and their recommendations in connection with the rank and file workers who were members of the same Union?

A. You couldn't rely upon them at all in that case.

Q. You would have no confidence in them?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, we will say that you have this Foreman's Association of America with collective bargaining and one of the general foremen is a member of the Foreman's Association and one of his foremen under him, a foreman that he supervises, does not belong to the Foreman's Association, what would be your attitude toward any reports that might be made by the general foreman with respect to this non-member foreman?

A. Well, you would have the same condition that we just stated as if the foreman belonged to the same union as rank and file.

Q. What reliance or confidence, in your opinion, could you place upon the recommendation of this general foreman?

1645 A. You couldn't have any confidence or reliance upon him in any of his decisions with regard to his fellow members.

Q. In other words, you would also have to question whether or not this act was done, having in mind the report was made, having in mind the best interests of the Union or the best interests of the Company, is that right?

A. His loyalty to the Union, perhaps would be greater than his loyalty to Management in that case.

Q. At any rate, there being this divided loyalty, Management could not have the same confidence in any report he might make?

A. No.

Q. I suppose the same situation would exist if the general foreman was a member of the Foreman's Association and the foreman was a member of a rival Foreman's Association, would it not?

A. Their sympathies, perhaps, would be in general the same.

Q. In other words, the general foreman—you could not rely upon the general foreman's actions in connection with a member of a rival Foreman's Union, is that what you mean?

A. That is correct.

Q. Of course, you have three grades of foremen, general foremen, foremen, and assistant foremen. If the 1646 foremen are given collective bargaining through the Foreman's Association, how would you look upon reports made by a foreman as to a general foreman—pardon me, a general foreman as to a foreman or a foreman as to an assistant foreman, they all being members of the same union?

A. Well, I would not rely on the reports due to the fact that his loyalty to his fellow members in the Union would be so partial in that extent or that direction that they wouldn't be of any value to me.

Q. I suppose it would be true, Mr. Patzkowsky, that there might be foremen who would make very proper reports without being affected or having their reports affected by their Union affiliations. That is probable, is it not?

Mr. Nelson: You mean, Mr. Dahling, an exception here and there that had some merit in his judgment?

Mr. Dahling: I would say an exception, or where the reports would not be in any way affected by the fact of unionization.

The Witness: That probably would be true until the Union leaders found out about it.

Mr. Nelson: We feel flattered of its existence, even if for a moment.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Patzkowsky, then, as I get your testimony, it is generally to the effect that 1647 Management could not have confidence in these reports because they would not know when they might be made, having in mind the inference of the Union rather than the Company, is that true.

A. Yes, that is true.

Q. I take it from your testimony, Mr. Patzkowsky, that in your opinion a foreman must be independent. I think you so testified.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you elaborate a little on that? What, in your opinion, as far as Management, top Management is concerned, should be the position of a foreman as a supervisor?

A. Well, he definitely should operate as an individual. He is in reality a manager of a small group. His ideas must be carried out so that he can operate as an individual.

Q. In other words, he is in competition with his other foremen?

A. That is correct.

Q. And that is the position that he gets into as far as Management is concerned when he leaves the rank and file?

A. That is right. We must keep competition if we want to keep the standards of our product up to normal.

Q. In other words, you want competition so that the best men will be promoted to continue running your company is that it?

1648 A. Right.

Q. And you feel that if you had a Foreman's Association with rights to collectively bargain, that that would mean seniority divisions and would result in taking away from Management the full freedom of promoting people on the basis of ability?

A. Seniority would be the big item.

Q. It is a fact, isn't it, Mr. Patzkowsky, that it is the foremen who contact workers direct in the Packard organization?

A. That is right.

Q. Your division manager and assistant division manager and superintendents do not have really a direct contact with the workers?

A. That is right.

Q. They must, of course, rely on the reports that come to them from the foremen, including the general foremen, foremen and assistant foremen?

A. That is correct.

Q. I believe you testified that if this Foreman's Association was granted the right to collectively bargain you would feel that you could not fully rely upon these reports that came up the line from the foreman level?

A. No, we would have lack of confidence in them, due to the fact that we would not know where his 1649 loyalty was greatest, with the Union or with Management.

Mr. Dahling: You may cross examine.

Recross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Patzkowsky, I suppose your studies have brought you to the conclusion that there are some things that are true and that may be accepted like the one suggested by the Examiner, two times two is four. There are certain principles that are true wherever you apply them. Isn't that a fact?

A. That is right.

Q. And it would not make any difference whether you said two times two was four in one language or another, it would still be four, wouldn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, there is nothing new about competition, is there?

A. No.

Q. It is an old principle of human action, isn't it?

A. Well, there are new ideas being expressed each day.

Q. The principle itself is just the same, no matter how it is expressed?

A. That is right.

Q. It has been expressed, so far as we know, in the activities of the human race and the animal kingdom and even the vegetable kingdom and other forces of nature, isn't that so?

A. Well, I don't know if you can class competition—

1650 Q. (Interposing) Well, then, let's stick to the human factor and the human being for the time being. After all, that is what we are concerned with.

A. Yes.

Q. The probable reactions of a human being.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let's stick to that. I am not worried about the competition between one turnip and another.

Mr. Nelson: Put them too close together and you will see what happens.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) What is the one thing that competition has always produced? Everywhere, all the time and the more intelligent the agent the more promptly it is produced?

A. What is your question?

Q. What does that competition and has that competition always produced everywhere, all the time? The inevitable consequence of competition is what, in one word?

A. In my opinion it is—

Q. Well, let me give it to you. It is combination or agreement, isn't that it? Isn't that the inevitable product of competition?

A. Well, I don't believe so.

Q. Well, that is what it produced among the foremen in the Packard Motor Car factory, wasn't it? Two and a half years ago your system of competition produced the 1651 Foreman's Association of America and that included every member of the supervisory group in these levels except two or three, didn't it?

A. According to your statements, yes.

Q. According to the figures given by your counsel here, Mr. Patzkowsky, that is what it produced, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Your point is that you propose to destroy the combination and repudiate the agreement, is that right?

A. I don't know that we had an agreement.

Q. You knew there was an agreement among these men, is that right? And you wanted to get the agreement done away with in some way, didn't you?

A. We would like to have them express their individuality.

Q. Well, do you think that that combination or agreement rules out the expression of individuality? Is that another one of your ideas?

A. In my opinion, yes.

Q. Well, I would like an answer to that question.

A. I say that in my opinion, to a great extent, it does.

Q. Then you say the unrestrained savage expresses more individuality than the average civilized citizen of this country under the present state of affairs? Would you say that?

A. Under the present state?

1652 Q. Yes.

A. I wouldn't say that.

Q. Our agreement is a social contract, to a limited extent, to a certain point.

A. Yes.

Q. And that enabled us to express a different type of individuality, didn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Is one preferable to the other in your mind?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Do you prefer the average American of the present day to the average Indian of Columbus' day, as you understand it?

A. Well, I don't know.

Q. Which would you rather be?

A. I guess some of the Indians lived in a warmer climate.

Q. We are living in a stern climate, as things look outdoors today. But continuing, don't you think that your talk about individuality has failed to take into account all of the factors, Mr. Patzkowsky?

A. Well, I suppose we can argue for years on all the factors in individuality.

Q. I am talking about the foremen at the Packard Plant and I am taking you as an educated man because you have had two or three or four years of college, is that right?

1653 A. That is right.

Q. You used another word which interested me, but I do not propose to exhaust the subject and I do not think that I should impose on this record. Let me ask you whether you think we are right in giving some credit to the Company and to Management for using good judgment in the selections that they have made Are we entitled to do that at the Packard Company in this case?

A. In the selection of what?

Q. In the selection of workers or foremen?

A. Oh, I believe we have shown good judgment in the selection and promotion of men in a lot of cases.

Q. Isn't it true that the Packard Management has done the best the Company could in selecting a competent group of supervision and an adequate force of workingmen?

A. I believe so.

Q. Now, having selected them, the Company has retained as best it could, the best among them, hasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Therefore, the term seniority isn't a bald statement of lapse of time. It has a very definite connotation, at least, at the Packard Company of capacity and ability and character, isn't that so?

A. Up until now it has.

Q. In other words, do you want me to believe that 1654 you think or you want the Examiner to believe that you think that the Company has kept the men five or ten or fifteen or thirty-five years knowing them to be incompetent or of questionable character?

A. No.

Q. Therefore, the term seniority connotates not only lapse of time in employment but it connotates also the Company's judgment that the man has character and a capacity for a task for which it selected him, isn't that so?

A. That is so.

Q. So when you come to a consideration of seniority, you have involved in that the Company's judgment of the character and capacity of the man, necessarily, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. The only area in which you come to a conflict is when you measure that capacity of that particular man as compared to the capacity of another man, isn't that so?

A. That is right.

Q. Are the guards at the Packard Plant members of the CIO?

A. Yes.

Q. How long have they been members?

A. I couldn't give you the exact date, because I do not know.

Q. Well, it has been a couple of years, hasn't it, at 1655 least? My recollection would indicate about four. How wrong am I?

A. I cannot say. I am sure I don't know.

Q. Do you know how many guards there are altogether?

A. I could not give you that figure either.

Q. Do they have a separate Local or are they members of Local 190?

A. They have a separate Local.

Q. Affiliated with the CIO?

A. That is right.

Q. And have been for some years?

A. I wouldn't say years because I don't know.

Q. Well, let's say a substantial time. Then, it isn't just a recent occurrence of the last few months or weeks?

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Denison tells me, Mr. Nelson, that it is a year and a half.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) All right, a year and a half. What has the Company been doing with the guards' reports, Mr. Patzkowsky?

A. The guards' reports?

Q. Certainly, they have not been throwing them away, have they? They have been acting on them, haven't they?

A. They have been distributing them to supervision, where the reports were made from in that particular department.

Q. The guards are there to find out things that are not for the foremen to find out and that are difficult for him to report, isn't that so?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, it is a type of supervision that goes beyond that of the supervisor himself, isn't it?

A. Some of the reports may be from one supervisor who is not present.

Q. There are places where supervisors cannot be; that is, if he is doing his job?

A. The plant may be down that particular day, yes.

Q. Now, the Company has been relying upon these reports and acting upon them, hasn't it?

A. To a large extent, yes.

Q. In matters that are serious to workers in the plant?

A. That is right.

Q. And it has affected foremen too, hasn't it, at times?

A. I cannot recall of any case where it affected a foreman personally.

Q. What is your testimony on the experience of the Packard Company with these guards? Have they shown a reasonable fidelity to perform their duties in these 18 months?

A. Reasonably, yes.

Q. That is about all you get from a group of men, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Approximate reasonableness, isn't that so?

1657 A. That is true.

Q. Is there any proposition to do away with the guards?

A. No.

Q. Are the foremen bound in their conduct in the plant by the Company's contract with the CIO?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. Aren't they bound to avoid breaches of that agreement, aren't they so instructed?

A. We would certainly like to have them set a good example.

Q. Of compliance with the agreement?

A. Yes.

Q. You expect them to be leaders in that respect?

A. That is right.

Q. And generally, haven't you found them faithfully carrying out those instructions to a reasonable degree in the plant?

A. Up to this time, yes.

Q. Now, the time study is a matter agreed upon between the CIO and the Company, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And there again you expect the foremen generally to be leaders in compliance and performance, don't you?

A. That is part of his responsibility.

Q. Because the time study was a matter sought by 1658 the Company primarily, wasn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. Up to now, has the performance of the Foremen been a reasonable performance?

A. As an overall picture, I would say yes.

Q. I will agree with you there. There is a degree of dereliction and there are defects here and there, but that is a general human proposition. However, it has been a reasonable performance, hasn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. I mean by that, the cooperation of the foremen group in the time study program?

A. That is right.

Q. And the same is true as to the Work-To-Win Program, isn't that so, hasn't it been of reasonable performance by the foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. And cooperation in it?

A. Yes.

Q. Where it touches his work, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you have said a good deal here on direct examination by Mr. Dahling about divided loyalty, haven't you?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, I take it for granted that you are sincere 1659 in the opinions you have expressed on this record.

A. I am.

Q. And you entertain, apparently, a lively fear that if the foremen are recognized in an organization, their loyalty will be weakened, is that right, their loyalty to the Company?

A. Yes.

Q. And as you said, it would not be as reliable as though each were fighting his own fight in a dog eat dog competition with the other foremen. That is in substance your testimony, isn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. I might have stated it a little colloquially, but that is the substance of it, isn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. In other words, if every foreman in the factory is a competitor of every other foreman in the factory for a position and recognition you say, for production, then, you will have a greater loyalty on the part of each of those competing individuals, to the Company's interests than as though they were working altogether cooperating to bring about production, that is your proposition, isn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. You believe that?

A. Yes.

1660 Q. You believe that human experience is on your side on that?

A. Yes.

Q. You think it is?

A. Yes.

Q. Let us take a little look into the elements. There isn't any circumstance in which the foreman would not be interested in what he is going to get for it, is there? You cannot conceive of a situation where the foreman is going to be heedless of what he gets paid for doing it?

A. As an individual?

Q. As an individual. Let us take him that way first.

A. Yes.

Q. He is always going to have a standing interest against his economic interest, that is, the economic interest of the Company, for his own pay, isn't he?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. You don't think so?

A. No.

Q. Well, you can bring that within certain bounds. That is to say, he can express it reasonably or mildly, but he will always be interested in getting as much for himself as he can, wouldn't he?

A. That is right.

Q. To that extent, he will always be in an adver-

1661 sary's position and interest to the Company, wouldn't he?

A. Yes, but I believe he will also remember that the Company has to make money to exist and he is going to see to it that he makes money for them.

Q. Let us concede, for the purpose of this record, that every foreman out there believes that his dignity and his position and his welfare should be secondary to the profit of those interested in this Company. Let's just assume that. I am not agreeing that it is a reasonable proposition, but I think we can agree that most of these men think so. Now, let us say he is in competition with every other foreman there and he has a right under your scheme to appropriate or aggregate to himself the income of half a dozen other foremen if he can manage it. Then, if he can get so much they will have to cut the wages of a lot of other foremen?

A. No, I wouldn't say that.

Q. Why? You wouldn't let individualism go that far?

A. No, unless he was advanced to a more responsible job, his salary would be increased, if that is what you mean?

Q. Well, suppose they have just got so much money for general foremen and there are 120 of them in the plant, suppose ten of them got together and they said, "Okay, we will get about one-third of that appropriation for ourself and express ourselves individually until we get it." There is no reason why they couldn't under your plan do so, is there?

1662 A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. What is to stop them?

A. You mean they would eliminate a portion of it?

Q. No, they would keep them all there on the job but cut the wages. When you put a man out of there you might do him a favor. You keep him there on low wages, that is the hurt, isn't it?

A. I don't seem to understand your question.

Q. I am taking your scheme of individual expression, under that scheme there is no reason why ten of them or even one of them shouldn't get all he could under your plan, is there?

A. He can go forward just as fast as his ability would allow him to.

Q. I am talking about pay.

A. Of course, that would go hand in hand.

Q. You assume that, do you? Is that your experience, that pay goes hand in hand?

A. As your responsibilities increase, your pay increases. It has in my case.

Q. You think that that is a general proposition, that without more ado, a man—the more a man does and the abler he is, the more rapidly he advances and the pay goes with him?

A. Yes.

1663 Q. You think that is true?

A. Yes.

Q. What is there to secure that under your plan?

A. Well, the individual himself and training himself to carry out greater responsibilities.

Q. You are, Mr. Patzkowsky, capable of carrying out greater responsibilities than you have right now, aren't you?

A. I couldn't say. It is hard to judge on that one, I think.

Q. Well, don't you kind of secretly think like we all do? Don't you surely feel that you could occupy the next place above you, as we all do?

A. That would be wishful thinking.

Q. Some of us get a chance at it, like you have?

A. That is right.

Q. Where you got a chance, there were 100 other fellows who did not get a chance at the Packard Plant, isn't that so?

A. Yes.

Q. And you still are not an individualist enough to say, are, you, that you clearly outclassed all of those men in all particulars, would you say that, Mr. Patzkowsky?

A. No.

Q. I mean applicable to your position?

1664 A. There are 30,000 at the plant.

Q. And a lot of the men at the plant approach you in the capacity to hold your position?

A. Yes.

Q. Otherwise, they would be in a bad way. They have to have reserves of human beings, don't they?

A. That is right.

Q. Coming back to my proposition, and this is the last thing I want to ask you,—it is the proposition that the foremen will always have that matter of pay and the matter of his classification with respect to other foremen —at which he may be presumed to be, in interest, at least, always an adversary to the Company—isn't that so, first?

A. I presume that is true.

Q. Now, that is an area, we will say, of conflict—that may be a strong word, but just for the purpose of setting it out clearly and emphasizing it now, you can do a number of things with that—let's exhaust the possibilities because they are not many in number—you can leave that conflict for each man to carry on with the Company by himself, can't you? That is one way, isn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. And that is what you favor?

A. That is right.

Q. Then you have small groups of them, regardless
1665 of their classification, carrying on that struggle with the Company, each group for itself. Can't—you? For example, on the bases of nationality, religion, race or personal preference or something of that kind? An association where the large members may get in there and shoulder for each other, that could happen, couldn't it, under your plan?

A. That could happen.

Q. Yes. In other words, you can have individuals or groups on various bases—that is perfectly natural—for instance, you can have color for one thing, couldn't you?

A. That is right.

Q. You have had some of that at the Packard Plant, haven't you, already?

A. Yes.

Q. And you do not really recommend that on the experience you have had, do you, Mr. Patzkowsky?

A. You mean—

Q. Groups based on color pressing for an advantage at Packard's?

A. Well, I haven't given that much thought.

Q. It probably has not been your personal responsibility. But just as it stands, generally speaking, you would not recommend that as a scheme of operation out there, would you?

A. Small cliques?

1666 Q. Small cliques, yes. Every factory is full of them where there is no organization and you know it.

A. Well, I wouldn't agree with you on that, there are not too many cliques at Packard anyway.

Q. Then you can have an organization that represents all the foremen alike, between the maintenance and production worker and the policy group organized into one association, couldn't you?

A. They could be organized.

Q. It has been done?

A. You still have your cliques within your union.

Q. All right, you can have that group devoted to an equalitarian principle on the basis of merit, couldn't you?

A. The majority, perhaps, would rule. It wouldn't be in its entirety—

Q. (Interposing) Do you recognize majority rule as a good sound democratic procedure, Mr. Patzkowsky?

A. Yes, I believe I do.

Q. This country has done fairly well with it, hasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Has the Packard Motor Car Company—Well, the Packard Motor Car Company is an evidence of it itself, isn't it?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, Mr. Patzkowsky, you can have that association and you can have it in two ways, practically speak-1667 ing. We are limited to this now, aren't we; practically speaking, you can either recognize it or you can drive it underground, with its private interest in getting pay from its employer, isn't that where you are?

A. That is right.

Q. Is it your testimony that the power of this Board should be used to deny these men recognition and open operation and negotiation or that it deny that to them and force them to go underground to protect their economic interests?

A. I believe they should remain a part of Management.

Q. Well, they are going to, but they are going to be paid for it. As to their pay and conditions, they want to talk altogether to the Employer instead of one at a time.

Now, you have got your choice. Do you want to drive them underground and force them to operate in secret and effectuate their purposes by forces that are not recognized in the factory, or do you want them recognized by law and brought out into the open?

A. In my opinion, I do not believe that any of the foremen at Packard were driven underground in the past.

Q. Well, they are midway now, neither recognized nor underground.

A. Why should Packard change its policy at this time after they have been in existence for forty years or more?

Q. Would you like me to answer it or do you want
1668 me to ask you a question? It has already changed its policy, hasn't it, with respect to foremen? It already has an employment office, it already has a purchasing department, it already has a master mechanic, it already has a labor relations office, it already has made a contract with the maintenance and production workers, all of that and many other things that I could go on here and mention have changed the position of the foremen, haven't they? Yes or no, Mr. Patzkowsky?

A. Yes.

Q. They have changed the position of the foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. And the foreman in defense of his dignity and personal interest, asks to be recognized along with the rest.

Mr. Dahling: That is a bit of argument, Mr. Examiner.

Mr. Nelson: Yes, it is and so is yours.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: He may answer the question.

The Witness: May I have the question read, please?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Read the question.

(Question read.)

Mr. Nelson: That is true, isn't it?

Mr. Dahling: He has to be recognized—I don't know that the form of the question calls for an answer.

Mr. Nelson: He has to be recognized, that is true, isn't it?

1669 The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) The Company having changed its policy in many things that affected the foremen, which have served to place him at a disadvantage, as he feels now, Mr. Patzkowsky, that opens the way fairly, doesn't it, for the Company to change its policy with respect to its foremen, isn't that a logical conclusion?

A. Well, I think the Company would have their management very close to their heart at all times. If you can put Management into any one particular individual, as to where Management is in a group, why, they would certainly hope to remain in business and treat him fairly.

Q. Well, is there anything inherently wrong in the Company dealing with these men as a group by open negotiation lawfully recognized, in your opinion?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the trouble?

A. Well, in my previous testimony I said that as soon as you have collective bargaining, the leaders of the Union have an antagonistic attitude toward Management which spreads down throughout their members and that certainly is not a healthy condition.

Q. You think it is more unhealthy, expressed collectively than as though it was expressed individually?

A. Yes, I do.

1670 Q. You mean unhealthy for the Company?

A. And for the individuals.

Q. Apparently you disagree with the whole Union principle?

A. No, I wouldn't say that.

Q. What part of it would you leave?

A. The Unionism of Management.

Q. Well, in other words, you would like Management organized and the workers organized by Management only?

A. The workers organized by Management?

Q. Yes, that is what you said, if I understood you.

A. No.

Mr. Dahling: I thought he said he was opposed to the unionization of Management.

Mr. Nelson: I asked him—

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Let me ask you again, you disapprove of the whole Union principle, don't you?

A. I said no.

Q. What part of Unionism and what kind of Unionism do you approve?

A. I approve it to a certain extent if the people that are actually the producers and the workers are in it.

Q. You mean the manual workers?

A. Yes.

Q. You do not recognize supervision as a productive force?

A. They do not work with their hands.

1671 Q. On that we agree.

A. They use people as their tools.

Q. People, machines and materials?

A. Yes.

Q. And the tie-up is the idea that they convey?

A. That is right.

Q. You do not recognize the emanation and the orderly application of those ideas as a productive force?

A. Well, the supervisor exists to make the work of others easier and more efficient and more economical.

Q. Isn't that a productive element?

A. In the end it would be.

Q. Let me be perfectly fair and state your proposition if I am correct about it. You say that the organization of the manual workers—you make no objection to that, but when you get beyond that you are opposed to Union principles?

A. That is right.

Q. In other words, you would not organize teachers and you would not have a Bar Association, in other words, Bar Associations are mistakes?

Mr. Dalling: I think the witness was referring to the Packard Company.

Mr. Nelson: I am going to take him on a little broader field.

The Witness: I don't know. I have not given any 1672 thought along those lines.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) There is an Engineers Association and even an Automotive Engineers Association.

A. Yes.

Q. And there is a railroad managers association and has been for years in this country.

A. I don't know.

Q. You know about the lawyers and ministers and doctors and all those people having associations, don't you?

A. Yes, there are quite a few associations.

Q. Do you count our handling of books manual labor or are we in the same class as foremen in the emanation and application or origination and application of ideas?

A. The majority of those people you mentioned are not supervisors of other people.

Q. Well, I represent the Foreman's Association of America and I have to bargain with them for my pay. Do you think that makes me disloyal to them?

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Nelson, does the Bar Association represent you in your bargaining?

Mr. Nelson: It could with a whole lot more grace.

Mr. Donovan: Individually or through your Lawyers' Guild?

Mr. Nelson: You see, the whole point is this—we can carry on indefinitely and the more lawyers get into 1673 it the worse it is, of course. Perhaps I can suggest to you that you are in error in making the test the performance of manual labor. For instance, I will suggest in that connection—in connection with that last question, the Typographical Union and the Marine Workers and the Railway Union and the Miners who all take in their supervision right along with the rest of the men.

The Witness: I don't know that they do.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) You don't know?

A. No.

Q. You don't know the history of the function of those unions, that they have been functioning all along with foremen right in with them?

A. No, I don't.

Q. In the same group?

A. No.

Q. Now, one other matter. You do not have any information do you, about the working of the Ford contract, do you

A. The working?

Q. With the Foreman's Association?

A. The working of the Ford contract?

Q. How does it work?

A. None other than what was brought out here in the testimony.

Q. Where there is no difficulty at all with six dif-
1674 ferent classifications of foremen?

A. I don't know; I haven't heard anything about it.

Q. Including the marine and other skilled groups that use ideas instead of their hands, you have not heard anything about their experience with that?

A. None other than what was brought out here in the testimony.

Q. You said you had some doubt and hesitation about where the assistant foreman and the foreman over him and the general foreman over him and the special assignment men that work under the general foreman or with him, whichever way you want to put it, being all in the same organization—you expressed some doubt of that, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. As having a tendency to be deleterious to the loyalty to the Company and their dependabiiity?

A. That is right.

Q. Let's assume for a moment, Mr. Patzkowsky, that you are going to have organization among these men and that competition is going to have its inevitable result in the foremen at the Packard Plant and produce a combination where two times two is four, sociologically speaking, just as it is mathematically speaking, you have got to make up your mind then—if we take that as a premise—I am asking you to concede it—I admit that you 1674-A are opposed to it—However, take it as an idea for a moment—you are going to have organization and then you have got to have either these non-policy formulating foremen in one Association or you have to have them in separate levels, haven't you?

Mr. Dahling: As an answer to that question, admit that they are non-policy foremen?

Mr. Nelson: Just take the question as a hypothetical question and take it as true only because I say it was and not because you admit any part of it—you are either going to have four separate organizations or you are going to have one with all four in it, according to your idea, isn't that so?

The Witness: Well, I didn't say that we should stop at the end of four.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) You can go right on up and take superintendents, division managers, and put them in separate organizations.

A. Anyone that supervises, their responsibilities are similar.

Q. Now, we come to this proposition, where you thought that you could not get along with them in the same organization—that is a short way of saying what you had in mind, apparently—Haven't you got to make up your mind whether you are going to deal with jurisdictional differences of four separate organizations or deal with 1675 these four separate levels of supervision in one organization? You have got to do one or the other, haven't you?

A. I don't know which would be more difficult.

Q. How would you like to let the foremen decide it? Can you think of anybody more competent to decide what kind of level should be in their organization than the foremen themselves or do you think Management would have some superior ideas on that?

A. Well, a foreman is part of Management.

Q. Well, I am talking of Management above the general foreman. Wouldn't it be a pretty American way of doing it and a pretty smart way of doing it, to let the foremen themselves decide who they want in their organization?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is, if there is to be an organization.

Mr. Nelson: I am assuming that there must be an organization. You do not have to concede at all, except for the purpose of answering the question, anything—Wouldn't it be a pretty good idea to let the foremen themselves decide?

The Witness: I don't know; I haven't given it much thought.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Patzkowsky, were you ever a member of any Union?

1676 Q. Which one?

A. M. E. S. A., for one month.

Q. How long ago was that?

A. Oh, I think 1933, when they barely first started organizing.

Q. You never became a member of the CIO?

A. No.

Q. Or of any Local or branch?

A. No.

Q. And your whole union experience is included in one month's membership in the Mechanics Educational Society of America?

A. As far as a member is concerned, yes.

Q. Which Local were you a member of?

A. I couldn't remember which Local it was.

Q. Can you give us the Company?

A. At Richard Brothers, I think at that time I was with Richard Brothers.

Q. In what division of that? Were you a toolmaker?

A. Diemaker.

Q. And you joined the Union, am I free to infer, only because they organized the shop you were in and you had to belong to continue working there?

A. I was told I had to join or I couldn't work there.

Q. And you got a card to go to work?

1677 A. I worked there for one week or two before I got the card.

Q. That was just as a routine matter before you got the card, I suppose?

A. I had to go after the card myself.

Q. Did you attend any meetings?

A. None.

Q. Did you take any part in the work of the Local?

A. None.

Q. And you never had any practical or actual experience as a Union man?

A. No, that is correct.

Q. And you have been labor relations representative of the Packard Company for a period of two months now?

A. Approximately.

Q. Have you given labor questions any particular study or thought outside of your employment at Packard?

A. Yes. I started that when I was in college. That was a big field and also foremen training and I started taking that up at that time.

Q. Now, apparently you would be unwilling for the foremen to organize and affiliate with the AF of L, the CIO, the Confederated Unions of America or the Miners or the Railway Men or any other labor group, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Whether that group was larger or smaller than 1678 the foremen, wouldn't make any difference to you, would it?

A. None.

Q. For instance, it is estimated that there are three and a half million foremen in this country and it is conceivable that all of them or most of them might become members of the Foreman's Association of America and you would still not want the foremen at Packard's to be a chapter or affiliated with that group?

A. That is right.

Q. Suppose the Foreman's Association of America should become affiliated with the National Association of Manufacturers and adopted and carried out its policies, would you be willing to see the foremen affiliated with that group?

Mr. Donovan: You will first have to find out from this witness if he knows the policies of this Association that you mention.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Patzkowsky, have you ever heard of the National Association of Manufacturers?

A. I have heard of it.

Q. Have you ever heard of the United States Chamber of Commerce?

A. Yes.

Q. In a general way, you know the public policy and pronouncements, like the rest of us do in a public 1679 way, of those Associations, is that so?

A. I suppose so, but I never paid any attention to their definite policies.

Q. Don't you recognize them as an outstanding source of the pronouncement of labor policy in this country?

A. Of labor policies?

Q. Indeed.

A. It has never come to my attention.

Q. Well, suppose we should become affiliated to either one of those bodies. Would you make any objection if we undertook to carry out their policies?

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Examiner, I submit that the witness cannot answer that question if he does not know what their policies are.

Mr. Nelson: He said that in a general way he did.

Mr. Dahling: He said he did not know their policy.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Objection is sustained.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Would you be willing for the foremen to be a Company Union? That is the question put in everyday language.

A. Company Union?

Q. Yes, or affiliated to a Company organization, they would then be loyal, wouldn't they?

A. I can't conceive of that idea either.

Q. My conception of it is this, and I guess perhaps 1680 it would answer your proposition that they cannot be faithful to their economic interests and at the same time serve the Company, but if they once and for all committed themselves wholeheartedly as an organization to the interests of the Employer, then what would happen to your objection that they were lacking in loyalty?

A. I still think that they should operate as an individual.

Q. You still want that one man at a time proposition?

A. That is right.

Q. And you think that is consistent with the welfare of any important group in mass production under the wage system?

A. Yes.

Q. Under the wage system for labor and the price system for products—you think that mass production, operated by power machines under modern circumstances—that that view is consistent with the welfare of any considerable group of employees so involved?

A. I would certainly want to plead my own case and my own opinion.

Q. That is not quite an answer to my question. Do you still think the welfare of the group would be served by such an arrangement?

A. Would it be what?

Q. Served by such an arrangement, which you have 1681 evidenced under modern circumstances?

A. Yes, I believe the group would be.

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will take a ten minute recess at this time.

(Recess.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The hearing is in order. Are we ready to proceed? Are there any further questions of this witness?

Mr. Karasick: No questions.

Mr. Nelson: No questions.

Mr. Dahling: No questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I have one or two, I believe.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee) I am not sure, Mr. Patzkowsky, whether I got one of your answers. Did you testify that by and large, the foremen of all classes at Packard have up to now been loyal to the Company?

A. Yes.

Mr. Donovan: I think he made an exception to that on the record with reference to the many restrictions which he said did not help any. Those were his words.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you adopt those qualifications?

The Witness: Yes.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee) If the rank and file
1682 go out on strike, would you say that the rank and file was loyal to the Company?

A. No, I would say they were loyal to their Union.

Q. Would you say, or would you not say that if they are loyal to their Union, they are therefore disloyal to the Company?

A. If they were on strike they would be disloyal to the Company.

Q. Would you or would you not say that any strike is disloyalty to an Employer?

A. I say it would be disloyal.

Q. As I understand the present situation, you have a union of foremen at Packard Plant, which the Packard Company has not recognized, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Would you or would you not say that at any stage of the game with the situation just mentioned existing, that the Foreman's Union would need greater help from the UAW now than it would under other circumstances?

A. I don't know.

Q. Would it be fair to say that the Foreman's Union, since it has not been recognized, has got to pass the hurdle of recognition before it can go on as a union and bargain as to matters affecting wages, hours and working conditions?

A. Well, as long as they are not recognized, as far
1683 as the Company is concerned, there is no union.

Q. You mean that there is no union of the foremen at the Packard Plant?

A. As long as they are not collectively bargaining with the Company I would say it is not in operation.

Q. You mean it exists, but does not operate, is that it?

A. That is right.

Q. That is to say, that it does not operate or that it is not actually bargaining with the Company for the purposes bargaining usually covers?

A. That is right.

Q. Of course, if the Company should recognize the Union, the Union is then over that hurdle?

A. That is right.

Q. So today there is a hurdle which exists, which would not exist if the Union were recognized?

A. That is right.

Q. Would you or would you not say that if the Foreman's Association of America is to be helped by the United Automobile Workers, it needs more help now or less help now or the same help now than if there were recognition?

A. I couldn't say that, I wouldn't know. It perhaps would depend upon both unions.

Q. I understood you to testify, and if I am wrong you may correct me, that the organization of employees
1684 of any class and the organization of foremen as well or included into a Union, create certain obligations to that Union among the members of it?

A. That is right.

Q. In fact, I think you said, if I have it correctly, that all unions are alike in their basic principles?

A. I said that, yes.

Q. Is it your understanding that the Foreman's Association of America has a constitution?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it your understanding that it is supposed to be the duty of the members of the Association of the Foreman's Association of America to abide by that constitution the moment they join?

A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. Is it your understanding that right now, under present conditions, the members of the Foreman's Association owe a duty of loyalty or are supposed to owe it to the Association?

A. If they are living up to their Constitution, yes.

Q. Have you assumed that they are by and large living up to that Constitution?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you therefore assume that right now there is a situation of divided loyalty?

A. That is hard to say, I would not know. As long 1685 as we do not have collective bargaining with them, it is difficult to find out those things.

Q. Would you say that right now the foremen—and I am using the term broadly—owe a duty of loyalty to the Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you say that right now that the membership in the Foreman's Association of America of the foremen—that the members of that Association owe a duty of loyalty to their union or are supposed to owe it?

A. If they have joined that and if it is their belief, why, that is their choice.

Q. What is their choice?

A. Of owing loyalty to the Union or not.

Q. Why haven't we got the conflict right now?

A. I say that they haven't collective bargaining and they are not recognized. We are operating exactly as if there was not a union.

Q. Well, are there or are there not two loyalties here?

A. I believe there are.

Q. Do they conflict? In other words, does Union membership conflict with loyalty to the Employer?

A. Yes.

Q. Does it make any difference in that respect whether it is a rank and file worker or a foreman or anybody else?

1686 A. Well, as I testified before, as foremen are using people as their tools, it would be more pronounced in their case than it would be in the actual workers or the rank and file.

Q. Does that mean, then, that the difference is a difference in degree?

A. That is true.

Q. This Mechanics Educational Society of America, the MESA, as it is referred to generally, that is an independent Union, is it not?

A. I believe it is.

Q. And still is?

A. Yes, it is considered as such.

Q. When was it that you were a member of that organization?

A. In the very early stages of their organization in 1933, I believe.

Q. So that has remained an Independent Union for about twelve years?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: Of skilled men too, Mr. Examiner.

Q. (By Trial Examiner Jaffee) Is it of skilled men, by the way?

A. It is. I couldn't say whether it takes in anything else or not.

Q. But generally, skilled men?

1687 A. Generally, skilled men, the name so implies.

Q. Have you had any experience dealing with foremen's unions as such?

A. No.

Q. Am I correct then in assuming that the answers you have given as to what would happen if the Foreman's Association of America were recognized by Packard, is based on your guess or speculation—and you may put in any other term you wish—as to the future?

A. In my opinion?

Q. As to the future.

A. Yes.

Q. What is that opinion based on generally?

A. As I stated in my previous testimony, I believe, the history of other unions.

Q. Does that mean rank and file unions?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Nelson, in his cross examination, referred to—if you recall—the Typographical Union, the Maritime Union and certain others.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall his saying that there were supervisors in those organizations?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall your saying you did not know that?

1688 A. That is right.

Q. If it is a fact, then—let us assume it is for the time being—if it is a fact that those organizations that Mr. Nelson mentioned that had supervision as members for a substantial number of years—if it is a fact that that has worked out satisfactorily, would that affect your opinion or any of the conclusions you have indicated?

A. Well, I hadn't thought about that. I wouldn't know at this time. I would certainly want to check into the particular type of work they were doing, whether it was manufacturing or what industry they were in.

Q. Well, Typographical Union means printing and Maritime—of course, the word itself indicates the industry.

A. I couldn't say. It seems to me that the Maritime and even the Typographical Union is quite a bit different than our industry.

Q. In other words, that means that while it might possibly have worked satisfactorily in other industries you do not think it will work in the automobile industry?

A. That is right.

Q. Is that because you think there is an inevitable tie-up or that there could be one between the Foreman's Association and the rank and file unions?

A. That is right.

Q. If the Foreman's Association of America is in-1689 dependent and claims to be and if it remains that way—let's assume that as a fact, that it remains independent in every respect—do you still say that there should not be a Foreman's Association at Packard?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further questions of this witness?

Mr. Dahling: None.

Mr. Nelson: May I ask one question of the witness?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I would like to ask Mr. Patzkowsky if he thinks that the degree and type of loyalty required at Packard factory is any higher or more exacting than the loyalty required of the men in the operation of a ship.

Mr. Donovan: Just a minute. I don't think the witness said that—I think he said—.

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) I am asking him if he thinks so.

Mr. Donovan: I think the witness stated that mass production presented problems not found in others.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Have you any thought on that subject, Mr. Patzkowsky?

The Witness: I know very little about marine work and I couldn't say. It may be greater. They may expect greater loyalty but I do not know and I couldn't say.

1690 Q. (By Mr. Nelson) You do know that the captain of a ship under certain circumstances has control of life and death over every person on that ship, don't you, and you recognize that as a historical fact?

A. Yes.

Q. And in a way he must have that power, particularly over his workers, isn't that so?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, would you say that the type and degree of loyalty that is required at Packard factory was any different or higher in requirement than on a ship where the men are in a foreman's position and are members of a maritime union and have been for hundreds of years?

A. Personally, I do not know if the captain of the ship is a member of it.

Q. I will exclude him to remove that difficulty. It is the supervisory force, and not the owner.

A. I don't know.

Q. I will even concede that his mate is excluded as well.

A. Who?

Q. Sometimes the mates are excluded. However, some of the mates are included in the Union.

A. All in the same Union?

Q. Yes, firemen, engineers, deckhands, oilers—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Don't masters, mates and 1691 pilots have a union of their own?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, but other unions also include the mates, they are divided among other unions.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Examiner, I think the question is of the same type of question, as far as our inquiry here is concerned, as asking the witness whether or not because of Military necessity and because our supreme command requires loyalty in the Army, whether or not the Army shouldn't be unionized also.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I do not recall anybody asking the question about the supreme command in the Army.

Mr. Donovan: There are reasons for loyalty to a captain of a ship and there are the same reasons for loyalty of a Private in the Army to his superior officers. Is that a reason why they should be unionized?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think the witness indicated he has no particular knowledge of maritime situations.

Mr. Nelson: That is true. We all have a little imagination about the sailing of a ship but I thought I was entitled to his measurement of loyalty required. He has planted answers on his ideas of divided loyalty.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Suppose you ask another question.

Mr. Nelson: That is the only one I wanted him to answer.

1692 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you think you can answer that?

The Witness: I don't think I can answer that intelligently.

Mr. Nelson: Apparently he never sailed very much.

The Witness: Right one hundred percent, other than a rowboat.

Mr. Nelson: That is right. Scotland has a bigger shoreline than Poland has; as I remember it, Poland has none.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am pretty much in the same position as he is. Are there any further questions of this witness?

Mr. Karasick: No questions.

Mr. Dahling: I wonder if I could ask Mr. Nelson a question about the MESA, which he gratuitously put in the record?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: It is my understanding that the MESA is a part of the Confederated Unions of America.

Mr. Nelson: Yes, I agree with Mr. Dahling. It is affiliated now with a group of independent unions in a confederation, but it is not affiliated in the sense that the component unions of the American Federation of Labor are or that the component Union of the Congress of 1693 Industrial Organizations are, it is a looser confederation.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I understand also that the Confederated Unions of America came into existence not so very long ago.

Mr. Nelson: Yes, each union has proudly maintained its independence, although it is in the confederation. It is like John Calhoun's idea of a confederation. There was a time when we had a confederation of states and that time their experiences brought them closer together.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Nelson has brought us back to the American Indian, the Civil War, the Aborigines. The witness is excused.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Patzkowsky, you may step down.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, the Petitioner includes in this petition and claims all general foremen, foremen, assistant foremen and special assignment men in the main plant, the Hupp Plant and the Bundy Plant of the Packard Motor Car Company.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: They are all in Detroit?

Mr. Nelson: They are all in Detroit.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That then, is your unit claim
1694 under your petition?

Mr. Nelson: That is right.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, Mr. Karasick asked us, the Company, to produce the figures on the present employees at the Bundy Tubing Plant and the Hupp Plant. We have that information as of November 30, 1944, being the same date used in connection with other figures on employment. There were no employees at the Bundy Plant and there were 89 at the Hupp Plant on one shift. The total employment estimated or anticipated is one thousand at the Bundy Plant on two shifts and 250 at the Hupp Plant on two shifts. It was hoped to reach the maximum employment this month but due, I guess, to construction troubles and that sort of thing, they will not reach it for an indefinite length of time.

Mr. Karasick: As the situation presently stands, do you have any idea of the monthly rate of employment at which it is anticipated or can be anticipated?

Mr. Denison: I do not think we can answer that. If we can settle labor trouble today, within a month we would probably have the conversion made.

Mr. Karasick: That is, if you can obtain the employees and have your plant ready, you will have the full employment force in a month?

Mr. Denison: Very likely, yes.

1695 Mr. Karasick: That is true of both the Bundy and Hupp Plants?

Mr. Denison: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Reporter, will you mark Company's Exhibit 44 for identification and will you mark Company's Exhibit 45 for identification?

(Thereupon the documents above referred to were marked Company's Exhibits 44 and 45 for identification.)

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I would like to offer in evidence Company's Exhibit 44 for identification—rather, an excerpt from the Dodge Victory News of March 24, 1944, which has already been marked Company's Exhibit 44 for identification. It is my understanding that Mr. Nelson does not deny that this article did appear in that paper and is not contesting the formal proof of the fact of the printing and appearance of it in the paper but does take the position, as he will probably tell you, that it is immaterial. I am sure he feels it is immaterial and irrelevant.

Mr. Nelson: I know the document and I do not dispute it nor do I dispute the authenticity of the document at all but I do doubt that it has any materiality or relevancy here.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Will you gentlemen agree for the record as to what the Dodge Victory News is?

1696 Mr. Dahling: It is a publication as I understand, of the UAW in the Dodge Plant.

Mr. Nelson: In the Dodge Plant in Chicago. It is a publication of the maintenance and production workers Union in the Dodge Plant in Chicago, Illinois. I will concede that they do print such a paper as an organ of that Local and that this article appeared on the date stated. I do not question those facts, but I do doubt the relevancy and materiality of the opinion of the publishers of that paper as bearing on this issue.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Are there any further comments on that proposed exhibit, gentlemen?

Mr. Karasick: May I see it?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: I don't know whether you care for any comment from me, Mr. Examiner. Of course, the purpose of this is to show a possible connection—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: (Interposing) I don't suppose you care to argue if I am with you.

Mr. Dahling: No.

Mr. Nelson: I should then object—

Mr. Dahling: That is why I asked if you requested any comment from me.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received in evidence.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit 44 for identification was received in evidence.)

1697 Mr. Dahling: I have also had marked as Company's Exhibit 45 for identification a paper which is a copy of the resolution on collective bargaining rights of the foremen passed by the Michigan State CIO Council on June 29, 1943. It is my understanding that Mr. Nelson admits this resolution, of which Exhibit 45 is a copy—that this resolution was adopted by the Michigan State CIO Council on or about the date mentioned. I gather that Mr. Nelson denies the relevancy or materiality of this paper.

Mr. Nelson: That is correct. It was adopted and I think that is a correct copy. I assume that Mr. Dahling has correctly copied it, but I do not see that it has any relevancy or materiality here. It is only an expression of opinion of delegates to a maintenance and production workers convention.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received in evidence.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit 45 for identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Dahling: It is my understanding, Mr. Examiner, that Mr. Nelson concedes the fact that the plant protection employees at the General Motors Corporation were originally organized as an independent union and were later taken over by the UAW. I do not know whether that was as a unit, separate unit, or as a member of the general rank and file.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What do you mean by taken over?

1698 Mr. Dahling: Became affiliated with the UAW.

Mr. Nelson: They were taken over and became a part of the UAW-CIO but they have retained a separate bargaining unit. That is, they make their own contract with their Employer and they are a part of the UAW.

Mr. Dahling: It is my understanding—.

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) However, I am not admitting the materiality of all this: I am agreeing with him on the facts, as they are correctly stated.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You gentlemen adopt each other's statements as far as the facts are concerned?

Mr. Dahling: Yes.

Mr. Nelson: I do. I don't know whether they were taken over but I think they are part of the Local of the Maintenance and Production Workers at this plant. They have retained the right to separately bargain and make a separate contract.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Then both you gentlemen agree on the facts so far?

Mr. Nelson: Yes, and I guess Mr. Benjamin agrees with us on that.

Mr. Dahling: Also, that the Union Plant Protection Workers, the United Office and Professional Workers of America and the Federation of Architects, Engineers and Technicians, being three separate unions, were 1699 formed at the Chrysler Plant here in Detroit as independent unions and subsequent to their setting themselves up in that manner they became affiliated and a part of the UAW-CIO.

Mr. Nelson: The captains, lieutenants and the supervisory force of these groups belong to the Foreman's Association. The remainder, I believe, belong to the Maintenance and Production Workers Union in a group. Now, just what their rights are I am not able to determine at this time with any definiteness. I should like to—rather, I should dislike to state it on a guess—if they are in a group, they are members of the United Automobile Workers with the exception of the supervisory groups which belong to the Foreman's Association.

Mr. Dahling: And they were originally independent?

Mr. Nelson: They were originally independent as an Association and then put in for affiliation. Just where the supervisory groups, the captains, lieutenants and supervisory groups stepped into the Association, I am not aware—it has been some time back. That is the present situation there, I believe.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Dahling, do you accept

Mr. Nelson's statement? He is accepting yours as he amends it.

Mr. Dahling: Yes, Mr. Examiner, for my purpose, that is quite satisfactory.

1700 Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Reporter, will you mark that Company's Exhibit 46?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit 46 for identification.)

Mr. Dahling: I would now like to offer in evidence as Company's Exhibit 46 a pamphlet issued by the United States Department of Labor, Division of Labor Standards, entitled, "The Foreman's Guide to Labor Relations," issued apparently August 1, 1944.

Mr. Nelson: I do not see any relevancy or materiality to that. The mistakes of one political subdivision surely should not be permitted to permeate another, nor should it be permitted to be perpetuated by another. I do not see any relevancy or authenticity to this. That it is a publication of that department, I do not doubt. I do not see why he could not cite it in his brief if he thinks it has any cogency.

Mr. Donovan: Portions of it are in the record now.

Mr. Nelson: In any event, an obviously careless statement by somebody sitting in an ivory tower—

Mr. Dahling: (Interposing) I take it, Mr. Nelson, that you disagree with it?

1701 Mr. Nelson: I think reasoning in vaccuo got nowhere and goes nowhere.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I have not observed any ivory towers among government officers.

Mr. Nelson: There are numbers of them. I will not permit you to defend all government employees.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I wouldn't even try to. However, the pamphlet in question has been referred to and I think it might as well be received. Company's Exhibit 46 is received in evidence.

(The document heretofore marked Company's Exhibit 46 for identification was received in evidence.)

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, I have an exhibit that I would like to offer in evidence, which I have not had an opportunity to discuss with Mr. Nelson because it did not reach us until last night. I do not know whether he does or does not care to make any stipulation with reference to it or to the authenticity of the opinion which I wish to introduce in evidence and the transmittal letter which was received by the employer in this case. I think as I go along if he does not care to so stipulate I will make some other disposition of the offer, if necessary, and get a witness down from the employer who received the letter and the opinion.

Will you mark Company's Exhibit 47 and 47-A?

1702 (The documents above referred to were marked Company's Exhibits 47 and 47-A, for identification.)

Mr. Donovan: I have had the transmittal letter marked Company's Exhibit 47-A for identification. Now, Mr. Examiner, we have in Michigan, a statute called the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Act, which is Act No. 1, Corporate Act of 1936, extra session, amended by Act No. 347, Public Act of 1937, by Act No. 324 of Public Act of 1939, by Act No. 364, Public Act of 1941, by Act No. 186, Public Act of Second Extra Session of 1942, and by Act No. 246 of Public Act of 1943. That statute of which I have a pamphlet and the copy published by the state and distributed by the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission, is in the Michigan statute annotated section 17.501. Following that Act, in Section 29-C, provides as follows, Section 29 being headed: "Disqualification for Benefits".

I am quoting from Section 29-C (reading): "For any week with respect to which his total or partial unemployment is due to a stoppage of work, existing because of a labor dispute in the establishment he is or was last employed; provided, however, that no individual shall be disqualified under this section if he shall establish that he is not directly involved in such dispute, for the purpose of this section no individual shall be deemed to be directly involved in a labor dispute unless it is established—"

1703 Now, coming to the document marked Company's Exhibit 47-A, and in further explanation of the offer—during the May strike of foremen which has been testified to and referred to by several of the witnesses on the record here, there was testimony of the extent of the cooperation of the CIO with the Foreman's Association of America during those strikes. There was also testimony adverted to by several witnesses and it is still being referred to here this morning, I notice, of the status of the Foreman's Association of America as an independent union.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You are speaking of evidence before the War Labor Board, Mr. Donovan?

Mr. Donovan: No, in this case there have been discussion and testimony whether or not the Foreman's Association of America was an independent Union. That is a debatable issue of matters, whether or not it is so, and if so, whether or not the Company could remain so. In the Trial Examiner's formula which is usually followed in these cases is included relevant inquiry made in Representation cases. I believe there is permitted some explanation of the nature of the Union or labor organization, which is the Petitioner. I desire to make an offer of evidence of an opinion, an official opinion of the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission by Mr. A. W. Brown, State Office Claims Commissioner. In this

1704 case a CIO employee who went on strike at the time of the foreman's strike and who subsequently applied for his unemployment compensation benefits by reason of his separation from his employment due to those strikes, and the transmittal letter to the Company by the Michigan Unemployment Commission of the decision disqualifying the applicant for compensation, accompanied by a copy of the Opinion, Exhibit 47. The transmittal letter, carbon copy of which was sent to the employer, is marked for identification as Company's Exhibit 47-A. The question as to how far Mr. Nelson cares to stipulate, would have to do only with the question of the authenticity of this notice of determination and the transmittal letter, 47-A, as having come from the Michigan

Unemployment Compensation Commission, as it appears to indicate on its face; and with the authenticity of the opinion of the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission through the officer in question that was issued as of August 2, 1944, containing the disposition and the reasons for it of the disqualification of this employee. If Mr. Nelson cares to stipulate as to the authenticity of the transmittal letter and the opinion of the Commission on this disqualification, we wish to have it received for such argument as the Company, or on the other hand, the Petitioner here may care to make as to its relevancy, and so forth. I would state in that connection that the Company would desire to have it before not only the 1705 Trial Examiner, but before the Board, because it bears directly upon another view from an official source of the extent of the cooperation of the CIO with the Foreman's Association of America when the latter was engaged upon a strike objective. It contains, for instance, a statement such as this: "From and after May 1 production of the Briggs—" I am reading from the Opinion, Company's Exhibit 47—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) I think I ought to object now to the reading from the Opinion and I object to the Exhibit.

Mr. Donovan: I thought I would give you a fair chance to make a fuller objection after finding the use we chose to make of the Exhibit.

Mr. Nelson: I know the use to which you want to put it. It is an argumentative use, and I have no objection to your using it for all it is worth in argument, but I object to it as a part of this record.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Examiner, we ask definitely that Exhibits 47 and 47-A be received. My only inquiry from Mr. Nelson would be whether he questions or does not question the fact that this Opinion from the offices of the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission and the transmittal letter attached to it, Exhibit 47-A, was received by the Employer from the Commission. That 1706 would obviate the necessity of getting a witness down here to so state. If Mr. Nelson does not want to go so far—

Mr. Nelson: I have no doubt that you got such a letter, but it is absolutely irrelevant and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: May I see it, please?

Mr. Donovan: Yes, sir.

Mr. Nelson: I do not mean to compel him to produce a witness or anything of the kind.

Mr. Donovan: I might say, Mr. Examiner, in this connection, I believe the Circuit Court of Appeals does not take judicial notice of State Statutes and for that reason I would like to introduce in evidence the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Act or in the discretion of the Trial Examiner, such portions of it that appear to be relevant to the exhibits that are offered, which may well be the section I read, Section 29-C of the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Act. Now those exhibits would be offered not necessarily with the claim that they are proof of the facts recited in the opinion, but as evidence of how the situation was viewed by an official commission of the State of Michigan charged with the duty of making a determination respecting the relations of the CIO and the Foreman's strike in May in Detroit. For these statutory purposes, it was made, as they all are and the Company would desire to make such arguments—

1707 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Donovan, I started to try to read this six times. I simply cannot listen to you and read it at the same time.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Examiner, I merely wanted to call your attention to the fact that we want to introduce the Act, if you want it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you want to see this, Mr. Karasick?

Mr. Karasick: Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Donovan, does the Company intend to offer any further evidence in connection with the subject referred to in Company's Exhibits 47 and 47-A for identification?

Mr. Donovan: I did not understand the question, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Read the question.

(Question read.)

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Nelson, I believe, stated he does not quarrel with the authenticity of the documents as having come from the Commission, but does quarrel with the relevancy and materiality. If that is so, we would like to have the documents received in evidence for such use, by inference or argument, as the Company may be able to avail itself on its part and the Petitioner on its part.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You still have not answered my question.

1708 Mr. Donovan: Do you mean other qualifying evidence?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I am not questioning the authenticity of the document either and I do not desire to be technical on that ground, particularly in view of the concessions. I merely asked whether or not you intended to offer any further evidence with reference to the subject matter of the material indicated in your particular exhibits.

Mr. Donovan: In this hearing have I other witnesses?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Donovan: No. We want the documents to be before the Board for whatever they are worth.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do I understand, Mr. Nelson, that you object to these documents?

Mr. Nelson: I do. It is a matter which we are not interested in.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, on the present state of the record, I will have to sustain the objection.

Mr. Donovan: We think, Mr. Trial Examiner, that the opinion of the officials of the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission making the determination reflected in Company's Exhibit 47, regardless of whether the Trial Examiner accepts them as proof of fact which he recites, are certainly evidence and opinion of official body of the State of Michigan as to the relationship

1709 between the CIO—the close collaboration, if you like, between the CIO and the Foreman's Association of America during the strikes stated by the Foreman's Association of America at numerous plants, including the Petitioner in May of 1944 and that they would have certainly as respectable weight as the opinions that have been received on the subject from various witnesses from the witness stand. I think they are entitled to be received and to be before the Board.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: How about an opportunity for cross examination?

Mr. Nelson: And an opportunity to be heard on argument. No foremen were called in. That is an ex parte thing completely as to the foremen. Even the decision was ex parte and even the facts cannot be accepted. If you cannot accept the facts, how are you going to accept the opinion? No foreman had an opportunity to be heard in this matter whatsoever, nor was any representative of the foremen present. That is a pure ivory tower and that is the kind of ex parte proceeding that gets the foremen into trouble.

Mr. Donovan: The foremen got themselves into trouble and this is some evidence of it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Gentlemen, I have already ruled and I still think the ruling is correct. Mr. Donovan, I may suggest that you can have them marked as rejected exhibits and if the Board thinks that I am wrong
1710 about it, they perhaps may accept them, although they may have to reopen the case to give the Foreman's Association of America a chance to be heard on them, to put in evidence or to rebut it, or something of that sort.

Mr. Donovan: That is, it is theoretically possible that it would still stand as an opinion of an official—an official opinion of the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission, even though he disagreed with it?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We would certainly be in a vacuum then, it would be a bare opinion and nothing else.

Mr. Donovan: That is a matter of argument, Mr. Examiner. If the Examiner rejects the exhibits, I request they be received as he suggests, as rejected exhibits and leave the propriety of the ruling to take its course in further hearings.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: They may be marked rejected exhibits. You may want the Michigan Act received on the same basis.

Mr. Donovan: I think it ought to go in with these two exhibits. Will you mark this as Company's Exhibit 47-B?

(Thereupon the document above referred to was marked Company's Exhibit 47-B for identification.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I would like to comment, taking Company's Exhibit 47-B, which is the Act and which will be marked a rejected exhibit, does not mean that I 1711 am rejecting the Act.

Mr. Donovan: You are not repudiating it here?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I have nothing against it whatsoever.

Mr. Nelson: It isn't even repeated.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Company's Exhibits 47, 47-A and 47-B will be rejected.

(The documents heretofore marked Company's Exhibits 47, 47-A and 47-B for identification were rejected.)

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, the Company rests.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Thank you, Mr. Dahling. May I ask Mr. Donovan, since the Act seems rather long and the print small, could you point to the particular portions thereof—

Mr. Donovan: (Interposing) I believe section 29 and subdivision C thereof are principally involved, that is, what disqualifies an employee and the determination the Commission has to make whether or not he and his organization was involved in the labor dispute which resulted in his separation of employment and which they found in this case had been so.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well. I understand the Company rests. Does the Union desire to offer any rebuttal testimony?

Mr. Nelson: We have four brief witnesses on strictly 1712 limited rebuttal matters. It will take longer than fifteen minutes and I think we should come back this afternoon for it if we may.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record. We will recess until two-thirty P. M.

(Thereupon a recess was taken until two-thirty o'clock P. M.)

1713 After Recess.

(Whereupon the hearing was resumed, pursuant to the recess, at 2:45 o'clock p. m.)

Mr. Nelson: James Wilkins.

JAMES WILKINS

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Wilkins, you were telling me at the recess about an incident of reduction in working force and an increase per man in production?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long ago did it occur?

A. In the last 90 days.

Q. In what department?

A. YF Department.

Q. What is made there or what is done in that department?

A. Well, it is an assembling a complete marine motor.

Q. And who originated the idea that an increase per man production could be effected?

A. Well, that is—

Q. (Interposing) You or somebody else?

A. Management asked for time study to be taken in this certain part of the department, and as it went on for a couple of days, why, I seen the way it was going,

1714 and I went to the management and told them I thought it was my duty as a general foreman to go in there and set up the job, and he called the head time study man in return and told him that he thought it was, too, and they both agreed on it, and I went in and set up the job, and after the job was timed there was 11 men taken out of 21.

Q. 11 out of 21 were dispensed with?

A. That is right.

Q. Did you decrease or increase the production?

A. The production was just the same.

Q. It remained the same?

A. Just the same.

Q. With 10 men as it had been with 21?

A. That is right.

Q. That is within the last 90 days?

A. Ninety days.

Q. You had been a member of the Foreman's Association of America how long when you did that work?

A. Well, practically ever since they was organized.

Q. Well, that would be two years?

A. That is right.

Q. And you are a member now?

A. Yes; sir.

Mr. Nelson: That is all.

Mr. Dahling: No questions.

1715 Mr. Karasick: No questions.

(Witness excused.)

THOMAS SEITZ,

a witness called by and on behalf of the Petitioner, being first duly sworn, was examined and testified as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Your residence, Mr. Seitz?

A. 12076 Lambsdown.

Q. How long have you lived in Detroit?

A. For the past 19 years.

Q. Your present employment?

A. Packard Motor.

Q. In what capacity?

A. As a general foreman.

Q. In which department or division?

A. In the SDF Department, or reverse gear.

Q. What is the work done there?

A. Well, it is the machine and assembly of the reverse gear for the marine engine.

Q. In the lunch hour were you telling me about an incident of reduction or increase in production per man?

A. Well, since we started the job—

Q. (Interposing) Well, just yes or no, were you telling me that during the lunch hour?

A. Yes.

1716 Q. How lately did it occur?

A. Well, it occurred over the period since May 1st, 1942.

Q. Was that in your department?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you the general foreman in that department?

A. I was one of them.

Q. You were one of the general foremen in that department?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there other foremen involved in this particular reduction?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many?

A. Well, I had four under me and I believe the day man had six under him.

Q. That would be 10 or 12 foremen altogether involved?

A. That is right.

Q. Tell me before you give us the incident, were they practically all of them members of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. They were all members.

Q. They were all members?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And at all times involved in this narrative you are about to give us?

A. That is right.

1717 Q. Now, tell us what the incident was.

A. Well, when we started this job we had approximately 100 hours per unit to build a reverse gear, and during the course of the job we found ways of improved tooling, rearranging the machines and other things that enabled us to take out approximately 35 hours of the total of 100, making at the present time around approximately 65 hours to build a motor or reverse gear.

Q. The gear that formerly took a total of 100 hours?

A. That is right.

Q. And that is what, skilled work?

A. Well, it is—I don't know where the line of demarkation between skilled and unskilled labor is. It is machine work and assembly work.

Q. Now, you said "we", who did you include in the word "we"?

A. I included myself, the general foreman on the opposite shift, plus the foremen under us that all had different ideas, and we tried to put them all into effect if possible.

Q. So, you reduced the cost by the difference between 100 and 65?

A. That is right.

Q. How long did it take you to do that?

A. Well, those changes were taking place practically at all times.

Q. You mean you were gradually working them out?

1718 A. That is right.

Q. It was a long process, was it, to work it out?

A. That is right; in fact, one machine in certain cases would suggest another change.

Q. And you kept making them until you attained this result?

A. That is right.

Q. You say that the foremen involved were all members of the Association at all times?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, Mr. Seitz, bearing in mind just what that is an illustration of, are there other circumstances of that kind that you have heard or known about in the factory where the formen took an interest—

A. (Interposing) Yes, sir.

Q. (Continuing) —in reduction of the total amount of manpower required to get the kind of production desired?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What would you say as to whether that is a general attitude of foremen in the Packard Plant?

A. In my division—

Q. (Interposing) In that period, from two and a half years last past?

A. In my division the foremen were continually discussing ways and means of gaining that end.

Q. Do you regard that as one of the marks of your 1719 loyalty to the interests of the Company?

A. I certainly do.

Q. Have you seen any slackening in that or falling off in the matter since the Association was organized?

A. No, sir.

Q. Are you an officer in the Association?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what office do you hold?

A. I am on the Executive Board.

Q. How long have you been a member of the Executive Board?

A. I am on my second term now.

Q. That would be an annual term?

A. That is right.

Q. You not only know the foremen in the shop, then, but you meet them in connection with their interest in the Association and Chapter Five?

A. That is right.

Q. And you had that in mind in giving your testimony here?

A. That is right.

Q. By the way, you once had a very distinguished man working for you, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you might give us his name?

A. Well, Mr. Patzkowsky used to work for me.

Q. Mr. Patzkowsky used to work for you. Well, I
1720 won't ask you anything about him.

Mr. Nelson: We offer the witness for cross examination.

Mr. Dahling: No questions.

Mr. Karasick: No questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Seitz, would you say, is it a fair thing to say, that at least in some instances the smaller the number of people you have to supervise the smaller the number of supervisors?

The Witness: In some instances that would be true; in others not.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is to say, it depends on the nature of the work?

The Witness: That is right.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Any suggestion you might make which would cut down the rank and file to do a particular operation might also cut down the number of supervisors, and might that not result in at least, in that particular instance, in a removal from your division a member of your Association?

The Witness: Well, I have never thought about that situation. It never has arisen.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, as I give you the facts, would you concede that that is a possibility?

The Witness: It would be a possibility.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, suppose you were 1721 faced with that possibility; what would you do?

The Witness: I would still have to go through with the change.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Why?

The Witness: Well, I figure it is my duty to do that, not only my duty to the Company but to myself to make my department look as good as it possibly can.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Would your duty to your Union be involved in that at all?

The Witness: My Union, as I see it, wouldn't enter into it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Why not?

The Witness: Well, it is something apart from the job.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Isn't your Union interested in the job?

The Witness: Well, to a certain extent.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: What do you mean by that?

The Witness: Well, as to the general working conditions, wages and hours; other than that it has no connection as far as I am concerned.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Suppose that a particular foreman or assistant foreman under you in your opinion was incompetent or laying down on the job, what would you normally expect to do about it?

The Witness: I would first contact the man to see if 1722 I could correct the condition. If I couldn't correct the condition, I would request his removal.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, suppose he was a member of your Association, then what?

The Witness: Well, that wouldn't have any bearing on it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Why not?

The Witness: I don't think the purpose of the Association is to uphold an incompetent foreman.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: If you let him go, you might lose a member, might you not?

The Witness: Well, I would rather not have the member unless he was a good member and if he wasn't doing the job that was assigned to him, I certainly wouldn't have him and he certainly wouldn't be a good member.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Anything further?

Mr. Nelson: Nothing further.

Mr. Dahling: Yes.

Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Seitz, if this assistant foreman that you asked to have removed appealed to the FAA, and the FAA disagreed with you and said that he should not be, that he should go back on the job, management refused and the FAA called a strike because management followed out your recommendation, would you go out on strike with them?

1723 A. If the majority went on strike I would have to go with them.

Mr. Dahling: That is all.

Redirect Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) You believe in the majority rule in the Association, do you?

A. That is right.

Q. As you do in our every-day civic life?

A. That is right.

Mr. Nelson: I believe that is all.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right. Next witness.

(Witness excused.)

PROSPER TRAEN

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Something was said yesterday about a foreman by the name Mayday, Mr. Traen. Did you know Mr. Mayday?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he a member of the Association?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he an officer of the Association?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time of his discharge?

1724 A. Yes, sir.

Q. What office did he hold?

A. He was a member of the Executive Board.

Q. Do you know, without saying any more than you should about another man that isn't here to defend himself, what his trouble was with his employer, do you know what caused his trouble?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Well, let me ask you bluntly if it was too much drink?

A. That is right.

Q. Was that a fact known to other officers and members of the Association?

A. It was.

Q. Do you know whether, in fact, other members and officers of the Association took it up with Mr. Mayday?

A. They did.

Q. In an effort to help him over his trouble?

A. Yes, sir, they did.

Q. Did they also caution him that if continued he would get into trouble with his employer?

A. That is right.

Q. What did they say as to whether they would support him if he continued with his drinking?

A. They told him if he would continue at the rate he was going that he would get no support from the 1725 Foreman's Association.

Q. When he got into trouble over excessive drinking with his employer, the Packard Motor Car Company, did the Association lend him any aid?

A. They did not.

Q. Did he even come to the Board of which he was a member and ask them for it?

A. He did not. He was cautioned beforehand it wouldn't be necessary to come to the Board, it wouldn't do no good to come to the Board.

Q. He was told that, and, as a matter of fact, he didn't come?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, is it a Mr. Harden that was spoken of here yesterday as having come with Mr. Mayday when he went to excuse himself or relieve himself of the trouble; something of that kind was said here yesterday?

A. I believe it was Mr. Patzkowsky who testified.

Q. Said that Mr. Harden came in?

A. Said that Mr. Harden came in.

Q. Now, whether or not Mr. Harden was at that time an officer of the Association?

A. He was not. He has never been an officer or representative.

Q. Or a representative?

1726 A. No, sir.

Q. If he went with Mr. Mayday on that occasion, he went only as an individual?

A. That is right.

Q. That was his right to do so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the Association in any wise consulted or involved in the discharge of Mr. Mayday?

A. It was not.

Q. Now, Mr. Traen, as President of the Chapter, does that incident supply or give an example of the attitude of the Association and its officers towards a legitimate and well grounded discipline of foremen?

A. It does.

Q. That would apply whether the offense of the foreman happened to be the weakness of too much drinking or some other defect?

A. That is right.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Of course, I might point out, Mr. Nelson, as I did to Mr. Dahling once I think, you are leading a wee bit.

Mr. Nelson: That is probably true, but I thought I might on that question if I let him tell the other himself.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) First let's have that letter,
1727 I don't know the exhibit number, but that letter of application to the UAW for a charter for foremen, it is Company's Exhibit 28-A, is that right, Mr. Traen?

Mr. Dahling: 28-A, I believe, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is correct.

Mr. Nelson: That is correct.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I will show it to you to refresh your recollection, Mr. Traen, Company's Exhibit 28-A. Did you ever see a copy of that letter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And where were you when you first saw a copy of it?

A. A copy of this letter was brought to me in my office.

Q. In working hours at the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And by whom was it brought to your office?

A. It was brought to me by Mr. Dubrovich.

Q. D-u-b-r-o-v-i-c-h?

A. That is right.

Q. Who is himself a foreman?

A. He is the supervisor of the clerical, in charge of the clerical end of the D Division.

Q. Was any statement made to you as to where he had received the letter or a copy?

A. Yes, he said he had found it on a foreman's desk.

1728 Q. Unsigned as you have it there?

A. Yes, there was no signature on it when he gave it to me.

Q. You then read it, did you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To acquaint yourself with what was in it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make any writing on the letter?

A. Yes. I asked Mr. Dubrovich if possible to get me the name of the steward who was in that particular department where he had found this letter, and he did, and when he called me by telephone conversation, he gave me the name, and I wrote the name up in this corner here (indicating).

Q. And the name was what?

A. Timberman.

Q. Did you also put the department designation?

A. I did, ESB.

Q. To show where Mr. Timberman was a UAW steward?

A. That is right.

Q. Representing the maintenance and production workers?

A. That is right.

Q. So, you wrote that in pencil on the letter, did you?

A. I wrote it on the upper right hand corner.

Q. Now, having that letter on hand what did you do with it?

A. I asked Mr. Dubrovich if possible to find more of them if he could. Then I took this letter, the first 1729 letter that I got, and I brought it down to a Mr. Sours.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: S-o-u-r-s.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) The witness who appeared here?

A. I don't think he was.

Q. He has been in the room, though?

A. Yes, he was in the room.

Q. Some days ago?

A. Yes.

Q. And has been referred to in the testimony here?

A. Yes.

Q. You took it in to him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you take it up with any other officer of your Association?

A. Well, yes.

Q. Let's take that step first, was that the next step?

A. Yes, the next step was taken with the officers of the Association.

Q. And any of them by name now if you can recall?

A. I might add that there was one more copy found.

Q. And was that found very promptly after the first copy?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it likewise was unsigned?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Neither of these were signed?

1730 A. They were not.

Q. Let me ask you while I am on that subject, whether you ever saw any of those exhibits, Company's Exhibit 28-A, signed by anybody?

A. I did not,

Q. I mean not the actual act of putting down the name, but any paper even after it was signed?

A. I did not.

Q. You never saw it either way?

A. No.

Q. And Mr. Dubrovich got you two copies altogether?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The one you had written on, as you indicated, you took up with officers of the Association?

A. The one that I wrote on I gave to Mr. Sours.

Q. At once?

A. At once.

Q. Then you got the other one from Mr. Dubrovich, did you?

A. Yes, he gave me the other one.

Q. What did you do with that one?

A. I took it to the officers of our Chapter and then we decided that we had better forward it to Mr. Keys.

Q. The National President?

A. The National President, yes.

Q. What did Mr. Sours do with the one you gave him?

1731 A. He gave us a promise he would bring it right up to management.

Q. Oh, he undertook to take it at once to the management?

A. Well, we asked him to.

Q. You mean, you and the officers of the Association?

A. Yes.

Q. And he did so as far as you know?

A. As far as I know he did so, yes, sir.

Q. Now, you then on the one hand notified management, on the other hand you notified the president of your National Association of the presence of this particular letter in the Packard Plant?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what juncture of affairs or what was at hand at the time that letter was found by you; was there any event under way or expected?

A. At that time, yes, the membership was quite a bit perturbed about the recognition issue.

Q. The membership of what?

A. Of our Chapter.

Q. The foremen?

A. Yes.

Q. Were, you say, perturbed?

A. Yes, they were perturbed. In other words, they were talking quite a bit that they couldn't understand 1732 why we couldn't get recognition, and, in other words, they were perturbed, the feeling runs through the officers when the membership is perturbed, it comes to the heads when the membership is perturbed, it comes to the heads immediately.

Q. It is reflected back to you?

A. Very much so, yes.

Q. And you by the word "perturbed" you mean the men were talking about it and were insistent about it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, had you ever heard tell of this letter before?

A. No.

Q. Had you or anybody connected with the Association to your knowledge had anything to do with the composition or presence of that letter in the Packard Plant?

A. No, sir, we had nothing to do with it.

Q. Had there ever been any action by the Chapter or the Association authorizing that step or even conniving in it?

A. No, sir.

Q. In other words, had you or the Association, to your knowledge, or anybody in its behalf anything to do with the presence or circulation of that letter in the Packard Plant?

A. No, we did not.

1733 Q. One other event with respect to Company's Exhibit 28-A, after you gave Mr. Sours the one on which you wrote the word "Timberman" and the department designation—what was it, BSD?

A. ESB.

Q. ESB, and you mailed the other copy to the National President of the Association; did you ever see a letter like that again until the day of this trial?

A. That was the only two I ever seen.

Q. Well, but did you see that once more some place else?

A. I seen it here.

Q. Well, any other place, I will say, in the office of any officer of the Company?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Now, you tell us that circumstance; where was that?

A. I seen one copy like this in Mr. Christopher's office.

Q. He is the president of the Packard Motor Car Company?

A. Yes.

Q. How long after it was brought to you did you see it there if it was afterwards?

A. It was afterwards, but I don't remember the exact date, Mr. Nelson.

Q. Well, I wouldn't ask you for the exact date. Give us in length of time?

A I imagine it was around in April or May, I think it was.

1734 Q. What would that be, a month or something?

A. About a month, maybe not a month, 15 days or so.

Q. 15 days or so?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is best recollection on it?

A. That is my best recollection.

Q. I suppose that would yield to some written evidence or something of that kind; that is only an estimate on your part?

A. That is right.

Q. Who was with you when you went into Mr. Christopher's office, if anybody?

A. Mr. Turnbull was with me.

Q. Anybody else, do you recall?

A. Mr. Wilkins.

Q. And anybody else?

A. I think Mr. Tom Pulaski was with us, too.

Q. What was your mission or the subject of discussion or whatever you want to call it?

A. It was the recognition issue.

Q. Recognition of the Association?

A. Yes.

Q. You went in to see the President about it?

A. Yes.

Q. You had a discussion with him, did you?

1735 A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in that discussion was a copy of Exhibit 28-A produced?

A. Yes, Mr. Christopher had one.

Q. Oh, he had it?

A. He had it on his desk.

Q. Had you given it to him?

A. I don't know where he got it.

Q. But he had a copy of that on his desk?

A. Yes.

Q. And what, if anything, was done with it or said about it?

A. I believe at that time that when he showed us this copy, he pointed out, of course, that this is what is going to happen to the Foreman's Association.

Q. That is what he said?

A. Yes.

Q. What is indicated in that letter?

A. What is indicated in the letter, yes.

Q. That is what he said was going to happen to the Foreman's Association?

A. Yes.

Q. He made that statement to you there, did he?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make any reply to that?

1736 A. I did.

Q. And what reply, if any, did you make?

A. My reply was that by recognizing us and with our combined efforts certainly the CIO would never sign up the foremen and have them as a recognized body for the CIO.

Q. That is your reply to Mr. Christopher?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, from that time until it was produced in this hearing had you ever seen that exhibit, Company's Exhibit 28-A?

A. I never seen it since.

Q. Mr. Traen, Mr. Karasick suggests that I have you fix with sufficient definiteness the exact date, if possible, when you first saw Exhibit 28-A. Can you fix it with more definiteness than you have? You might note the date of it, if it is of any aid to you.

A. I think we could possibly fix it within, say, about the 28th of April, something like that.

Mr. Donovan: Around what?

The Witness: 25th of April is the date on the Exhibit.

Mr. Donovan But he asked you when you fix it.

The Witness: I would say within about three days of the 25th.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Within that period?

A. Yes.

Q. That is as nearly as you can fix that date for us?

1737 A. Yes.

Q. Let me ask you the date you went in to see Mr. Christopher as related to the strike, was it before or after the strike?

A. I think it was the day after the strike.

Q. The day after the strike was begun or ended or what?

A. Right after it begun.

Q. What was that?

A. I think it was the day following the strike.

Q. The day following the calling-off of the strike?

A. The calling of the strike.

Q. Oh, the calling of the strike?

A. Yes.

Q. The strike was effective then when you were in his office?

A. Yes, the following day.

Q. Now, was it the day following the start of the strike?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: Is it agreed that the strike started May 3, 1944?

Mr. Dahling: As far as we know that is the right date.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Then that would fix this date as May 4, 1944, is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. If you are correct in your estimate of 15 days
1738 from the time you first saw it until you saw it in Mr. Christopher's office, then you would have about the 20th of April as the time you first discovered it?

A. Thereabouts, yes, sir.

Mr. Donovan: When you said "strike", Mr. Nelson, did you mean the strike of the Foreman's Association of America?

Mr. Nelson: I believe at Packard's, is that right, Mr. Traen?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Donovan: It was the strike of the Foreman's Association of America?

Mr. Nelson: That is right, it was the strike of the foremen at the Packard Plant.

The Witness: That is right.

Mr. Nelson: Can we refer to this whole bundle of papers as Exhibit 29 now? This is marked 29-B.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Company's Exhibit 29.

Mr. Dahling: That is part of it.

Mr. Nelson: On here it appears to be 29-B, but we agree that it is 29.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: That is right.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Now, a good deal has been said about this rather bulky piece of evidence. You are more or less familiar with it in form, I suppose, Mr. Traen?

A. Yes.

1739 Q. What do you call that?

A. It is labeled routing and operations sheet.

Q. Some testimony has been introduced here to the effect that the details on that are a matter of consultation with foremen. What is your experience in that connection?

A. My experience has been that the details were always made out and were brought down to me for approval.

Q. You mean they were already on the paper?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do?

A. I looked the operations over and, of course, we checked to see whether we had certain machines available that were mentioned on the sheets, the tools available that are mentioned on the sheets, and if I found them there, found that we were able to run the operations according to that sheet, timed it and returned it.

Q. Now, were you consulted before the details were put on the sheet?

A. I was not.

Q. By anybody?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, do you know the general practice in Packard in that regard as to whether the foreman is consulted about that before the details are put on the sheet?

A. He is not.

1740 Q. Suppose you don't find you have the tools or the machines, what is the course the foreman follows?

A. Then, of course, you have to contact the proper authorities who follow that particular tool and have them follow those tools up for you before you agree to sign that sheet. When you agree to sign a sheet that means you are ready to go ahead with your production.

Q. It means you have the tools and the machinery on hand?

A. That is right.

Q. And if you don't have them, what can you do about it?

A. You can only contact the men who are responsible for bringing the tools in to you and see that they bring them to you.

Q. If they do, of course, then you are in a position to sign the sheet to indicate that you have them?

A. That is right.

Q. If you can't locate either the machinery, the tool or the material, what course could a foreman follow?

A. Then it would be my suggestion they don't sign the sheets until they are ready to go.

Q. Until they certify that those things are on hand?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, as to the feasibility of the operation other than having these things, is the foreman consulted about whether that is a good way to do it or a poor way 1741 of doing it or anything of the kind?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. How long have you been there?

A. 18 years.

Q. Did you ever hear, until you heard of it in this proceeding, that foremen was consulted about it as a matter of determining whether it was the right course or not?

A. The only time the foremen are consulted in my experience has been that when the process man was more or less stuck, then he would come down and look over the department and possibly talk it over with the foreman.

Q. In other words, when he couldn't forecast on this paper or prophesy, so to speak, what could be done, then he would come down here and talk it over with the foreman?

A. That has been my experience.

Q. But is it true that the foreman's responsibility then in the normal course of events is to indicate that he has the tools, the machinery, the material, or can get it when he signs it?

A. That is right.

Q. Have you ever been in the office where these are made out?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any of their foremen who is known to you to have been in that office where these are made out?

1742 A. Well, I don't know where they are made out.

Q. You don't even know where they are made out?

A. No.

Q. Exhibits 31, 32, 33 and 34 have been the subject of testimony here, Mr. Traen.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Company's Exhibits?

Mr. Nelson: Company's Exhibits.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) I hand them to you, Mr. Traen. Have you examined them now?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you had any experience with similar matters?

A. I haven't had much experience with tool changes in that particular phase of operation in the place where I am at this time, and it is applied mostly to the aircraft parts.

Q. That is these forms of exhibits and this type of action is in some mechanical division?

A. That is right.

Q. As you say, aircraft parts?

A. That is right.

Q. And your work is not in that division?

A. My type of work is, as I said before, polishing work, and we don't have any changes to effect us in that particular department.

Q. So, this particular application isn't one that you are particularly familiar with?

1743 A. Not too familiar with.

Q. You would only know it by what other men had said to you about it?

A. That is right.

Q. I guess we will have to refer to Company's Exhibits 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40 and 41 without the benefit of having them here before you, but you were here yesterday afternoon, weren't you, Mr. Traen?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When they were offered in evidence, and you heard the testimony in connection with them, did you?

A. Yes, I heard the testimony.

Q. Did you see the exhibits themselves, I mean you were here at the table?

A. I was at the table.

Q. When they were examined, and did you take a look at them?

A. I don't just recall.

Q. Those requests for tests, gloves was one and oil was another and flux was another?

A. Yes, I remember those.

Q. You remember those?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you had any experience with those?

A. No.

1744 Q. That is not in your department, either?

A. No.

Q. That is, you heard what he said about it, but you haven't any individual experience with it?

A. That is right.

Q. Mr. Traen, did you hear Mr. Patzkowsky read as far as he read on the duties and responsibilities of a foreman; did you hear what he read?

A. I believe that was Mr. Macaulay, was it not?

Q. Oh, Mr. Macaulay. I am sorry. Did I say Mr. Patzkowsky?

A. Yes, you did.

Q. I agree with you, it was Mr. Macaulay. You heard as far as he read, did you?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. You understood there was still a page or two more of it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you recognize yourself anywhere in that?

A. I am afraid not.

Q. Or any of the other foremen that you have known there in the past 18 years?

A. No.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think I should say to clear the record, Mr. Nelson, while Mr. Macauley did in fact read some three or three and a half pages of what he 1745 termed an analysis of a foreman's job, or analysis of a foreman, and as a result of an off-the-record discussion we struck that physically, and the reporter then copied into the record the actual document itself.

Mr. Nelson: I am not indicating anything to the contrary.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) But obviously the only thing you would know was the portion that was read?

A. That is right.

Q. Because the copies haven't been made available?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Merely to tie up the fact with your question. The fact is, we all agree, I assume Mr. Macaulay did read some three pages or three and a fraction pages of that five-page document.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) And you heard that portion, Mr. Traen?

A. I did.

Q. You haven't had an opportunity to examine the rest of it?

A. No, I haven't.

Q. You have been a foreman some nine years, as I recall it?

A. Twelve years.

Q. Twelve years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have been there for 18 years?

A. Yes, sir.

1746 Trial Examiner Jaffee: You say you didn't recognize yourself at all?

The Witness: Not in that reading I didn't.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Or any other foreman?

A. No.

Q. In the Packard Company in the 18 years, is that right?

A. That is right.

Mr. Nelson: You may cross-examine.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You claim that there "ain't no such animal"; is that the idea?

The Witness: Not such as he painted.
Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Traen, do you say that you do not interpret the directions and orders and policies of management to the workers as they come down to you?
A. That I do not?
Q. Yes, you don't do anything like that at all?
A. Did I say I did not interpret the directions?
Q. I am asking you, do you?
A. I say I do.
Q. You do?
A. I say I don't say that.
Q. You don't?
A. I do interpret directions.
1747 Q. And you develop and maintain morale, do you not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Or try to?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you carry into effect the policies of the Company regarding safety?
A. I carry out any orders given to me, Mr. Dahling.
Q. And in the matter of adjusting grievances?
A. As far as we can go, yes.
Q. And you, I believe, in your direct testimony said that you also recommended promotions or you could recommend promotions?
A. We can suggest them.
Q. And you attempt to maintain discipline, do you not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You place the right man on the job to the best of your knowledge?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And you adjust complaints where possible?
A. Where possible.
Q. You see that the workers are placed in the correct classification?
A. We have to do that.

Q. Do you take any personal interest in the worker at all?

A. I do.

1748 Q. And you know your men by name, do you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Don't you plan to keep a steady flow of work in the department?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you try to adjust problems arising between the workers themselves so that they will have no trouble in your department?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You train workers on the job, instruct them as to how to do the job?

A. Yes, the assistant foreman.

Q. That is done under your supervision, however, as general foreman?

A. Yes.

1749 Q. And you can recommend, can you not, that the workers be promoted or transferred to assistant foremen's jobs?

A. We can suggest it to the—

Trial Examiner Jaffee: To the what?

The Witness: To the division manager or assistant division manager.

Q. You, as a matter of fact, do plan your work according to the schedule or the routing sheets that come in to you?

A. Yes, we have those routing sheets to work by.

Q. And you get out your production on schedule?

A. As near as possible.

Q. That is one of your responsibilities?

A. It is.

Q. You see that your operations and processes are performed according to the routing sheet?

A. As near as we can.

Q. And you see that the proper number of people are placed on the job?

A. Yes.

Q. And that material is available?

A. That's up to the stock department.

Q. If it isn't available, you get it into the department or contact someone about it, don't you?

A. I contact the foreman in the stock department.

1750 Q. And you see that the material as it is completed is moved out of your department?

A. The same teps as we had when the stock material came into the department.

Q. You also see that when parts are made, they are made up to standard specifications?

A. We have an inspection for that.

Q. You pay no attention to that at all?

A. Not unless they are rejected by our inspection.

Q. If you thought a man was making too much scrap you would do nothing about it?

A. If they are rejected by inspection I said, Mr. Dahling, I step in.

Q. You step in and find out who caused the trouble and try to correct it, do you not?

A. That's right.

Q. So you would say that you are interested in seeing that the work in your department is done according to specification?

A. Yes.

Q. And you also are responsible for seeing that the quality is maintained?

A. Yes.

Q. And you check with inspection or inspection checks with you to see that quality is maintained, isn't 1751 that right?

A. I check with inspection.

Q. You do check with inspection.

Aren't you responsible for the selection and placement of the workers in your department to do the job?

A. The selection in my department is very limited, Mr. Dahling.

Q. But you do place them on the job, do you not?

A. It is all polishing, so I only have the one classification.

Q. So you wouldn't know much about that?

A. No.

Q. You do, however, look to the proper training of your employes to see they know their job?

A. My employes generally know their job when they come in.

Q. If they don't, what do you do?

A. Well, if they don't know the job, why, there is only one thing to do, Mr. Dahling, and that's to refer them back to the employment department.

Q. Did you ever work in a department where you instructed the workers as to how to do their job?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is the responsibility of foremen in departments of that character, isn't it?

1752 A. Yes.

Q. And you are also responsible for maintaining proper working conditions?

A. Well, there is a representative of the UAW-CIO that takes pretty good care of that.

Q. You have nothing to do with it? Is he in complete charge of that?

A. No, he is not in charge of it but—

Q. You are in charge of your department, aren't you?

A. He takes pretty good care of that end of it.

Q. Aren't you responsible for working conditions in your department?

A. Why, if he complains to me, I eliminate them.

Q. If he doesn't complain you would let your department go to seed and it wouldn't make any difference to you?

A. It is generally in pretty good condition.

Q. You keep it that way, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I don't want to take up too much time on this matter, but I have just read to you the first sheet of the analysis of a foreman's job which was copied into evidence in this case and concerning which you said you didn't recognize yourself.

Will you look at that first sheet and tell me if I haven't properly and correctly asked you with re-

1753 spect to the responsibilities set forth thereon.

Mr. Nelson: You mean have you read it correctly? I will agree you did.

Mr. Dahling: Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. You did testify, however, that you didn't recognize yourself as being the person who had these responsibilities, is that right?

A. I did.

Q. You still want to maintain that that is your answer to the question?

A. I never had it pointed out to me where—you might say combed out with a fine-tooth comb like that, I'll tell you that.

Q. But you do say that you have testified that your responsibilities cover all these matters on the first page, isn't that correct?

Mr. Nelson: I don't agree with that. That is not a fair statement of his testimony. He made a number of exceptions.

Mr. Dahling: We will let the record disclose that.

Q. Would you say that it is part of your responsibilities to see that tools and fixtures are properly maintained?

A. Yes.

1754 Q. And to see that the machines in the department are properly maintained?

A. There is a machine maintenance department, Mr. Dahling, that takes care of the maintenance end of it.

Q. If you saw a machine that was out of order, what would you do?

A. I would just put in a call.

Q. You would put in a call, wouldn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. In that sense you would see that your machines were maintained in running order?

A. They would see that they were maintained.

Q. You would originate the request?

A. I would put in the call. That is about as far as I go.

Q. You would watch the machine to see how it is operating, wouldn't you, or your assistant foreman would?

A. The maintenance department, when they are through, they are operating.

Q. But if you found a machine that wasn't operating properly, who would report that to you?

A. I would put in another call.

Q. So you do watch your machines and if they are not operating you use another service to get them in shape again?

1755 A. That's right.

Q. But you say that doesn't give you the responsibility of seeing that the machines are maintained?

A. Yes, the maintenance department takes care of that end of it.

Q. So your answer is that you don't have to see about maintaining the machines at all?

A. All I have to do is report that they are broke down or held up for a fault.

Q. Is it any part of your duty to see that your department is kept clean?

A. Yes.

Q. And also a part of your duty to eliminate scrap?

A. I believe I testified to that.

Q. I think you did. And also to see that the tools are properly used by your workers?

A. Yes.

Q. And avoid unnecessary help in your department?

A. Yes.

Q. And see that the right amount and type of machines are used?

A. No.

Q. That isn't up to you at all?

A. No.

Q. If you felt you had the wrong type of machine in 1756 your department you would go ahead and use it without doing anything further about it, making no report at all?

A. You see, I only have one type of machine in my department, Mr. Dahling.

Q. Have you ever been in any department that had other types?

A. No, I have never been in the machining department.

Q. So you wouldn't be able to answer that question?

A. No.

Q. I believe you said you have made out time exception reports and do make them out?

A. Yes.
Q. Employment record cards?
A. Yes.
Q. Trouble reports?
A. The only trouble report that I make out is to the foreman on the other shift, that is, for running into trouble, I might leave a report to him.
Q. Did you ever make out any shortage reports?
A. No.
Q. Do you know what they are?
A. I imagine you are referring to material shortage?
Q. You make out the labor requisition cards and forms?
A. Yes.
Q. And do you have anything to do with making out
1757 progress reports?
A. No, I don't make out any progress reports.
Q. Are they made out in some departments?
A. No, I don't make any out.
Q. Do you know that they are made out in other departments?
A. Not that I know of, Mr. Dahling.
Q. And you make out the employe rating card or report?
A. I don't quite get it. Employe rating card?
Q. If an employe is cleared from the rolls do you have to send through a card and does that contain his rating or your idea of his ability, and so on? Do you make out that card?
A. His record card?
Q. His record card.
A. Yes.
Q. Do you ever do anything about analyzing the requirements of a job to be assigned to a worker?
A. No.
Q. You just take a worker and put him on the job without paying any attention to deciding whether he can do the work or whether it is the type of job he can do?
A. We put him to work and try him out, yes.
Q. Try him out and if he isn't satisfactory, why, you will ask for another man?

1758 A. That's right.

Q. And do you or the people under you more or less introduce the worker to the job?

A. Well, if you mean putting him on the job is introducing him to it, that's about what it calls for.

Q. You tell him to go over there by the machine, I suppose?

A. We say, "Here is your machine; there is your parts."

Q. If he asks you any questions about the work, you will answer them, I suppose?

A. Certainly.

Q. You say that you don't have to do much instructing in your department?

A. I don't, no.

Q. Do your assistant foremen?

A. Not very much, Mr. Dahling.

Q. There are other departments you would say where there was more instruction?

A. There may be, yes.

Q. You wouldn't know about that. But you do follow instructions in connection with higher management down through to you?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Without going into this further, Mr. Traen, in addition to these duties you have testified that you have, 1759 these responsibilities and duties, you still have the same duties and responsibilities that you testified to under my cross-examination, isn't that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you ever a polisher yourself, Mr. Traen?

A. No, sir.

Q. But you are in charge of the department that does that type of work?

A. That is right.

Q. Would you say that perhaps one of the reasons you don't instruct the workers is because you haven't the qualifications to do so?

A. I would not.

Q. Coming back to this routing sheet, 29, did I understand you correctly? Did you say that when these sheets came to you they were filled out?

A. Yes.

Q. And someone handed them to you?

A. Yes, or the process man generally hands it to me.

Q. Then what would you do?

A. We check over the tools that are listed and the machines, if there was any machines necessary, and such items that may have to be listed on the process sheets.

Q. And would you go into the various things that had to be done as shown by the process sheets?

1760 A. Yes. We would check and see whether those items were there for us.

Q. Would you check to see whether they could be done in the manner set forth?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you thought it wasn't a proper way to do the particular job, what would you do?

A. I would consult with the process man.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Nelson, do you mind my asking the witness a question?

Mr. Nelson: Oh, no. I have only one more witness. I was hopeful of finishing today so these men could get back to work. I am afraid production will fall off out there.

Mr. Donovan: I will be brief.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan:) Mr. Traen, you are an officer of the Foreman's Association of America or of a chapter of that organization?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which is it?

A. President of Chapter 5.

Q. That is the Packard Chapter?

A. It is.

Q. How long have you been president?

A. This is the second term.

1761 Q. Pardon?

A. This is the second term.

Q. So that you were president of the Packard Chapter during the April and May strikes of the foremen of 1944?

A. I was.

Q. Do you recall those strikes?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your chapter had a strike?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Briggs Chapter had a strike?

A. Right.

Q. And the Hudson Chapter had a strike?

A. Right.

Q. And the Aeronautical Chapter had a strike?

A. Right.

Q. The Gar Wood Company had a strike?

A. Right.

Q. And the Bohn Aluminum Company had a strike, or do you know about that?

A. I don't think so. I don't think Bohn Aluminum was involved in that.

Q. All right.

Mr. Nelson: That is when they discharged 25 or 30 out there for joining the Association?

Mr. Donovan: I will ask that that be stricken.

1762 Mr. Nelson: That was at a different time.

Mr. Donovan: I will ask that remark be stricken as having no relevancy here at all, improper. May that be stricken at this point, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Mr. Traen, as President of the Chapter, did you preside at meetings of the Packard Chapter in April and May of 1944—this year?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you still so preside?

A. Yes.

Q. How often customarily does your chapter meet?

A. In what form of meeting, Mr. Donovan?

Q. You tell me. What meetings do you have customarily?

A. We have a general meeting about once a month.

Q. Didn't you meet oftener than once a month from the first of April of this year, during April and May?

A. Yes.

Q. You met quite a bit oftener than that, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Where is your chapter headquarters?

A. On Harper near Frontenac.
Q. And what is it, a store, part of a store?
A. It is a hall above a store.
Q. A hall above a store. How many people can you 1763 get in that hall, just approximately?
A. I don't know.
Q. Have you seen the hall?
A. I guess I have. I have been in it.
Q. Yes. That is what I thought you said. Can't you give us any idea how many that hall holds?
A. No, I can't.
Q. How many members approximately did you have in April and May of 1944, during the time of those strikes, just approximately?
A. Oh, I imagine around 800.
Q. Pardon?
A. Around 800.
Q. Around 800?
A. Somewhere there, maybe better than that.
Q. Was that hall open during the daytime or in the evening during April and May of this year or portions of the day and evening as well as the times when you have your regular meetings?
Mr. Nelson: You mean in '44.
Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Your meeting place. Your hall that you were just speaking of?
A. Yes, it was open.
Q. You had people there permanently during the day on duty?
1764 A. No.
Q. You have a secretary, do you not?
A. Yes.
Q. And you have a vice-president?
A. Yes.
Q. Treasurer?
A. No.
Q. You don't have any treasurer?
A. No.
Q. You have committees of various sorts, do you not?
A. No.
Q. No committees. Well, will you state whether or not during April and May of this year, during the time that the Packard foremen were on strike, striking foremen, customarily gathered in that hall?

A. For general meetings, Mr. Donovan, we met at the Slovak Hall ...., that is, the big meetings were held at the Slovak Hall.

Q. Oh, you had two halls?

A. Yes.

Q. This was the smaller one you were telling me about?

A. Slovak Hall?

Q. No, the one you first mentioned.

A. Oh, yes, yes.

Q. That is the one that you regularly have as your 1765 headquarters?

A. Yes.

Q. Where you keep your books and do hold some meetings?

A. Yes.

Q. Where foremen do gather for things other than a big meeting?

A. That's right.

Q. And you have another hall, Slovak Hall, which is much larger, which you also were using at that time?

A. That's right.

Q. And you still use that hall?

A. Yes, we used it for our last meeting.

Q. Right. Now, do you have any acquaintance with the other chapters of the foremen's organization in the city such as the chapters at Briggs, Hudson, Chrysler, Murray, Aeronautical, and so forth? Do you know any of those men?

A. Do I know any of the men?

Q. Yes.

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Do you see something now and then of the officers of those various chapters?

A. Once in a while, yes.

Q. And did you during April and May of this year?

A. About usual.

Q. And did you during the strikes of April and May 1766 of this year?

A. Yes, I met them.

Q. Ordinarily, what contacts does a president of a chapter and the chapter, too, if you like, have with the National Office of the Foreman's Association of America located in the Barlum Tower in Detroit, Michigan? Do you have any contact with the National Office?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you in April and May of this year?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you mean by contacts? Were you in pretty close touch with the head officers of the Association in the Barlum Tower during the strike?

A. Yes, on occasions I have been downtown here and went in the office.

Q. And on occasion they have had people from their office out at your chapter office, have they not?

A. Yes.

Q. During the strikes, were any of the officers of any of the other chapters attending your meetings or did you attend any of theirs?

A. No.

Q. Have you ever met officers of other chapters down in the headquarters in the National Office in the Barlum Tower?

A. Yes.

1767 Q. And would that have happened during the strike period also?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you spoke a little while ago in your testimony of the action of the Foreman's Association of America in respect to a certain Packard foreman who had been drinking a little too much and you tried to straighten him out, I believe?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that successful? Did you do so?

A. No, it wasn't successful.

Q. And what happened to that particular man?

A. I believe, if this Mr. Mayday is the one you have in mind, he was discharged.

Q. He was discharged?

A. Yes.

Q. Was any disciplinary action taken with respect to him by the Foreman's Association of America that you know of other than your participating in procuring his discharge? I understood you to testify that you did recommend that he be discharged if he didn't straighten up.

A. We made no such recommendation, Mr. Donovan.

Q. You didn't?

A. No.

Q. I thought you said if he didn't straighten up you
1768 told him that you wouldn't support him any more?

A. That's exactly what I said.

Q. What did you mean by that, that you would insist on his being there if they thought he should be discharged?

A. No.

Q. What did you mean?

Mr. Nelson: Mayday wasn't under his jurisdiction, Mr. Donovan.

Mr. Donovan: He is the fellow that told us about it. I want his views on what he said.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) What did you mean by supporting?

A. I mean that if he was discharged by Management that he needn't appeal to us—

Q. (Interposing) Oh, what you meant—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) Let him tell you if you don't know.

Q. Go ahead, if you want to add anything to that.

Mr. Nelson: He said he needn't appeal to him when you cut him off.

Mr. Donovan: Let him take all the time he wants.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) Do you want to add anything to what you have said?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Go ahead.

A. He said—We said if he was discharged he needn't appeal to us for any support or any attempt that we 1769 might make in helping retain his job with the Packard Motor Car Company.

Q. I see. So that what you told him was that if he was discharged you wouldn't support him?

A. That's right.

Q. Is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Did you know of any of the happenings during the foremen's strike at the Briggs Plants or the Aeronautical Products Plants?

A. No.

Q. You didn't know much about that?

A. No.

Q. You didn't know that superintendents were being beaten up and taken down to foremen's halls and forced to sign application cards for membership in your association?

A. No.

Mr. Nelson: Nor anybody else.

Q. (By Mr. Donovan) You never heard of that, is that right?

A. No, that's right.

Q. And if anything of that sort went on, or any intimidation or molestation of employees who wanted to go into factories to work by the striking foremen, you wouldn't know about it?

A. No.

1770 Q. Will you state whether or not to your knowledge there was ever any disciplinary action taken by the Foreman's Association of America against any member since April 1, 1944, to the present time by way of expulsion or fine or disciplinary action for anything that he did in connection with the strike of the foremen in April and May of this year?

A. There was not in our chapter.

Q. Pardon?

A. There was none in our chapter.

Q. Do you know of it being taken by any other chapter?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Or by the National Association?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did your chapter ever receive any recommendation for disciplinary action of any sort against a member of your chapter?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of any such recommendation coming from the National Office as to any other chapter in the Foreman's Association of America between April 1st and today?

A. Well, I wouldn't know what happened to the other chapters, Mr. Donovan; I can only speak for mine.

Q. You never heard of any such, did you?

1771 A. No, I never heard of any.

Q. That is all. One more question.

Mr. Traen, are you willing or are you unwilling—you may state which the case is—to admit that there may be a great many things going on during a strike, including a strike of your own organization, which you don't know about?

A. You mean outside of my chapter?

Q. Yes, events taking place during the strike?

A. Outside of our own chapter?

Q. Yes, if you want to narrow it that way.

A. There may be outside of my own chapter, yes.

Q. You feel you know pretty well what happened, though, in respect to your own chapter?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you make reports during the April and May strikes periodically to the head office in the Barlum Tower of the Foreman's Association of America?

A. We had no reports to make, Mr. Donovan.

Q. Didn't you have a lot of telephone calls between your office and the head office, Mr. Keys' office, during the strikes?

A. We had a few, not many.

Mr. Donovan: That is all.

Redirect Examination.

1772 Q. (By Mr. Karasick) This place or the places that you used for a meeting hall, Mr. Traen, were they on the property of the Foreman's Association, or were they rented, or what?

A. They were rented, Mr. Karasick.

Q. Have you at any time used the meeting halls of any other labor organization for the purposes of a Foreman's Association meeting?

A. No, these are the only two halls we have used or our own chapter that I mentioned here.

Q. Those are private halls?

A. Yes.

Q. And the rent was paid by your chapter, is that it?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Karasick: That is all.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Traen, I am reminded to ask you if on some occasions the Chapter of the Packard Company has used the public schools for meetings?

A. Yes, they have.

Q. Did you pay for that or was that something that the Board extended to you?

A. We paid for it.

Q. You paid for it?

A. Yes.

Mr. Nelson: I believe there is nothing further.

1773 Mr. Donovan: No further questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right. Witness excused.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Turnbull.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Robert F. Turnbull, recalled.

ROBERT F. TURNBULL

resumed the stand, was examined and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Mr. Turnbull, did you know of the Mayday situation and discharge?

A. Yes.

Q. You were acquainted with that in what capacity?

A. The first word I got was from Mr. Patzkowsky himself.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Off the record a minute.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) And you heard the narrative of the incident given by Mr. Traen?

A. Yes.

Q. Here this afternoon?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that substantially correct?

A. Yes, that is substantially correct.

Q. Would you add anything, any particular to it
1774 that he overlooked or that you know that he didn't know?

A. No, except that I happened to have contacted Mr. Patzkowsky over some part of the job and he mentioned this man Mayday, and I brought it to Mr. Traen's attention and between us we discussed the situation and called Mayday in front of the Executive Board and told him that he would have to behave on his job or we couldn't do anything for him, and we couldn't come down that sort of carry-on in the work and asked him to improve or it would be his own fault if he lost his job, and that's the last I saw or heard of the man.

Q. No complaint was made?

A. No complaint. He didn't even come near our Executive Board or any—he just left and accepted his medicine, evidently.

Q. And he was a member of that Board?

A. He was a member of the Executive Board.

Q. Now, I want to know whether you mean by what you say about Mr. Patzkowsky that Mr. Patzkowsky knew of the facts and circumstances at that time?

A. Oh, yes. He happened to tell me that Ed Mayday was losing quite a lot of time.

Q. He told you that?

A. Yes. And I believe I passed the remark at that time that we would talk to the man and see what 1775 we could do about it, and that's what action we took.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Did you discuss with Mr. Patzkowsky the matter of Mr. Mayday's drinking specifically?

The Witness: No. I just spoke over the telephone to him, but we knew that situation ourselves. We had seen that condition with the man ourselves and we were sufficiently convinced of it even without Mr. Patzkowsky telling us. We could see what was going to happen to a man like that.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Was it that Mr. Mayday would come to the job intoxicated or that when he was intoxicated he would just stay away, as you understood the complaint?

A. Losing time from the work was the complaint that Mr. Patzkowsky told me.

Q. That he would just stay away?

A. He stayed away.

Q. When he was intoxicated.

A. I think he told me he was a good mechanic but he lost so much time, and we knew why it was ourselves.

Q. Because of your association with him?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, you knew where the trouble lay?

A. Yes, we knew where the trouble was.

Q. Now, Exhibit 29, that is the letter of application to the Executive Board of the UAW for a Foreman's Chapter—Exhibit 28-A—you saw that, did you?

1776 A. Yes.

Q. You heard the statement of the matter made by Mr. Traen this afternoon here?

A. Yes.

Q. So insofar as it disclosed knowledge on your part of the situation, was that a correct statement?

A. That was a correct statement.

Q. Is there anything you would care to add to that that he omitted or that you know that bears of the subject matter?

A. No, I just discussed the situation with Mr. Traen. I was with him when he took it into Mr. Al Sour, and I also saw it in Mr. Christopher's office the day after we went on strike, and I was there when the remarks were passed in there about that letter.

Q. You mean the same letter?

A. Yes, and the other one.

Q. That one with the Timberman marking on it is the one you are referring to?

A. Yes. And the other one I sent down myself to Mr. Keys, the other copy.

Q. You sent that down as a member of the National Board?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Turnbull, had you or anybody to your knowledge connected with the Foreman's Association, either the Chapter or any other part of it, anything to do with the composition or presence of that letter in the Packard Plant at that time?

1777

A. No, sir.

Q. Or at any other time?

A. No.

Mr. Donovan: He can't speak for all other foremen obviously on a thing of that kind. So far as he knows, for what it is worth, all right, but I certainly object to the answer being received when—

Mr. Nelson: (Interposing) I said, anybody connected with the Association to his knowledge having anything to do with it.

Q. Your answer was—

A. (Interposing) I will go this far, that we did check with practically every member we knew and we could not find one member of the Association that knew one thing about it.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The answer may remain.

Q. (By Mr. Nelson) Did you ever see any letter like that with any signature on it?

A. No.

Q. They were all unsigned so far as you know?

A. Yes, just two of them.

Q. To put it the way I want to argue it, frankly, nobody ever signed it so far as you know; is that a fact, or isn't it?

1778

A. That's a fact.

Q. Now, you and Mr. Traen and Mr. Duprovich are shown by the record here to have handled it on behalf of the Packard Foreman's Association, Chapter 5. So far as you know, is that all of the persons who had to do with it on behalf of the Association besides Mr. Sour? That is, foremen. Did anybody else have anything to do with it that you know of?

A. Mr. Tom Seitz was with us when we took it in to Mr. Sour.

Q. Oh, he has been a witness here?

A. Yes.

Q. The man who testified this afternoon?

A. Yes. And Mr. James Wilkins, and Tom Pawlowski were also with us in at Mr. Christopher's office when we saw it there.

Q. Is that all of the members of the Association to your knowledge that have seen or had anything to do with this letter?

A. Yes.

Q. And under the circumstances stated here on this record?

A. Yes.

Q. By this letter, I mean Company's Exhibit 28-A.

I have here Company's Exhibits 31, 32, 33 and 34 which I think you have seen as they have been offered in 1779 evidence; is that true, Mr. Turnbull?

A. Yes.

Q. And, by the way, have you had experience with similar matters in your department?

A. Well, I have had experience with them, Mr. Nelson, but I have never bothered—I have never filled them out myself. Now, if I had the job or the job wasn't running right and there was a change needed, the first thing I would do would be to call the process man and the process man—I might explain to him that I thought this wasn't running correct or suggest maybe some little change, and if he saw fit he would put out one of these changes or recommendation of a change. I never did even see this form myself, to tell you the honest truth. I don't think it is the same one. I have seen one but it struck me it was a different form than this that they had in our place. As far as making them out is concerned, I never once made one of them out. The process man would do them and he would get the change approved by his superiors and put the change into effect.

Q. Do you refer to the form, Exhibits 31, 32, 33, and 34?

A. Yes. I never fill in any of them.

Q. You never had any experience with any such thing?

A. No.

Q. How long have you been there?

A. I have been with the job right from the very 1780 start of the Rolls Royce job.

Q. The Rolls Royce job?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know anybody else that ever filled out one?

A. The only man I knew filled them out is the process man in my experience.

Q. Are you telling us that just by your experience in the factory or are you adding to what you heard from other foremen?

A. That's just my own experience.

Q. Have you ever in your discussions with other foremen—and, by the way, you are a National Board Member and member of the Executive Board and have been for how long?

A. Yes, since the start of our chapter.

Q. Two years and four months?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever seen or heard tell of such documents as these, 31 to 34?

A. As I say, I have seen one of the forms in there, but to my knowledge, it had a heavier print on the top of it than what this has, a request for engineering change it is called, and it is filled out by the process man, and any tools that are needed for it, he has to get the prints changed and everything for that job. He gets approval of it himself. There is a process man in the divi-
1781 sion and any trouble like that, you call the process man and he looks into that himself and he will make the changes or suggested changes. You might discuss it with him but he makes the change.

Q. You mean by that without any reference to the signature of the foreman at all?

A. I never signed any that I know of.

Q. You are in the mechanical department where things of that kind do arise?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Exhibits 35 to 41, both inclusive, Mr. Turnbull, are not here, but you remember they were three or more sheets?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With the typewritten form sheet on the face and then came down to some complaint or test that was requested. Have you ever had any experience with those sheets in the period you have been there?

A. No. The same thing applies to a change like that, Mr. Nelson. Anything that is tried out or that we have had to try out has been brought to us by the engineering department, or something like that, and they will ask us, "Will you try this?" And we have always said, "Put a query out on that," or something to that effect, and we will try it, but we won't without a query. And they will get a query and that is signed by the inspection de-

1782 partment or by the manager of the division that it is okay for us to go ahead with a test, and we can't dare go ahead with a test just because somebody tells us and I cannot recommend a test. I don't have anything to do—

Q. (Interposing) Did you sign one of these sheets?

A. No, never saw them before.

Q. And never heard of it before?

A. No.

Q. And by before you mean until you saw it in this—

A. (Interposing) Until I saw it here I never saw one before.

Q. In this proceeding?

A. That's correct.

Q. You say you have been with the Rolls Royce job ever since it began?

A. Ever since it started.

Q. Does that refer to your experience solely as a foreman or your entire experience in the shop?

A. My entire experience, and I started with practically the first job and was the first one on the supercharger line, and as another man came in I had to train him, as the next one came in, I trained him until we got enough that I became a leader; and then as we got more, I became an assistant foreman, and so on up, and I never saw those things yet.

1783 Mr. Nelson: We offer the witness for cross-examination.

Cross-Examination.

Q. (By Mr. Dahling) Mr. Turnbull, are you on the night shift?

A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been on the night shift?

A. Just since the 18th of March, 1944.

Q. Prior to that time, what shift were you on?

A. On the day shift.

Q. You say you have never seen any of these requests for tests?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you mean by that you think they are not used at all?

A. Oh, they are evidently used somewhere when they are shown here. I imagine, Mr.—

Q. (Interposing) You don't think those are forgeries?

A. Oh, no.

Q. The signatures of the foremen?

A. No.

Q. And you don't think that Mr. Macaulay was telling a lie when he testified?

A. No.

Q. That they were used and requested?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Your testimony is that you hadn't experienced them?

1784 A. I haven't experienced them and the procedure I seen used has been very different to the procedure of those sheets.

1785 Q. That is the procedure that you have observed in your particular department?

A. Yes, in my department.

Q. You don't want to say that that is the procedure which is uniform throughout the plant?

A. Oh, no. I can only talk of the division I am in on that procedure, which is the aircraft division.

Mr. Dahling: No further questions.

Mr. Nelson: I think that is all, Mr. Turnbull.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Witness excused.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Nelson: That is the Petitioner's case, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is there any surrebuttal?

Mr. Dahling: I wonder if we could have a few minutes to discuss one matter?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes, certainly. We will take a ten-minute recess.

(A recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, I move for leave to re-open and I desire to offer in evidence Petitioner's 46, Union membership and collective bargaining by foreman, Bulletin No. 745 of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor. And that is the only purpose of reopening.

I offer the document to Mr. Dahling.

1786 Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, I would object to Exhibit 46 as being irrelevant, containing irrelevant and immaterial matter, apparently relates to Unions in others branches of industry which are not comparable to the mass industry of the automotive business.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is received.

(The document referred to was marked and received in evidence as Petitioner's Exhibit No. 46.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: May I point out that other than for Company's 47-A and B, which were rejected, both the Petitioner and the Company are now even on exhibits, the last exhibit being 46 in both cases. You were running neck and neck for awhile.

Mr. Donovan: I hope that will not be reason for excluding the one which I am now about to offer.

Mr. Nelson: I think it is an excellent reason.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, I desire on behalf of the Packard Company, a similar request as Mr. Nelson's, to move that the Examiner reopen our case to the extent of permitting an offer of evidence which I will now have marked as an exhibit.

(The document referred to was marked for identification as Company's Exhibit No. 48.)

Mr. Donovan: It will become and is Company's Exhibit

No. 48. This exhibit, Mr. Trial Examiner, is the 1787 brief filed by counsel for the Briggs Manufacturing Company, Hudson Motor Car Company, Garwood Industry, Incorporated, and Aeronautical Products, Incorporated, in the matter between those companies and the Foreman's Association of America before the National War Labor Board and the Foreman's Panel thereof, in Case No. 111-4746-D.

It is the brief of counsel for those companies in that hearing, which was a hearing as I believe is elsewhere and earlier reflected on this record in the nature of an examination into the situation of foremen in the Detroit area with particular reference to the plants mentioned. For its informative contents to the Examiner and to the Board and its relation to the issues in this case dealing with foremen I ask that it be received in evidence.

Mr. Nelson: I object to the receipt of a brief in another proceeding in evidence. I don't see any end to that, and I don't think a brief in a panel proceeding under the auspices of the National War Labor Board has anything like either the relevance or the authenticity as a Federal Department of Labor Publication. I don't agree that my brother has produced a document of anything like equal authenticity. I more than return his objection to the introduction of the document. I object to it as irrelevant, immaterial, and wanting in authenticity.

In brief, in reply to that offer, my reply to that brief was not offered. I suppose that is just a little slight 1788 Mr. Donovan didn't intend to extend to me. I replied to that brief and did it both orally and in writing.

Mr. Karasick: I would like merely to point out, Mr. Examiner, that a glance at the brief itself shows that the Packard Motor Car Company was not even a party to the proceeding that was involved in that case.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I notice, however, that Mr. Donovan was.

Mr. Karasick: That may be. Counsel may have been but this Company was not.

Mr. Dahling: As a matter of fact, Packard Company was one of the companies involved in that same proceeding.

Mr. Karasick: It doesn't possibly appear on the title of the brief.

Mr. Dahling: This brief, however, was not one that Packard Company filed.

Mr. Donovan: This brief was not the brief of the Packard Company but it was the brief of the companies enumerated, and the Packard Company was one of the companies involved before the War Labor Board's special panel in that case and, of course, so far as the Petitioner's just recently offered exhibit being a pamphlet or a writing of some sort from the Bureau of Labor and his suggestion of an unfavorable comparison as the writer's opinion therein expressed with the opinions of the writers 1789 of this brief, it seems rather difficult for me to conceive of the Trial Examiner drawing a distinction in excluding the one and receiving the other on that basis.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The exhibit which is now Petitioner's Exhibit 46, as has been indicated, is a publication of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor. It is indicated thereon that it was written, or perhaps I should say submitted on June 9, 1943. That Bureau is or is at least supposed to be impartial. It is no reflection on counsel to say that counsel are not impartial.

Mr. Nelson: It would be a reflection to say anything else, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I think you are correct.

Mr. Donovan: Is it because of the official character of the publication of Petitioner's Exhibit 46? Is that what the Trial Examiner refers to?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: This is one of the things I have in mind—

Mr. Donovan: If that is so, Mr. Trial Examiner, I think by the same token that we would like to have the Trial Examiner reconsider his ruling on the admission of Company's offered Exhibits 47 and 47-A which were received in a rejected record because it is not questioned as to 1790 the fact that they are authentic official communications; in fact, determinations from a Body of the State of Michigan to wit, the Michigan Unemployment Compensation Commission, and they derive such authority as is accorded that official status.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: But I point this difference out, Mr. Donovan: In the case of Petitioner's 46 we have or, at least, we purport to have a survey of the particular subject covered by the title of the Exhibit, namely, Union membership and collective bargaining by foremen; whereas, in the case of Company's Exhibit 47-A and B you have the determination of an intermediate officer with reference to a particular individual case to which none of the parties here are involved. I think there is quite a difference between the two situations.

I may also point out by way of addition we also have in evidence at least one other publication of the Department of Labor, namely, that blue pamphlet, The Foreman's Guide.

Mr. Nelson: That ivory tower production.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes. The item which Mr. Nelson has referred to as being produced by someone sitting in an ivory tower.

Mr. Donovan: There is no evidence here as to what kind of a tower the author of Exhibit 46 was sitting in when he wrote that.

1791 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let me say that it is customary or it has been customary in appropriate situations to receive into evidence documents of that type, that is, of the type of Petitioner's Exhibit 46. I don't doubt but that Company Exhibit 48, for identification would undoubtedly contain material which here and there at least might very well be of some help and if Mr. Nelson had not opposed its introduction, I assure you I would not have interposed any myself, but since he objects and since I think it is incompetent, I am afraid I should have to reject the offer of the exhibit.

You may have it marked as a rejected exhibit, if you wish.

Mr. Donovan: I should like to have that done.

(The document heretofore marked for identification Company's Exhibit 48 was rejected.)

Mr. Nelson: I should balance up now with Mr. Donovan on this exhibit business and have Exhibits 31 and 32 on the rejected list. They are with reference to the experience of the British foremen's unions. I offered them previously; they have not been received in evidence. I don't want him to carry around a rejected basket that is half empty. I would like to put them in.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I may point out that if my memory serves me correctly, in those particular cases there is no concession on the record that those particular 1792 documents you have in your hand are in fact what they purport to be.

Mr. Nelson: I will ask him if he won't concede that in view of my extreme liberality in that regard. I guess I have been confronted with everything in print nearly, and I don't think they question the authenticity of those publications.

Mr. Donovan: Well, Mr. Trial Examiner, I would not feel justified in disturbing the record disposition made of these exhibits. It received a full discussion by counsel respectively for the parties before the Trial Examiner and a formal ruling was made, and I don't feel that I should disturb that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right. However, I grant as a matter of course any request that an exhibit be put in the rejected exhibit file, and the last two mentioned may be put into the rejected exhibit file.

(The documents heretofore marked for identification Petitioner's Exhibits 31 and 32 were rejected.)

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Trial Examiner, I understand that the Petitioner's case is now closed and that the case is now closed.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I don't know. Sometimes counsel have motions they want to make, or something.

Mr. Dahling: I have a motion that I would like to make at this time. I wish to renew at this time the 1793 motion that was made by counsel for the Company at the close of the Petitioner's case. I will not repeat the motion, I think you are familiar with it, Mr. Examiner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: But I wish as a matter of record to again make the same motion.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well. That was a motion to dismiss on three or four stated grounds.

Mr. Dahling: Yes, and they appear in the record. It was made at the close of the Petitioner's case.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: For reasons I am sure counsel will recognize, I again will have to refer the matter to the Board for ruling.

Are there any other motions?

Mr. Nelson: I think of nothing further.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I want to point out, Mr. Nelson, that the record stands at the moment this way: at the moment you have a request for one unit of certain grades of foremen. Does the Union care to suggest any alternative position in respect thereto?

Mr. Nelson: I should say on the record, Mr. Examiner, that if the alternative is dismissal of the petition I would prefer the Board to go further, and I would say that only in that event, however, would we consent, at least for the time being, with more than one unit at the plant 1794 of Packard.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: You mean by that, that you would consent for the time being or that you are objecting to more than one unit?

Mr. Nelson: We would object to more than one unit, but assuming that the Board reached the view that the only alternative to one unit—if there was an alternative other than dismissal to the one unit, we, of course, would entertain that determination.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Suppose or assume, counsel, that the Board takes the position that more than one unit is proper but that it is proper only in the event your organization makes what the Board deems as proper provision for separation? You have any objection to that aspect of the matter?

Mr. Nelson: I mean to indicate by what I say that we would take the steps required for separation.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: For instance, as I recall it, at least one Board member indicated in one opinion, if my memory serves me correctly—I have in mind, for instance, a dissent by the Chairman wherein he pointed out in one case—I think it was the Cramp Shipbuilding Case—that a particular union involved—

Mr. Karasick: May we be off the record, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Just a minute.

1795 I will change that. It is not a dissent, it is a special concurrence.

The Chairman pointed out in that case certain so-called lead men or leading men were grouped in what was referred to as a cell within a local representing the production and maintenance employees. In that case there was that single unit, and that fact was, nevertheless, that the approval of a contract had to be obtained from the votes of the entire local in which the leading men were outnumbered thirty to one.

Now, that might lead to an inference that if any unit or units are proper here at all you might have to make internal separation within your organization whereby if more than one unit is appropriate, general foremen might or should vote on proposed contracts by themselves, foremen by themselves, and so on.

Do you have any position you care to take in that respect?

Mr. Nelson: The Examiner seems to indicate a separate election as to certain features, say, of one contract, or a separate contract, or a separate local of the Association.

Now, I haven't any idea which of those forms the Board if it should make this error, frankly, and I speak with due respect, I hope—we would still regard it as an error on experience—I wouldn't know which form that 1796 would take. But some suitable separation could undoubtedly be arranged. In other words, I do not take the position in the case that separation of these various grades is impossible; it is possible, and in preference to a dismissal of the petition we would take suitable steps to arrange the separation either by some subdivision within the chapter or a separate chapter or some separation in the contract or some separation in the voting on the contract. Those are all possible means. I suppose they are not exhaustive, there might be other means of working out such separation as the Board might think necessary to properly take care of the matter.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Referring to something the Chairman said in the Cramp Shipbuilding Case, I merely pointed out as one possibility—I appreciate the fact there may be others if the Board ever gets that far in this situation at all.

Mr. Karasick: In order that the record may be clear and that I may be sure I understand Mr. Nelson clearly, may I ask him if his position really is this:

First, the foremen desire a single bargaining unit comprising the four classifications of foremen involved in this proceeding; second, if the Board in determining the issues in this case were confronted with a feeling that separate units of these classifications of foremen 1797 should be set up instead of a single unit, or the alternative, dismissing the petition, that the Foreman's Association position then would be that rather than have the petition dismissed it would consent to the separate units in the direction of elections of each of those units but would prefer still, of course, the single unit; and, third, that if the Board feels that it would be necessary to set up certain changes in the organization of the Foreman's Association, it is for such separate units that the Foreman's Association would comply with those directives or requirements of the Board.

Is that in substance your position?

Mr. Nelson: I think I should answer yes to that question.

Mr. Karasick: I wanted to be sure that I understood and that the record was clear.

Mr. Nelson: May I make one observation in this connection?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Proceed.

Mr. Nelson: I don't want this to be taken as any incitement to apply to the Company, but my own belief is from my contact with companies in these matters that the simpler form the organization of the foremen take, assuming that the whole thing is unpalatable, the simpler, more unified it is, the less unpalatable it is to the companies.

In other words, I think the companies would ulti-
1798 mately join us in feeling that the single unit within certain limitations was the preferable form. However, I don't assume to speak for them. I simply say that that is my fixed judgment on my contacts with the companies in this matter. I say that for whatever assistance it may give to the Board in arriving at their decision.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: In other words, you are saying to us the common law analogy: If the Jury ever gets to the question of damages, why, that is the way it ought to be decided.

Mr. Nelson: That is about it and we trust that this Jury reaches this stage without baffling itself too much about the differences and levels of supervision. Practically it hasn't caused any trouble so far. I don't know the situation in Cramp Shipbuilding, but I think it was a situation of rival unions. There was the situation of the production and maintenance workers mixed with supervision, the leader there being in effect a supervisor.

1799 Trial Examiner Jaffee: That may not have been a good example. I just picked it out of the air.

Mr. Nelson: I read Chairman Millis' dissent in that case, that is, his special concurring opinion in that, but I would say that experience in mass production industry like the mother industry and steel industry doesn't bear that out.

However, I don't want to extend the record. I answered and I don't mean to weaken my answer to Mr. Karasick's question in any respect.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The only thing I have left, gentlemen, has to do with, first, the question of briefs and, second, the question of errata.

So far as the errata is concerned, I have had typed this afternoon a list of those I have found in the record, together with certain ones Mr. Karasick has submitted; and also a separate partial list submitted to me by counsel for the Company. The list that I have had typed up is fairly long, consisting of eight pages. I am sure that there are undoubtedly other items that we would find later and which we would want to suggest as errata or which we might want to suggest as errata, and it is my thought that we may possibly agree as far as we have gotten and then a list of the errata thus far agreed upon might be put into the record as an exhibit, with the understanding

1800 expressed on the record that in the event further errata are found which any party or the Board wants to suggest, they may do so appropriately and within an appropriate time.

Off the record a minute.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

We have had some discussion off the record with reference to the procedure the parties will follow in connection with errata. It has been indicated that I would give to counsel copies of the errata that I have had typed up and they will look them over overnight and we will meet tomorrow at nine-thirty and dispose of the matter of the errata.

As far as briefs are concerned, gentlemen, what is your desire?

Mr. Dahling: On behalf of the Company, of course, we desire to file a brief.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: And the Association does, too, I presume?

Mr. Nelson: If they do, I will. I don't know that I can be of any great assistance to the Board and I have got so many courts waiting on me that I am going to be in trouble the minute I step out of here and I, as you know, have had a very heavy cold while I have been here. I am sorry I have not felt like doing the usual amount of work.

1801 Trial Examiner Jaffee: There is no law which compels you to file a brief.

I point out to you gentlemen that as I assume you are aware, under the rules and regulations of the Board you have seven days from the close of the hearing, which in this case will presumably be tomorrow, to file briefs. I would assume, and I think it is a pretty good guess, you would want more time than that, in which event I suggest you write to the Board with reference to the matter, making your request, addressing the request care of Mr. Iver Peterson, Assistant General Counsel. That is National Labor Relations Board, Washington, 25, D. C.

Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will recess at this time until nine-thirty tomorrow morning in this room.

(Whereupon at 5:25 o'clock P. M., Wednesday, January 3, 1945, the hearing was adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 4, 1945, at nine-thirty o'clock A. M.)

PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will resume, gentlemen.

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, at this time I would move the Examiner, if such a motion is necessary, to reopen the case for the purpose of having placed in the record excerpts from radio speeches made by Robert H. Keys, as president of the Foreman's Association of America. The speeches that I have in mind were exhibits offered by Robert H. Keys in a proceeding before the War Labor Board this past summer. In that proceeding, Packard was one of the companies. There were, of course, a number of others. The Packard case number in the War Labor Board proceeding was number 111-5436-D. These speeches were marked Exhibit 24 in that proceeding. They were offered in evidence by Mr. Keys personally and were admitted in evidence. The speeches are numbered consecutively from 1 to 26. The first group, the numbered group that I have mentioned, covered the period February 24, 1943 to February 24, 1944. There are the additional speeches covering the period, March 2, 1944 to May 25, 1944. I have the speeches before me here. They are a copy of the exhibit 24 in the War Labor Board proceeding which were handed to me as the Foreman's Association of America exhibits. I have marked in the various speeches the parts which I desire to read into evidence in this case.

1805 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Read into evidence?

Mr. Dahling: Read into evidence in this case or to be considered in evidence in this case.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, are you offering only that portion of the speeches or the complete speeches?

Mr. Dahling: I am offering only that portion of the speeches which are marked in these booklets. It is the position of the Company that as stated in, I believe it is Exhibit 3, which is the Examiner's statement in R cases, that one of the purposes of the hearing is to determine the nature and character of the organization, and the excerpts we have marked in these speeches being statements made by Mr. Keys as president, have a direct bearing on that point.

Furthermore, other exhibits or, I should say, excerpts deal with the question of solicitation of membership which was testified to by Mr. Keys, in taking the position that there was no solicitation. The excerpts are also pertinent in connection with the relation of the Foreman's Association of America with the Union movement generally and are pertinent for the further reason of indicating an attempt on the part of the Foreman's Association of America, through their president, to indoctrinate the foremen with antagonism toward the companies and those are our reasons, and of course, there are other general reasons.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: First, is there any objection
1806 to the motion to reopen?

Mr. Nelson: There is, because there is objection to the offer of testimony. I think it is a belated request. As a matter of fact, there could be nothing new or surprising about this, and it must have been known to counsel long before today. Mr. Keys has been available repeatedly and has been on the stand repeatedly, and I would be unwilling to have the Examiner receive these at this belated time. Therefore, I oppose the motion to reopen; it is too late, I think.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The motion to reopen is allowed. What do you have to say with respect to the receipt in evidence of what might be termed the collective works of Robert H. Keys?

Mr. Nelson: I object; it is too late in the hearing.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We are past the argument of lateness. I have allowed the motion.

Mr. Nelson: I am not addressing myself to the reopening. I am objecting to the receipt of this in evidence.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On what ground?

Mr. Nelson: There is not sufficient proof of its authenticity and there is no witness on the stand. The witness alleged to have made these statements has been a witness in this case repeatedly and he is not here now. I am unwilling to have fragmentary things he said or did 1807 offered or received in this manner.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you dispute the fact that the—what looks like pamphlets from here—are, in fact, the speeches delivered by Mr. Keys at the time mentioned by Mr. Dahling?

Mr. Nelson: I do not know. I do not see how anybody else could know.

Mr. Dahling: I would hesitate to take the stand in this case, but, if necessary to prove that fact I can, of course, be sworn to testify that these exhibits came to me as attorney for the Packard Motor Car Company as an exhibit of the Foreman's Association of America in the War Labor Board proceedings, and that they were offered in those proceedings by Mr. Robert H. Keys, as president, who conducted the proceeding in person.

Mr. Nelson: Unfortunately, I never heard any of the addresses by Mr. Keys on the radio. I do not happen to be one of those persons who listens to the radio. I know nothing about the authenticity of them. I have Mr. Dahling's word for it. The Examiner asked if I contest it. I just say it is not established and I point out that this is not a proper method of impeaching Mr. Keys, and that is all it could be offered for properly in this case. It is not legally receivable nor considerable for that purpose, 1808 and that is the purpose which he frankly states he offers it for.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Of course, I have to take this one step at a time. Obviously, I have to get some basis to indicate the authenticity of the documents before I pass to the next question.

Mr. Nelson: I am going to decline to agree on any authenticity, as not being established. I am not going to give them any kind of help at all, because this is an unfair attempt to impeach a witness. Or, it has no meaning at all. If it is to impeach a witness, it is not proper; the witness is not on the stand, he is not available. He has been on the stand repeatedly in this hearing and he has been available repeatedly in this hearing. The statement of counsel would indicate he has had these documents since last August, and therefore, it is no surprise to counsel. To offer this now as an attempt to impeach Mr. Keys, I am not willing to assist in any regard. I decline to stipulate anything in connection with it. I am not admitting, by even an inference, that they would impeach Mr. Keys. These have nothing to do with the present issue and they are improperly offered.

Mr. Dahling: I presume the next move would be, then, to be sworn as a witness in this proceeding.

Mr. Nelson: I would oppose that also.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On what ground?

1809 Mr. Nelson: Mr. Dahling is counsel in this case and it is one of our rules in the State of Michigan that active counsel do not prove the cases.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It does not occur very often, but we have taken evidence of counsel, and in view of that custom I see no reason why counsel should not testify on the point he apparently wishes to bring out in evidence.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, after the offered exhibits have been marked with a number for identification as bearing likewise on the preliminary question of the authenticity, I desire to make a statement in regard to the offer in evidence.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I assume they have been marked for identification. They would be Company's Exhibits 49-A through 49-MM.

(The documents above referred to were marked for identification of Company's Exhibits Nos. 49-A through 49-MM.)

LOUIS F. DAHLING,

a witness called by and on behalf of the Company, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination.

The Witness: My name is Louis F. Dahling, D-a-h-l-i-n-g.

I am in this proceeding one of the attorneys for the 1810 Packard Motor Car Company. It is with a great deal of reluctance that I have been sworn and am taking the stand at this time, but I feel that for the protection of my client, it is necessary. I appeared as counsel for the Packard Motor Car Company in a proceeding before the National War Labor Board, entitled, "In the Matter of Packard Motor Car Company and Foreman's Association of America, Case No. 111-5436-D."

That proceeding was before a panel appointed by the National War Labor Board, and a number of other companies, likewise, appeared.

The Foreman's Association of America in the Packard proceeding and in a number of the other cases, to my knowledge, because I attended a number of the meetings, was represented during those meetings with the exception of the first day and perhaps a few days at the end of the hearing, which extended from in the spring until in the fall, by Mr. Robert H. Keys, the President of the Foreman's Association of America.

The pamphlets which are marked for identification Company's Exhibits 49-A to 49-MM were delivered to me as Exhibit 24 of the Foreman's Association of America, offered and admitted in evidence in the proceedings before the National War Labor Board. And, as I recall, the transcript of the testimony in that case will also show the offering of these exhibits by Mr. Keys.

1811 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Anything further?

Mr. Dahling: I have nothing further.

Mr. Donovan: Mr. Trial Examiner, I would like to make a statement to the Trial Examiner who I regard is sitting in a judicial capacity, and I intend my statement to be a representation to the Examiner of what I state and of the truth of what I state.

I was present in the case before the National War Labor Board Panel, Region 11, at Detroit, during the conduct of the Foreman's case, so-called, before the special Panel appointed by the War Labor Board in the cases that Mr. Dahling has referred to, to-wit, and I read from the reporter's official entitling of that cause:

> "In the Matters of Murray Corporation of America, Briggs Manufacturing Company, Chrysler Corporation, Republic Steel Corporation, Packard Motor Car Company, Bohn Aluminum and Brass Corporation, Aeronautical Products Company, Gar Wood Industries, and Foreman's Association of America, being respectively cases numbered 111-2882-D, 111-4746-D, 111-2747-D, 111-4748-D, 111-5438-D, and 111-5798-D."

I was present during the trial and during all of the sessions of that hearing as attorney for the Briggs Manufacturing Company, Aeronautical Products Company, Gar Wood Company, and Hudson Motor Car Company, 1812 and although I didn't include the name of the Hudson Motor Car Company, they were parties to that proceeding. In the same proceeding Mr. Robert H. Keys, President of the Foreman's Association of America, was likewise present during all of the sessions and except for the opening day of the hearing, which extended over a period of several months, with some interim adjournments and with the exception of the last two days at the termination, when Mr. Walter Nelson was counsel for the Foreman's Association of America was present, Mr. Keys otherwise conducted the proceeding on behalf and represented the Foreman's Association of America. He swore witnesses and introduced evidence by exhibits and he cross-examined witnesses of the several companies who were placed on the stand.

During the course of the trial Mr. Keys, on behalf of the Foreman's Association of America, and he being the then president of the Foreman's Association of America, offered in evidence the radial addresses made by him over station CKLW in the Detroit area, being the radio addresses which have been marked for identification as Company's Exhibits 49-A to 49-MM, inclusive.

These radio addresses were published in pamphlet form, one pamphlet for each address and were entitled, as printed, and they were all printed:

1813 "The Foreman's Association of America. The Voice of Organized Foremen." The seal of the Foreman's Association of America appears upon the cover sheet of the pamphlet, which contains the title I have just mentioned, and also contains the indication in large type of: "First radio address," "Second radio address," et cetera, characterizing each one of the radio addresses which were made weekly.

Also on the pamphlet on the cover page are the words "First radio broadcast." And this language follows the designation on each pamphlet. And then follows the words I now speak of, "By President of Foreman's Association of America, Robert H. Keys, over Station CKLW, National Offices 515 Barlum Tower, Detroit, Michigan, Robert H. Keys, President; William Fisher, Secretary-Treasurer; Harold M. Kelly, Membership Director."

Mr. Keys, on behalf of the Foreman's Association of America, introduced and there was received into evidence by the Special War Labor Board Panel who conducted the hearing aforesaid, the pamphlet copies, printed pamphlet copies of the aforementioned radio addresses, being the now offered Company's Exhibits 49-A to 49-MM.

I was present in court when that took place, and the pamphlets which Mr. Keys offered in evidence as Exhibit 24, I believe, of the Foreman's Exhibits in that case, and I saw the pamphlets that he offered as that exhibit 1814 in that case contemporaneously with which he announced to the Panel that he was delivering copies thereof to counsel, and as counsel for the companies aforesaid, I was given by and received from Mr. Keys the printed pamphlets which are now marked as Company's Exhibits 49-A to 49-MM inclusive.

It may be unnecessary to state further that I haven't the slightest hesitation in making the direct representation to the Court that the printed pamphlets aforesaid which Mr. Dahling, as counsel for the Packard Company in the War Labor Board case, also received are the same as the pamphlets that I have received, each now described and referred to as Company's Exhibits 49-A to 49-MM.

I would be unable to see how the source of these pamphlets having thus been explained, there could be any question arise as to their authenticity by Mr. Nelson, who seems unwilling to concede what I say bears on that point.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is there any cross-examination of Mr. Dahling?

Mr. Nelson: No cross-examination.

Mr. Karasick: No questions.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: First, with reference to the authenticity of the offered exhibits, it may not be inappropriate for me to say that so far as the Examiner personally is concerned—I put it that way because, of 1815 course, the Board makes the ultimate findings of fact or the only findings of fact, for that matter—but as far as the Examiner personally is concerned, I should have been quite content to take Mr. Dahling's statement without having him take the stand.

Now, so far as the contents of the pamphlets are concerned and without waiving any objection previously indicated, I should like to ask whether Mr. Nelson has anything to say with reference to the offer of the designated portions of those pamphlets as compared with the entire contents of each of said pamphlets.

Mr. Nelson: I don't know. I never read it, never heard it. I don't know a thing about them. They are just as strange to me as though I didn't live in the community, because I didn't listen to the radio addresses. I have never read a line of any one of them.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Mr. Karasick?

Mr. Karasick: I only wanted to say, Mr. Examiner, that irrespective of any question of authenticity of these pamphlets, and not having seen them and not knowing whether or not the offered portions bear any relevance to the issues in this proceeding, it would seem to me that the pamphlets are offered in their entirety if they are offered at all and not only the limited portions which the Company now offers in these documents.

1816 Trial Examiner Jaffee: Let me ask the Company, then: Does the Company object to amending its offer to include the entire pamphlets instead of the portions marked, with the added statement that they direct the Board's particular attention to the portion marked?

Mr. Dahling: Well, Mr. Examiner, we, of course, have marked portions in the pamphlet which we desire to have in evidence. If the attorney for the Board or Mr. Nelson wants the balance in evidence, why, of course, we feel that is another matter. As a matter of fact, of course, these are statements of Mr. Keys. There are probably a lot of self-serving statements in there which might be objectionable for that reason, but as far as I am concerned, if the Board or the Examiner would feel that the entire pamphlet should be put in, I think that that is a matter that the Examiner can determine. As I understand this proceeding, it is in a large sense an administrative proceeding, and the Trial Examiner represents the Board. This isn't really an adversary proceeding for the parties, as I understand the procedure.

We are interested in just these excerpts, of course, but if the Examiner feels that it should all be in, that is quite okay with us, subject to the statement that I made as to the self-serving statements.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: How have you indicated in 1817 the pamphlets the portions that you refer to?

Mr. Dahling: They are indicated by pencil underlining or bracketing the paragraphs and parts of paragraphs that we specifically direct to the attention of the Board.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right. Now, I should like to ask Mr. Nelson on the record where Mr. Keys is at the present time.

Mr. Nelson: I don't know.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Do you know whether he is in the city?

Mr. Nelson: I don't even know that. And I want to interpose on the record, of course, an objection to a partial or piecemeal offer which is really objectionable on the grounds additional to those I have already urged. I don't know where Mr. Keys is. I haven't inquired this morning. I suppose I could go to the telephone and try to find out where he is.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, I may say preliminarily—

Mr. Nelson: He was advised, of course, that there would be nothing further offered this morning and that he would be at liberty to do whatever he pleased after the close of the hearing yesterday evening.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I may say to begin with that if the offered exhibits are received at all, I am inclined to receive into evidence the entire pamphlets—the 1818 entire contents of the pamphlets, rather than merely excerpts therefrom. The portions which are underlined or bracketed will be considered as a request by the Company that the Board pay particular attention to such designated portions.

In addition to that, however, I think counsel for the Union should have an opportunity to look at the pamphlets and also to ascertain whether or not Mr. Keys can be obtained or if he desires to return here as a witness, I think he should have the opportunity to get him here, in case counsel for the Union wants to put in any further evidence with reference to the pamphlets in the event they are received in evidence. For that purpose I think it might be appropriate to declare a recess to enable Mr. Nelson to try to reach Mr. Keys by telephone and also to look at the pamphlets.

I am open to any suggestion as to the length of the recess.

Mr. Nelson: I don't know anything about these pamphlets. My statement about not listening to it isn't meant to form the basis for any idea that I avoided listening to him. They happened to be made at a time when I couldn't have listened on the radio, even if I had that habit, which I don't have. I don't listen to a radio once a month, and then only briefly.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I won't hold that against 1819 you, Mr. Nelson.

Mr. Nelson: I just don't want to be considered as curious on the record. I just don't like advertisements in that form and I indulge such few moments of leisure as I have in something besides listening to the radio, and I didn't hear any of Mr. Keys' addresses. I have not had any of them delivered to me and I don't know the contents.

That is a pad of papers over an inch thick and is offered at a time when I think it is unfair and improper to receive them. But Mr. Keys might be called. I don't know, but the most I could do would be to submit this to Mr. Keys as to what he wants to do about his radio addresses. That is the most I could do and that is all, frankly, I would be disposed to do. I don't know anything about what is in those addresses and I couldn't read them today. If I did nothing but read them it would take more than a day to do that.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: I will declare a ten-minute recess. If during that time a request is made to continue the recess, I can pass upon that if that request is made.

(Recess had.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Back on the record.

I am cutting the recess short to dispose of one matter which is not related to Company's Exhibits 49-A through MM, and that has to do with reference to the 1820 matter of errata, concerning which some reference was made at the end of yesterday's hearing.

In accordance with the remarks then made by the Examiner, counsel have checked the list of errata submitted by the Examiner and the Examiner, in turn, checked other lists submitted by one or more counsel. All parties have now agreed on the list which I have before me and it is my intention or my suggestion that the list be received as an exhibit as a list of changes which should be made in the record to correct these errors of a stenographic nature.

I would venture to assert for the protection of the reporter that here and there we have, one or more of us, taken the opportunity to correct a little bad grammar, and in none of such cases have we made any change of substance, and I suppose it is our respective vanities and prides which have been involved.

Since none of us have objected to such proposed changes, I suppose no harm is done, and I make this last observation only so the reporter won't feel unduly hurt in the matter.

So far as this list is concerned, I did say to counsel off the record that the record should show, of course, that there may be other errors in the record which counsel may or would want corrected, and the receipt into evidence of this list will be considered as without prejudice

1821 to the rights of any of the parties hereafter at an appropriate time and in an appropriate way to suggest such further corrections, and if such suggestions are made the Board, I presume, can pass upon them at that time.

I would suggest that this list be received as the next Board exhibit, perhaps.

Mr. Karasick: I believe that would be No. 22.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: It is, accordingly, received in evidence as Board's Exhibit 22.

Have I stated the matter with reference to errata accurately, gentlemen?

Mr. Dahling: So far as the Company.

Mr. Nelson: On the part of the Petitioner the answer is yes.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: All right.

Mr. Karasick: Yes.

(The document heretofore referred to was marked Board's Exhibit No. 22 for identification and received in evidence.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: We will have a recess.

(Recess taken.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record.

At this moment, gentlemen, having disposed of the matter of the errata, we will continue with the recess which was interrupted to permit the last discussion.

1822 (Recess taken.)

Trial Examiner Jaffee: On the record, gentlemen.

I am wondering, Mr. Nelson, whether or not you have anything to report with reference to Mr. Keys, et cetera.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, Mr. Keys is in the city. He is busy. But I don't think, or I think after talking to him that nothing would be gained by reopening or offering testimony with respect to these radio broadcasts. I think we all know that on the radio there is a type of censorship, that is, you have to say what you think within the limitations of what the Radio Company will let you say. Within those limitations and from the viewpoint of the speaker at the time, events being as they were, we believe the radio broadcasts are a true statement. Also his testimony here is a true statement under oath.

I think what the Examiner wants to know is whether we care to produce Mr. Keys as a witness following the offer of these, and the answer to that is in the negative. We do not.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Very well. Company's Exhibits 49-A through 49-MM are received in evidence, and that applies to the entire contents of the particular pamphlets and not merely the designated portions thereof referred to by counsel for the Company.

I assume the Board will consider the designated 1823 portions as portions to which counsel for the Company directs the Board's particular attention to.

(The documents heretofore marked Board's Exhibits Nos. 49-A through 49-MM for identification were received in evidence.)

Mr. Dahling: Mr. Examiner, we are not, of course, offering in evidence anything further than the parts of the various speeches which are designated in pencil, and I wouldn't want the record to show that we have made the offer of the entire pamphlet or the pamphlets.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes.

Mr. Dahling: We are only offering the part that is marked. If counsel for the Board desires to offer the other parts in, of course, our objection must necessarily be that there are self-serving declarations there which we could not admit. I simply want to get the position of the Company clear on the record.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Yes. I would assume, Mr. Dahling, that what you have in mind is that so far as the material in the pamphlets which you haven't offered is concerned, that you do not think that the Company should be bound by the material you haven't offered. That raises the practical question as to how the rest of the material would come in. I would just not like to see a situation whereby the Company offers one portion, the Union offers another, the Board perhaps offers still another, and 1824 so on. So I say, and I think it is your position, that in receiving them all I do is recognize that the Company has offered only the designated portions, and while the entire pamphlets will bear the designation "Company's Exhibit" to the extent that that applies to the portions of the exhibits beyond the designated portion, that is done merely as a matter of convenience only.

Mr. Nelson: Mr. Examiner, in view of the offer and explanation just made by Mr. Dahling, I move that the testimony of Mr. Dahling and Company's Exhibits 49-A through 49-MM, both inclusive, be stricken because he may say fragmentary and partial offer, and I insist that having made this offer, he is bound by the documents that he offered. He can't say now, and I want my position to be distinctly understood—he can't say "I offer deleted extracts from these talks." That is one thing. Then he can't elect to have them in at the expense of having the whole talk in, in each case, which I think is the law.

Now, he has got to either eat his cake or have it, whichever one he wants to do, but in order to make my position clear on the record, I move that the testimony and the exhibits be stricken.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: The motion of counsel for the Union is denied.

In that connection I wish to make this observation,
1825 however, I do not feel that the theory which I should suspect is used in some courts, that one party or another is bound because a particular exhibit bears that particular party's designation or even the fact that a particular witness happens to be put on by a particular party—I do not feel necessarily that that party is in all respects bound by that witness' testimony. I appreciate the fact that common law rules of evidence, as they are interpreted in many states, would tend to support at least in some respects, what Mr. Nelson has said. However, I do not believe that is the rule which is followed in, for instance, the code of evidence of the American Law Institute. I rather suspect, although I haven't checked it, that Wigmore does not approve of such a rule as is indicated in Mr. Nelson's remarks. In short, I would anticipate that the Board would consider the cake, frosting, and all, no matter who baked it. So the ruling stands as made.

Mr. Dahling: Now, Mr. Examiner, in the pamphlet designated Company's Exhibit 49-AA, Mr. Keys in his radio address deals with a hearing that was had before the National Labor Relations Board in the Soss Manufacturing Company, and Foreman's Association of America matter, apparently case No. 7C-1148, and the Republic Steel 98-inch strip mill and Foreman's Association of America matter, case No. 8-C-1569.

1826 The radio address as appears in the pamphlet, Company's Exhibit 49-AA, name the men who appeared at that proceeding representing the companies, including Mr. Smethhurst, who spoke for the National Association of Manufacturers, Mr. Meder, Nicholas Kelley, as general counsel for Chrysler, and others.

Mr. Keys in his radio address had the following to say: "Translate the testimony of the authorized spokesmen" —referring to these gentlemen who appeared for the companies, and others—"who appeared for the management at this hearing. Translate into actual practice in any plant and you find that the employers are insisting that they have the right to say to any foreman in their employ: 'You are working for us and you will do just what we tell you or else,' or 'You are fired and it is none of your business why,'" and so forth. I will not continue reading from the pamphlet.

I have in front of me the official report of the proceedings before the War Labor Board in the cases mentioned, and as part of these official proceedings—

Mr. Karasick: You mean National Labor Relations Board?

Mr. Dahling: The National Labor Relations Board, I am sorry.

1827 In this transcript appears the statements of Mr. Thomas F. Patton, Mr. Albert E. Meder—that is M-e-d-e-r, but in the transcript the spelling is M-e-d-d-e-r—Mr. Nicholas Kelley, Mr. E. R. Burke, Mr. William A. Crevling, Mr. R. S. Smethhurst, Mr. John C. Gall, who I believe are the gentlemen referred to in the radio address as being the representatives of management.

I would like to have considered in evidence that part of the official transcript which I have just described, or official report which I have just described, containing the statements made by the gentlemen whose names I have just listed, the statements made at that hearing and being a part of this official report.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Is there objection?

Mr. Nelson: Well, there certainly is.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Objection sustained.

Mr. Dahling: May this be considered on the excepted record or whatever they call that?

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Well, you mean as a—

Mr. Nelson: Rejected, Mr. Dahling.

Mr. Dahling: Rejected, yes.

Mr. Nelson: Not accepted.

Trial Examiner Jaffee: Since it is part of the Board records in any event, I assume it would be unnecessary physically to incorporate the document, and it will 1828 be considered rejected and for that limited purpose may be referred to by the Board by reference.

Mr. Karasick: Might I suggest, Mr. Examiner, Mr. Dahling has offered the transcript in question only in part and that even though the offer has been rejected you might indicate with particularity the pages of the transcript that he is offering?
